THE PREFACE.

Ow vnfit, and how on worthy a choice I have made of my Jelfe, to undertake a worke of this mixture; mine owne reason, though exceeding weake, hath sufficiently resoluted me. For had it beene begotten then with my first dawne of day, when the light of common knowledge began to open to felfe to my younger yeares: and before any wound received, either from Fortune or Time: I might jet well have doubted, that the darkones of Age and Death would have covered over both It and Mee, long before the performance. For beginning with the Creation: I have proceeded with the History of the World; and lastly purposed (Some few Sallies excepted) to confine my Discourse, wichin this our renowned Iland of Great Brittaine. I confesse that it had better sorted with my disability, the better part of sohosetimes are runne out in other trauailes; to have set together (as I could the vnioynted and scattered frame of our English affaires, than of the ouniverfall: in whom, had there beene no other defect, (who am all defect) then the time of the day, it were enough; the day of a tempessuous life, drawne on to the very evening ere I began. But those inmost, and soulepeircing wounds, which are ever aking while vncured: with the defire to fatisfie those few friends, which I have tryed by the fire of Aduer ficie; the former enforcing, the latter per swading; have caused me to make my thoughts legible, and my felfethe subject of every opinion wife or weake.

To the World I present them, to which I am nothing indebted: neither have others that were, (Fortune changing) sped much better in any age. For, Prosperity and Adversity have ever more tyed and ontied over all feetions. And as we see it inexperience, That dogs doe alwayes barks at those they know not; and that it is their nature to accompany one another inthose clamours: so it is with the inconsiderate multitude. Who, wanting that vertue which wee call Honesty in all men, and that especiall gift of GOD which we call Charity in Christian men; condemne, without bearing; and wound, without offence given: led there-onto by oncertainereport only; Damonolog, 1, which his Maiesty truly acknowledgeth for the Author of all lies. Blame 3.6.1. no man (saith Siracides) before thou have enquired the matter the teste, derstandsirst, and then reforme rightcously. Rumon, res. sine teste, fine judice, maligna, fallax; Rumor is without witnesse; without judge, malicious and deceivable. This vanity of vulgar opinion it was, that Landaria bonis gaue St. Augustine Argument to affirme, That he feared the praise of times. & ame: good men, & detested that of the euist. And herein no man hath given a beter refor, de ira, 13. rule, then this of Seneca; Conscientia satisfaciamus: nihil in famam laboremus, sequatur vel mala, dum benè mercaris. Let vs satisfie our owne consciences, and not trouble our selues with same: beeit neuer so ill, it is to be despised so we deserve well.

For my (elfe, if I have in any thing served my Country, and prised it before my private: the general acceptation can yeeld me no other profit at this time than doth a faire sunshine day to a Sea-man after shipwrack, & the contrary no other harme than an outragious tempest after the Port attained. I know that I lost the love of many, for my fidelity towards Her, whom I must still bonor in the duft; though further then the defence of her excellent person. I neuer persecuted any man. Of those that did it, and by what deuice they did it: He that is the Supreame Iudge of all the world, hath taken the accompts so as for this kinde of suffering, I must say with Seneca, Mala opinio, bene parta, delectat.

As for other men; if there be any that have made themselves Fathers of that fame, which hath beene begotten for them: I can neither enuy at such their purchased glory, nor much lament mine owne mishap in that kind; but content my selfe to say with Virgil, Sic vos non vobis, inmany particulers.

To labour other satisfaction, were an effect of phrenzy, not of hope: seeing it is not Truth, but Opinion, that can travell the World without a paß-port. For were it otherwise; and were there not as many internall formes of the minde, as there are externall figures of men; there were then some possibility, to per wade by the mouth of one Aduocate, even Equity alone.

But such is the multiplying and extensive vertue of dead Earth, and of that breath-giving life which GOD hath east up Slime and Dust: as that among those that were, of whom we read and beare, and among those that are, whom we see and converse with; every one hath received a severall picture of face, and every one a divers picture of minde; every one a forme apart every one a fancy and cogitation differing: there being nothing wherin Nature fo much triumpheth, as in dissimilitude. From whence it commeth that there is found so great diversity of opinions; so strong a contrariety of inclinations; so many naturall and onnaturall; wife, foolish; manly, and childish affections; and passions in mortall Men. For it is not the visible fa-Sbion and Shape of plants, and of reasonable Creatures, that makes the difference, of working in the one, and of condition in the other; but the forme outward workes of men ( so farre as their cogitations are acted ) give vs whereof to gueffe at the rest. Nay, it were not hard to expresse the one by the other, very neare the life: did not craft in many, feare in the most. and the world's love in all, teach every capacity, according to the compasse it bath, to qualifie & maske over their inward deformities for a time. Though it be also true, Nemo potest diu personam ferre fictam: cito in naturam suam residunt, quibus veritas non subest. No man can long continue masked in a counterfeite behauiour the thinges that are forced for pretences, having no ground of truth, cannot long dissemble their owne natures. Neither can any man ( faith Plutarch (o change himselfe, but that his heart may be sometime seene ar his tongues end.

In this great discord and dissimilitude of reasonable Creatures, if wee direct our selues to the Multitude: Omnis honestæ rei malus iudex est vulgus. The common people are euill Iudges of honest things, and whole wisedome ( saith Ecclesiastes) is to be despised; if to the better fort; every onderstanding bath a peculiar judgement, by which it both cen-(ureth other men, and valueth it selfe. And therefore wato me it will not seeme strange, though I finde these my worthles papers torne with Rats: feeing the flothfull Censurers of all ages have not spared to taxe the Reuerend Fathers of the Church, with Ambition, the feuerest men to themselues, with Hypocrifie; the greatest louers of Iustice, with Popularity; and those of the truest valour and fortitude, with vaine-glorie. But of these na- Ecd. c. 15 tures which lye in wait to finde fault, and to turne good into euill, seeing Nibilfacilius, Salomon complained long fince: and that the very age of the world ren-dercaliam, ders it every day after other more malitious; I must leave the professors to their easie wayes of reprehension, than which there is nothing of more facility.

To me it belongs in the first part of this Preface, following the common and approved custome of those, who have left the memories of time past to after ages; to give, as neare as I can, the same right to History which they have done Yet (eeing therein I should but borrow other mens wordes; I will not trouble the Reader with the repetition. True it is that among many other benefits, for which it hath beene honoured; in this one it triumphethouer all humane knowledge, That it hath given vs life in sur onderstanding, fince the world it selfe had life and beginning, even to this day: yea it hath triuphed over time, which besides it nothing but eternity hath triumphed ouer: for it hath carried our knowledge over the vast and devouring space of so many thousands of yeares, and given so faire and peircing eies to our minde; that we plainly behold living now (as if we had lived then) that great World, Magni Dei sapiens opus, the wise worke ( saith Hermes) of a great GOD, as it was then, when but new to it selfe. By it I say it ts, that we live in the very time when it was created: we behold how it was governed: how it was covered with waters, and againe repeopled: How Kings and Kingdomes have florished and fallen; and for what evertie and piety GOD made prosperous; and for what evice and deformity he made wretched, both the one and the other. And it is not the least debt which we owe vnto History, that it hath made vs acquainted with oun dead Auncestors; and, out of the depth and darkensse of the earth, delivered evitheir memory and fame. In a word, we may gather out of History apolicy no lesse wise than eternall; by the comparison and application of other mens fore passed miseries, with our owne like errours and ill deservings.

But it is neither of Examples the most lively instructions, nor the words of the wisest men, nor the terror of future torments, that hat hyet so wrought in our blind and stupisted mindes; as to make visremember. That the instructed wises and wisdome of GOD doth peirce through all our pretences; as to make visremember, That the instice of GOD doth require none other accuser; than our owne consciences: which neither the false beauty of our apparent actions, nor all the formallitie; which (to pacifie the opinions of men) we put on; can in any, or the least kind, cover from his knowledge. And so much did that Heathen wisdome confesse, no way as yet qualified by the knowledge of a true God. If any sfaith Euripides) having in his life committed wickednesse, thinke he can hide it from the everlasting gods,

To repeat GODS indgements in particular, copon those of all degrees, which have plaied with his mercies; would require a volume a part: for the Sea of examples hath no bottome The markes, let on privat men, are with their bodies cast into the earth; and their fortunes, written onely in the memories of those that lived with them: so as they who succeed and have not seene the fall of others, doe not feare their owne faults. GODS indements upon the greater and greatest, have beene left to posterity; first, by those happy hands which the Holy Ghost bath guided; and secondly by their wertue, who have gathered the acts and ends of men, mighty and remarkeable in the world. Now to poynt farre off, and to speake of the conversion of Angells into Deuills, for Ambition: Or of the greatest and most glorious Kings, who have gnawne the graße of the earth with beafts, for pride and ingratitude towards GOD: Or of that wife working of Pharao, when he sue the Infants of Israel, ere they had recovered their Cradles: Or of the policy of Iczabel, in covering the Murder of Naboth by atrial of the Elders, according to the Law: with many thousands of the like: what poere it other, than to make an hopeleffe proofe, that farre-off examples would not be left to the same farre-off respects, as heretofore? For Tobo hathnot observed, what labour, practife, perill, bloudsbed, and cruelty, the Kings and Princes of the world have undergone, exercised, taken on them, and committed; to make them-selves and their issues maisters of the world : And yet hath Babylon, Persia, Egypt, Syria, Macedon, Carthage, Rome, and the rest, noe fruit, flower, grasse, nor leafe, springing opon the face of the earth, of those seeds : No; their wery roots and ruines doe hardly remaine. Omnia que manu hominum facta funt, vel manu hominum euertuntur, vel stando &duran. do deficiunt: All that the hand of man can make, is either ouerturnd by the hand of man, or at length by standing and continuing confumed. The reasons of whose ruines, are diver sly given by those that ground their opinions on second causes. All Kingdomes and States have fallen ( (ay the Politicians ) by outward and forraine force, or by inward neeligence and dissension, or by a third cause arising from both: Others obforue, That the greatest have funck downe under their owne weight; of which Liuie bath a touch : eo creuit, vt magnitudine laboret sua: Others, That the divine providence (which Ctatippus obiected to Ponipey ) bath (et downe the date and period of every estate, before their first foundation and erection. But hereof I will give my felfe a day over to resolue.

For seeing the first bookes of the following story, have condertaken the discourse of the sirst Kings and Kingdomes: and that it is impossible for the short life of a Preface, to travaile after and over-take farre of Antiquity, and to iudge of it.; I will, for the present, examine what proste bath beene gathered by our owne Kings, and their Neighbour Princes: who baving beheld; both in divine and humane letters, the success of infidelitie, instice, and crueltie, bave (notwith standing) planted after the

True it is that the indgements of all men are not agreeable; nor (which is more strange) the affection of any one man stirred up a like with examples of like nature. But every one is touched most, with that which most neerely seemeth to touch his owne private; Or otherwise best suteth with his apprehension. But the indgements of GOD are for every onchangeable; neither is his we wearied by the long processe of time, and won to give his blessing in one age, to that which hee bath cursed in another. Wherefore those that are wise, or whose wisedome, if it be not greatly be strue and well grounded; will be able to discerne the bitter fruites of investigious policie, as well among shose examples that are found in ages removed farre from the present, as in those of latter times. And that it may no less appeare by evident proofe, than by assentation. That ill doing bath atwaies been extended withill successe; I will here, by way of petface, runne over some examples; which the works ensuing bath not reached.

The Preface.

Among our Kings of the Norman race, we have no sooner passed over the violence of the Norman Conquest, than we encounter with a singular and most remarkable example of Gods Iustice, upon the children of Henry the first. For that King, when both by force, craft and cruelty, hee had dispossed overreacht, and lastly made blinde and destroyed his elder Brother Robert Duke of Normandy, to make his owne sonnes Lords of this Land. GOD cast them all, Male and Female, Nephewes and Neeces (Maud excepted) into the bottome of the Sea, with above a hundred and sifty others that attended them; whereof a great many were Noble, and of the King dearely beloved.

To passe over the rest, till we come to Edward the Second; it is certaine, that after the murder of that King, the issue of blood then made, though it had sometimes of stay and stopping, did againe breake out; and that so often and in such aboundance, as all our Princes of the Masculine race (very sew excepted) dyed of the same disease. And although the young yeares of Edward the Third, made his knowledge of that horrible satt no more then suspicious: yet in that he afterwards caused his owne Vncle the Earle of Kent to die, for no other offence than the desire of his Brothers redemption, whom the Earle as then supposed to be living; the King making that to be treason in his Vncle, which was indeed treason in him-selfe, had his Vnclesintelligence been true) this I say made it manifest, that he was not ignorant of what had past, nor greatly desirous to have had it otherpoife; though be caused Mortimer to dye for the same.

This cruelty the secret and consearchable judgement of GOD reveneed, on the Grand-child of Edward the Third: and foit fell out, even to the last of that line, that in the second or third descent they were all buried puder the ruines of those buildings, of which the Mortar had beene tempered with innocent bloud For Richard the second, who saw, both his Treasurers, bis Chaucellor, and bis Steward, mith divers others of his Counsailours, some of them slaughtered by the people, others in his absence executed by his enemies; yet he alwayes tooke himselfe for over wife, to be taught by examples. The Earles of Huntington and Kent, Montague and Spencer, who thought themselves as great Politicians in those dayes, as others have done in these: hoping to please the King, and to secure themselues, by the Murder of Gloucester; died soone after, with many other their adherents, by the like violent hands; and farre more shamefully then did that Duke. And as for the King himselfe ( who in regard of many deedes, conworthy of his Greatnesse, cannot bee excused, as she disauowing him selfe by breach of Faith, Charters, Pardons, and Patents) He was in the prime of his youth deposed; and murdered by his Cofen Germane and wasfall, Henry of Lancaster; afterwards Henry she fourth.

The Preface.

This King, whose Title was weake, and his obtaining the Crowne traiterous: who brake faith with the Loraes at his landing, protesting to intend onely the recovery of his proper inheritance; brake faith with Richard himselfe; and brake Faith with all the Kingdome in Parliament, to whom he [worethat the deposed King should line. After that he had enioyed this Realme some few yeares, and in that time had beene set voon on all sides by his Subjects, and never free from conspiracies and rebellions: he saw (if Soules immortall (ee and discerne anythinges after the bodies death) his Grand-childe Henry the fixt, and his Son the Prince, suddenly, and without mercy, murdered; the possession of the Crowne (for which he had caused So much blood to be poured out) transferred from his race; and by the Isfues of his Enemies worne and enjoyd: Enemies, whom by his owne pra-Stife hee supposed, that he had left no lesse power lesse, than the succeshon of the Kingdome questionless; by entailing the same uppon his owne Issues by Parliament. And out of doubt, bumane reason could have judged no otherwise, but that these cautious provisions of the Father, seconded by the valour and henall victories of his sonne Henry the fift, bad buried the hopes of every Competitor, under the despaire of all reconquest and recouery. I say, that humane reason might so have judged: were not this pass. sage of Casaubon alsa true; Dies, hora, monumentum cuertendis dominationibus sufficit, quæ adamantinis credebantur radicibus esse fundatæ; A day, an houre, a moment, is enough to ouerturne the things, that seemed to have beene founded and rooted in Adamant.

Now for Henry the fixt, whon whom the great storme of his Grandsafathers grieuous faultes fell, as it formerly had done whom Richard the. Grand-childe of Edward: although he was generally esteemed for a gentle and innocent Prince; yet as he resused the daughter of Armaignac, of the House of Nauatre, the greatest of the Princes of France, to whom hee was affianced (by which match he might have desended his Inheritance in France) and married the Daughter of Aniou, (by which he lost all that hee had in France) so as in condiscending to the winworky death of his Vncle of Glocester, the mains acd strong Pills of the house of Lancaster; Hee drew on himselfe and this kingdome the greatest in ont is may truly be said which a Counsellor of his owne spake of Henry tht third of France, Quil estoit vne fort gentile Prince; mais son reigne est aduenu en vne fort mauuois temps. That he was a very gentle Prince; but his raigne happened in a very vnfortunate season.

It is true that Buckingham and Suffolke were the practifers & contriuers of the Dukes death: Buckingham and Suffolk, because the Duke gave instructions to their authority, which otherwise under the Queene had bin absolute, the Queene, in respect of her personal wound, spretaque in initia forma, because Glocester dissanded her marriage. But the fruit was answerable to the seed; the successe to the Counsaile. For after the cutting downe of Gloucester, Yorke grew op so fast, as hee dared to dispute his right both by arguments and armes; in which quarrell, Suffolke and Buckingham, with the greatest number of their adherents, were dissolved. And although for his breach of Oath by Sacrament, it pleased God to strike down Yorke: yet his sonne the Earle of March, following the plaine path which his Father had troden out, despoyled Henry the Father, and Edward, the some, both of their lines and Kingdomes. And what was the end now of that politique Lady the Queene, other then this, That she lined to behold the wretched ends of all her pertakers: that she lived to looke on, while her Husband the King, and her onely sonne the Prince, were hewen in sunder; while the Crowne was set on his head that did it. Shee lived to see her selfe despoyled of her Estate, and of her moueables: and lastly, her Father, by rendring up to the Crowne of France the Earledome of Prouence and other places, for the payment of fifty thousand crownes for her Ransome, to become a starke Beggar. And this was the end of that subtilty, which Stracides calleth fine but vnrighteous: for other fruit bath it never veelded fince the world was.

And now it came to Edward the fourths turne (though after many difficulties) to triumph. For all the Plants of Lancaster mere rooted wpp; One onely Earle of Richmond excepted . whome also bee had once bought of the Duke of Brittaine, but could not hold him. And yet was not this of Edward such a Plantation, as could any way promise it selfe stability. For this Edward the King (to omit more than many of his other cruelvies) beheld and allowed the flaughter, which Gloucester, Dorset, Hastings, and others, made of Edward the Prince in his owne presence: of which tragicall Actors, there was not one that escaped the iudgement of GOD in the same kinde. And Hee, which (besides the execution of his brother Clarence, for none other offence then hee him-selfe had formed in his owne imagination) instructed Gloucester to kill Honry the fixt, his Predecessour; taught him also by the same Art to kill his owne sonnes and Successors Edward and Richard. For those Kings which have sold the blood of others at a low rate; have but made the market for their owne enemies, to buy of theirs at the same price.

To Edward the fourth succeeded Richard the Third, the greatest Maister in mischiefe of of all that fore-went him: who although, for the necessity of his Tragedie, hee had more parts to play, and more to performe in his owne person, then all the rest; yet hee so well fitted every affection that playd with him, as if each of them had but afted his owne interest. For he prought so cunningly poonthe affections of Hastings, and Buckingham, enemies to the Queene and to all her kindred, as hee The Preface.

eafily allured them to condiscend, that Rivers and Grey, the Kings Maternall Vncle and halfe brother, should (for the first ) be severed from him: se. condly, hee wrought their consent to have them imprisoned, and lastly ) for the arroyding of future inconvenience) to have their heads severed from their bodies. And having now brought those his chiefe instruments to exercise that common precept, which the Deuill hath written on every post, Scelera seclenamely, To depresse those whom they had grieved, and to destroy those whom Sen: de clem. they had deprest; Hee orged that argument so farre and so forcibly; as nothing but the death of the yong king himself, and of his brother, could fashion the conclusion. For he caused it to be hammered into Bucking hams head, That when soeuer the king or his brother, should have able yeares to exercise their power; they would take a most seuere revenge of that curelesse wrong, offered to their Vncle and Brother, Rivers and Grey.

But this was not his manner of reasoning with Hastings, whose sidelity to his Masters Sonnes was without suspect: and yet the Divell, who never dissipades by imposibility, taught him to try him. And so he did. But when hee found by Catesby, who founded him, that he was not fordable: He fir ft resolved to kill him sitting in councell: wherein having fayled with his [word; He set the Hangman copon him, with a weapon of more weight. And because nothing else could move his appetite; He caused his head to be stricken off, before he eate his dinner. A greater judgement of GOD, than this ropon Hastings, I have never observed in any storie. For the selfe same daie that the Earle Rivers, Grey, and others, were (without triall of Law, or offence given ) by Hastings advice executed at Pomfret : I (ay Hastings him-selfe in the same daie, and ( as I take it ) in the same boure, in the same law-lesse manner, had his head stricken off in the Tower of London. But Buckingham lived a while longer; and with an eloquent oration perswaded the Londoners to elect Richard for their king. And having received the Earldome of Hereford for reward, besides the high hope of marrying his daughter to the Kings onely sonne; after many grieuous vexations of mind, and vnfortunate attempts, being in the end betray. ed and delinered op by his trustiest scruant; He had his head senered from his body at Salisbury, without the trouble of any of his Peeres. And what successe had Richard himself after all these mischefes and murders, policies, and counter-policies to Christian religion: and after such time, as with a most mercilesse hand be had presed out the breath of his Nephews and Naturall Lords; other than the prosperity of so short a life, as it tooke end, ere himselfe could well looke over and discerne it the great outery of innocent blond, obtaining at GODS hands the effusion of his; who became a spectacle of shame and dishonor, both to his friends and enemies.

This cruell King, Henry the seauenth cut off; and was therein (no doubt) the immediate instrument of GODS instice. A politicke Prince hee was if ever there were any, who by the ingine of his wisdome, beat downe and overturned as many strong oppositions both before and after hee ware the crowne as ever King of England did: I say by his wisdome, because as he ever left the raines of his affections in the hands of his prosition, so he alwaies wayed his condertakings by his abillities, leaving nothing more to hazard than so much as cannot be denied it in all humaine actions. Hee had well observed the proceedings of Loys the eleventh, whom hee followed in all that was royall or royal like, but hee was farre more just, and begun not their processes whom hee hated or feared by the execution, as Loys did.

Hee could never indure any mediation in rewarding his servants, and therein exceeding wise, for what so ever him-selfe gave, he him-selfe received backe the thanks and the love, knowing it well that the affections of men (purchased by nothing so reddely as by benefits) were traynes that better became great Kings, than great subjects. On the contrary, in what so-ever he greeved his subjects, he wisely put it off on those, that he found sit ministers for such actions. How-so-ever, the taking off, of Stanles head, who set the Crowne on his, and the death of the young Earle of Warwick, sonne to George D. of Clarence, shews, as the successe also did, that hee held somewhat of the errors of his Ancesters, for his possession in the first line ended in his grand children, as that of Edward the third and Henry the fourth had done.

Now for King Henry the eight: if all the pictures and Patternes of a mercilesse Prince were lost in the World, they might all againe be painted to the life, out of the story of this King. For how many servants did hee ad. uance in half (but for what vertue no man could suspect) and with the change of his fancy ruined againe; no man knowing for what offence? To how many others of more defert gaue hee aboundant floweres from whence to gather hony and in the end of Haruest burnt them in the Hive? How many wives did he cut off, and cast off, as his fancy and affection changed? How many Princes of the bloud (whereof some of them for age could hardle crawle towards the block) with a world of others of all degrees (of whom our comonon Chronicles have kept the accompted did he execute eyea, in his very deathbed, and when hee was at the point to have given his accompt to GOD for the aboundance of blond already (pilt: He imprisoned the Duke of Nofolke the Father; and executed the Earle of Surrey the some; the one, whose deseruings he knew not how to value, having never omitted any thing that concerned his owne honour, and the Kings (eruice; the other, never having committed any thing worth of his least displeasure: the one exceeding valiant and aduised; the other, no lesse valiant than learned, and of excellent hope. But befides the forrowes which he heaped opon the Fatherlese, and widdowes at home: and besides the vaine enterprises abroade, wherein it is thought that hee consumed more Treasure, than all our victorious Kings

The Preface.

Kingesdid in their severall Conquests: what causelesse and cruell warres did he make woon his owne Nephew King lames the fift? What Lawes and Wills did he deuise, to establish this Kingdome in his owneissues? whing his Charpelt weapons to cut off, If cut do wene those branches, which sprang from the lame roote that him felfe did. And in the end (not withstanding these bis (o many irreligious provisions) it pleased GOD to take away all bis owne, without increase; though, for themselves in their severall kindes, all Princes of eminent wertue. For these wordes of Samuell to Agag King of the Amalikites, have beene verified woon many others: As thy sword hath made other women childleffe: fo shall thy mother be childleffe among other women. And that blood, which the lame King Henry affirmed, that the cold aire of Scotland had frozen out in the North, GOD bath diffused by the sunshine of his grace: form whence His Maichty now living, and long to live, is descended. Of whome I may say it truely, That if all the malice of the world were infused into one eie: yet could it not discerne in His life, even to this daie, any one of those foule (pots, by which the Consciences of all the forenamed Princes (in effect ) have beene defiled; nor any droppe of that innocent blood on the sword of his iustice, with which the most that fore went him, have stayned both their hands and fame. And for this Crowne of England; it may truely be a worked . That he hathreceived it even form the hand of GOD, and bath stayed the time of putting it on, how soeuer he were prouoked to hastenit : That Hee neuer tooke reuenge of any man, that sought to put him beside it. That Hee refused the assistance of Her enemies, that wore it long, with as great glory as ever Princesse did. That his Maiesty entred not by a breach, nor by blood, but by the Ordinary gate, which his owne right set open; and into which, by a generall love and Obedience, Hee was received And how ocuer His Maiesties praceding title to this Kingdome, was preferred by many Princes (witnesse the Treaty at Gambray in the yeare, 1559) yet hee neuer, pleased to dispute it, during the life of that renowned Lady his Pradecessor; no, notwithstanding the injury of not being declared Heire, in all the time of Her long raigne.

Neither ought weeto forget, or neglect our thankefullnesse to GOD for the voniting of the Northern partss of Brittany to the South, to wit of Scotland to England, which though they were severed but by small brookes and bankes, yet by reason of the long continewed warre, and the cruelties excrifed voon each other, in the affection of the Nations, they were infinitly severed. This I say is not the least of Gods blessings which His Maiesty bath brought with him conto this Land: No, put all our petty greenances together, and heap them op to their hight, thy wil appears but as a Mole-hil sompared with the Mountaine of this concord. And if all the Historians since then; have acknowledged the uniting of the Red-Rose, and the White, for the greatest happinesse (Christian Religion excepted) that euer this Kingdomereceived from GOD, certainely the peace betweene the two Lions of gold and gules, and the making them one, doth by many degrees exceed the former; for by it, befides the sparing of our british blood, heretofore and during the difference so often & aboundantly shed, the state of England is more assured, the Kingdome more inable to recouer her auntient honor and rights. and by it made more invincible, than by all our former alliances, practices, to, licies and conquests. It is true that hereof we do not yet finde the effect. But had the Duke of Parma in the yeare 1 588, ioyned the army which hee commanded, with that of Spaine, and landed it on the fouth coast; and bad his Maiesty at the same time declared himselfe against ous in the north: it is eahe to divine what had become of the liberty of England, certainely we would then without murmur baue brought this ronion a farre greater praise than it bath fince cost rus.

It is true, that there was never any Common weale or Kingdome in the world, wherein no man had cause to lament. Kings live in the world and not about it. They are not infinit to examine every mans cause, or to re leiue enery mans wants. And yet in the latter, (though to his owne breiudice )His Maiestey bath had more compassion of othermens necessities, than in sal. I. K.4. of his o'mne Coffers. Of whome it may be faid as of Salomon Dedit Deus Salomonilatitudinem Cordis : Which if other men doe not winder frand with Pineda, to be ment by Liberality, but by Latitude of knowledge: ver may it bee better spoken of His Maiesty, than of any King that ever England had; who as well in Divine, as Humane runder standing, hath exceeded all that fore-went him, by many degrees.

I could say much more of the Kings Maiestey, without flatterie: did I not fearethe imputation of presumption, and withall suspect, that it might befall these papers of mine, (though the losse were little) as it did the Pictures of Queene Elizabeth, made by runskilfull and common Painters; which by her owne Commandement, were knockt in peeces and cast into the fire. For ill Artists, in setting out the beauty of the externall: and weake writers, in describing the vertues of the internall; doe often leave to posterity, of well formed faces a deformed memory; and of the most perfect and Princely minaes, a most defective reprasentation. It may suffice, and there needes no other discourse; if the honest Reader but compare the cruell and turbulent passages of our former Kings, and of other their Neighbour-Princes (of whome for that purpose I have inserted this breife discourse) with His Maiesties temperate, revengelesse, and liberall disposition: I say, that if the honest Reader weigh them in fly, and with an even hand: and withall but bestow every deformed child on his true Parent; He shall find, that there is no man that hath so inst cause to complaine, as the King him-selfe hath. Now

The Preface.

Now as we have told the successe of the trumperies and cruesties of our owne Kings, and other great personages: so we fiende, that GOD is every soberethe same GOD. And as it pleased him to punish the vosurpation. and connatural cruelty of Henry the first, and of our third Edward, in their Children for many generations: (o dealt He with the sonnes of Lovs Debonaire, the some of Charles the great, or Charlemaine. For after such time as Debonaire of France, had torne out the eies of Bernard bis Nephen, the sonne of Pipen, the eldest sonne of Charlemaine, and heire of the Empire, and then caused him to die in prison, as did our Henry to Roberthis eldest brother: there followed nothing but murders ropon murders, poysoning, imprisonments, and civil warre; till the whole race of that famous Emperour was extinguished.

And though Debonaire, after he had rid himselfe of his Nephero by a violent death; and of his Bastard Brothers by a civil death (having inclosed them with fure gard, all the daies of their lives, within a Monasterie) beldhim felfe secure from all opposition: Yet GOD raised op against him ( which hee suspected not) his owne somes, to vex him, to inuade bim, to take bim prisoner, and to depose him; his owne sonnes, with Phome (to satisfie their ambition) hee had shared his estate, and given them Crownes to weare, and Kingdomes to governe, during his owne life. Yeahis eldest some Lothaire (for hee had foure, three by his first wife, und one by bis second; to wit, Lothaire, Pipen, Loys, and Charles ) made it the cause of his deposition, That he had vsed violence towards his Brothers and Kinsmen; and that he had suffered his Nephew ( whome bee might have delivered) to be flaine, eo quod, faith the Text, fratri-recher. 1,5.0.1. bus et propinquis violentiam intulerit, et nepotem suum, quem ipse liberare poterar, interfici permiserit. Because he vsed violence to his Brothers and Kinsmen, and suffred his Nephew to be slain whom he might have deliucred.

Yet did heethat which few Kings doe; namely, repent him of his cruelties. For among many other things, which hee performe in the Generall Aßemblie of the States, it followes. Post hac autem palam se errasse cofestus, & imitatus Impe ratoris Theodofii exemplum, pænitentiam pafq Ibidem spontaneam suscepit, tam de his, quam quæ in Bernardum propriu nepotem gesserat. After this hee did openly confesse him-selfe to haue erred, and following the example of the Emperour Theodofius hee vnder-went voluntary penance, as well for his other offences, as for that which hee had done against Bernard his owne Nephew. This bee did: and it was praise-worthie. But the bloud that is vniustly spile, is not againe gathered vp from the ground by repentance. These Medicines, ministred to the dead, haue but dead rewards.

This King, as I have said, had foure Sonnes. To Lot haire his eldest he gave the Kingdome of Italy; as Charlemaine, his Father, had done to Pepin the Father of Bernard, who was to succeed him in the Empire. To Pepin the second sonne he gave the Kingdome of Aquitaine: to Loys, the Kingdome of Bauier: and to Charles, whome hee had by a second wife, called Iudith, the remainder of the Kingdome of France. But this second wife, being a Mother-in law to the rest, perswaded Debonaire to cast his sonne Pipen out of A quitaine; thereby to greaten Charles: which, after the death of his sonne Pipen, he prosequed to effect, against his Grandchild bearing the same name. In the meane while, heing invaded by his sonne Loys of Bauier, be dies for greife.

Debonaire dead: Loys of Bauier, and Charles after wards called the bald, and their Nephew Pipen of Aquitaine, joyne in league against the Emporour Lothaire their eldest Brother. I hey fight neare an Auxerre the most blody bastle that ever was stroken in France: in which, the marueilous losse of Nobility, and men of warre, gave courage to the Saracens to inuade Italie; to the Hunnes, to fall wpon Almaine; and the Danes, to enter woon Normandy. Charles the Bald by treason seizeth upon his Nephew Pepin, kills him in a Cloyster, Carloman rebells against his Father Charles the Bald, the Father burnes out the eies of his sonne Carloman; Bauire inuades the Emperour Lothaire his Brother, Lothairequits the Emperour, Hee is assailed and roounded to the heart by his owne conscience for his rebellion against his Father, and for his other cruelties, and dies in a Monestarie. Charles the Bald the Vncle oppreseth his Nephewes the somes of Lothaire, hee cosurpeth the Empire to the prejudice of Loysef Bauire his elder Brother, Bauiers armies and his sonne Carloman are beaten, bee dies of griefe, and the Vjurper Charles is poysoned by Zedechias a lew his Phistian, his sonne Loys le Beque dies of the same drinke Beque had Charles the simple, and two Bastards, Loys and Carloman, they rebell against their Brother, but the eldest breakes his Neck, the younger is slaine by a wild Bore; the sonneof Bauiere had the same ill destiny and brake his neck by a fall out of a Window in sporting with his companions Charles the große becomes Lord of all that the sonnes of Debonaire held in Germanie, wherewith not contented, hee inuades Charles the simple, but being for saken of his Nobility, of his wife, and of his understanding, hee dies a distracted begger. Charles the simple is held in Wardship by Eudes Maior of the Pallace, then by Robert the Brother of Eudes, and lastly being taken by the Earle of Vermandois, hee is forced to die in the prison of Peron: Loyes the some of Charles the simple breakes his Neck in Chafing 4 Wolfe, and of the two (onne of this Loys, the one dies of poylow, the other dies in the prison of Orleans, after whome Hugh Capet, of another race, and a stranger to the French, makes him-selfe King. The [e These miserable ends had the issues of Debonaire: who after hee had once apparrelled iniustice with authority, his somes and successions tooke vp the fashion; and wore that Garment so long without other provision, as when the same was torne from their shouldiers, every man despised them as miserable and naked beggers. The wretched successe they had, (saith a learned French-man) shewes, què en ceste mort il y avoit plus du fait deshommes que de Dieu, ou de la iusticè: that in the death of that Prince, to wit of Bernard the sonne of Pepin, the true heire of Charlemaine, men had more medling, than either GOD, or Iustice had.

But to come nearer home; it is certaine that Francis the first, One of the worthiest Kings (except for that fact ) that ever the French men had. did neuer enion him-selfe; after hee had commended the destruction of the Protestants of Mirandol and Cabrieres, to the Parliament of Prouence. which poore people were there-vpon burnt, and murdered; men, woemen, and children. It is true, that the (aid King Francis repented him felfe. of the fact, and gaue Charge to Henry bis some, to doe inflice opon the Murderers; threatning his sonne with GOD Studgmeuts, if he neglected it. But this unseasonable care of his, GOD was not pleased to accept for payment. For after Henry him selfe was slaine in sport by Montgomery; we all may remember what became of his four e Connes, Francis Charles, Henry, and Hercules. Of which although three of them became Kings, and were married to beautifull and vertuous Ladies: Yet were they, one after another, cast out of the world, without stock or seed. And not-with-standing their subtilty, and breach of faith; with all their Massa. cres, upon those of the religion, and great effusion of bloud, the Crowne was fet on his head, whom they all laboured to dissolue; the Protestants remaine more in number than ever they were; and hold to this day more strong citties than euer they bad.

Let vos now see if GOD be not the same GOD in Spaine, as in England and France. Towards whom we will looke no surther backe than to Don Pedro of Castile: in respect of which Prince, all the Tyrants of Sicil, our Richard the third, and the great Euan Vasilowick of Moscouia, were but pettie ones: this Castilian, of all Christian and Heathen Kings, having beene the most mercilesse. For besides those of his owne bloud and Nobility which hee caused to be slaine in his owne Court and Chamber, as Sancho Ruis the great Master of Calatraua, Ruis Gonsales, Alphonso Tello, and Don Iohn of Arragon, whom he cut in peeces and cast into the streets, denying him Christian buriall: Is ay besides these, and the slaughter of Gomes Manriques, Diego Peres, Alphonso Gomes, and the great commander of Cattile; He made away the two Infants of Arragon his Cosen-germans, his brother Don Frederick, Don Iohn de la Cerde, Albuquergues, Nugnes de Guzmã, Cornel, Cabrera, Tenorio, Mendes

de Toledo, Guttiere his great Treasurer, and all his Kindred; and a world of others. Neither did he spare his two youngest brothers, innocent Princes: whom after hee had kept in close prison from their Cradles, till one of them had lived fixteene yeares, and the other, foureteene; hee murdered them there. Nay hee spared not his Mother, nor his wife the Lady Blanch of Bourbon. Lastly as he caused the Archbishop of Toledo, and the Deane, to Histo. of Spaine bee killed of purpose to enjoy their treasures: so did he put to death Mahomet Aben Alhamar King of Barbary, with seauen and thirty of his Nobilitie; that came onto him for succour, with a great summe of money, to leuy (by his fauour) ome companies of souldiers to returne withall. Yea. be would needs assist the Hangman with bis owne hand, in the execution of the old King; in so much as Pope Vrban declared him an enemie both to GOD and Man. But what was his end? Having beene formerly beaten out of his Kingdome, and re established by the valour of the English Nation, led by the famous Duke of Lancaster. He was stabbed to death by his younger Brother the Earle of Astramara, who disposses tall his Children of their inheritance; which, but for the Fathers iniustice and cruelty, had neuer beene in danger of any such thing.

If we can parallell any man with this King, it must bee Duke Iohn of Burgoigne: who, after his traiterous murder of the Duke of Orleans, eaused the Constable of Armagnac, the Chancelour of France, the Bishops of Constance, Bayeux, Eureux, Senlis, Saintes, and other religious and reverend Church men, the Earle of gran Prè, Hector of Chartres, and (in effecti)all the Officers of iustice, of the Chamber of Accompts, Treasurie, and Request, (with fixteene hundred others to accompany them) to bee suddenly and violently slaine. Hereby, while he hoped to governe, and to have maistred France: He was soone after strucken with an axe in the face, French inucn: in the presence of the Dauphin; and, without any leisure to repent his in 1870.1418, misseds, presently staine. These were the Louers of other mens miseries: and miserie found them out.

Now for the Kings of Spaine, which lived both with Henry the feuenth, Henry the eight, Queene Mary, and Queene Elizabeth; Ferdinand of Arragon was the first: and the first that layd the foundation of the present Austrian greatnesse. For this King did not content him selfe to hold Arragon by the vsurpation of his Ancestor; and to fasten thererunto the Kingdome of Castile and Leon, which Isabel his wife held by strong hand, and his assistance, from her owne Neece the Daughter of the last Henry: but mo ft cruelly and craftily, without all colour or pretence of right, Hee also cast his owne Neece out of the Kingdome of Nauarre; and, contrarie to faith, and the promise that hee made to restore it, fortified the best places, and so wasted the rest, as there was no meanes left for any army to innade it. This King I say, that betrayed also Ferdinand and Frederick Kings

The Preface.

Kings of Naples, Princes of his owne bloud, and by double alliance ried vnto him; fold them to the French; and with the same Army, sent for their succour under Gonsaluo, cast them out; and shared their Kingdome with the French, whom afterwards he most shamefully betrayed.

This wife and politique King, who fold Heauen and his owne Honour, to make his sonne, the Prince of Spaine, the greatest Monarch of the world: (am bim die in the flower of his yeares, and his wife great with childe, with her ontimely birth, at once and together buried. His eldest daughter married onto Don Alphonso Prince of Portugall, beheld her first husband breake his neck in her presence, and being with childe by her second, dyed with it. A iult iudgement of GOD poon the race of lohn, father to Alphonso, now poholly extinguished - who had not onely left many disconsolate Mothers in Portugall, by the flaughter of their children; but had formerly flaine with his owne band, the some and onely comfort of his Aunt the Lady Beatrix, Duchesse of Visco. The second Daughter of Fordinand, married to the Arch-duke Philip; turned foole; and died mad and deprined. His third daughter, bestowed on King Henry the eight, He saw cast off by the Kine: the mother of many troubles in England; and the mother of a Daughter, that in her unhappy zeale shed a world of innocent bloud; lost Callice to the French; and died heart-broken without increase. To conclude: all those Kingdomes of Ferdinand baue maisters of a new name; and, by a strange family are governed and possest.

Charles the fift, sonne to the Arch-duke Philip, in whose vaine enterprises vpon the French, vponthe Almans, and other Princes and States, so many multitudes of Christian souldiers, and renowned Captaines, were consumed who gave the while a most perilous entrance to the Turkes, and suffered Rhodes, the Key of Christendome, to be taken; was in conclufion chaced out of France, and in a fort out of Germany; and left to the French, Mentz, Toule, and Verdun, places belonging to the Empire; Stole away from Inspurg; and scaled the Alpes by torch-light, pursued by Duke Maurice, having hoped vo swallew op all those dominions, wherein hee concolled nothing faue his owne discraces. And having, after the Slaughter of so many Millions of men , no one foote of ground in eyther : Hee crept into a Cloyster, and made himselfe a Pensioner of an hundred Rether. lyreceived his meane and ordinary maintenance.

His Sonne againe King Philip the second, not satisfied to hold Holland and Zelund, (wrefled by his ancestors from Laqueline their lawfull Princesse) and to possesse in peace many other Provinces of the Netherlands persuaded by that mischieuous Cardinall of Granuile, and other Romish Tyrants; not onely forgot the most remarkable services, done to his Father the Emperour by the Nobilitie of those countries; not onely forgot the present, made him opon his entrie, of forty millions of Florens, called the Nouale aide; nor onely forgot, that hee had twice most (olemnly sworne to the Generall States, to maintaine and preserve their auncient rights, priviledges, and customes, which they had enloyed under their thirty and five Earles before him, Conditional! Princes of those Provinces: but beginning first to constraine them, and enthrall them by the Spanish Inquisition, and then to impouerish them by many new deuised and intollerable impositions; Hee lastly, by strong hand and maine force, attempted to make him-selfe not onely an absolute Monarch over them, like onto the Kinos and Soueraignes of England and France; but Turke-like, to tread under his feet all their Nationall and fundamentall Lawes, Priviledges. and ancient Rights. To effect which, after he had easily obtained from the Pope a Dispensation of his former Oathes (which Dispensation was the true cause of all the warre and bloudshed since then) and after he had tryed what hee could performe, by dividing of their owne Nobilitie, under the government of his base fifter, Margaret of Austria, and the Cardinall Granuile: Hee employed that most mercilesse Spaniard Don Ferdinand Aluarez of Toledo, Duke of Alua, followed with a powerfull army of strange Nations: by whom he first slaughtered that renowned Captaine the Earle of Egmont, Prince of Gauare; and Philip Montmorency Earle of Horn: made. away Montigue, and the Marquis of Bergues; and cut off in those fixe veares (that Alua governed) of Gentlemen and others, eighteene thousand and fixe bundred, by the hands of the Hangman, befides all his other barbarous murders and massacres. By whose ministry when hee could not vet brings his affaires to their wished ends, having it in his hope to worke that by subtlety, which hee had failed to performe by force: Hee sent for gouernour his bastard brother Don John of Austria; a Prince of great hope, and very gracious to those people. But hee, whing the same Papall advantage that his predecessors had done: made no scruple to take Oath poon the Holy Enangelists, to observe the treaty made with the Generall States; and to discharge the Low Countries of all Spaniards, and other strangers, therein parrisond. Towards whose Pay and Passort, the Netherlands strained them-selves to make payment of fixe hundred thousand pounds. Which monies received, He suddenly surprised the Citadells of Antwerp and Nemoures: not doubting (being onsuspected by the States) to have possess him-selfe of all the maistring places of those Provinces. For sphatsoever bee overtly pretended . He held in secret a contrary councell with the Secretary Escouedo, Rhodus, Barlemont, and others, Ministers of the Spanish tyranny; formerly practifed, and now againe intended. But let vs now see the effect and end of this periurie, and of all other the Dukes cruelties. First, for him-selfe; after hee had murdered so many of the Nobilitie; executed (as aforesaid) eighteene thousand fixe hundred in fixe yeares; and most cruelly staine Man, Women, and Childe, in Mecklin. Zurphen, Naerden, and other places : and after hee had consumed fixe and thirty millions of treasure in fixe yeares; notwithstanding his Spanish want. That hee would suffocate the Hollanders in their owne butter-barrells, and milke-tubbs: He departed the country no otherwise accompanied. than with the curse and detestation of the whole Nation leaving his Maifters affaires in a tenfold worse estate, than bee found them at his first arrinall. For Donisohn, whose haughty conceipt of him-selfs over-came the greatest difficulties; though his judgement were over-weake to mannage the least: what wonders did his fearefull breach of faith bring forth, other than the King his brother sicalouse and aistrust; with the ontimely death that feized him, even in the flowre of his youth. And for Escovedo his sbarpe-witted Secretaries, who in his owne imagination had conquered for bis Maister both England and the Netherlands, being sent into Spaine ppon some new project, He was at the first arrivall, and before any accesse to the King, by certaine Ruffians appointed by Anthony Peres (though by better warrant than his ) rudely murdered in his owne lodging. Lastly, if preconfider the King of Spaines carriage, bis counsaile, and successe in this buffres; there is nothing left to the memory of man more remarkeable. For hee hath paid above an hundred Millions, and the lives of above foure bundred thousand Christians, for the losse of all those countries; which, for beauty, gaue place to none; and for revenue, did equall his VVest Indies: for the losse of a nation, which most willingly obeyed him; and who at this day, after forty yeares warre, are in despiebt of all his forces become free Estate, and farre more rich and powerfull, than they were, when hee first beganne to impowerish and oppresse them.

Oh by what plots, by what for swearings, betrayings, oppressions, imprisonments, tortures, poylonings, and under what reasons of State, and politique subtestie, have these forenamed Kings, both strangers, and of our owne Nation, pulled the vengeance of GOD upon them-selves, upon theirs, and upon their prudent ministers! and in the end have brought those things to passe for their enemies, and seene an effect so directly contrary to all their owne counsailes and cruesties; as the one could never have hoped for themselves; and the other never have succeeded; if no such opposition had ever beene made. GOD bath said it and performed it ever: Perdam sapientiam sapientium, I will destroy the wisdome of the wise.

But what of all this? and to what end doe we lay before the eyes of the liuing, the fal and fortunes of the dead: seeing the world is the same that it hath bin; I the children of the present time, wil still obey their parents? It is in the present time, that all the wits of the world are exercised. To hold the times we have we hold all things lawfull: and either we hope to hold them for ever; or at least wee hope, that there is nothing after them to be hoped for For as wee are content to forget our owne experience, and to counterfeit

or perspade our selves, that GOD bath given os letters patents to pursue things; and of eternal grace; but by revelation. No meritale then that our thoughts are also earthlies: and it is less to be wondred at; that the words of worthlesse men cannot cleanse them; seeing their doctrine and instruction, whose understanding the Holy Glosse couchs afed to inhabite;

have not performed it. For as the Propher Elai cryed out long agone, Lord, who hath beleeved our reports? And our of doubt, as Elai complained then for him selfe and others: so are they less eleeved, every day after other. For although Religion, and the truth thereof, be in every mans mouth, yea in the discourse of every woman; who for the greatest number are but Idols of vanitie; what is it other than an value sall dissimulation? Wee professe that wee know GOD, but by workes wee deny him.

For Beatitude doth not consist in the knowledge of divine things, but in a divine life: for the Divells know them better than men. Beatitudo non eft divinorum cognitio, sed vita divina. And certainly there is nothing more to be admired; and more to be lamented, than the private contention; the passionate dispute, the personall hatred, and the perpetual warre, massacres, and murders, for Religion among Christians: the discourse where of hath so occupied the World, as it bath well neare driven the practise there of out of the world. Who would not soone resolve, that tooke knowledge but of the religious disputations among men, and not of their lives which dispute, that there were no other thing in their desires, than the purchase of Heaven; and that the World it selfe were but ofed as it ought; and as an Inne or place, wherein to repose our selves in passing on towards our celestiall habitation? when on the contrary, besides the discourse and outward professions.

fion, the soule bath nothing but hypocrific. We are all (in effect) become Comedians in religion: and while we act in gesture and voice, divine vertues, in all the course of our lives were renounce our Persons, and the parts wee play.

Neither is it that wisdome, which Salomon defineth to be the Schoole-Mistresse of the knowledge of God, that hath valuation in the world: it is enough that we give it our good word; but the same which is altogether exercised in the service of the World, as the gathering of riches chiefly; by which we purchase and obtaine honour, with the many respects which attend it.

The Preface.

These indeed be the markes, which (when wee have bent our consciences to the highest) wee all shoote at. For the obtaining whereof it is true, that the care is our owne; the care our owne in this life, the perill our owne in the future and yet when wee have enthered the greatest abundance. wee our selves enion no mone thereof than so much as belongs to one man. For the rest, Hee that had the greatest wisdomes, and the greatest abilitie that euer man had, hath told vs that this is the vie : VV hen goods increase Ealef 5. 10. (faith Salomon) they alfoline cafe that cafe them; and what good commeth to the Owners; barthe beholding thereof with their eyes? As for those that deuour the rest, and follow is in faire weather: they againe for sake win the first tempest of missortune, and steere away before the Sea and Winder leaving to sto the malice of our destinies. Of these, among athousand examples, I will take but one out of Maister Dannet, and vie his owne words: VV hilest the Emperour Charles the fift, after the resignation of his Estates, stayed at Vlusting for winde, to carry him his last fournie into Spaine, Hee conferred on a time with Seldius, his brother Fordinands Embassadour, till the deepe of the night. And when Seldins should depart: the Emperour calling for some of his feruants, and no bodie answering him (for those that attended vpon him, were some gone to their lodgings, and all the rest a sleepe) the Emperour tooke vp the candle him-felfe, and went before Seldius to light him downe the staires; and so did, notwithstanding all the refiftance that Seldius could make. And when Hee was come to the staires foot, He said thus vnto him: Seldius, remember this of Charles the Emperour, when hee shall be dead and gone, That Him, whom thou hast knowne in thy time environed with so many mighty Armics, and Guards of fouldiors, thou hast also seene alone, abandoned. and forfaken, yea even of his owne domesticall servants, &c. I acknowledge this change of Fortune to proceed from the mighty hand of GOD; which I will by no meanes goe about to withstand.

But you will say that there are some things else, and of greater regard than the former. The first, is the reverend respect that is held of great men, and the Honour done wnto them by all sorts of people. And it is true indeed: provided, that an inward love for their instice and piety, accompany the outward worship given to their places and power; without which what is the appliance of the Multitude, but as the outcrie of an Heard of Animals, who without the knowledge of any true cause, please themselves with the noyse they make? For seeing it is a thing exceeding rare, to distinguish Vertue and Fortune: the most impious (if prosperous) have ever beene applauded; the most vertuous (if conprosperous) have ever beene despised. For as Fortunes man rides the Horse, so Fortune her-selfe rides the Man. Who, when hee is descended and on soote: the Man taken from his Beast, and of their felicities which remaine in the World. No; be their estates greater than ever the World gave, wee shall by the difference knowne onto ps) even detest their consideration. And whatsoever comfort shall remains of all forepast, the same will confift in the charity, which we exercised living: and in that Pietie, Justice, and sirme Faith, for which it pleased the insinite mercy of GOD to accept of vs, and receive vs. Shall wee therefore evalue honour and riches at nothing? and neglect them, as onnecessary and vaine? Certainly no. For that infinite wisdome of GOD, which hath distinguished his Angells by degrees : which hath given greater and less light and beauty, to Heavenly bodies: which hath made differences betweene beafts and birds: created the Eagle and the Flye, the Cedar and the Shrub; and among stones, given the fairest tincture to the Rubie, and the quickest light to the Diamond; hath also ordained Kings, Dukes or Leaders of the people, Magistrates, Judges, and other degrees among men. And as honour is left to posteritie, for a marke and ensigne of the vertue and onderstanding of their Ancestors: so, seeing Siracides preferreth Death be-Side. 40.7.28 fore Beggery: and that titles, without proportionable estates, fall under the milerable succour of other mens pitty; I accompt it foolishnesse to condemne such a care: Provided, that worldly goods be well gotten, and that speeraise not our owne buildings out of other mens ruines. For as Plato Pladeleg. 1.2. doth first preferre the perfection of bodily health; secondly, the forme and Gazin Gorges. beauty, and thirdly, Diuitias nulla fraude quæsitas: so Hieremie crves. And if wee could affoord our selves but so much leisure as to consider, That be which bath most in the world, hath, in respect of the world, nothing init : and that he which bath the longest time lent him to line in it, bath yet no proportion at all therein, letting it either by that which is past, when we were not, or by that time which is to come, in which we shall abide for ever: I (ay, if both, to wit, our proportion in the world, and our time in the world, differ not much from that which is nothing, it is not out of any excellency of onderstanding, that wee so much prise the one, which hath (in effect) no being : and so much neglect the other, which hath no ending : coueting those mortall things of the world, as if our soules were therein immortall, and neglecting those things which are immortall, as if our selves after the world were Rich man thinke all fooles, that cannot equall his abundance, the Reuenger esteeme all negligent, that have not trodden downe their opposites; the Politician, all grosse, that cannot merchandize their faith: Tet when wee once come in fight of the Port of death, to which all windes drive vs; and when by letting fall that fatall Anchor, which can never be weighed againe, the Nauigation of this life takes end: Then it is I (ay, that our owne coeitations (those sad and seuere cogitations, formerly beaten from vs by our Health and Felicitie) returne againe, and pay vs to the vttermost for all the pleasing passages of our lines past. It is then that were crie out to GOD, for mercie; then, when our selues can no longer exercise cruelty towards others: and it is onely then, that wee are strucken through the soule with this terrible sentence, That GOD will not be mockt. For if according to Saint Peter, The righteous scarcely be faued: and that GOD spared not his Angels : where shall those appeare, who having served their appetites all their lives, presume to thinke, that the sewere Commandements of the All-powerfull GOD were given but in sport; and that the short breath, which wee draw when death present vs, if wee can but falbion it to the found of Mercy (without any kinde of latisfaction or amends) is sufficient? O quam multi, saith areverend Father, Cum hac spe ad aternos labores & bella descendunt: I confesse that it is a great comfort to our friends, to have it faid, that we ended well, for we all defire (as Balaam did) to die the death of the righteous. But what shall wee call a disesteeming, an apposing, or (indeed) a mocking of GOD: if these men doe not appose him, disesteeme him, and moske him, that thinke it enough for GOD, to aske him forgiuenesse at leisure, with the remainder and last drawing of a malicious breath? For what doe they otherwise, that die this kinde of well-dying, but fay onto GOD as followeth? Wee befeech thee O.GOD, that all the fallboods, for wearings, and treacheries of our lines past, may be pleasing onto thee; that thou wilt for our sakes (that have bad no leisure to doe any thing for thine ) change thy nature (though imposfible) and forget to be a just GOD; that thou wilt love injuries and oppressions, call ambition wisdome, and charitie foolishnesse. For I shall preiudice my sonne (sobich fam resolved not to doe) if I make restitution; and confesse my selfe to have beene priust, (which I am too proud to doe) if I deliver the oppressed. Certainly, these wife worldlings have either found out a new GOD; or have made One; and in all likelihood fuch a Leaden One, as Lewis the eleventh ware in his Cappe; which, when he had caused any that he feared, or hated, to bekilled, he would take it from his head and kiffe it: beseeching it to pardon him this one euill act more, and it should be the last, which (as at other times) hee did; when by the practife of a Cardinall and a falfified Sacrament, hee caused the Earle of Armagnack to be stabbed to death; mockeries indeed fit to be ysed towards a Leaden, but not towards the euer-living GOD. But of this composition are all the devout lovers of the World, that they feare all that is durelesse and ridiculous: they feare the plots and practises of their opposites, and their very whisperings: they feare the opinions of men which beat but vpon shadowes: they flatter and for sake the prosperous and vnprosperous, be they friends or Kings: yea they dive under water, like Ducks, at every pebble stone, that's but throwne towards them by a powerfull hand: and on the contrary, they shew an obstinate and Giant-like valour, against the terrible judgements of the All-powerfull GOD: yea they shew themselves Gods against GOD, and slaves towards men; towards men whose bodies and consciences are alike rotten.

Now for the rest: If wee truly examine the difference of both conditions; to wit, of the rich and mighty, whom wee call fortunate; and of the poore and oppressed, whom wee account wretched: wee shall finde the happinesse of the one, and the miserable estate of the other, so tied by GOD to the very instant, and both so subject to enterchange (witnesse the sodaine downefall of the greatest Princes, and the speedy oprising of the meanest persons) as the one hath nothing so certaine, whereof to boast; nor the other so concertaine, whereof to bewaile it selfe. For there is no man so assured of his honour, of his riches, health, or life; but that hee may be deprived of either or all, the very next houre or day to come. Quid vesper vehat, incertum est, VVhat the evening will bring with it, it is vncertaine. And yet yee cannot tell ( faith Saint Iames) what shalbe to morrow. Iam. 4. 14. To day hee is fet vp; and to morrow hee shall not be found: for hee is turned into dust, and his purpose perisheth. And although the aire which compasseth advertities be very obscure: yet therein wee better discerne GOD, than in that shining light which environeth worldly glorie; through which, for the clearenesse thereof, there is no vanitie which elcapeth our fight. And let adversitie seeme what it will; to happy men, ridiculous, who make them-selues merry at other mens misfortunes; and to those under the crosse, grienous: yet this is true, That for all that is past, to the very instant, the portions remaining are equall to either. For be it that wee have lived many yeares, and (according to Salomon) in them all wee have reioyced; or be it that wee have measured the same length of daies, and therein have ever-more forrowed: yet looking backe from our prefent being, we finde both the one and the other, to wit, the ioy and the woe, failed out of fight; and death, which doth pursue vs and hold vs in chace, from our infancie, hath gathered it. Quicquid atatis retro est, mors tenet: VV har-so-euer of our age is past, death holds it. So as whoso-euer hee be, to whom Fortune hath beene a seruant, and the Time a friend: let him but take the accompt of his memory (for wee have no other keeper of our pleasures past) and truly examine what it hath reserued eyther of beauty and youth, or fore-gone delights, what it hath saued, that it might last, of his dearest affections, or of what-ever else the amorous Spring-time gaue his thoughts of contentment, then onualuable; and hee shall finde that all the art which his elder yeares have, can draw no other vapour out of these dissolutions, than heavy, secret, and sad fighes. Hee [ball finde nothing remaining, but those forrowes, which grow up after our fast-springing youth; ouer-take it, when it is at a stand; and ouer-top it cutterly, when it beginnes to wither : in so much as looking backe from the very instant time, and from our now being; the poore, diseased, and captive creature, hath as little sence of all his former miseries and paines; as hee, that is most blest in common opinion, bath of his fore-passed pleasures and delights. For what-so-euer is cast behinde vs, is iust nothing: and what is to come, deceiptfull hope hath it. Omnia quæ cuentura funt, in incerto iacent. Onely those few blacke Swannes I must except: who hauing had the grace to value worldly vanities at no more than their owne price; doe, by retayning the comfortable memory of a well acted life, behold death without dread, and the grave without feare; and embrace both, as necessary guides to endlesse glory.

For my selfe, this is my consolation, and all that I can offer to others, that the forrowes of this life, are but of two forts: whereof the one hath respect to GOD; the other, to the World. In the first wee complaine to GOD against our selues, for our offences against him; and confesse, Et tu iustus es in omnibus quæ venerunt super nos, And thou O Lord art iust in all that hath befallen vs . In the second wee complaine to our selues against GOD: as if hee had done vs wrong, either in not giving vs worldly goods and honours, answering our appetites: or for taking them againe from vs having had them; forgetting that humble and iust acknowledgement of lob, The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken. To the first of which Saint Paul hath promised blessednesse; to the second, death. And out of doubt hee is either a foole or ungratefull to GOD, or both, that doth not acknowledge, how meane so-euer his estate be, that the same is yet farre greater, than that which God oweth him: or doth not acknowledge, how sharpe so-euer his afflictions be, that the same are yet. farre lesse, than those which are due onto him. And if an Heathen wise man call the adversities of the world but tributa vivendi, the tributes of living: a wife Christian man ought to know them, and beare them, but as the tributes of offending. He ought to beare them man-like, and resolvedly; & not as those whining souldiers doe, qui gementes sequuntur imperatore,

For feeing God, who is the Author of all our tragedies, hath written out for vs, and appointed vs all the parts we are to play: and hath not, in their distribution, beene partiall to the most mighty Princes of the world; That gaue conto Darius the part of the greatest Emperour, and the part of the most miserable begger, a begger begging water of an Enemie,

to quench the great drought of death; That appointed Baiazet to play the Gran Signior of the Turkes in the morning, and in the same day the Footstoole of Tamerlane (both which parts Valerian had also plaid, being taken by Sapores) that made Bellisarius play the most victorious Captaine, and lastly the part of a blinde beggar; of which examples many thousands may be produced: why should other men, who are but as the least wormes, complaine of wrongs? Certainly there is no other account to be made of this ridiculous world, than to resolve, That the change of fortune on the great Theater, is but as the change of garments on the lesse. For when on the one and the other, every man weares but his owne skin; the Players are all alike. Now if any man, out of weaknesse, prise the passages of this world otherwise (for faith Petrarch Magni ingenii est reuocare mentem a senfibus) it is by reason of that vnhappy fantasie of ours, which forgeth in the braines of Man all the miseries (the corporall excepted) whereunto he is subject: Therein it is, that Misfortune and Adversitie worke all that they worke. For seeing Death, in the end of the Play, takes from all, what seuer Fortune or Force takes from any one: it were a foolish madnesse in the shipwracke of worldly things, where all finkes but the Sorrow, to faue it. That were, as Seneca faith, Fortun & succumbere, quod tristius est omni fato, to fall vnder Fortune, of all other the most miserable destinie.

But it is now time to found a retrait; and to defire to be excused of this long pursuit: and withall, that the good intent, which hath moved me to drawthe picture of time past (which wee sall Historie) in so large a table, may also be accepted in place of a better reason.

The examples of divine providence, every where found (the first divine Histories being nothing else but a continuation of such examples) have perswaded me to fetch my beginning from the beginning of all things; to wit, Creation. For though these two glorious actions of the Almightie be so neare, and (as it were) linked together, that the one necessarily implyeth the other: Creation, inferring Providence (for what father for aketh the childe that he hath begotten?) and Providence presupposing Creation) Yet many of those that have seemed to excell in worldly wisedome, have gone about to distoyne this coherence; the Epicure denying both Creation and Providence, but granting that the world had a Beginning; the Aristotelian granting Prouidence, but denying both the Creation and the Beginning.

Now although this doctrine of Faith, touching the Creation in time (for by Faith we understand, that the world was made by the word of God) be too weighty a worke for Aristotles rotten ground to beare up, upon which he hath(notwithstanding)founded the Defences & Fortresses of all his Verball Doctrine: Yet that the necessity of infinite power, and the worlds beginning, and the imposibility of the contrary even in the iudgement of Naturall reason, wherein hee beleeued, had not better informed him; it is greatly to be maruailed

maruailed at. And it is no lesse strange, that those men which are desirous of knowledge (seeing Aristotle hath failed in this maine point; and taught. little other than termes in the rest) have so retrencht their mindes from the following and overtaking of truth, and so absolutely subjected them selves to the law of those Philosophicall principles, as all contrary kinde of teaching. in the learch of causes, they have condemned either for phantasticall, or curious. But doth it follow, that the positions of Heathen Philosophers. are undoubted grounds and principles indeed, because so called? Or that ipsi dixerunt, doth make them to be such ? certainely no. But this is true, That where natural reason hath built any thing so strong against it selfe, as the same reason can hardly assaile it, much lesse batter it downe: the same in every question of Nature, and finite power, may be approved for a fundamentall law of humane knowledge. For faith Charron in his booke of misdome, Tout proposition humaine a autant d'authorite que l'autre. si la raison n' on fait la difference; Euery humane proposition hath equall authoritie, if reason make not the difference, the rest being but the fables of principles. But hereof how shall the opright and onpartiall iudgement of man give a sentence, where opposition and examination are not admitted to give in evidence. 3 And to this purpose it was well said of Lastantius, Sapientiam sibi adimunt, qui sine vllo iudicio inuenta maiorum probant, & ab alijs pecudum more ducuntur: They neglect their owne wisdome, who without any judgement approue the inuention of those that fore-went them; and suffer them-selues, after the manner of Beasts, to be led by them. By the advantage of which flouth and dulnesse, ignorance is now become so powerfull a Tyrant: as it hath set true Philosophie, Phisick, and Divinity, in a Pillory; and written ouer the first. Contra negantem Principia; ouer the second, Vertus specifica; and ouer the third, Ecclelia Romana.

But for my selfe, I shall never be perswaded, that GOD hath shut vp all light of Learning within the lanthorne of Aristotles braines : or that it was ever said vnto bim, as vnto Esdras, Accendam in Corde tuo Lucernam intelle &us: that GOD bath given invention but to the Heathen; and that they onely have invaded Nature, and found the strength and bottome thereof; the same Nature having consumed all her store, and left nothing of price to after-ages. That these and these be the causes of these and these effects, Time hath taught vs; and not reason: and so hath experience, without Art. . The Cheese-wife knoweth it as well as the Philosopher, that sowre Rennet doth coagulate her milke into a curd. But if wee aske a reason of this cause, why the sowrenesse doth it? whereby it doth it? and the manner how? I thinke that there is nothing to be found in vulgar Philosophie, to satisfie this and many other like vulgar questions. But man to cover his ignorance in the least things, who cannot give a true reason for the Grasse under his feete, why it should be greene rather then red, or of any other colour; that could never yet discover the way and reason of Natures working, in those which are farre lesse noble creatures than him-(elfe; who is farre more Noble than the Heauens them-selues: Man salomon 1.9. Hee will disable GODS power to make a world, without matter to make it of. He will rather give the mothes of the Aire for a cause; cast the worke on necessity or chance; bestow the honour thereof on Nature; make two powers, the one to be the Author of the Matter, the other of the Forme; and lastly, for want of a worke-man, haue it Eternall: which latter opinion Aristotle, to make him-selfe the Author of a new Doctrine, brought into the World: and his Sectatours have maintained it; parati ac coniurati, quos sequuntur, Philosophorum animis inuictis opiniones tueri. The Preface.

Lakes; doe at last finde, and fall into the great Ocean: so after all the searches that humaine capacitie hath; and after all Philosophicall contemplation and curiositie; in the necessitie of this infinite power, all the reason of man ends and dissolues it selfe.

As for others; and first touching those, which conceive the matter of the World to have been eternall, and that God did not create the World ex nihilo, but ex materia præexistente: the Supposition is so weake, as is hardly worth the answering. For ( saith Eusebius) Mihi videntur qui hoc dicunt, fortunam quoque Deo annectere, They seeme vnto me, which affirme this, to give part of the work to God, and part to Fortune: insomuch as if God had not found this first matter by chance, Hee had neither beene Author, nor Father, nor Creator, nor Lord of the Vniuersall. For were the Matter or Chaos, eternall : it then followes, That either this supposed Matter did fit it selfe to God; or God, accommodate himselfe to the matter. For the first; it is impossible, that things without sense could proportion themselues to the Workmans will. For the second; it were horrible to conceive of God, That as an Artificer he applyed himselfe, according to the proportion of Matter which he lighted vpon.

But let it be supposed, That this matter had beene made by any Power, not Omnipotent, and infinitely wise: I would gladly learne how it came to passe, that the same was proportionable to his intention, that was Omnipotent and infinitely wise; and no more, nor no lesse, than served to receive the forme of the Vniuerfall. For, had it wanted any thing of what was sufficient; then must it be granted, That God created out of nothing so much of new matter, as served to finish the worke of the World: Or had there beene more of this matter, than sufficed; then God did dissolue and annihilate. what soeuer remained and was superstuous. And this must enery reasonable soule confesse, That it is the same worke of God alone, to create any thing out of nothing, And by the same art and power, and by none other, can those things, or any part of that eternall matter, be againe changed into Nothing; by which those things, that once were nothing, obtained a beginning of being.

Againe, to say that this matter was the cause of it selfe; this, of all other, were the greatest idiotisme. For, if it were the cause of it selfe at any time; then there was also a time when it selfe was not: at which time of not being, it is easie enough to conceive, that it could neither produce it selfe, nor any thing else. For to be, and not to be, at once, is impossible. Nihil autem seipsum præcedit, neq; seipsum componit corpus. There is nothing that doth præcede it selfe, neither doe bodies compound them-

For the rest; Those that saine this matter to be eternall, must of necessitie confesse, that Infinite cannot be separate from Eternitie. And then had infinite matter left no place for infinite forme, but that the first matter was finite, the forme which it received proves it. For conclusion of this part; who-so-euer will make choyce, rather to beleeue in eternall deformitie. or in eternall dead matter, than in eternall light and eternall life: let eternall death be his reward. For it is a madnesse of that kinde, as wanteth tearmes to expresse it. For what reason of man (whom the curse of presumption bath not (tupified) hath doubted, That infinite power (of which wee can comprehend but a kind of shadow, quia comprehensio est intra rerminos, qui infinito repugnant) hath anything wanting in it (elfe, either for matter or forme; yea for as many worlds (if such had beene GODS will) as the Sea hath (ands? For where the power is without limitation; the worke hath no other limitation, than the workmans will. Yea Reason it selfe findes it more easie for infinite power, to deliuer from it (elfe a finite world, without the helpe of matter prepared; than for a finite man, a foole and dust, to change the forme of matter made to his hands. They are Dionyfius his words, Deus in vna existentia omnia præhabet: and againe, Esse omnium est ipsa Diuinitas, omne quod vides, & quod no vides; to wit, causaliter, or in better tearmes, non tanquam forma, sed tanquam causa universalis. Neither hath the world minersall closed wh all of GOD: For the most parts of his workes (faith Siraciaes) are cap. 16.7.21; hid. Neither can the depth of his wisdome be opened, by the glorious worke of the world: which never brought to knowledge all it can; for then were his infinite power bounded, and made finite. And hereof it comes; That we seldome entitle GOD the all-shewing, or the all-willing; but the allmighty, that is, infinitely able.

But now for those, who from that ground, That out of nothing nothing is made, inferre the Worlds eternity; and yet not fo saluage therein, as those are, which give an eternall being to dead matter: It is true, if the word (nothing) be taken in the affirmative; and the making, imposed rupon Naturall Agents and finite power; That out of nothing nothing is made. But seeing their great Doctor Aristotle him-seife confesseth, quod omnes antiqui decreuerunt quasi quoddam rerum principium, ipfumq; infinitum, That all the ancient decree a kinde of beginning, and the same to be infinite: and a little after, more largely and plainely, Principium eius est nullum, sed ipsum omnium cernitur esse princi- sieue, Eug. l.3. pium, ac omnia complecti ac regere: it is strange that this Philosopher, phys, 3.20. with his followers, should rather make choyce out of falshood, to conclude fally; than out of truth, to resolve truly. For if wee compare the world Vniuerfall, and all the vnmeasurable Orbes of Heaven, and those merueilous bodies of the Sunne, Moone, and Starres, with ipsum infinitum: it may truly be said of them all, which him-selfe affirmeth of his imaginary Materia prima, That they are neither quid, quale, nor quantum; and therefore to bring finite (which hath no proportion with infinite) out of infinite (qui destruit omnem proportionem) is no wonder in GODS power. And therefore Anaximander, Meliffus, and Empedocles, call the world vniuersail, but particulam Vniuersitatis and infinitatis, a parcell of that which is the vniuersalitie and the infinitieit selfe; and Plato, but a shadow of GOD. But the other, to prove the worlds eternitie, curgeth this Maxime, That, A sufficient and effectuall cause being granted, an answerable effect thereof is also granted: inferring, that GOD being for euer a sufficient and effectuall cause of the world, the effect of the cause should also have beene for ever; to wit, the world vniversall. But what a strange mockery is this in so great a Maister, to confesse a sufficient and effectuall cause of the world, (to wit, an almighty GOD) in his Antecedent; and the same GOD to be a GOD restrained in his conclusion; to make GOD free in power, and bound in will; able to effect, vnable to determine; able to make all things, and yet pnable to make choyce of the time when? For this were impioully to resolue of GOD, as of natural necesfitie, which hath neither choice, nor will, nor understanding; which cannot but worke matter being present; as fire, to burne things combustible.

Againe he thus disputeth, That every Agent which can worke, and doth not worke : if it after ward worke, it is either thereto moved by it selfe, or by some-what else; and so it passeth from power to Act. But GOD (faith he) is immouable, and is neither moued by him-selfe, nor by any other; but being alwaies the same, doth alwaies worke: Whence he concludeth, if the world were caused by GOD, that hee was for ever the cause thereof; and therefore eternall. The answer to this is very easie, For that GODS performing in due time that, which hee euer determined at length to performe, doth not argue any alteration or change, but rather constancie in him. For the same action of his will, which made the world for ever, did also with-hold the effect to the time ordained. To this answere, in it selfe sufficient, others adde further, that the patterne or Image of the World may be said to be eternall: which the Platonicks call, spiritualem mundum; and doe in this fort distinguish the Idea and Creation in time. Spiritu-Mor. Ficin. de alis ille mundus, mundi huius exemplar, primumque Dei opus, vita immort. Anima. aquali est Architecto; suit semper cum illo, eritque semper. Mundus autem corporalis, quod secundum opus est Dei, decedit iam ab opifice ex parte vna, quia non fuit semper, retinet alteram, quia sit semper futurus. That representative, or the intentionall world (faythey) the sampler of this visible world, the first worke of GOD, was aqually ancient with the Architect; for it was for euer with him, and ever shalbe. This materiall world, the second worke or creature of GOD, doth differ from the worker in this, That it was not from euerlasting, and in this it doth agree, that it shall be for euer to come.

The Preface.

The first point, That it was not for euer, all Christians confesse: The other they understand no other-wise, than that after the consummation of this World, there shalbe a new Heauen and a new Earth; without any new creation of matter. But of these things wee need not here stand to argue: though such opinions be not vnworthy the propounding; in this consideration, of an eternall and vnchangeable cause, producing a changeable and temporall effect. Touching which point Proclus the Platonist disputeth, That the compounded effence of the World (and because compounded, therefore dissipable) is continued, and knit to the Divine Being, by an individual and inseperable power, flowing from divine vnitie; and that the Worlds natural appetite of GOD sheweth, that the same proceedeth from a goodnesse and understanding divine; and that this vertue, by which the World is continued and knit together, must be infinite, that it may infinitely and everlastingly continue and preserve the same. Which infinite Vertue, the finite World (Saith hee) is not capable of, but receiveth it from the divine infinite, according to the temporall Nature it hath, successively every moment by little and little; euen as the whole Materiall World is not altogether: but the abolished parts are departed by small degrees, and the parts yet to come, doe by the same small degrees succeed; as the shadow of atree in a River, seemeth to have continued the same a long time in the water, but it is perpetually renued, in the continual ebbing and flowing thereof.

But to returne to them, which denying that euer the World had any beginning, withall denie that ever it shall have any end; and to this purpose affirme, That it was neuer heard, neuer read, neuer seene, no not by any reason perceined, that the Heavens have ever suffered corruption; or that they appeare any way the Elder by continuance; or in any fort other-wife than they were; which had they beene subject to finall corruption, some change should have beene discerned in so long a time. To this it is answered, That the little change as yet perceived, doth rather prove their newnesse, and that they have not continued so long; than that they will continue for ever as they are. And if coniecturall arguments may receive answer by coniectures; it then seemeth that some alteration may be found. For either Aristotle, Plinie, Strabo, Beda, Aquinas, and others, were groffely sisk Ma. 2. mistaken: or else those parts of the world, lying within the burnt Zone, stab.1.3. were not in elder times habitable, by reason of the Sunnes heat; neither Bedaderations were not in elder times habitable, by reason of the Sunnes heat; neither tem. 114.32. paere the Seas, onder the Equinostial, nauigable. But wee know by Thom 1.9.4. experience, that those Regions, so situate, are filled with people, and exceeding temperate; and the Sca, over which wee Navigate, passable enough. Wee read also many Histories of deluges: and how that in the time of Phaeton, divers places in the world were burnt vp, by the Sunnes piolent beat wayne har do be and and

But

But in a Word, this observation is exceeding feeble. For we know it for certaine, That stone-wals, of matter moldring and friable, have stood two, or three thousand yeares: that many things have beene digged out out of the earth, of that depth, as supposed to have beene buried by the generall floud; without any alteration either of substance or figure, yea it is beleived, and it is very probable, that the gold which is daily found in Mynes, and Rockes, under ground, was created together with the Earth.

And if bodies elementary, and compounded, the eldest times have. not inuaded and corrupted: what great alteration should wee looke for in Calestiall and quintessentiall bodies? And yet wee have reason to thinke, that the Sunne, by whose helpe all Creatures are generate, doth not in these latter Ages assist Nature, as here-to-fore. We have neither Gyants, such as the eldest world had: nor mighty men, such as the elder world had; but all things in generall are reputed of lesse wertue, which from the Heavens receive vertue. Whence, if the nature of a Preface would permit a larger discourse, wee might easily fetch store of proofe; as that this world shall at length have end, as that once it had

And I see no good answer that can bee made to this objection: If the World were eternall; why not all things in the World Eternall? If there were no first, no cause, no Father, no Creator, no incomprehensible wisedome, but that every Nature had beene a-like. eternall; and Man more rationall than every other Nature: Why had not the eternall reason of Man, provided for his eternall being in the World? For if all were equall: why not equal conditions to all? why should heavenly bodies live for ever; and the bodies of Men rot and die?

Againe, who was it that appointed the Earth to keeps the center, and gave Order that it should hang in the Aire: that the Sunne should trauaile betweene the Tropicks, and neuer exceed those bounds, nor faile to performe that Progresse once in every yeare : the Moone to live by borrowed light: the first Starres (according to common opinion) to be fastned like Nailes in a Cart wheele; and the Planets to wander at their pleasure? Or if none of these had power ouer other: was it out of Charity and Loue, that the Sunne by his perpetuall travaile within those two Circles, bath visited, given light onto, and releived all parts of the Earth, and the Creatures therein, by turnes and times? Out of doubt, if the Sunne have of his owne accord kept this course in all eternitie: Hemay iustly be called eternal Charity, and everlasting Love. The same may be said of all the Stars: who being all of them most large and cleare fountaines of vertue and operation, may also be called eternal vertues: the Earth

may be called eternall patience; the Moone, an eternall borrower and begger; and Man of all other the most miserable, eternally mortall. And what were this, but to beleiue againe in the old Play of the gods? Yea in more eods by Millions, than ever Hefiodus dreampt of. But in steed of this mad follie. wee see it well enough with our feeble and mortall eyes: and the eyes of our reason discerne it better; That the Sunne, Moone, Starres, and the Earth, are limited, bounded, and constrained: ... mselues they have not constrained, nor could. Omne determinatum causam habet aliquam efficientem, qua illud determinauerit, Euery thing bounded hath some efficient cause, by which it is bounded.

Now for Nature; As by the ambiguity of this name, the schoole of Aristotle hath both commended many errours vnto vs, and sought also thereby to obscure the glory of the high Moderator of all things, shining in the Creation, and in the governing of the World: so if the best definition be taken out of the second of Aristotles phisicks, or primo de Calo, or out of the fifth of his Metaphylicks; Isay that the best is but nominall, and seruing onely to difference the beginning of Natural motion, from Artificial : which yet the Academicks open better, when they call it A Seminary strength, infused into matter by the Soule of the VV orld: " give the first place to Providence, the second to Fate, and but the third to Nature. Prouidentia (by which they onderstand GOD) dux & caput; Fatum, medium ex prouidentia prodiens; Natura postremum. But be it what hee will, or be it any of these (GOD excepted) or participating of all: yet that it hath shoice or vnderstanding (both which are necessarily in the cause of all things) no man bath avowed. For this is vnanswerable of Lactantius, Is autem facit aliquid, qui aut voluntatem faciendi habet, aut scientiam; Hee onely can be said to be the doer of a thing, that hath either will or knowledge in the doing it.

But the will and science of Nature, are in these words truely exprest by Ficinus: Potest vbique Natura, vel per diuersa media, vel ex diuersis Ficinis materiis, diuersa facere: sublata vero mediorum materiarumque diuersitate, vel vnicum vel similimum operatur, neque potest quando adest materia non operari; It is the power of Nature by diversity of meanes, or out of diversity of matter, to produce divers things: but taking away the diverfity of meanes, and the diverfity of matter, it then workes but one or the like worke; neither can it but worke, matter being present. Now if Nature made choice of diversity of matter, to worke all these variable workes of Heauen and Earth, it had then both onderstanding and will; it had counsaile to beginne; reason to dispose; vertue and knowledge to finish; and power to gouerne: without which, all things had beene but one and the same: all of the matter of Heauen; or all of the matter of Earth. And if we grant Nature this will, and this understanding,

The Preface.

Latt, de ira

this counsaile, reason, and power: Cur Natura potius quam Deus nominetur? Why should wee then call such a cause rather Nature, than God? God, of whom all men have notion, and give the first and highest place to Divine power: Omnes homines notionem deorum habent, omnesq; fummum locum diuino cuidam numini assignant. And this I savin Short; that it is a true effect of true reason in man (were there no authority more binding than reason) to acknowledge and adore the first and most sublime power. Vera Philosophia, est ascensus ab his quæ fluunt, & oriuntur, & occidunt, ad ea quæ vere funt, & semper eadem: True Philosophy, is an ascending from the things which flow, and rise, and fall, to the things that are for ever the same.

For the rest, I do also account it not the meanest, but an impiety monstrous, to confound God and Nature: be it but in tearmes. For it is God, that only disposeth of all things according to his owne will; and maketh of one Earth, Veilels of honor and dishonor. It is Nature that can dishole of nothing, but according to the will of the matter wherein it worketh. It is God, that commandeth all: It is Nature that is obedient to all. It is God that doth good onto all, knowing and louing the good hee doth: It is Nature, that secondarily doth also good, but it neither knoweth nor loveth the good it doth. It is God, that hath all things in himselfe: Nature, nothing in it selfe. It is God, which is the Father, and hath begotten all things: It is Nature, which ts begotten by all things; in which it liueth and laboureth; for by it selfe it existeth not. For shall we say, that it is out of affection to the earth, that heauy things fall towards it? Shall wee call it Reason, which doth conduct every River into the salt Sea? Shall we tearme it knowledge in fire, that makes it to consume combustible matter? If it be Affection, Reason, and Knowledge in these: by the same Affection, Reason, and Knowledge it is, that Nature worketh. And therefore seeing all things worke as they doe, (call it by forme, by Nature, or by what you please) yet because they worke by an impulsion, which they cannot resist; or by a faculty, infused by the sepremest power we are neither to wonder at, nor to worship, the faculty that worketh, nor the Creature wherein it worketh. But herein lyes the wonder: and to him is the worship due, who hath created such a Nature in things, and such a faculty, as neither knowing it selfe, the matter wherein it worketh, nor the vertue and power which it hath; doth yet worke all things to their last and ottermost perfe-Etion. And therefore every reasonable man, taking to bimselfe for a ground that which is granted by all Antiquity, and by all men truly learned that ever the worldhad; to wit; That there is a power infinit, and eternall (which also necessity doth proue vnto vs, without the helpe of Faith; and Reason, without the force of Authoritie) all things doe as easily follow which have beene deliuered by dium letters, as the waters of arunning River doe successively pursue each other from the first fountaines. This The Preface.

This much I say it is, that Reason it selfe hath taught vs: and this is the beginning of knowledge. Sapientia præcedit, Religio sequitur: quia 148.1.4.4.4 prius est Deum scire, consequens colere; Sapience goes before, Religion enia. followes: because it is first to know God, and then to worship big. This Sapience Plato calleth, absoluti boni scientiam, The science of the absolute good: and another, scientiam rerum primarum, sempiternarum, perpe-Isaac de defin. tuarum. For Faith ( Jaith Isidore) is not extorted by violence; but by reason and examples perswaded: fides nequaquam viextorquetur; sed ratione & exemplis suadetur. I confesse it, That to enquire further, as of the essence of God, of his power, of his Art, and by what meane He created the morld: Or of his secret iudgement, and the causes; is not an effect of Reason: Sed cum ratione infaniunt, but they grow mad with reason, that inquire after it: For as it is no shame nor dishonor (saith a French Author) de faire arrest au but qu'on nasceu surpasser, For a man to rest himselfe there, where he finds it impossible to passe on further : so what soeuer is beyond, and out of the reach of true reason, It acknowledgeth it to be so; as understanding it selfe not to be infinite; but according to the Name and Nature it hath, Quel of infito be a Teacher, that best knowes the end of his own Art. For seeing both Rea-itendum na.u. son and Necessity teach vs (Reason, which is pars divini spiritus in corpus ram renmunii, humanu mersi) that the world was made by a power infinite; and yet how scientia. Arift. it was made, it cannot teach vs : and seeing the same Reason and Necessity "ofter make ws know, that the same infinit power is every where in the world; and yet how every where it cannot informe vs: our beleefe hereof is not weakned. but greatly strengthened, by our ignorance; because it is the same Reason that tels vs, That such a Nature cannot be said to be God, that can be in all con-ceiued by man. I have beene already over-long, to make any large discourse either of the parts of the following Story, or in mine owne excuse : especially in the excuse of this or that passage; seeing the whole is exceeding weake and defective. Among the grosest, the vasuable division of the bookes, I could not know how to excuse, had I not beene directed to inlarge the building after the foundation was laid, and the first part finished. All men know that there is no great Art in the dividing evenly of those things, which are subject to number and measure. For the rest, it sutes well enough with a great many Bookes of this age, which speake too much, and yet say little; Ipfi nobis furto subducimur, We are stollen away from our selues, setting a high price on all that. is our owne. But hereof, though a late good Writer, make complaint, yet shall it not lay hold on me, because I beleeue as hee doth; that who so thinkes himselfe the wisest man, is but a poore and miserable ignorant. Those that are the best men of war, against all the vanities and fooleries of the World, doe alwaies keepe the strongest guards against themselves, to defend them from themselues, from selfe loue, selfe estimation, and selfe opinion.

Generally

Generally concerning the order of the worke, I have onely taken counsaile from the Argument. For of the Assyrians, which after the downefall of Babel take up the first part, and were the sirst great Kings of the World, there came listle to the view of posteritie: some few enterprises, greater in same than faith, of Ninus and Semiramis excepted.

It was the story of the Hebrewes, of all before the Olympiads, that our came the consuming disease of time; and preserved it selfe, from the very cradle and beginning to this day: and yet not so entire, but that the large discourses thereof (to which in many Scriptures wee are referred) are no where found. The Fragments of other Stories, with the actions of those Kings and Princes which shot up here and there in the same time, I am driven to relate by way of digression: of which we may, say with Virgil.

They appeare here and there floting in the great gulfe of time.

To the same sirst Ages doe belong the report of many Inventions therein found, and from them derived to vs; though most of the Authors Names, have perished in so long a Navigation. For those Ages had their Lawes; they had diversity of Government; they had Kingly rule; Nobilitie, Pollicie in warre; Navigation; and all, or the most of needfull Trades. To speake therefore of these (seeing in a general Historie we should have left a great deale of Nakednesse, by their omission) it cannot properly be called a digression. True it is that I have also made many others: which if they shall be layd to my charge, I must cast the fault into the great heape of humane error. For seeing wee digresse in all the wayes of our lives: yea, seeing the life of man is nothing else but digression; I may the better be excused, in writing their lives and actions. I am not altogether ignorant in the Lawes of Historie, and of the Kindes.

The same thath beene taught by many; but by no man better, and with greater breuity, than by that excellent learned Gentleman Sir Francis Bacon. Christian Lawes are also taught vs by the Prophets and Apostles; and every day preacht vnto vs. But wee still make large digressions: yea the teachers themselves doe not (in all) keepe the path which they point out to others.

For the rest; after such time as the Persians had wrested the Empire from the Chaldwans, and hadraised a great Monarchie, producing Actions of more importance then were else-where to be found: it was agreeable to the Order of Story, to attend this Empire; whilest it so storished, that the affaires of the nations adiopning had reference there-unto. The like observance was to be wied towards the fortunes of Greece, when they againe began to get ground pointhe Persians, as also towards the affaires of Rome

The Preface.

Rome, when the Romans grew more mighty then the Greekes.

As for the Medes, the Macedonians, the Sicilians, the Carrhaginians, and other Nations, who refifted the beginnings of the former Empires, and afterwards became but parts of their composition and enlargement it seemed best to remember what was knowne of them from their sewerall beginnings. in such times and places, as they in their flourishing estates opposed those Monarchies; which in the end swallowed them op. And herein I have followed the best Geographers: who seldome give names to those small brookes, sphereof many, joyned together, make great Rivers; till such time as they become united, and runne in a maine streame to the Ocean Sea. If the Phrase be weake, and the Stile not every-where like it selfe: the first, shewes their legitimation and true Parent; the second will excuse it selfe vpon the Variety of Matter. For Virgil, who wrote his Ecloques, gracili auena. pled stronger pipes, when he sounded the warres of Aeneas . It may also be layd to my charge that I vse divers Hebrew words in my first booke. and else-where: in which language others may thinke, and I my-selfe acknowledge it, that I am altogether ignorant: but it is true, that some of them I finde in Montanus; others in lattaine Carecter in S. Senensis, and of the rest I have borrowed the interpretation of some of my learned friends. But (ay I had beene beholding to neyther, yet were it not to be wondred at, hauing had a eleven yeares leasure, to attaine the knowledge of that, or of any other tongue; How soeuer, I know that it will be said by many, I nat I might have beene more pleasing to the Reader, if I had written the Story of mine owne times, having beene permitted to draw water as neare the Well-head as another. To this I answere, that who-so-ever in writing a moderne Hi-Gory, (hall follow truth too neare the heeles, it may happily strike out his teeth. There is no Mistresse or Guide, that hath led her followers and seruants into greater miseries. Hee that goes after her too farre off, looseth ber fight, and looseth him-selfe: and hee that walkes after her at a midle distance; I know not whether I should call that kinde of course Temper or Basenesse. It is true, that I neuer trauailed after mens opinions, when I might have made the best vse of them: and I have now too few dayes remaining, to imitate those, that eyther out of extreame ambition, or extreame comardise, or both, do yet, when death hath them on his shoulders) flatter the world, betweene the bed and the grave. It is enough for me (being in that state I am) to write of the eldest times: wherein also why may it not be said, that in speaking of the past, I point at the present, and taxe the vices of those that are yet liuing, in their persons that are long since dead; and have it laid to my charge? But this I cannot helpe, though innocent. And certainely if there be any, that finding themselves spotted like the Tigers of old time, shall finde fau't with me for painting them over a new; they shall therein accuse themselves instly, and me fallly.

The Preface.

For I protest before the Maiesty of GOD, That I malice no man onder the Sunne. Impossible I know it is to please all: seeing few or none are so pleased with themselves, or so assured of themselves, by reason of their subiection to their private passions; but that they seeme divers persons in one and the same day. Seneca bath said it, and so doe I: Vnus mihi pro populo erat: and to the same effect Epicurus, Hoc ego non mulris sed tibi; or (as it hath since lamentably fallen out) I may borrow the resolution of an ancient Philosopher, Satis est vnus, Satis est nullus. For it was for the service of that inestimable Prince Henry, the successive hope, and one of the greatest of the Christian World, that I ondertooke this Worke. It pleased him to pervse some part thereof, and to pardon what was amisse. It is now left to the world without a Maister: from which all that is presented, hath received both blowes and thankes. Eadem probamus, eadem reprehendimus: hic exitus est omnis iudicij, in quo lis secundum plures datur. But these discourses are idle. I know that as the charitable will iudge charitably : fo against those, qui gloriantur in malitia, my prefent adversity hath disarmed me. I am on the ground already; and therefore have not farre to fall : and for rifing againe, as in the Natural privation there is no recession to habit; so it is seldome seene in the privation politique. I doe therefore for-beare to stile my Readers Gentle, Courteous, and Friendly, thereby to beg their good opinions, or to promife a second and third volume (which I also intend) if the first receive grace and good acceptance. For that which is already done, may be thought enough; and too much : and it is certaine, let 'ps claw the Reader with never so many courteous phrases; yet shall wee euer-more be thought fooles, that write foolishly. For conclusion; all the hope I have lies in this, That I have already found more ungentle and uncourteous Readers of my Loue towards them, and well-deserving of them, than ever I shall doe againe. For had it beene otherwise, I should hardly have had this leisure, to have made my selfe a foole in print.

Forme of the successors of Semiramis: with a briefe transition to the question, about the Time of the birth of Abra ham.

A proposall of reasons or arguments, that sectrought to proue Abraham wastorne in the yeere 292. after the Floud, and not in the yeere 352.

The answere to one of the obiections proposed, shewing that Abraham made but one iourney out of Mcsopotamia into Canaan; and it, after his Fathers death.

The answere to another of the objections proposed, shewing that it was not unlikely, that Terah Sould beget Abraham in his bundred and thirtieth yeere.

Q. V. The answere to two more of the objections,

Theming that we may have certaintie of Abrahams age from the Scripture, though we make not Abraham the eldell sonne : and that there was great cause, why in the storie of Abraham his two brethren should be respected.

ð. V I.

That the naming of Abraham first of the three Breibren, Gen. 11. v. 26 doth not proue that bee was the eldest: together with divers reasons, proving that Abraham was not the eldest some of Terah.

d. I.
That the innisible God is seene in his Creatures.

O D, whom the wifeft men acknowledge to bee a Power vneffable, and Vertue infinite, a Light by abundant claritie inuifible, an Vnderstanding, which it selfe can onely comprehend, an Essence eternall and spirituall, of absolute purenesse and simplicitie, was, and is pleased to make himselfe knowne by the worke of the World: in the wonderfull magnitude whereos, (all which hee imbraceth, filleth, and sustaineth) wee behold the Image of that glorie, which cannot be measured, and withall that one, and yet vniuersall Nature, which cannot be defined. In the glorious Lights of Heauen; wee perceiue a shadow of his dinine Countenance; in his mercifull provision for all that live, his manifold goodnesse: and lastly, in creating and making existent the world vniversall; by the absolute art of his owne word, so his Power and almightinesse, which Power, Light, Vertue, Wisedome, and Goodnesse, goodnesse, and so goodnesse, and so goodnesse, and so goodnesse, and so goodnesse, and in part discerne per speculam creaturarum, that is, in the disposition order, and varietie of celessial and terrestrial bodies: terrestrial!, in their strange and manifold diversities; celessiall, in their beautie and magnitude; which in their continual & continual &

ons, their Almightie Mouer. In these more then wonderfull workes, God (saith Huge) speaketh vnto man, and it is true, that these be those discourses of God, whose effects, all that liue, witnesse in themselues; the sensible, in their sensible natures; the reasonable, in their reasonable foules: for according to S. Gregorie, Omnis homo eo ipfo quod rationalis conditus est, ex tpsa ratione, illum qui se condidit, Deum esse colligere debet: Euery man, in that he is reasonable, out of the same reason may know, that he which made him, is God. This God all men behold ( faith 10b) which is according to the Fathers, Dominationem illus 10 conspicere in creatures, to discerne him in his providence by his creatures. That God hath beene otherwise seene, to wit, with corporalleyes, exceedeth the small proportion of my vnderstanding, grounded on these places of S. Iohn, and S. Paul, Tee have not beard his voice at any time, neither have ye feene his shape. And againe, Whom never man quàm generatio.

And this I am sure agreeth with the nature of Gods simplicitie, of which S. Augustine, ipsa enim natura, vel substantia, vel quolibet alio nomine appellandum est, idipsum quod Deus eft, corporaliter videri non poteft, That nature, or that substance, or by whatfocuer name that is to be called which is God, what soeuer that be, the same cannot be corporally perceiued. And of this opinion were Origen, Cyrill, Chryfoftome, Grego- 20 rie Nazianzenus, Hierome, Augustine, Gregorie the Great, Euaristus, Alcuinus, Dionyfius Arcopageta, Aquinas, and all others of authoritie. But by his owne word, and e jaram. Therefore said that learned Culanus, Mundus univer sus minil alind est, quam Deus explicatus, The world vniuerfall, is nothing else but God exprest. And the innisible things of God (faith S. Paul) are seene by creation of the world, being considered in his Creatures. 30 Of all which, there was no other cause preceding, then his owne will, no other matter then his owne power, no other workman then his owne word, no other confideration, then his owne infinite goodnesse. The example & patterne of these his Creatures, as he beheld the same in all eternitie in the abundance of his owne loue, so was it at length in the most wise order, by his vnchanged will mooned, by his high wisedome disposed, and by his almightic power perfected, and made visible: And therefore (laith Mirandula) we ought to loue God, Ex fide, & ex effettibus, ( that is ) both perswaded by his word, and by the effects of the worlds creation: Neg; enim gat cansa caret, ex causa & origine sciri, cognosciq; potest, sed vel ex rerum, qua facta sunt, quaque funt & gubernantur oblernatione & collatione, vel ex ipfins Dei verbo: For he of whom 40 there is no higher cause, cannot be knowne by any knowledge of cause or beginning, (faith Montanus) but either by the obseruing and conferring of things, which hee hath, or doth create and gouerne, or else by the word of God himselfe.

> That the wifest of the Heathen, whose authoritic is not to be despised, have acknowledged the world to have beene created

His worke and creation of the world, did most of the ancient & learned 50 Philosophers acknowledge, though by divers termes, and in a different maner exprest, I meane al those who are entitled by S. Augustine, Summi Philosophi, Philosophers of highest judgement and understanding. Mercurius Trismegistus calleth God, Principium universorum, The originall of the vniuerfall: to whom he giveth also the attributes of Mens, natura, actus, necesfites, finis, & renouatio. And wherein hee truely, with S. Paul, casteth vpon God all power; confessing also, that the world was made by Gods almighty word, and not by hands: verbo, non manibus fabricatus est mundus. ZOROASTER (whom Heraclitus followed in opinion) tooke the word Fire, to expresse God by (as in Deuterono- Deut.4.24. mie and in S. Paulit is vsed) Omnia ex unoigne genita (unt; All things (faith be) are Hebr. 12.19. caused, or produced out of one fire.

So did Orpheus plainely teach, that the world had beginning in time, from the will of the most High God; whose remarkeable words are thus converted: Cum abscon- orphidesium. 10 disset omnia I VPITER sammus, deinde in lumen gratum emisit, ex sucro corde operans sone. cogitata & mirabilia: Of which Iconceine this fenfe; When great I vpiter had hidden all things in himselfe; working out of the love of his sacred heart, be sent thence, or brought forth into gratefull light, the admirable workes which he had fore-thought.

Pindarus the Poet, and one of the wifest, acknowledged also one God, the most High, to bee the Father and Creator of all things; Vnus Deus Pater Creator fummus. Plato calleth God the cause and originall, the nature and reason of the vniue sall; totius rerum natura, causa, & origo Deus. But heereof more at large heereafter.

Now, although the curiofitie of some men haue found it superfluous, to remember the opinions of Philosophers, in matters of Dininity: (it being true, that the 20 Scripture hath not want of any forraine restimony ) yet as the Fathers, with others excellently learned, are my examples heerein; so S. Paul himselfe did not despise, but thought it lawfull, & profitable, to remember what soeuer he found agreeable to the word of God; among the Heathen, that he might thereby take from them all elcape, by way of ignorance, God rendring vengeance to them that know him not : as in his Epistle to Titus, he citeth Epimenides against the Cretians, and to the Corinthians, Menander, and in the leventeenth of the dets, Aratus &c. for Truth (faith S. Ambrofe) by whomsoener vetered, is of the holy Ghost; Veritas à quocung; dicatur, à Spirita fanctoeft: and lattly, let those kinde of men learne this rule ; Que facris sermant, prophana non (unt; Nothing is prophane that ferueth to the vee of holy things.

> §. III. of the meaning of In Principio Genes. I. I.

His visible World of which Moles writeth, God created in the beginning or first of all: in which (faith Tertulian) things beganne to bee.

This word beginning (in which the Hebrewes seeke some hidden myferie, and which in the Iewes Targum is connerted by the word Sapiens tra) cannot be referred to succession of time nor to order, as some men have conceived, both which are subsequent; but onely to creation then. For before that beginning, there was neither primary matter to bee informed, nor forme to informe, nor any being, but the eternall. Nature was not, nor the next parent of time begotten, time properly and naturally taken; for if God had but disposed of matter already in being, then as the word beginning could not bee referred to all things, fo must it follow, that the institution of matter proceeded from a greater power, then that of God. And by what name shall we then call such a one (faith Lactantius) as exceedeth God in potencie: for it is an act of more excellencie to make, then to dif-50 pose of things made? whereupon it may be concluded, that matter could not be before this beginning: except we faine a double creation, or allow of two powers, and both infinite, the impossibilitie whereof scorneth defence. Nam impossibile plura cusan demente effe infinita : quoniam alterum effet in altero finitum; There cannot bee more infinites then lib 3. one; for one of them would limit the other. d. IIII.

Of the meaning of the words Heaven and Earth. Genesis 2. 1.

He vniuerfall matter of the world (which Moyfes comprehendeth vnder the names of Heanen and Earth) is by divers diversly vindershood:
for there are that conceive, that by those wordes, was meant the fire for there are that conceive, that by those wordes, was meant the first matter, as the Peripatetikes understand it, to which, S. Augustine and Istaria dore seeme to adhere. Feeist mundum (faith S. Augustine) de materia informi, quam fecisti de nulla re, pene nullam rem: (that is) Thou hast made the world of a matter without forme; which matter thou madest of nothing, and being made, it was little other then nothing.

But this potentiall and imaginary materia prima, cannot exist without forme. Peter Lombard, the Schoole-men, Beda, Lytanus, Comestor, Tostatus and others, affirme, that it pleased God first of all to create the Empyrean Heauen: which at the succeeding Boda-Hex.Stra. instant (faith Beda and Strabo ) hee filled with Angels. This Empyrean Heauen Steuchius Eugubinus calleth Diuine claritie, and vncreated: an errour, for which hee is sharply charged by Pererius, though (as I conceive) he rather failed in the subsequent, 20 when he made it to be a place, and the seate of Angels, & iust Soules, then in the former affirmation: for of the first, That God liveth in eternall light, it is written; My foule, praife thou the Lord, that concreth himfelfe with light: and in the Reuelation; And the Citic bath no neede of Sunne, neither of the Moone to Shine in it: for the glory of God didlight it. And herein also John Mercer vpon Genesis differeth not in opinion from Engulinus: for as by Heaven created in the beginning, was not meant the invilible or supercelestiall, so in his judgement, because it was in all eternity, the glorious seat of God himselse, it was not necessary to be created; Quem mundum supercalestem meo indicio creari ( faith Mericer ) non crat necesse.

But as Mofes forbare to speake of Angels, and of things invisible, and incorporate, 30 for the weakenes of their capacities, whom he then cared to informe of those things, which were more manifest, (to wit ) that God did not only by a strong hand deliner them from the bondage of Egypt, according to his promise made to their forefathers: but also that he created, and was the sole cause of this aspectable, and perceiueable Vniuerfall; so on the other side I dare not thinke, that any supercelestiall Heauen, or what soeuer else (not himselfe) was increate and eternall: and as for the place of God before the world created, the finite wisedome of mortall men hathino perception of it, neither can it limit the seate of infinite power, no more then infinite power it selfe can be limited: for his place is in himselse, whom no magnitude else can containe: How great is the House of God ( faith BARV CH ) how large is the place of his possessions! it is 40 great, and hathno end, it is high and unmeasurable.

But leaving multiplicitie of opinion, it is more probable and allowed, that by the wordes, Heauen and Earth, was meant the folid matter and fubstance, aswell of allane Heavens, and Orbes supernall, as of the Globe of the Earth and Waters, which couered it ouer; ( to wit ) that very matter of all things, materia, Chaos, possibilitas, fine poffe fieri. Which matter (faith Caluin) was fo called , quod totius mundi femen fuerit; Because it was the seed of the Vniner (all: an opinion of ancient Philosophers long

That the substance of the waters, as mixt in the body of the earth, is by Moses understood in the word Earth: and that the Earth, by the attributes of unformed and voide, is described as the Chaos of the an-

CHAP.I. S.5.

Oses first nameth Heaven and Earth (putting waters but in the third place) as comprehending waters in the word Earth, but afterwards hee nameth them apart, when God by his Spirit began to distinguish the consused Masse, and (as Basit saits) praparare naturam aque ad feecunditatem vitalem; to prepare the nature of water to a vital fruitfulneffe,

For vnder the word Heaven, was the matter of all heavenly bodies, and natures exprest: and by the name of Earth and Waters, all was meant, what soener is vnder the Moone, and subject to alteration. Corrupt seedes bring foorth corrupt plants: to which the pure heavens are not subject, though subject to perishing. They shall pe- Pfal. 102,26. rish (saith Dauid) and the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, saith Esay. Neither Esai 11. were the waters the matter of Earth : for it is written, Let the waters under the hea-20 uens be gathered into one place, and let the dry land appeare: which prooueth that the dry land was mixt and couered with the waters, and not yet diftinguished; but no way, that the waters were the matter or seede of the Earth, much lesse of the Vniuersall. Initiotu Domine terram fundasti, Thou, O Lord, in the beginning hast founded the Earth: and againe. The Earth was covered with the Deepe (meaning with waters) as with a gar- pal, 104.6 ment, faith David. And if by naturall arguments it may be prooued, that water by condensation may become earth, the same reason teacheth vs also, that earth rarified may become water: water, aire : aire, fire ; and so on the contrary, Dews ignis /ub- Zeno. ftantiam per aerem in aquam convertit, God turneth the substance of fire, by aire, into water. For the Heauens and the Earth remained in the same state, in which they were 30 created, astouching their substance, though there was afterwards added multiplicitie of perfection, in respect of beauty and ornament. Calum verb & terra in statuerea- Gul. Parissoo. tionisremanserunt, quantum ad substantiam, licet multiplex perfectio decoris & ornatus eis postmodum superaddita est. And the word which the Hebrewes call Maim, is not to be understood according to the Latine translation simply, and as specifical water, but the same more properly signifieth liquor. For (according to Montanus) Est autem A. Montadenat. Maim liquor geminus, & hoc nomen propter verborum penuriam, Latina lingua plurali numero aquas fecit. For Maim (faith he) is a double liquor, (that is, of divers natures) and this name or word the Latines wanting a voice to expresset, call it in the Plural, Aquas,

This Masse, or indigested matter, or Chaos created in the beginning, was without forme, that is, without the proper forme, which it afterwards acquired, when the Spirit of God had separated the Earth, and digested it from the waters : And the earth Gen. ta. was voide: that is not producing any creatures, or adorned with any plants, fruits, or flowers. But after the Spirit of God had moved upon the waters, and wrought this indigested matter into that forme, which it now retayneth, then did the earth budde forth the hearbe, which feedeth feede, and the fruitfull tree according to his kinde, and God faw that it was good; which attribute was not given to the Earth, while it was confused, nor to the Heauens, before they had motion, and adornement. God faw that it was good; that is, made perfect: for perfection is that, to which nothing is wanting. Et

Some of the Hebrewes convertit to this effect, Spiritus Dei volitabat, The Spirit of God did flutter : the Chaldwan Paraphraft in this sense, ventus à conspectu Dei sufflabat, or as other understand the Chaldwan, flabat, pellebat, remouebat : the wind from the face of God did blow under drive, or remove, or did blow wion, according to the 147. Plaine. He caused his winde to blow, and the waters increase: but there was yet no winde nor exhaar. Mont. vi fup. lation : Arias Montanus in these wordes, Et spiritus Elohim Merachefet, id est, efficaciter motitans, tonfouens, ac agitans super facies gemini liquoris; The Spirit of God effe- 30 Etually and often mouing, keeping warme, and cherifting, quickning and firring upon the face of this double liquor. For he maketh foure originals, whereof three are agents, and the last passive and materiall, to wit, canfa, which is the divine goodnesse: Ichi, which is , fiat , sine erit, let it be , or it shallbe. Qua vox verbo Dei prima prolata fuit: which voice (faith he) was the full that was ottered by the word of God. The third Spiritus Elohim, the Spirit of God, idest, vis quadam divina, agilis ac prasens per omnia pertingens, omnia complens, that is, a certaine divine power, or frength every where, active and extending, and stretching through all, filling and fin shing all things. The fourth hee calleth Maim, idest, materies adomnem rem conficiendam habilis ; matter apt 10 become euery thing. For my selfe I am resolucd (Cum Deus sit superrationale omni ratione, See- 40 ing Godie in all reason aboue reason) that although the effects which follow his wonderfull wayes of working, may in a measure be perceived by mans understanding, yet the manner and first operation of his divine power cannot bee conceived by any minde, or spirit, compassed with a mortall body. Animalis home qua Dei sunt non percipit: For my thoughts (fayth the Lord in Efay) are not your thoughts, neither are your wayes my wayes. And as the world hath not knowne God himselfe: fo are his wayes (according to S. Paul) past finding out. Orighteous Father the world hath not knowne thee, faith CHRIST. And therfore, whether that motion, vitality and operation, were by incubation, or how elfe, the maner is onely knowne to God, Quemodo in omnibus fit rebus vel per essentiam, vel per potentiam, intellectus noster non capit; For bow God (layth 50 in Ioban. 17-25. S. Augustine, speaking of his V biquitie) is in all things, either by effence, presence, or power, our understanding cannot comprehend. Nihil inter Deum hominemg, distaret ; fi consilia, & dispositiones illius maiestatis aterna, cogitatio assequeretur humana : There would be no difference betweene God and Man, if mans understanding could conceive the counsels and disposing of that eternall Maiestie; and therefore to be over-curious in searching how the all-powerfull Word of God wrought in the creation of the World or his all-piercing and operative Spirit diftinguilhing, gave forme to the matter of the Vniuerfall, is a labour and fearch like vnto his, who not contented with a knowne and fafe foord, will presume to passe ouer the greatest River in all parts, where hee is ignorant of their depths: for so doth the one lose his life, and the other his vnderflanding. We behold the Sunne, and enion his light, as long as we looke towards it, buttenderly, and circumspectly: we warme our selues safely, while we stand neere the fire; but if we feeke to outface the one, to enter into the other, we forth with be-

But to eschew curiositie: this is true, that the English word (moued) is most proper and fignificant: for of motion proceedeth all production, and all what soener is effected. And this omnipotent Spirit of God, which may indeede be truely called, Principlum motus, and with Mirandula, vis cause efficientis, The force of the efficient cause. Saint Augustine sometimes taketh for the holy Ghost; sometime for a winde or breath, Sub nomine Spiritus, under the name of a Spirit, which is sometimes so taken: or for virtualis creatura, for a created virtuality: Tertullian and Theodoret call it also a breath or winde: Mercurius namethit, Spiritum tenuem intelligibilem, a pure or thinne intelligible spirit : Anaxagoras, mentem : Tostatvs, voluntatem & mentem 20 Dei, The will and minde of God; which mens, Plato in Timeo, maketh animam mundi, The loule of the world: and in his fixt Booke de Republica, he calleth it the law of Heaven; in his Epiffles, the leader of things to come, and the presence of things past. But as Cyprian wrote of the Incarnation of CHRIST our Sauiour, Mens deficit, vox filet, o non meatantim, fedetiam Angelorum: My minde faileth, my voice is filent, and not mine onely, but euen the voice of Angels: so may al men else say in the vnderstanding, and veterance of the wayes and workes of the Creation; for to him (faith Nazianzenus) there is not one substance by which he is, and another, by which he can, Sed consubstantiale sile Theol. eft quicquideius est, & quicquidest, what soener attribute of him there is , and what soener be is, it is the very same substance that himselfe is.

30 But the Spirit of God which moued vpon the waters, cannot be taken for a breath or winde nor for any other creature, separate from the infinite active power of God. which then formed and diffinguished, and which now sustaineth, and giveth continuance to the Vniuersall. For the Spirit of the Lord filleth all the world; and the same is it which maintaineth all things, saith SALOMON. If thou fend forth thy Spirit, Ver. 7. (faith DAVID) they are created: And GREGORIE, Deus suo prasentiali esse, dat omnibus rebus effe, ita quod, sife rebus subtraheret, sicut de nihilo facta sunt omma, sic in nihilum defluerent universa; God grueth being to all things, by being present with all things, To as if he (bould withdraw himfelfe from them, then, as of nothing the world was made, it would againe fall away and vanishinto nothing. And this working of Gods Spirit in all

And this was the same Spirit, which moued in the Vniuerfall, and thereby both diffinguished and adorned it. His Spirit bath garnished the Heanens, fayth lob . So 166 case.13.

then the Spirit of God moued vpon the waters, and created in them their spiritualitie, and naturall motion; motion brought forth heat; and heat rarifaction, and subtilitie of parts. By this Spirit, (which gaue heat and motion, and thereby, operation to every nature, while it moved vpon the waters, which were in one indigefted lump. and Chaos, disposed to all formes alike) was begotten ayre: an element superior, as lighter then the waters, through whose vast, open, subtile, diaphanicke, or transparent body, the light afterwards created might easily transpierce: light, for the excellencie thereof, being the first creature which God called good, whose creation immediarly followed. This Spirit Chryfostome calleth a vitall Operation , aquis à Des insitam,ex qua aqua non solum motionem, sed & vim procreandi animalia habuerint. He calleth 10 it. A vitall Operation given by God unto the waters , whereby the waters had not onely motion , but also power to procreate or bring foorth living creatures.

Of the light created, as the material substance of the Sunne: and of the nature of it, and difficultie of knowledge of it: and of the excellencie and vle of it: and of motion, and heat annexed unto it.

Hele waters were afterwards congregated, and called the Sea : and this 20 light afterwards (in the fourth day) gathered and united, and called the Sunne, the Organ, and instrument of created light. For this first and dispersed light did not (as I conceiue) distinguish the night from the day, but with a reference to the Sunnes creation, and the vniting of the

dispersed light therein. This is proued by these words, Let there be lights in the sirmament, to separate the day from the night: which lights in the firmament of heaven were also made for signes, and for seasons, and for dayes, and for yeeres, implying a motion instantly to follow, by which dayes and yeeres are distinguished; after which succeeded Time, or together with which, that Time (which was the measure of motion began. For that space of the first three dayes which preceded the Suns crea- 20 tion, or formall perfection, when as yet there was not any motion to bee measured, and the day named in the fift verse, was but such a space, as afterwards by the Sunnes motion made a civill or naturall day. And as Waters were the matter of ayre, of the firmament, and of the lower and upper waters, and of the Seas, and creatures therein: Earth, the matter of Beafts, Plants, Minerals, and Mans body: so may light (for expression sake) be called the Chaos, or materiall substance of the Sunne, and other lights of heauen: Howbeit, neither the Sunne, nor any thing sensible, is that light it Lux dicitur, que selfe, que causa est lucidorum, which is the cause that things are light some (though it make it selfe and all things else visible) but a body most illightned, which illuminateth fan.in compend. the Moone, by whom the neighbouring Region (which the Greekes call Asher, the 40 place of the supposed Element of fire) is affected and qualified, and by it all bodies liuing in this our ayre. For this light Autcenna calleth webiculum & fomentum omntum calestium virtutum, & impressionum: The conducter, and preserver or nourisher of all Celestiall vertues and impressions, nothing descending of heavenly influences, but by the medium, or meanes of light. Aristotle calleth light, a qualitie, inherent, or cleaning to a Diaphanous body, Lumen est qualit as inherens Diaphano: but this may be better auouched of the heat, which it transporteth and bringeth with it, or conducteth: Ficin, lib.de Lu- which heat (say the Platonickes) abeunte lumine residet in subiecto, the light being departed, doth residein the subiett, as warmth in the aire, though the same bee deprined of light. This light Plotinus and all the Academikes make incorporal, and fordoth Mon- 50 TANVS, Cui nec duritiaresistit, nec fatium : Which neither hardnesse resisteth, nor space

EAD 7. C EXCECT. lib.s.

Aristotle findeth corporalitie in the beames of light; but it is but by way of repetition of other mens opinions, faith Picolomineus. Democritus, Leucippui, and Epicurus, give materiality to light it selfe, but improperly: for it passeth at an instant, from the Heauen to the Earth, nor is it relisted by any hardnesse, because it pierceth through the folid body of glaffe, or other Cristalline matter; and whereas it is withstood by vncleane, and vnpure earthy substances, lesse hard, and more case to inuade then the former, the same is, Quodobstaculum natur à terreum atq; sordidum, non castit candidam Phim. luminis puritatem: Because an obsidacle, by nature earthie and foule, doth not receive the pure cleareneffe of light: alluding to that most divine light, which onely shineth on those mindes, which are purged from all worldly droffe, and humane vncleannesse.

But of this created light, there is no agreement in opinion; neither doe I maruaile 10 at it, for it cannot be found either in the Fathers, Philosophers, or Schoole-men, or other ancient or later Writers, that any of them understood either it or themselues therein: all men (to cast offignorance) have disputed heereof, but there is no man that hath beene taught thereby. Thomas Againes (not inferiour to any in wit) as he hath shewed little strength of argument in reluting the opinions of Beda, Hugo, Lombard, Lyranus, and others: so is his owne judgement heerein, as weake as any mans; and most of the Schoole-men were rather curious in the nature of termes, and more fubrile in diffinguishing upon the parts of doctrine already laid down, then discouerers of any thing hidden, either in Philosophie or Divinitie: of whom it may be truly faid, Nihil fapientie odiofius acumine monto: Nothing u more odious to true w fedome, 20 then too acute sharpnesse. Neither hath the length of time, and the search of many learned men, (which the same time hath brought forth and denoured) resolued vs, whether this light be substantiall, corporall, or incorporall: Corporall they say it cannot be, because then it could neither pierce the Aire, nor those hard, solid, and Diaphanous bodies, which it doth, and yet euery day we see the Aire illightened: incorporal it cannot be, because it is sensible: sensible it is, because it somtime affecteth the sight of the eve with offence, and therefore by most of the Fathers so esteemed: others say, (as Patricius) that it cannot be matter, because no forme so excellent as it selfeto informe it: neither can it be any accident, which is not separable without the destru-Aion of the subject : for light being taken from the Sunne, the Sunne is no more the Lucida corpora 30 Sunnein existence. Secondly, if light were proceeding from matter and forme, then luce, wheth te-either, or both must be one of these, Lucide or bright, darke or opake, Diaphanous nebrasimperuia, or transparent; but darkenessecannot bee parent of light; and things Diaphanous Opaca furt ple-(being neither light, nor darkenesse, but capable of either) cannot be the cause of either, and therefore must the matter, or forme, or both, be Lucide and shining. Lucide Trans, arentia and shining obtaine their so being of the light; and therefore, if we derive this being for the light; and therefore, if we derive this being for the light; and therefore is the derive the same state. of light from a former, then would the progresse goe on infinitely, and against nature; mine con teneand therefore he concludeth, that light in the Sunne hath his being primarily, and bris: alients immediatly of it selfe, and is therefore the Sunnes forme and the forme of all Lucide briggermeatur. and thining bodies: but what is taught heereby, let others judge.

But in my vinderstanding lumen, (which may be Englished by the word Shine) is Scal Subtan. 71, an intentionall Species of that, which may bee Englished by Light, and so, this shining which proceedeth from the Sun, or other lights of Heauen, or from any other light, is an image, or intentionall Species thereof; and an intentional Species may be vnderstood by the example of a red, or greene colour, occasioned by the shining of the Sunne through red or greene glasse: for then wee perceiue the same colour cast vpon any thing opposite; which reducise or other colour, we cal the intentional Species of the colour in that glasse. And againe, as this light, touching his simple nature, is no way yet vnderstood: so it is disputed, whether this light first created, bee the fame, which the Sunne inholdeth and casteth forth, or whether it had continuance 50 any longer, then till the Sunnes creation.

But by the most wife and vnchanged order, which God observed in the worke of Genes. 1. the world, I gather, that the light, in the first day created, was the substance of the Sunne: for Moles repeateth twife the maine parts of the vniuerfall, first, as they were Vers. 12. created in matter; secondly, as they were adorned with forme: first, naming the

Heauens, the Earth, the Waters, all confused, and afterward, the Waters congregated, the Earth made dry land, and the Heauens distinguished from both, and beautified. And therefore the Earth, as it was earth, before it was vncouered, and before it was called Arida, or dry land; and the Waters were waters, before they were congregated, and called the Sea, though neither of them perfect, or inriched with their vertuall formes: so the Sunne, although it had not his formall perfection, his circle, beauty, and bounded magnitude, till the fourth day, yet was the substance thereof in the first day (vnder the name of Light) created; and this Light formerly dispersed, was in the same fourth day vnited, and set in the Firmament of Heauen: for to Light created in the first day, God gaue no proper place or fixation; and therefore the ef- 10 fects named by Anticipation, (which was to separate day from night) were precisely performed, after this Light was congregated, and had obtained life and motion. Neither did the wisedome of God finde cause why it should moone (by which motion, dayes and nights are distinguished) till then: because there was not yet any Creature produced, to which, by mouing, the Sunne might give light, hear, and opera-

But after the Earth (distinguished from waters) began to budde forth the budde of the herbe, &c. God caused the Sunne to moue, and (by interchange of time) to visite enery part of the inferiour world; by his heat to stirre vp the fire of generation, and to give activity to the feedes of all natures: For, as a King, which comman- 20 deth some goodly building to bee erested, doth accommodate the same to that vse and end, to which it was ordained; so it pleased God (saith Procopius) to command the Light to be; which by his all-powerfull word he approued, and approuing it, difposed thereof, to the vie and comfort of his future Creatures. But in that it pleased God to aske of I ob, By what way is the light parted, and where is the way where light dwelleth? wee thereby know that the nature thereof falleth not vnder mans vnderstanding; and therefore let it suffice, that by Gods grace we enioy the effects thereof. For this light is of the treasure of God ( faith Esdras. ) And those which inhabite the Heauens, ace onely know the effence thereof. Nihil ignotum in cale, mhil notum in terra: Nothing unknowne in Heanen, nothing perfectly knowne on earth. 30 Res vera funt in mundo inuisibili, in mundo visibili umbra rerum: Things them elues are in the innifible wo ld, in the world visible, but their shadowes; Surely, if this light be not spirituall, yet it approcheth neerest vnto spirituality; and if it haue any corporality, then of all other the most subtile and pure, for howsoeuer, it is of all things seene, the most beautifull, and of the swiftest motion, of all other the most necessary and beneficiall. For it ministreth to men, and other creatures, all celestiall influences; it diffipateth those sad thoughts and sorrowes, which the darkenesse both begetteth and maintaineth; it discouereth vnto vs the glorious workes of God, and carrieth vp with an Angelicall swiftnesse, our eyes vnto Heauen, that by the fight thereof, our mindes being informed of his visible maruailes, may continually trauaile to sur- 40 mount these perceived Heavens, and to finde out their omnipotent cause and Creatour. Cognitio non quiescit in rebus creatu; Our knowledge doth not quiet it selfe in thines created. Et ipfa lux facit, vt catera mundi membra digna fint laudibus, cum fuam bonitatem & decorem omnibus communicet; It is the light, (faith S. Ambrose) that maketh the other part of the world so worthy of praise, seeing that it selfe communicateth its goodneffe and beauty vnto all: of which Ourd out of Orpheus:

Ficin.

Ille ego fum, quilongum metior annum, Omnia qui video, per quem videt omnia mundus, Mandi eculus.

The world discernes it selfe, while I the world behold, By me the longest yeeres, and other times are told, I the worlds eye.

Lastly, if we may behold in any creature, any one sparke of that eternall fire, or any farre-off-dawning of Gods glorious brightnesse, the same in the beauty, motion, and vertue of this light may be perceived. Therefore was God called lux ipfa, and the light, by Hermes named lux fancta, and Christ our Sauiour faid to bee that Light, 10h.1.9 & 14. which lighteneth enery man that commeth into the world. Yet in respect of Gods incom- 46. prehenlible sublimitie, and puritie, this is also true, that Godis neither a minde, nor a Spirit of the nature of other Spirits; nor a light, such as can be discerned. Deus profecto non mens eft, at vero vt fit mens caufa eft, nec firstus, fed caufa qua firstus extat; nec lumen, sed causa qualumen existit. God (faith HERMES in Poe MANDRO ) certainely is 10 not aminde, but the saufe that the minde bath his being; nor spirit, but the cause by which enery first is ; nor light, but the cause by which the light exist eth.

So then the Masse and Chaos being first created, void, darke, and imformed, was by the operative Spirit of God, pierced and quickened, and the Waters having now received Spirit & motion, resolved their thinner parts into Aire, which God illightned: the Earth also by being contiguat, and mixt with waters (participating the same 6m. 1. 16. divine vertue) brought foorth the budde of the herbe that seedeth seede, &c. and for a meane and organ, by which this operative vertue might bee continued, Godappointed the light to be vntted, and gaue it also motion and heat, which heat caused a continuance of those severall species, which the Earth (being made fruitfull by the 20 Spirit ) produced, and with motion begate the time and times succeeding.

Of the Firmament, and of the waters abone the Firmament: and whether there bee any cristalline Heanen, or any Primum mobile.

Fter that the Spirit of God had moued vpon the waters, and light was created, God faid, Let there bee a Firmament in the middest of the waters, andlet it separate the waters from the waters: that is, those waters which by rarifaction and enaporation were ascended, and those of the Earth

But these waters separate about this extension, which the Latine Translation calleth firmamentum, for expansum (for so Vatablus, Pagninus, and Iunius turne it) are not the cristalline Heauens, created in the imaginations of men; which opinion Basilins Magnus calleth a childish supposition, making in the same place many learned argumentsagainst this fancie. For the watersaboue the Firmament, are the waters in the Aireaboue vs, where the same is more solid and condense, which God separated 40 from the nether waters by a Firmament, that is, by an extended distance and vast space: the wordes Raquia, which Montanus writeth Rakiagh, and Shamaym, being indifferently taken for the Heauen & for Aire, and more properly for the Aire & ather, then for the Heauens, as the best Hæbricians understand them , quo suprema actenuta Mont. nat. bish ab infimis crassis diducta, interfectaq; distarent, for that whereby the supreme and thinne fal. 152. bodies were placed in distance, being seuered and cut off from low and grosse matters: and the waters about the Firmament, express in the word Maym, are in that tongue taken properly for the waters about the Aire, or in the uppermost Region of the same.

And that the word Heauen is vsed for the Aire, the Scriptures euery-where witnesse, as in the bleffings of toleph, and in the 104. So as in all the Scriptures of the old Testament throughout, is the word Heauen very often vsed for aire, and taken also hyperbolically for any great heighth, as, Let vs build vs a Tower, whose toppe may reach to Heaven, erc. And in this very place Basil auoucheth, that this appellation of Heauen for the Firmament, is but by way of similitude: his owne wordes be these; Et vocauit Deus sirmamentum calum. Hac appellatio alij quidem proprie accommodatur, buic autemnunc ad similitudinem; And God called the firmament Heauen: This appellation (faith Basil) is properly applyed to another (that is, to the Starry Heaven) but to this, (that is, to the Firmament dividing the waters) it is imposed by simulatude: and if there were no other proofe, that by the Firmament was meant the Aire, and not the Heauen, the wordes of Moses in the eighth Verse, conferred with the same word Firmament in the twentieth Verse, makes it manifest: for in the eighth Verseit is written, that God called the Firmament, which divided waters from waters, Heaven; and in the 20. Verse hee calleth the Firmament of Heauen, Aire, in these words: And let the foule fie upon the earthin the open sirmament of Heaven: and what wse there should bee of this yeie, or cristalline, or waterie Heauen, I conceiue not, except it be to moderate and temper the hear, which the Primam mebile would other wife gather and increase: though in very truth, in flead of this helpe, it would adde an vnmeasurable greatnesse of circle, whereby the swiftnesse of that first Moueable would exceede all possibilitie of beleefe. Sednemo tenetur ad imposibilia; but no man ought to be held to imposibilities; and 20 faith it selfe (which surmounteth the heighth of all humane reason) hath for a forcible Conducter, the Word of Truth, which also may be called lumen omnis rationu & intellectus; the light of all reason and understanding. Now that this supposed first Moueable, turneth it selfe so many hundred thousand miles in an instant (seeing the Scriptures teach it not ) let those that can beleeue mens imaginations, apprehend it, for I can not : but of these many Heauens, let the Reader that desireth satisfaction, search Orontius, and of this waterie Heauen, Basilius Magnus in his Hexam. fol. 40. 41. &c. and Matth. Beroaldus, his second Booke, and fixt Chapter. For my selfe, I am perswaded, that the waters, called, The waters about the Heavens, are but the cloudes and waters ingendred in the vppermos Aire.

I X.

A conclusion repeating the summe of the workes in the Creation, which are reduced to three heads: The creation of matter, The forming of it, The finishing

O conclude, it may bee gathered out of the first Chapter of Genesis, that this was the order of the most wife Go D in the beginning, and 40 when there was no other nature, or being, but Gods incomprehensible eternitie. First, hee created the matter of all things: and in the first three daies he distinguished & gaue to every nature his proper forme;

the forme of lenitie to that which ascended, to that which descended, the forme of grauitie: for he separated light from darkenesse, divided waters from waters and gathered the waters under the Firmament into one place. In the last three dayes, God adorned, beautified, and replenished the world the set in the Firmament of Heauen, the Sunne, Moone, and Starres; filled the Earth with Beafts, the Aire with Fowle, and the Sea with Fish, giving to all that have life, a power generative, thereby to continue their Species and kindes; to Creatures vegetative and growing; their feeds 50 Masaleria, in themselves; for hee created all things, that they might have their being : and the generations of the world are preserved.

That Nature is no Principium per se; nor forme the giver of being : and of our ignorance, how (econd causes should have any proportion with their effects.

N p for this working power, which wee call Nature, the beginning of motion and rest, according to Aristotle, the same is nothing else, but the strength and facultie, which God hath infused into enery creature, ha-10 uing no other selfe-abilitie, then a Clocke, after it is wound vp by a mans hand, hath. These therefore that attribute vnto this facultie, any first or fole power, have therein no other understanding, then such a one hath, who looking into the Sterne of a Ship, and finding it guided by the Helme and Rudder, doth ascribe some absolute vertue to the piece of wood, without all consideration of the hand, that guides it, or of the judgement, which also directeth and commandeth that hand; forgetting in this and in all elfe, that by the vertue of the first act, all Agents worke what soeuer they worke: Virtute primi actus agunt agentia omnia quicquid agunt: for as the minde of man feeth by the Organ of the eye, heareth by the eares, and maketh choice by the will: and therefore we attribute fight to the eye, and hear 20 ring to the eares, &c. and yet it is the minde only, that giveth abilitie, life, and motion to all these his instruments and Organs; so God worketh by Angels, by the Sunne, by the Starres, by Nature, or infused properties, and by men, as by seuerall organs, seueral effects, all second causes what soeuer, being but instruments, conduits, and pipes, which carrie and disperse what they have received from the head and fountaine of the Vniuerfall. For asit is Gods infinite power, and enery-where-prefence (compassing, embracing, and piercing all things) that giueth to the Sunne power to draw vp vapours, to vapours to bee made cloudes, cloudes to containe raine, and raine to fall: fo all fecond and infirumentall causes, together with Nature it felfe, without that operative facultie which God gave them, would become alto-O gether filent, vertuelesse, and dead: of which excellently ORPHEVS; Per te vires- Natura enimre. cunt omnia, All things by thee firing forth in youthfull greene. workes in their vertues prayle him: but of the manner how God worketh in them, or fall, Sapientia, le they in or with each other, which the Heathen Philosophers, and those that follow them, hauetaken on them to teach: I say, there is not any one among them, nor any one among vs, that could ever yet conceine it, or expresse it, ever enrich his own vnderstanding with any certaine truth, or ener edine others (not foolish by selfe-flatterie) therein. For (fayth Lactantius, speaking of the wisedome of the Philosophers) 40 si facultas inuemenda veritatis huic studio subiaceret, aliquando esset inuenta; cum verò tot temporibus, tot ingenis in eius inquisitione contritis, non sit comprehensa, apparet nullam ibies (apentiam: If in this studie (sayth hee) were meanes to find out the truth, it had ere this beene found out : but feeing it is not yet comprehended, after that fo much time, cypriandemenand so many wits have beene worne out in the inquiry of it, it appeareth, that there is no wife- 10,116,3. dome there to be had. Nam si de una re pracisa scientia haberetur, omnium rerum scientia necessario haberetur: If the precise knowledge of any one thing were to bee had, it sould neceffarily follow, that the knowledge of all things were to bee had. And as the Philosophers had any being, it were not then the first matter: for, as it is the first matter, it hath only a power of being, which it altogether leaueth, when it doth sublist. And seeing it is neyther a substance pefect, nor a substance inchoate, or in the way of persection, how any other substance should thence take concrescence, it hath not beene taughts, neyther are these formes (sayth a learned Authour) anything, si ex ea exprimantur were ignorant in Nature, and the wayes of her working: so were they more curious, then knowing, in their first matter and Physicall forme. For if their first matter

potentia, que nihil est. Againe, how this first matter should bee subiettum formarum, and passiue, which is vnderstood to precede the forme, it is hard to conceiue: for to make forme which is the cause, to bee subsequent to the thing caused (to wit, to the first matter) is contrary to all reason, divine and humane: only it may be said, that originally there is no other difference betweene matter & forme, then betweene heat and fire, of which the one cannot subsist without the other, but in a kind of rationall consideration. Leauing therefore these Riddles to their Louers, who by certaine scholasticall distinctions wrest and peruert the truth of all things, and by which Arifoste hath laboured to prooue a falle eternitie of the World, I thinke it farre fafer to affirme with Saint Avgvstine, That all species and kinds are from God, from whom, 10 what soener is natural proceedeth, of what kind or estimation soener, from whence are the feeds of all formes, and the formes of all feeds and their motions ; A quo est omnis becies, & quo eft quicquid naturaliter est, cuiuscung, generis eft, cuiuscung, aftimationis est, à quo sunt Semina formarum, forma seminum, motus seminum atg, formarum. And thus much Auerrois is forced to confesse. For all formes (sayth he) are in primo motore; which is also the opinion of aristotle in the twelfth of his Metaph, and of Albertus vpon

Of Fate; and that the Starres have great influence; and that their operations may diverly be prevented or furthered.

N D, as of Nature, such is the dispute and contention concerning Fate or Destinie, of which the opinions of those learned men that have written thereof, may be safely received, had they not thereunto annexed and fastened an ineuitable necessitie, and made it more generall, and vniuerfally powerfull then it is, by giving it Dominion over the mind of man,

Bafil. Efa.4. Aug.de hæref. 70.c.35. The cont. Gent. 3.cap.83. Ficin.in 12.de leg. Cic de fat.

An errour of the Chaldeans, and after them of the Stoicks, the Pharifees, Priscillianists, the Bardisanists, and others, as Basil, Augustine, and Thomas have observed: 40 but, that Fate is an obedience of second causes to the first, was well conceived of Hermes, and Apuleius the Platonist. Plotinus out of the Astronomers calleth it a dispolition from the acts of celeftial Orbes, vnchangeably working in inferiour bodies, the same being also true enough, in respect of all those things, which a rationall mind doth not order nor direct. Ptolomie, Seneca, Democritus, Epicurus, Chrysippus, Empedosles, and the Stoicks, some of them more largely, others more strictly, ascribe to Fate a binding and ineuitable necessitie; and that it is the same which is spoken and determined by God (quod de vnoquog, nostrum fatus est Deus ) and the definite lot of all liuing. And certainly it cannot be doubted, but the Starres are instruments of farre greater vse, then to give an obscure light, and for men to gaze on after Sun-set: it be- 50 ing manifest, that the diversitie of seasons, the Winters, and Summers, more hot and cold, are not so vncertained by the Sunne and Moone alone, who alway keepe one and the same course, but that the Starres have also their working therein,

And if we cannot denie, but that God hath given vertues to Springs, and Foun-

taines, to cold earth, to plants and stones, Minerals, and to the excrementall parts of the basest living creatures, why should wee rob the beautifull Starres of their working powers? for feeing they are many in number and of eminent beauty and magnirude, we may not thinke, that in the treasury of his wisedome who is infinite, there can be wanting (euen for euery Starre) a peculiar vertue and operation; as euery herbe plant fruit, and flower, adorning the face of the Earth hath the like. For as these were not created to beautifie the earth alone, and to couer and shadow her du-Rie face, but otherwise for the vse of man and beast, to feed them and cure them: so were not those vncountable glorious bodies set in the Firmament, to no other end, to then to adorne it, but for instruments and organs of his divine providence, so far as ir bath pleased his just will to determine. Origen upon this place of Genesia, Let there Generale. belight in the Firmament, &c. affirmeth that the Starres are not causes (meaning perchance binding causes) but are as open Bookes, wherein are contained and set downe all things what soeuer to come; but not to be read by the eyes of humane wisedome: which latter part I beleeue well, and this faying of Syracides withall: That there are Eccl. 43.0.38. hid yet greater things then these bee, and wee have seene but a few of his workes. And though, for the capacitie of men, we know somewhat, yet in the true and vttermost vertues of herbes and plants, which our selues sow and set, and which grow under our feet, we are in effect ignorant; much more in the powers and working of cele-20 Stiall bodies: for hardly (Tayth SALOMON) can we discerne the things that are vponthe wild.9.16. earth, and with great labour find we out those things that are before ws: who can then inuestigate the things that are in Heauen? Multum est de rebus calestibus aliquid cognoscere: Aristotle.

It is much to know a little of heavenly things. But in this question of Fate, the middle course is to be followed, that as with the Heathen we doe not bind God to his creatures, in this supposed necessitie of destinie, so on the contrary we doe not rob those beautifull creatures of their powers and offices. For had any of these second causes despoyled God of his prerogative, or had God himselfe constrained the minde and will of man to impious asts by any celestiall inforcements, then sure the impious excuse of some were instituable; of whom Saint Avgvs TINE: Impia peruersitate in ma- Aug; 20. super 30 lis fact is rectissime reprehendendis ingerunt accusandum pot us auctorum syderum, quam Genadlit.

commissorem (celerum. Where wee reprehend them of earll deeds, they againe with wicked peruer seneffe wrge, that rather the Authour and Creatour of the Starres, then the doer of the ewill is to be accused.

But that the Stars and other celestiall bodies incline the will by mediation of the fensitive appetite, which is also stirred by the constitution and complexion, it cannot be doubted. Corporacalestia (fayth DAMASCENE) constituent in nobis habitus, complexiones, & dispositiones, The heavenly bodies (sayth he) make in vs habits, complexions, and dispositions: for the bodie (though Galen inforce it further) hath vindoubtedly a Gallimor.an kind of drawing after it the affections of the minde, especially bodies strong in hu. feq. temp. o mour, and mindes weake in vertues: for those of cholericke complexion are subject to anger, and the furious effects thereof, by which they suffer themselues to be transported, where the minde hath not reason to remember, that passions ought to be her Vassals, not her Masters. And that they wholly direct the reasonlesse minde I am resolued: For all those which were created mortall, as birds beasts, and the like, are lest to their naturall appetites, ouer all which, celestiall bodies (as instruments and Executioners of Gods prouidence) have absolute dominion. What we should judge ofmen, who little differ from beafts, I cannot tell : for as he that contendeth against those inforcements, may easily master or resist them: so who so ever shall neglect the remedies by vertue and pietie prepared, putteth himselfe altogether under the power 50 of his sensuall appetite; Vincitur fatum si resistas, vincit si contempseris: Fate will be o- Quint.

uercome, if thou relist it, if thou neglect, it conquereth. But that either the Starres or the Sunne have any power over the minds of men immediately, it is abfurd to thinke, other then as aforefaid, as the same by the bodies Aug. de Civit, temper may be effected. ad vitam ipsammouet, & nutrit, & auget, & perficit : The light of the Sunne (fayth Saint Avgvstine) helpeth the generation of Sensible bodies, moueth them to life, and nourisheth, augmenteth, and perfetteth them : yet still as a Minister, not as a Master : Bonus quidem eft Solsinministerio, non imperio; The Sunne is good to serue, not to sway (faith S. Ambrose.) And Saint Avgvstine: Deus regit inferiora corpora per superiora; God ruleth the bodies below by thoso aboue, but he anoucheth not, that superiour bodies have rule ouer mens minds, which are incorporeall.

But how soeuer wee are by the Starres inclined at our birth, yet there are many thingsboth in Nature and Art, that encounter the same, and weaken their operation: and Aristotle himselfe confesseth, that the Heauens doe not alwayes worke their ef- 10 fects in inferiour bodies, no more then the fignes of raine and wind doe alwaies come to passe. And it is divers times seene, that paternall vertue and vice hath his counter-working to these inclinations. Est in luvencis patrum virtus, In the young off-spring the Fathers vertue is, and so the contrary, patrum visia: and herein also there is often found an enterchange; the Sonnes of vertuous men, by an ill constellation become inclinable to vice, and of vicious men, to vertue.

A worthy sonne is borne of a wicked father.

But there is nothing (after Gods reserved power) that so much setteth this art of influence out of square and rule, as education doth: for there are none in the world fo wickedly inclined, but that a religious instruction and bringing vp may fashion anew, and reforme them; nor any so well disposed, whom (the reines' being let loose) the continuall fellowship and familiaritie, and the examples of dissolute men may not corrupt and deforme. Vessels will euer retaine a sauour of their first liquor : it being equally difficult eyther to clenfe the mind once corrupted, or to extinguish the sweet sauour of vertue first received, when the mind was yet tender, open, and eafily seasoned; but where a fauourable constellation (allowing that the Stars incline 20 the will) and a vertuous education doe happily arriue, or the contrary in both, therby it is that men are found so exceeding vertuous or vicious, Heauen and Earth (asit were) running together, and agreeing in one: for as the seedes of vertue may by the art and husbandry of Christian counsaile produce better and more beautifull fruit, then the strength of selfe-nature and kind could have yeelded them; so the plants apt to grow wild, and to change themselues into weedes, by being set in a soyle sutable, and like themselues, are made more vnsauoury and filled with poyson. It was therefore truly affirmed, Sapiens adiunabit opus astrorum, quemadmodum agricola terra naturams, A wife man assisteth the worke of the Starres, as the Husbandman helpeth the nature of the foile. And Ptolomie himselfe confesseth thus much, Sapiens, & omina [4-40 pientis medici dominabuntur aftris, Awiseman, and the ominous art of a wife Physician shall prenaile against the Starres. Lastly, wee ought all to know, that Go D created the Starres, as he did the rest of the Vniuersall, whose influences may be called his referued and vnwritten Lawes. But let vs consider how they bind: euen as the Lawes of men doe; for although the Kings and Princes of the world haue by their Lawes decreed, that a Thiefe and a murderer shall suffer death; and though their Ordinances are daily by Iudges and Magistrates (the Starres of Kings) executed accordingly, yet these Lawes doe not depriue Kings of their naturall or religious compassion, or bind them without prerogative, to such a severe execution, as that there should bee nothing left of libertie to judgement, power, or conscience: the Law in his owne na- 50 ture being no other then a deafe Tyrant. But seeing that it is otherwise, and that Princes (who ought to imitate God in all they can) doe sometimes for causes to themselues knowne, and by mediation, pardon offences both against others and themselues, it were then impious to take that power and libertie from God himselfe, which his Substitutes enioy; God being mercy, goodnesse, and charitie it selfe. Otherwise that example of Prayer by our Saujour taught; And let vs not bee led wnto Mat. 6.13. temptation, but deliuer vs from euill, had beene no other but an expence of words and time; but that God (which only knoweth the operation of his owne creatures truely) hathaffured vs, that there is no inclination or temptation fo forcible, which our humble Prayers and defires may not make frustrate, and breake afunder: for were it (as the Stoicks conceive) that Fate or Destinie, though depending upon eternall power, yet being once ordered and disposed, had such a connexion and immurable dependencie, that God himselfe should in a kind have shut up himselfe therein: How 10 miferable then were the condition of men (fayth Saint Avgvstine) left altogether without hope!

And if this strength of the Starres were so transfer'd, as that God had quitted vnto them all dominion ouer his creatures; be he Pagan or Christian that so beleeueth, the only true God of the one, and the imaginary gods of the other would thereby be despoyled of all worship, reuerence, or respect.

And ceatainely, GoD which hath promifed vs the reward of wel-doing, which Christ himselfe claimed at the hands of the Father, (I baue finished the norke which tob. 18.6. thou gauest mee to doe.) And the same God, who hath threatned vnto vs the forrow and torment of offences, could not contrary to his mercifull nature be so vniust, as to 20 bind vs ineuitably to the Destinies, or influences of the Starres, or subject our soules to any imposed necessitie. But it was well sayd of Plotinus, that the Stars were fignificant, but not efficient, giuing them yet something leffe then their due: and therefore as I doe not confent with those, who would make those glorious creatures of God vertuelesse: so I think that we derogate from his eternal and absolute power and prouidence, to ascribe to them the same dominion over our immortall soules, which they have ouer all bodily substances, and perishable natures: for the soules of men, louing and fearing God, receive influence from that divine light it selfe, whereof the Sunnes claritie, and that of the Stars is by Plato called but a Thadow. Lumen est Platool & vmbra Dei, & Deus est lumen luminis; Light is the shadow of Gods brightnesse, who is the Ficin. in 1.7.pol. 20 light of light: But to end this question, because this Destinie, together with Providence, Prescience, and Predestination are often confounded. I thinke it not impertinent to touch the difference in a word or two, for every man hath not observed it, though all learned men haue.

è. XII. Of Prescience.

Rescience, or fore-knowledge (which the Greekes call Prognosis, the Latines precognitio, or prescientia) considered in order and nature (if we may speake of God after the manner of men) goeth before Prouidence: for God fore-knew all things, before hee had created them, or before they had being to be cared for; and Prescience is no other then an infallible fore-knowledge. For whatfoeuer our felues fore-know, except the fame be to succeede accordingly, it cannot be true that we fore know it . But this Prescience of God (as it is Prescience onely) is not the cause of any thing suturely succeeding: neither doth Gods fore-knowledge impose any necessity, or binde. For in that we fore-know that the Sunne will rife, and fet; that all men borne in the world shall die againe; that after Winter, the Spring shall come; after the Spring Summer and 50 Haruest, and that according to the seuerall seedes that we sow, we shall reape seuerall forts of graine, yet is not our fore-knowledge the cause of this, or any of these: neither doth the knowledge in vs binde or conftraine the Sunne to rise and set, or men to die; for the causes (as men perswade themselues) are otherwise manifest and knowne to all. The eye of man (faith BOETIVS) beholdeth those things subsect to 10 sense, as they are; the eye secth that such a beast is a horse, it seeth men, trees, and houses, or. but our seeing of them (as they are) is not the cause of their so being for such they bee in their owne natures. And againe out of the same Authour.; Dinina providentia rebus generandis non imponit necessitatem, quià si omnia euenirent ex necessitate, pramia bonorum, & pænamalorum periret; Diuine prouidence (layth he) imposeth no necessitie upon things that are to exist, for if all came to passe of necessitie, there should ne, ther be reward of good, nor punishment of enill.

d. XIII.

of Providence:

Ow Prouidence (which the Greekes call Pronoia) is an intellectuall knowledge; both fore-seeing, caring for, and ordering all things, and doth not onely behold all past, all present, and all to come, but is the cause of their so being, which Prescience (simply taken) is not: and therefore Prouidence by the Philosophers (faith Saint Augustine) is de-uided into Memory, Knowledge, and Care: Memory of the past, Knowledge of the present, and Care of the future; and we our selues account such a man for provident, 20 as, remembring things past, and observing things present, can by judgement, and comparing the one with the other, prouide for the future, and times succeeding. That such a thing there is as Prouidence, the Scriptures euery-where teach vs, Moses in many places, the Prophets in their Predictions: Christ himselfe and his Apostles affure vs hercof; and, besides the Scriptures, Hermes, Orpheus, Euripides, Pythagoras, I men acknowledge the Prouidence of God: Plato, Plotinus, and (in effect) all le at therein, as they refuse not to accompany yea, the Turkes themselues are so con. lifeafes, nor fhun any perill whatfoeuer, and visit each other, in the most pesti though death therein doe manifestly

Sing wate God particular, as I shall need to repeat (fayth DAVID) which concrete the Heauens with cloudes, and prepareth raine for the earth, andmaketh the graffe to grow upon the Mountaines, which gineth to beafts their food, and feedeth the young Rauenthat cryes: all thefe wait upon thee, that thou maiest give them foodin due feason. And thou Shalt drinke of the River Cheareth (fayth God to Eliah) and I have commanded the Rauens to feed thee there. Behold, the Fowles of the Ayre, they fow not, nor reape, and yet your heavenly Father feedeth them : againe, are not two Sparrowes fold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father : yea all the haires of your head are numbred: And Saint Peter, Cast all your care on him, for becareth for you; And his judgements are written (fayth DAVID.)

God therefore, who is enery-where present, who filleth the Heauens and the Earth, whose eyes are upon the righteous, and his countenance against them that doe enill, was therefore by Orpheus called, oculus infinitus, an infinite eye, beholding all things, and cannot therefore be esteemed as an idle looker on, as if he had transferred his power to any other: for it is contrary to his owne Word: Gloriam meam alterinon dabo: I will not give my glory to another. No man commandeth in the Kings presence, but by the Kings direction; but God is euery-where present, and King of Kings. The example of Gods vniuerfall Prouidence is seene in his creatures. The Father prouideth for his children: beafts and birds and all linings for their young ones. If Providence be found in second Fathers, much more in the first and Vniuersall: and if there 50 be a natural louing care in men, and beafts, much more in God, who hath formed this nature, and whose Dinine loue was the beginning, and is the bond of the Vniuersall: Amor diainus rerum omnium est principium, & vinculum uniuersi (saith PLATO.) Ow for Predestination; we can difference it no otherwise, from Prouidence and Prescience, then in this, that Prescience only fore-seeth: Providence fore-feeth and careth for, and hath respect to al creatures, cuen from the brightest Angels of heaven, to the vinworthiest wormes Rom. 3. 29. of the earth, and Predestination (as it is vsed specially by Diuines) is only of men, and yet not of all to men belonging, but of their faluation properly, in the common vieot Divines, or perdition, as some have vied it. Yet Peter Lombard, Lomb. 1.3. diff. 39 20 Thomas, Bernen is Theologus, and others, take the word Predestination more strictly, dift.23. and for a preparation to felicitie: divers of the Fathers take it more largely fome- Bern, in Probl. de times: among whom S. Of Fortune: and of the reason of some things that seeme to be by fortune, and against Reason and Providence.

Aftly, seeing Destinie or Necessitie is subsequent to Gods providence, and seeing that the Starres have no other dominion, then is before spoken, and that Nature is nothing, but as Plato calleth it, Dei artem, vel artisticosum Dei Organum; The art, or artistical Organ of God: and Cvs Anvs, Divini precept instrumentum; The instrument of the divine precept: we may then with better reason reiect that kinde of Idolatrie, or God of sooles, called Fortune or Chance: a Goddeffe, the most reuerenced, and the most reuiled of all oto ther, but not ancient; for Homer maketh her the Daughter of Oceanus, as Pausanias witnessethin his Messeniacks. The Greekes call her mxtw, signifying a relatine being, or betiding, so as before Homers time this great Lady was scarce heard of; and Hefiedus, who hath taught the birth and beginning of all these counterfait gods, hath not a word of Fortune : yet afterward shee grew so great and omnipotent, as from senep. 91.

From Wisedome Fortune differs farre. And yet in workes most like they are.

But I will forbeare to be curious in that, which (as it is commonly understood) is nothing else but a power imaginarie, to which the successe of humane actions and endeuours were for their varietie ascribed; for when a manifest cause could not be 20 giuen, then was it attributed to Fortune as if there were no cause of those things, of which most men are ignorant, contrary to this true ground of PLATO: 20 thil eft ortum sub Sole, cuius causa legitima non pracesserit; Nothing euer came to passe under the Sunne, of which there was not a just preceding cause. But Aquinas hath herein answered in one diffinction, what focuer may be objected; for many things there are (faith he) which happen, besides the intention of the Inferior, but not besides the intention of the Superior; Prater intentionem inferioris, sed non prater intentionem superioris, (to with the ordinance of God; and therefore (faith Melanchton) Quod Poeta fortunam, nos Deum appellamus; Whom the Poets call Fortune, we know to be God, and that this is true, the Scripture in many places teacheth vs, as in the law of Murder. He 30 that (miteth a man, and he die, shall die the death, and if a man hath not laid waite, but God hath offered him into his hands then I will appoint thee a place whither he shall flee. Now, where the Scripture hath these wordes, God hath offered him into bis hands, we say, if he hurt him by Chance: and in Deuteronomie the nineteenth, where the slipping of an Axe from the helue, whereby another is slaine, was the worke of God himselfe, we in our phrase attribute this accident to Chance or Fortune : and in the Prouerbs the fixteenth, The lot is cast into the lap, but the whole disposition thereof is of the Lord : so as that which feemeth most casuall and subject to Fortune, is yet disposed by the ordinance of God, as all things else; and hereof the wifer fort, and the best learned of the Philosophers were not ignorant, as Cicero witnesseth for them, gathering the opi- 40 nion of Aristotle and his Sectators, with those of Plato, and the Academikes to this effect. That the same power which they called animam mundi: The soule of the world. was no other then that incomprehensible wisdome, which we expresse by the name of God, gouerning every being as well in heaven as in earth; to which wifedome and Cic.ac. quafi.l.t. power they sometime gaue the title of Necessitie or Fate, because it bindeth by ince uitable ordinance: sometime, the stile of Fortune, because of many effects there appeare vnto vs no certaine causes. To this effect speaketh S. Augustine in his questions vpon Genesis the first Booke: the same hath Seneca in his fourth of Benesis; which was also the doctrine of the Stocks, of which Sect he was: For what Joeuer (saith he) thou callest God, be it Nature, Fate, or Fortune, all are but one and the same, differenced so by divers termes, according as he vieth, and exerciseth his power diversly. But it may be objected, that if Fortune and Chance were not sometimes the causes of good and euill in men, but an idle voice, whereby we expresse successes, how comes it then, that so many worthy and wise men depend upon so many unworthy and emptie-headed fooles; that riches and honor are given to externall men, and without kernell: and so many learned, vertuous, and valiant men weare out their liues in poore and deiected estates. In a word there is no other inferior, or apparent cause, beside the partialitie of mans affection, but the falhioning and not fashioning of our selves according to the nature of the time wherein we line, for whosoener is mostable, and best sufficient to discerne, and hath withall an honest and open heart and louing truth, if Princes, or those that gouerne, endure no other discourse then their owne flatteries, then I say such an one, whose vertue and courage forbiddeth him to be base and a dissembler, shall euermore hang under the wheele, which kind 10 of deserving well and receiving ill, we alwayes fallly charge Fortune withall. For who soeuer shall tell any great Man or Magistrate, that he is not just, the Generall of an Armie, that he is not valiant, and great Ladies that they are not faire, shall neuer be made a Counseller, a Captayne, or a Courtier. Neither is it sufficient to be wise with a wife Prince, valiant with a valiant, and inft with him that is inft, for such a one hath no estate in his prosperitie; but he must also change with the successor, if he be of contrary qualities, faile with the tyde of the time, and alter forme and condition, as the Estate or the Estates Master changeth: Otherwise how were it possible, that the most base men, and separate from all imitable qualities, could so often attayne to honor and riches, but by fuch an observant slauish course? These men ha-20 uing nothing else to value themselves by, but a counterfait kinde of wondring at other men, and by making them beleeve that all their vices are vertues, and all their dustie actions cristalline, haue yet in all ages prospered equally with the most vertuous, if not exceeded them. For according to MENANDER, Omnis insipiens arrogantia & plausibus capitur; Euery foole is wonne with his owne pride, and others slittering applause: so as who soeuer will live altogether out of himselfe, and studie other mens humours, and observe them, shall never be vnfortunate; and on the contrary, that man which prizeth truth and vertue (except the leason wherein he liueth be of all these, and of all forts of goodnesse fruitfull) shall neuer prosper by the possession or profession thereof. It is also a token of a worldly wife man, not to warre or contend 30 in vaine against the nature of times wherein he liueth: for such a one is often the authour of his owne miserie, but best it were to follow the aduice, which the Pope gaue the Bishops of that age, out of Ouid, while the Arian Heresie raged:

Ouid. rem. am.

While furie gallops on the way, Let no man furies gallop stay.

And if Cicero (then whom that world begat not a man of more reputed indge-40 ment) had followed the counsaile of his brother QVINTVS, Potuisset (saith PE-TRARCH) in lectulo suo mori, potuisset integro cadauere sepeliri; He might then have dyed the death of nature, and beene with an untorne and undiffeuered body buryed; for as Petrareb in the same place noteth : Quid stultius quam desperantem (prasertim de effectu) litibus perpetuis implicari; What more foolish then for him that despaires, especially of the effect, to be entangled with endlesse contentions? Who so euer therefore will set before him MACHIAVELS two markes to shoote at (to wit) riches, and glorie, must set on and take off a back of yron to a weake woodden Bow, that it may fit both the strong and the feeble: for as he, that first denised to adde sayles to rowing vessells, did either so proportion them, as being fastened a loft, and towards the head of his Mast, he might 50 abide all windes and stormes, or else he sometime or other perished by his owne inuention: fo that man which prizeth vertue for it selfe, & cannot endure to hoise and strike his failes, as the diners natures of calmes & stormes require, must out his failes, and his cloth, of meane length and breadth, and content himselse with a slow and fure nauigation, (to wit) a meane and free estate. But of this dispute of Fortune, and the rest, or of whatsoeuer Lords or Gods, imaginarie powers, or causes, the wit (or rather foolishnesse) of man hath found out: let vs resolue with S. Man is the last and most admirable of Gods workes to vs knowne, ingensmiraculum homo, Man is the greatest wonder (saith PLATO out of MERCVRIVS:) 214tur a ardentissma artificium, The artificiall worke of the most ardent or fire-like nature (as faith Zoroaster) though the same be meant, not for any excellencie externall, 20 but in respect of his internal forme, both in the nature, qualities, and other attributes thereof: in nature, because it hath an essence immortall, and spirituall; in qualities, because the same was by God created holy and righteous in truth; in other attributes, because Man was made Ler of the world, and of the creatures therein.

Sanctum, quia mal, quia in mortali. In locum Ouid. Met J. z. 76.

Sanctius his animal menting, sapacius alta Deerat adbuc : & quod dominari in catera poffet, Natus homo est.

More holy then the reft, and understanding more A living creature wants, to rule all made before, So man began to be.

Of this Image and similitude of God, there is much dispute among the Fathers, Schoole-men, and late Writers: Some of the Fathers conceiue, that man was made after the Image of God, in respect chiefly of Empire & Dominion, as S. Chrysoftome, Ambrose, and some others : which Saint Ambrose denyeth to the woman in these wordes, VE fieut Deus vnus, ab co fieret homo vnus, & quomodò ex Deo vno omnia, ità ex vnohomine omne genus effet super faciem totius terra : Vnus igitur vnum fecit , qui co unitatis eius haberei imaginem; That as God is one, one man might be made by him, and shat in what manner all things are of one God, likewise of one man the whole kinde should be opon the face of the whole earth: Therefore he being one made one, that should have the Emage of his unitie. But whereas it is gathered out of the following wordes of the same Verse, that man was after the image of God in respect of rule and power, it is witten Dominamini in the plurall number, and let them rule ouer the fill in the Sca, &c. and therefore cannot the woman be excluded. Others conceive, that man is faid to be after the image of God in respect of his immortall soule only, because as God is inuisible, so the soule of man is inuisible, as God is immortall and incorporall, so is the foule of man immortall and incorporall; and as there is but one God which gouerneth the world, so but one soule which gouerneth the body of man; and as God is wholly in every part of the world, so is the soule of man wholly in every part of the body: Anima est tota in toto, & tota in qualibet parte; The foule is wholly in the whole bo-10 dy, and wholly in every part thereof, according to Aristotle; though Chalcidius, and other learned men denie that doctrine; which that it is otherwise then potentially true, all the Aristotelians in the world shall never prove. These and the like arguments doe the lewes make (faith Toftatus) and these resemblances, betweene the infinite God, and the finite Man.

The Schoole-men resemble the Minde or Soule of Man to God, in this respect especially; because that as in the Minde there are three distinct powers, or faculties, (to wit) Memorie, Vnderstanding, and Will, and yet all these, being of reall differences, are but one minde: so in God there are three distinct persons, the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoft, and yet but one God. They also make the Image and Si-20 militude diuers; and againe, they distinguish betweene imaginem Dei, and ad imaginem Dei, and spinne into small threds, with subtile distinctions, many times the plainenesse, and sinceritie of the Scriptures: their wits being like that strong water, that eateth through and diffolueth the pureft gold. Victorinus also maketh the image of God to be substantiall, but not the similitude : sed in substantia nomen qualitatis declaratinum; A word-declaring qualitie in the substance. Out of which wordes, and that which followeth, it is infer'd, that as the image and similitude doe greatly differ : so the sinnefull soule doth not therefore leave to be the image of God; but it hath not his similitude, except it be holy and righteous. S. Augultine also against Adimantus the Manichee affirmeth, that by sinne, the perfection of this image is lost in man, and 30 in his Retractations maintayneth the same opinion, and also affirmeth that the Similitude is more largely taken, then the Image.

But howfoeuer the Schoole-men and others diftinguish, or whatfoeuer the Fathers conceive, fure I am that S. Paul maketh the same sense of the image, which Victorines doth of the similitude, who saith: As we have borne the image of the earthly, 1.co.15.49. so shall we beare the image of the heavenly; and it cannot be gathered out of the Scriptures, that the wordes image and similitude were vsed but in one sense, and in this placethe better to expresse each other; what soener Lombard hath said to the contrary. For God knowes, what a multitude of meanings the wit of man imagineth to himselfe in the Scriptures, which neither Moles, the Prophets, or Spoffles, euer con-40 ceiued. Now as S. Paul vseth the word (image) for both: so S. Iames vseth the word (similitude) for both in these wordes: Therewith blesse we Godeuen the Father, and 1am.3.9. therewith curse we Men, which are made after the similitude of God: Howsoeuertherefore S. Augustine seemeth, out of a kinde of elegancy in writing, to make some difference, as where he writeth, Consitemur imaginem in aternitate, similitudinem in mori- Ve supra. bus inueniri; We confesse that this image is found in eternitie, but his similitude in manwers, that is, in the spiritual dispositions and qualities of the minde, yet thus he elsewhere speaketh plainely: Quasi verò posst esse imago aliqua in qua similitudonon sit : si Aug. vt sup. enim omnino similis non est, proculdubio nec imago est; As if (faith he) there could be any image, where the similitude is not : no, out of doubt, where there is no likenesse, there is no 50 image. The very wordes of the Text make this most manifest, as, Let vs make man in car image, according to our likenesse: which is, Let vs make man in our image, that he may be like vs; and in the next Verse following, God himselfe maketh it plaine, for there he vseth the word (image) only, as thus: God created the man in his image, in the image of God created he him. And to take away all dispute or ambiguitie, in the first Verse of the fift Chapter, the word (similitude) is vsed againe by it selfe. as-In the day that God created ADAM, in the likeneffe of God made he him. And this similitude S. Paul Colof, the third, calleth the image. Put on (faith he) the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him, that created him. And in Siracides it is written. He made them according to his image. Now if we may believe S. Paul before Peter Lombard and other Schoole-men, then it is as manifest as wordes can make it. that the image and fimilitude is but the same, for S. Paul vleth both the words directly in one fense. For they turned the glorie of the incorruptible God, to the similitude of the image of a corruptible man.

Rom. 1.23.

In Gen.

Zanchius laboureth to proue, that man was formed after the image of God, both 10 Zanch, de ey, Dei in body and minde: Nislla pars in homine que non fuerit huiusce imaginis particeps , No part in a man (faith he) which was not participating Gods image: for God faid, Let vs make man according to our owne image. But the foule alone is not man, but the Hypoflalis or whole man compounded of body and foule. The body of man (faith he) is the Image of the world, and called therefore Microcosmus; but the Idea and exemplar of the world was first in God, so that man, according to his body must needs be the image of God. Against which opinion of this learned man, his owne objection feemeth to me sufficient, where he alleageth, that it may be said, that Moses spake by the figure Synecdoche, as when a man is called a mortall man, yet is not the whole man mortall, but the body only: fo when God said, Let vs make man after our image, he meant 20 the soule of man, and not the body of earth and dust: Malediet us qui deisatem ad bominis lineamenta refert (faith S. Augustine,) Curfed is be that referreth the Deitie of God to the lineaments of mans body. Deus enim nonest humana forma particeps, neque corpus humanum diuina (faith PHILO,) God is not partaker of humane forme, nor humane body of the forme divine: The Hebrew word for image is Tlelem, which fignifieth a shaddow or obscure resemblance: In imagine pertransit homo: Man passeth away in a (haddow: Let vs then know and confider, that God, who is eternall and infinite, hath not any bodily shape or composition, for it is both against his Nature & his Word; an error of the Anthropomorphita, against the very essence and Maiestie of God.

Surely Cicero, who was but a Heathen, had yet a more divine vnderstanding then 30 thele groffe Heretikes: Ad similitudinem Dei propius accedebat humana virtus, quam figura; The vertue which is in man (faith he) came neerer the similitude of God, then the figure. For God is a spirituall substance, invisible, and most simple; God is a just God: God is Mercifull: God is Charitie it selfe, and (in a word) Goodnesse it selfe, and none else simply good. And thus much it hath pleased God himselfe to teach vs, and to make vs know of himselfe. What then can be the shadow of such a substance, the image of fuch a nature, or wherin can man be faid to refemble his vnexcogitable power and perfectnesse? certainely, not in dominion alone: for the Deuill is said to be the Prince of this world, and the Kingdome of Christ was not thereof, who was the true and perfect image of his Father; neither, because man hath an immortall 40 foulc, and therein the faculties of Memorie, Vnderstanding, and Will, for the Deuils are also immortall, and participate those faculties, being called Damones, because fcientes of Knowledge, and subtility; neither because we are reasonable creatures, by which we are diftinguished from beasts: for who have rebelled against God? who haue made Gods of the vilest beasts, of Serpents, of Cats, of Owles, yea, euen of shamefull parts, of lusts and pleasures, but reasonable men? Yet doe I not condemne

the opinion of S. Chrysoftome and Ambrose, as touching dominion, but that, in respect thereof, man was in some fort after the image of God, if we take Dominion, such as it ought to be, that is, accompanyed with Iustice and Pierie: for God did not onely make man a Ruler and Gouernor ouer the Fishes of the Sea, the Fowles of Heauen 50

(or of the aire) and over the Beasts of the Field; but God gave vnto man a dominion ouer men, he appointed Kings to gouerne them, and Judges, to judge them in equitie. Neither doe I exclude Reason, as it is the abilitie of Vnderstanding. For I doe not conceiue, that Irenew did therefore call man, the image of God, because he was anim al rationale only; but that he understood it better, with Sybilla: Imago mea est homo, rectam rationem habens: Man, that is endued with right reason, is said to resemble God, (that is) by right reason to know and confesse God his Creatour, and the same God to serue, loue, and obey : and therefore said Saint Augustine (who herein came neerer the Truth ) Fecit Deus hominem ad imaginem & similitudinem (uam in mente God made man, in respect of the intellect, after his owne Image and similitude; and Rey-NERIVS; Homo, quod babet mentem, factus est ad imaginem Dei, Man was made after the Reyndement Image of God, in minde, or in that he had a minde.

à. I I.

Of the intellectual mind of man, in which there is much of the Image of God: and that this Image is much deformed by sinne.

V T Mens is not taken here for anima physica, according to Aristotle, which is forma, vel natura hominis: The forme or nature of man; but this facultie or gift of God, called Mens, istaken for prima vis animi, the principall strength of the minde, or soule, cuius actius est perpetua veritatis contemplatio, whose act, exercise, or office, is the perpetuall contemplation of truth; and therefore it is also called intellectus diuinus, intellectus contemplatiuus, & Pamander, anima contemplatina, A dinine under standing, and an intellect or minde contemplatine. Eft autem mens nostra (faith Cvs Anvs) vis comprehendendi, & totum virtuale ex omnibus Demente.

comprehendendi virtutibus compositum: Our intellectuall minde (saith hee) is a power of Idiotalia. comprehending eyen the whole, that is in this kind powerfull, compounded of all the powers of comprehension: vnto which Mercurius attributeth so much (if his meaning accompany his words) that he esteemeth it to be the very essence of God (which was also the errour of the Manichees and others) and no otherwise separate from God (sayth hee) then the light from the Sunne: for this Mens or vnderstanding (sayth Mer cv-30 RIVS) eft Dew in hominibus: Is God in men, or rather (and which I take to be his mea- sen. Ep. 65. f. & ning)istheimage of God in man. For as the Sunne is not of the same essence or na. 31.f. ture with the dinine light, but a body illightned, and an illumination created, fo is this Mens or understanding in men, not of the essence of Gods infinite understanding, but a power and facultie of our foules the purest; or the lumen anima rationalis, by the

of the foule, or with S. Augustine, the eye of the soule, or receptacle of Sapience and divine knowledge, qua amorem (apientia tanqu'am ducem sequitur, Which followeth after the love of sapience as her guide (saith Phile) betweene which and reason, betweene which and the minde, called anima, betweene which and that power which the La-40 tines call animus, there is this difference. Reason is that facultie by which wee judge and discourse; Anima, by which we live. Hereof it is said, Anima corpus animat, id eft, vinificat; anima, or the foule is that which doth animate the body, that is, gineth it life: for death is the separation of body and soule; and the same strength (sayth Philo) which God the great Director hath in the World, the same hath this Anima, or mind, or soule in man. Animus, is that, by which wee will and make election; and to this Basil agreeth, which calleth this Mens, or divine understanding, perspicacem anima partem, the perceising part of the minde, or the light by which the Soule discerneth: dormientium mens, non anima, sopitur, & in furiosis mens extinguitur, anima manet, In men that fleep it is this (mens) or under flanding, and not the minde or foule, which resteth, during

and not the Soule: for mad men doe live, though distract. Therefore this word being often vsed for the Soule giving life, is attributed abufinely to mad men, when wee say that they are of a distract minde, in stead of a broken understanding, which word (mind) we vse also for opinion, as, I am of this mind, 50 which time it is but habituall in wife men, and in madmen this (mens) is extinguished.

or that minde: and sometimes for mens conditions or vertues, as, hee is of an honest minde, or, a man of a iust minde: sometimes for affection, as I doe this for my mindes fake; and Aristotle sometimes vseth this word (Mens) for the phantasie, which is the strength of the imagination: sometimes for the knowledge of principles, which we haue without discourse: oftentimes for Spirits, Angels and Intelligences: but as it is vsed in the proper signification, including both the vnderstanding agent & possible, it is described to be a pure, simple, substantiall act, not depending vpon matter, but having relation to that, which is intelligible, as to his first object: or more at large thus, a part or particle of the Soule, whereby it doth vnderstand, not depending vpon matter, nor needing any organ, free from passion comming from without, and 10 apt to bee diffeuered, as, eternall from that which is mortall. Hereof excellently MERCVRIVS: Anima est imago mentis, mens imago Dei. Deus menti praest, mens anima, anima corpori; The Soule (meaning that which giveth life) is the Image of this understanding, or Mens, and this (Mens) or understanding is the Image of God. God is President or Ruler ouer this under standing, this under standing over the Soule, and this Soule ouer the bodie. This division and distinction out of the Platonikes and Peripatetikes, I leave to the Reader to judge of. That, Mens humana hath no need of any organ, Marsilius Ficinus in his ninth Booke of the Soules immortalitie laboureth to proue. Zanchius doth not differ from Ficinus in words, for (fayth hee) ad facultatem intelligentem exercendam non eget Mens organo, tanquam medio, per quod intelligat, quanquam 20 eget obiecto in quod intueatur, & ex quo intellectionem concipiat: hoc autem obiectum funt phantasmata, scu rerum à sensibus perceptarum simulachra ad phantasiam prolata. To exercife the facultie of under standing, the mind of man (layth hee) needethno instrument, as a meane, by which it may under stand : but it needeth an object, whereon to looke, and whence to conceive the act of understanding. This object are the phantasmes, or the resemblances of things received from the fense, and carried to the phantasie: But in effect his conclusion feemeth to carry a contrarie fense, when he maketh the Phantasie, in representing the obiect to the vinderstanding, to be a corporall Organum; neither can it be vinderstood to be an Organum of any thing; but of the understanding. And he addeth that the refemblance of things in mans imagination, are to his vnderstanding and minde, as 30 colours are to the fight: whence it so followeth, that the imagination or phantasie it felfe is to the facultie of viderstanding, as the eye is to the facultie of feeing, and as this is an Organum: fo that. Of this question, How the Mind in all her actions maketh vse of the body, and hath communion with the body, I referre the Reader to a most graue and learned Discourse in the last Reply of Master Doctor Bilson, late Bishop of Winchester, vnto Henry Iacob. Howsoeuer the Truth be determined, wee mnst conclude, that it is neither in respect of reason alone, by which wee discourse, nor in respect of the minde it selfe, by which we liue, nor in respect of our soules simply, by which we are immortall, that we are made after the Image of God. But most safely may wee resemble our selues to God, in mente, and in respect of that pure facultie 40 which is neuer separate from the contemplation and loue of God. Yet this is not all. For Saint Bernard maketh a true difference betweene the nature and faculties of the Minde or Soule, and betweene the infusion of qualities, endowments and gifts of grace, wherewith it is adorned and enriched, which, being added to the nature, effence, and faculties, maketh it altogether to be after the Image of God, whose words potem, qui juje arethese: Non proptere à imago Dei est, qui a sui meminit Mens, seg, intelligit & diligit intuitus Creato. (which was also the opinion of Saint AvgvsTINE) fed quia potest meminisse, intellige-

re ac diligere eum à quofacta est, (that is) The minde (or Mens) was not therefore the Image of God, because it remembreth, understandeth, and loueth it selfe, but because it can remember, under stand, and love God, who created it. And, that this Image may bee defor- so med and made unprofitable, heare Basil: Homo ad imaginem & similitudinem Dei factus est, peccasum verò imaginis huius pulchritudinem deformanit : & inutilem reddidit; dum animam corruptis concupi scentia affectibus immersit: Man was made after the Image and similitude of GoD, but Sinne hath deformed the beautie of this Image, and made

It is not therefore (as aforesaid) by reason of Immortalitie, nor in Reason, nor in Dominion, nor in any one of these by it selfe, nor in all these ioyned, by any of which, or by all which wee resemble, or may be called the shadow of God, though by reason and understanding, with the other faculties of the Soule, we are made capable of this print; but chiefly, in respect of the habit of Originall righteousnesse, most perfectly infused by God into the mind and Soule of man in his first Creation. For it is not by nature, nor by her liberalitie, that wee were printed with the feale of Gods Image (though Reason may be said to be of her gift, which iovned to the soule 10 is a part of the Essential constitution of our proper Species) but from the bountiful grace of the Lord of all goodnesse, who breathed life into Earth, and contriued within the Truncke of Dust and Clay, the inimitable habilitie of his owne Iustice, Pietie, and Righteousnesse.

So long therefore (for that resemblance which Dominion hath) doe those that are powerfull retaine the Image of God, as acording to his Commandements they exercise the Office or Magistracy to which they are called, and sincerely walke in the wayes of God, which in the Scriptures is called, walking with God; and all other men Gen, 5,22. fo long retaine this Image, as they feare, loue, and ferue God truely, (that is) for the loue of God alone, and do not bruise and deface his Seale by the waight of manifold 20 and voluntary offences, and obstinate sinnes. For the vniust minde cannot bee after the Image of God, seeing God is Iustice it selfe; The bloud-thirstie hath it not; for God is Charitie, and mercie it felfe: Fallhood, cunning practice, and ambition, are properties of Sathan; and therefore cannot dwell in one foule, together with GoD; and to bee short, there is no likelihood betweene pure light and blacke darkenesse, 2.cor,6.16. betweene beautie and deformitie, or betweene righteousnesse and reprobation. And though Nature, according to common understanding, have made vs capable by the power of reason, and apt enough to receive this Image of Gods goodnesse, which the sensual foules of beasts cannot perceive; yet were that aptitude natural more inclinable to follow and imbrace the falle and durelesse pleasures of this Stage-play 30 World, then to become the shadow of God by walking after him, had not the exceeding workmanship of Gods wisedome, and the liberalitie of his mercy, formed eves to our foules, as to our bodies, which, piercing through the impuritie of our flesh, behold the Highest Heavens, and thence bring Knowledge and Object to the Mind and Soule, to contemplate the euer-during glory, and termeleffe ioy, prepared for those, which retains the Image and similitude of their Creatour, preserving vndefiled and vnrent the garment of the new man, which, after the Image of God, is created in Righteousnesse, and true Holinesse, as saith Saint Paul. Now, whereas it is thought by some of the Fathers, as by Saint Augustine, with whom Saint Ambrose iovneth, that, by finne, the perfection of the Image is loft, and not the Image it felfe; 40 both opinions by this distinction may be well reconciled (to wit) that the Image of God, in man, may be taken two wayes; for eyther it is confidered, according to naturall gifts, and confifteth therein: namely to have a reasonable and understanding nature,&c, and in this fense, the Image of God is more lost by sinne, then the very reasonable or understanding nature, &c. is lost: (or sinne doth not abolish and take away these naturall pifts) or, the Image of God is considered, according to supernaturall gifts, namely, of Divine grace, and heavenly glory, which is indeed the perfection and accomplishment of thenaturall Image; and this manner of similitude and Image of God, is wholly blotted out and destroyed by sinne.

Eccl. 12.14.

That Man was formed of Earth and Dust, did Abraham acknowledge, when in humble feare he called vnto God, to saue Sodome: Let not my Lord now be anery, if I speake, I, that am but dust and ashes: And in these houses of Clay, whose foundation is in the dust, doe our soules inhabite, according to lob, and though our owne eyes doe enerywhere behold the sudden and resistlesse assaults of Death, and Nature assureth vs by neuer-failing experience, and Reason by infallible demonstration, that our times yon the Earth haue neither certaintie nor durabilitie, that our Bodies are but the Anduiles of paine and diseases, and our Minds the Hiues of vnnumbred cares, sorrowes, and pathons: and that (when we are most glorified) wee are but those pain-20 ted posts, against which Enuie and Fortune direct their Darts; yet such is the true vnhappinesse of our condition, and the darke ignorance, which couereth the eyes of our understanding, that wee only prize, pamper, and exalt this Vassall and Slaue of Death, and forget altogether (or only remember at our cast-away leisure) the imprifoned immortall Soule, which can neyther dye with the Reprobate, nor perish with the mortall parts of vertuous men; seeing Gods Iustice in the one, and his goodnesse in the other is exercised for euermore, as the euer-liuing subjects of his reward and punishment. But when is it that we examine this great accompt? neuer while wee haue one vanitie left vs to spend: we plead for Titles, till our breath faile vs; digge for Riches, while our strength enableth vs; exercise malice, while wee can reuenge; 30 and then, when Time hath beaten from vs both youth, pleasure, and health, and that nature it selfe hateth the house of old age, we remember with lob, that wee must goe the way from whence we shall not returne, and that our bed is made ready for us in the darke; And then I fay, looking ouer-late into the bottome of our conscience (which Pleasure and Ambition had locked up from vs all our lines, we behold therein the feareful Images of our actions past, and withall, this terrible inscription: That God will bring eneric worke into judgement, that man hath done under the Sunne.

But what examples have ever moved vs? what perswasions reformeds vs?or what threatnings made vs afraid? we behold other mens Tragedies plaid before vs, wee heare what is promifed and threatned: but the worlds bright glorie hath put out the 40 eyes of our minds; and these betraying lights, (with which we only see) doe neither looke up towards termeleffe ioyes, nor downe towards endleffe forrowes, till wee neither know, nor can looke for any thing else, at the worlds hands. Of which excellently Marius Victor.

Of the Spirit of life, which Godbreathed into man, in his Creation.

N this frame and carcaffe God breathed the breath of life; and the man was a liuing soule: (that is) God gaue to a Body of earth and of corruptible matter, a Soule spirituall and incorruptible; not that Go D had any fuch bodily instruments as men vse, but God breathed the Spirit of life and immortalitie into man, as he breatheth his grace daily into fuch as love and fearehim. The Spirit of God (faith EL IHV in IOB) hath made 100.33.44 20 me, and the breath of the Almightie hath given me life: In qua sententia (saith RABANVS) vitanda est paupertas sensus carnalis, ne forte putemus Deum, vel manibus corporeis de limo formasse corpus hominis, vel faucibus aut labijs suis inspirasse in faciem formati, vt viuere possit, & spiraculum vita habere : Nam & Propheta cum ait, Manus tua secerunt me, &c. Tropica hac locutione magis quam propria, (id est) iuxta consuetudinem, qua solent homines operari, loquutus est: In which (entence (faith he) the beggerlineffe of carnall fenfe is to bee avoided, lest perhaps we should thinke, either that God with bodily hands made mans body of (lime or breathed with lawes or lips upon his face (being formed) that hee might line, and have the Spirit of life: for the Prophet also when he faith; Thy hands have made me, spake this Tropically, rather then properly (that is) according to the custome which men viein wor-30 king. Quantum est periculi hijs, qui Scriptur as sensu corporeo legunt? In what danger are they that read the Scriptures in a carnall fen (e? By this breath was infused into man both life and foule; and therefore this (Soule) the Philosophers call Animam, qua viuificat corpus, & animat, Which doth animate, & giue life to the body. The inspiration of the Almighty gineth understanding, faith 10b; and this spirit, which God breathed into man, which is the reasonable soule of man, returneth againe to Godthat gaue it, as the body returneth vnto the Earth, out of which it was taken, according to Ecclesiases: And dust Shall returne to the Earth, out of which it was taken, and the spirit shall returne to God that gave Eccles 12.7. it. Neither is this word (spirit) vsually otherwise taken in the Scriptures, then for the foule; as when Stephen cryed vnto God: Domine, fuscipe spiritum meum; Lord Iefus, ABS 1.50. 40 receive my first; and in Saint IOHN, And Iefus bowed his head, and gave up the Ghost, 106.19.30. or spirit, (which was) that his life and soule left his body dead. And that the immortall foule of man differeth from the foules of beafts, the manner of the creation makethit manifest: for it is written, Let the waters bring forth in aboundance every creeping thing, and let the Earth bring forth the living thing, according to his kind, the beaft of the Earth, &c. But of Man it is written, Let vs make man in our owne Image, &c. and further, that the Lord breathed in his face the breath of life. Wherefore, as from the Wa- Gen. 17. ter and Earth were those creatures brought forth, and thence received life: so shall they againe be dissolved into the same first matter, whence they were taken: but the life of breath euerlasting, which God breathed into man, shall according to Eccle-50 fiastes, returne againe to God that gaue it,

That man is (as it were) a little World: with a digression touching our mortalitie.

A N, thus compounded and formed by God, was an abstract or modell. or briefe Storie of the Vniuerfall: in whom God concluded the Creation, and worke of the World, and whom he made the last and most excellent of his Creatures, being internally endued with a divine underflanding, by which he might contemplate and serue his Creatour, after whose Image hee was formed, and endued with the powers and faculties of reason to and other abilities, that thereby also he might gouerneand rule the World, and all other Gods creatures therein. And whereas God created three forts of living natures, (to wit) Angelicall, Rationall, and Brutall; giving to Angels an intellectuall, and to Beafts a sensuall nature, hee vouchsafed vnto Man, both the intellectuall of Angels, the sensitive of Beasts, and the proper rationall belonging vnto man; and therefore (faith GREGORY NAZIANZENE:) Homo est veriul an natura vinculum, Man is the bond and chaine which tyeth together both natures : and because in the little frame of mans body there is a representation of the Vniuersall, and (by allusion) a kind of participation of all the parts thereof, therefore was man called Microcofmos, or the little ticipation of all the parts thereof, therefore was man valued on the parts thereof, therefore was man valued on the parts the parts the one of the parts the same when hee had Omnis in bomine at q, exiguo totum, interris statuit, God therefore placed in the Earth the man whom bee had crea ura, & ce made, as it were another world, the great and large World in the small and little World: for out of the Earth and Dust was formed the flesh of Man, and therefore heavie and 67. retr.l.1.c.2. lumpish; the bones of his body wee may compare to the hard Rockes and Stones. and therefore ftrong and durable; of which Ouid:

His bloud, which disperseth it selfe by the branches of veines through all the bodie, may be resembled to those waters, which are carried by brookes and rivers over all the Earth; his breath to the Aire, his naturall heate to the inclosed warmth, which the Earth hath in it selfe, which stirred up by the heate of the Sunne, assisted Nature in the speedier procreation of those varieties, which the Earth bringeth forth; Our radicall moisture, Oile, or Balsamum (whereon the naturall heat feedeth and is maintained) is resembled to the far and sertilitie of the Earth; the haires of mans bodie, which adornes or ouer-shadowes it, to the grasse, which concreth the vpper face and 40 skin of the Earth; our generative power, to Nature, which produceth all things; our determinations, to the light, wandring and vnstable clouds, carried enery where with vncertaine winds; our eies, to the light of the Sun and Moone, and the beauty of our youth, to the flowers of the Spring, which, either in a very short time, or with the Suns heat dry vp, and wither away, or the fierce puffes of wind blow them from the stalkes; the thoughts of our mind, to the motion of Angels; and our pure vnderstanding (formerly called Mens, and that which alwaies looketh vpwards) to those intellectuall natures, which are alwaies present with God; and lastly, our immortall soules while they are righteous) are by God himselfe beautified with the title of his owne Image and similitude: And although, in respect of God, there is no man iust, or good, 50 or righteous: for in Angelis deprehensa est stultitis, Behold, hee found folly in his Angels, (faith 10b) yet with such a kind of difference, as there is betweene the substance, and the shadow, there may bee found a goodnesse in man: which God being pleased to accept, hath therefore called man, the Image and similitude of his own righteousnes.

In this also is the little World of man compared, and made more like the Vniuerfall (man being the measure of all things; Homo est mensura omnium rerum, faith Aristotle Aristo. Meand Pythagoras) that the foure Complexions refemble the foure Elements, and the taphica. f. feuen Ages of man the feuen Planets : Whereof our Infancie is compared to the Moone, in which wee seeme onely to line and grow, as Plants; the second Age to Mercurie, wherein we are taught and instructed; our third Age to Venus, the dayes of loue, desire, and vanitie; the fourth to the Sunne, the strong, flourishing, and beautifull age of mans life; the fifth to Mars, in which we feeke honor and victorie, and in which our thoughts trauaile to ambitious ends; the fixth Age is ascribed to Iupiter, to in which we begin to take accompt of our times, judge of our felues, and grow to the perfection of our vnderstanding; the last and seuenth to Saturne, wherein our dayes are fad and ouer-cast, and in which we finde by deare and lamentable experience, and by the losse which can neuer be repayred, that of all our vaine passions and affections past; the forrow only abideth : Our attendants are sicknesses, and variable infirmities; and by how much the more we are accompanied with plentie.by so much the more greedily is our end defired, whom when Time hath made vnfociable to others, we become a burthen to our felues: being of no other vse, then to hold the riches we haue, from our Successors. In this time it is, when (as aforesaid) we, for the most part, and neuer before, prepare for our eternall habitation, which we passe 20 on vnto, withmany fighes, grones, and fad thoughts, and in the end, by the workemanship of death, finish the sorrowfull businesse of a wretched life, towards which we alwayes trauaile both sleeping and waking: neither have those beloued companions of honor and riches any power at all, to hold vs any one day, by the promifes of glorious entertainments; but by what crooked path focuer we walke, the same leadeth on directly to the house of death : whose dores lye open at all houres, and to all persons. For this tyde of mans life, after it once turneth and declineth, euer runneth with a perpetuall Ebbe and falling Streame, but neuer floweth againe: our Leafe once fallen, springeth no more, neither doth the Sunne or the Summer adorne vs againe, with the garments of new Leaues and Flowers.

Hese be the miseries which our first Parents brought on all mankinde. vnto whom God in his creation gaue a free and vnconstrayned will. and on whom he bestowed the liberall choice of all things, with one only prohibition, to trie his gratitude and obedience. God fet before him, a mortall and immortall Life, a Nature celestiall and terrene, and (indeed) God gaue man to himselfe, to be his owne guide, his owne workeman, and his owne painter, that he might frame or describe vnto himselfe what he pleased, and make election of his owne forme. God made man in the beginning (faith SIRACIDES) and left him in the hands of his owne counsaile. Such was the liberalitie of God, and mans 20 felicitie: whereas beafts, and all other creatures reasonlesse brought with them into the world (laith Lucilius) and that even when they first fell from the bodies of their Dammes, the nature, which they could not change; and the supernall Spirits or Angels were from the beginning, or soone after, of that condition, in which they remaine in perpetuall eternitie. But (as aforefaid) God gaue vnto man all kinde of seedes and grafts of life (to wit) the vegetative life of Plants, the sensual of Beasts. the rationall of Man, and the intellectuall of Angels, wherof which some he tooke pleasure to plant and cultiue, the same should futurely grow in him, and bring forth fruit, agreeable to his owne choice and plantation. This freedome of the first man Adam, and our first Father, was ænigmatically described by Asclepius Atheniensis 30 (faith Mirandula) in the person and fable of Protess, who was said, as often as he pleased, to change his shape. To the same end were all those celebrated Metamor-Pholes among the Pythagorians, and ancient Poets, wherein it was fayned, that men were transformed into divers shapes of beasts, thereby to shew the change of mens conditions, from Reason to Brutalitie, from Vertue to Vice, from Meeknesse to Crueltie, and from Iustice to Oppression. For by the lively image of other creatures did those Ancients represent the variable passions, and affections of mortall men; as by Serpents, were fignified Deceiuers; by Lyons, Oppressors, and cruell men; by Swine, Men giuen ouer to lust and sensualitie; by Wolues, rauening and greedie Men; which also S. ## CHAP. III. Of the place of Taradife.

That the feate of Paradise is greatly mistaken : and that it is no maruaile that men should erre.

ONCERNING the first habitation of man we reade, that the Lord God planted a Garden, Eastward, in Eden, and there he put the man whom he made, GEN. 2. 6. Of this seate and place of Paradise, all ages have held dispute; and the opinions and judgements have been in effect, as divers, among those that have written vpon this part of Genesis, as vpon any one place therein, feeming most obscure: some there are, that have conceiued the being of the terrestriall Paradise, without all regard of the worlds Geographie, and without any respect of East and West, or any consideration of the place where Moles wrote, and from whence he directed (by the quarters of the heauens) the way how to finde out and judge, in what Region of the world this garden was by God planted, wherein he was exceeding respective and precise. Others, by being themselves ignorant in the Hebrew, followed the first interpretation, or trufting to their owne judgements, vnderstood one place for another; and one error is so fruitfull, as it begetteth a thousand Children, if the licentiousnesse thereof be not timely restrayned. And thirdly, those Writers which gaue themselues to follow and imitate others, were in all things to observant Sectators of those Masters, whom they admired and beleeved in, as they thought it safer to condemne their ownevn-50 derstanding, then to examine theirs. For (saith Vadianus in his Epistle of Paradis) Magnos errores (magnorum virorum auctoritate persuasi) transmittimus; We passe ouer many grosse errors, by the authoritie of great men led and perswaded. And it is true, that many of the Fathers were farre wide from the vinderstanding of this place. I speake it not, that I my selfe dare presume to censure them, for I reuerence both their learning and their pietie, and yet not bound to follow them any further, then they are guided by truth: for they were men; Et humanum est errare. And to the end that no man should be proude of himselfe, God hath distributed vnto men such a proportion of knowledge, as the wifest may behold in themselves their owne weaknesse: Nulli unquam dedit omnid Deus; God neuer gaue the knowledge of all things to any one, S. Paul confest that he knew not, whether he were taken vo into the third heauen in the flesh, or out of the flesh; and Christ himselfe acknowledgeth thus much. that neither Men, nor Angels knew of the latter day; and therefore, feeing knowledge is infinite, it is God (according to S. ### A recitall of strange opinions, touching Paradico.

Owas touching Paraduse, first it is to be enquired, whether there were a Paradile, or no? or whether Moles description were altogether mysticall, and allegoricall? as Origen, Philo, Fran. Georgius, with others have affirmed, and that vuder the names of those foure Rivers, Pilon, Gehon, Hidekel, and Perath. The tree of life, and the tree of Knowledge, there were deliuered vnto vs other mysteries and significations; as, that by the foure Riuers were meant the foure Cardinall vertues, Iustice, Temperance, Fortitude, and Prudence, or (by other) Oyle, Wine, Milke, and Honny. This Allegoricall understanding of Paradife by Origen divulged, was againe by Franciscus Georgius received (faith Sixtus Senensis) whose friuolous imaginations Sextus himselfe doth fully and learnedly an- 20

swere, in the 34. Annotation of his fift Booke, fol. 338. the last Edition.

S. Ambrofe also leaned wholly to the Allegoricall construction, and set Paradife in the third heaven, and in the vertues of the minde, & in nostro principali, which is, as I conceiue it in mente, or in our foules: to the particulars whereof he alludeth in this fort. By the place or garden of Paradife, was meant the foule or minde; by Adam, Mens, or Vnderstanding; by Eue, the Sense; by the Serpent, Delectation; by the Tree of good and enill, Sapience; and by the rest of the Trees, the vertues of the minde, or in the minde planted, or from thence springing. Notwithstanding all which, vpon the first of the Corinthians, cap. 6. he in direct wordes alloweth both of a celestiall and terrestrial Paradife; the one, into which S. Paul was rapt; the other, 40 into which Adam was put by God. Aug. Chrysamensis was of opinion, that a Paradise had beene, but that there was not now any marke thereof on the earth: the same being not onely defaced, but withall the places now not fo much as existing. To which Luther seemeth to adhere.

The Manichees also understood, that by Paradife was meant the whole Earth; to which opinion Vadianus inclineth, as I conceiue his wordes in two seuerall places. First, vpon this: Fill the earth, GEN. 10. Of which he giueth this judgement. Hoe ipfo etiam quod dixit, Replete terram, dominamini vniuer sis animantibus, subijcite terram, clarisime docet, totam terram extantem, & omnigenis (vt tum erat) fructibus consitam, sedem & hortum illud AD &, & posteritatis futura fuisse; These wordes (saith he) in which 10 God faid, Bring forth fruit and multiply, and fill the earth, and subdue it, and rule ouer euery creature, doe cleerely shew, that the Vninersall earth set or filled with all forts of fruits (asthenit was) was the garden and seate of ADAM, and of his future posteritie. And afterward he acknowledgeth the place, out of the Atts the 17. Apostolus ex uno fanguine omne genus humanum aded factum docet, ut habitarent super universam faciem terra: totaigitur terra Paradifus ille crat; The Apostle (faith he) teacheth, that God bath made of one bloud all mankinde, to dwell ouer all the face of the earth: and therefore all the earth (faith he) was that Paradif. Which coniectures I will answere in order. Goropius Becanus differeth not much from this opinion, but yet he acknowledgeth that Adam was first planted by God in one certaine place, and peculiar Garden; which place Goropius findeth neere the Riner of Acesines, in the confines of India.

Tertullian, Bonauenture, and Durandus, make Paradije vnder the Equinoctial, and Bert. Postellus, quite contrarie, under the Worth pole: the Chaldeans also for the most part. 10 and all their Sectators, followed the opinion of Origen, or rather Origen theirs, was would either make Paradise a figure, or Sacrament only, or else would have it scatego out of this sensible world or raysed into some high and remote Region of the Aire. Strabus, and Rabanus, were both ficke of this vanitie, with Origen, and Philo: fo was our venerable Beda, and Pet. Comeftor, and Moses Barcephas the Syrian, translated by Masius. But as Hopkins sayes of Philo Indens, that he wondred, Quo malo genio affla. P. tus: By what euill Angell he was blowne up into this error: fo can I not but greatly marnaile at these learned men, who so grosly and blindly wandred; seeing Moses, and Par. after him the Prophets, doe so plaintly describe this place, by the Region, in which it was planted, by the Kingdomes and Prouinces bordering it, by the Riuers which 20 watered it, and by the points of the Compasse vpon which it lay, in respect of Indaa, or Cansan.

Nouismagus also, vpon Beds, De natura rerum, beleeueth that all the Earth was taken for Paradife, and not any one place. For the whole Earth (faith he) hath the same beautie adscribed to Paradise. He addeth, that the Ocean was that Fountayne, from whence the foure Rivers, Pifon, Gehon, Tigris, and Euphrates, had their beginning: for he could not thinke it possible, that these Rivers of Ganges, Nilus, Tigris, and Euphrates, (whereof the one ranne through India, the other through Egypt, and the other two through Mesopotamia and Armenia) could rise out of one Fountayne, were it not out of the Fountayne of the Ocean.

III.

That there was a true locall Paradise Eastward, in the Countrie of Eden.

O the first therefore, that such a place there was upon the earth, the words of Moses make it manifest, where it is written, And the Lord God Gen. cap. 2. planted a garden Eastward in Eden, and there he put the man whom he had made. And howfoeuer the vulgar translation, called Hieromes translation, hath converted this place thus, Plantauer at Dominus Deus Para-

AO disum voluptatis à principio: The Lord God planted a Paradise of pleasure from the beginning; putting the word (pleasure) for Eden, and (from the beginning) for Eastward: It is manifest, that in this place Eden is the proper name of a Region. For what sense haththis translation (saith our Hopkins, in his Treatise of Paradise) that he planted a garden in pleasure, or that a River went out of pleasure to water the garden? But the Teventie Interpreters call it Paradifum Edenis, the Paradife of Eden, and so doth the Chaldean Paraphrast truely take it for the proper name of a place, and for a Noune appellatine; which Region in respect of the sertilitie of the soile, of the many beautifull Rivers, and goodly Woods, & that the trees (as in the Indies) doe alwaies keepe their leaves, was called Eden, which fignifieth in the Hebrew, pleafantnesse or delica-'50 cie, as the Spaniards call the Countrie, opposite to the Isle of Cuba, Florida: and this is the mistaking, which may end the dispute, as touching the double sense of the word, that as Florida was a Countrie, so called for the flourishing beautic thereof, so was Eden a Region called pleasure, or delicacie, for the pleasure, or delicacie: and as Florids signifieth flourishing: so Eden signifieth pleasure, and yet both are the proper names of Countries; for Eden being the proper name of a Region (called Pleasure in the Hebrew) and Paradife being the choice seate of all that Region, Paradife was truely the Garden of Eden, and truely the Garden of Pleasure.

Now, for Eastward, to translate it, from the beginning, it is also contrarie to the translation of the Seuentie; to the ancient Greeke Fathers, as Bafil, Chryfostime, Theodoret, Gregorie; and to the Rabbines, as Ramban, Rabbi Salomon, R. Abraham, and Chimchi; and of the Latines, Seuerinus, Damascenus, &c. who plainely take Eden for the proper name of a Region, and let the word (Eastward) for ab initio: for Damascens owne wordes are thele, Paradifus est locus Dei manibus in Eden ad Orientem mirabiliter consitus; Paradise is a place, maruailousty planted by the hands of God, in Eden, to-10 ward the East.

And after all these Fathers, Guilhelmus Parisiensis, a great learned man, and Sixtus Senensis, of later times, doe both understand these words of Eden, and of the East, contrarie to the vulgar translation; Parisiensis, as indifferent to both, and Sixtus Senensis, directly against the vulgar: of which these are their owne wordes: After this I will beginne to (peake of Paradise terrestriall, which God planted from the beginning or Eastward, &c. Posthac incipiam loqui de Paradiso terrestri, quem plantâsse Deum ab initio vel ad Orientem, &c. And then Senensis; Moses enim claristime prodit, Paradifum & Des consitumin regione terra Orientalis, qua dicitur Heden: Heden autem esse proprium nomen apparet ex quarto capite Gen. vbi legimus CH AM habitaffe ad Orientalem plagam 20 Heden; For Moses (faithhe) doth thew most cleerely, that Paradise was planted of God in a Region of the East Countrie, which is called Heden: but that Heden is a proper name, it appeareth by the fourth Chapter of Genesis, where we reade, that CHAM dwelt on the East border of Heden. PERERIVS endeuoureth to qualifie this translation: for this particle (faith he) ab initio, is referred to all the time of the creation, and not to the very first day; alleaging this place of Christ, that although the Deuill was said to be a man-flayer from the beginning, yet that was meant but after the fixth day. But furely, as I thinke (referring my selfe to better judgement) the Deuill was from the instant of his fall a man-slayer in disposition, though he had not whereon to practise till mans creation. And for conclusion, S. Hierome (if that be his translation) adui- 30 feth himselse better in the end of the third Chapter of Genesis, converting the word (Eden) by (ante) and not (à principio) as, God did set a Cherubin before the Garden of Eden; Collocauit Deus ante Paradisum voluptatis Cherubin; and Pererius himselfe acknowledgeth, that this is the true sense of this place, precisely taken, according to the Hebrew. Posuit à parte Orientali horti Heden, Cherubin; He set on the East-side of the Garden of Heden, Cherubin. BECANVS affirmeth, that the Hebrew word (Be) fignifieth (with) aswell as (in) and so the Text beareth this sense; That God planted a Garden with pleasure (that is to say) full of pleasure. But Becanse followeth this construction, only to the end, to finde Paradise vpon the River of Acesines: for there he hath heard of the Indian Fig-tree in great abundance, which he supposeth to be 40 the tree of Knowledge of good, and euill, and would therefore draw Paradise to the Fig-tree: which conceit of his I will answere hereafter.

Now, because Paradise was seated by Moses toward the East, thence came the custome of praying toward the East, and not by imitation of the Chaldeans: and therefore all our Churches are built East and West, as to the point where the Sunne riseth in March, which is directly ouer Paradife (faith Damafcenus:) affirming, that we alwayes pray towards the East, as looking towards Paradise, whence we were cast out; and yet the Temple of Salomon had their Priests and Sacrifices, which turned themfelues in their feruice and divine ceremonies, alwayes toward the West, thereby to avoid the superstition of the Egyptians and Chaldeans.

But because East and West are but in respect of places; (for although Paradise were East from Iudaa, yet it was West from Persia) and the seruing of God is every where in the world, the matter is not great which way we turne our faces, so our hearts stand right, other than this, that we who dwell West from Paradife, and pray turning our felues towards the East, may remember thereby to befeech God, that as by Adams fall we have lost the Paradife on Earth: so by Christs death and passion we may be made partakers of the Paradife celestiall, and the Kingdome of Heauen. To conclude, I conceiue, that there was no other mysterie in adding the word (East) to Eden by Moses, then to shew, that the Region of Eden, in which Psradise was, lay Fashward from Indea and Canaan: for the Scriptures alwayes called the people of those Nations, the Sonnes of the East, which inhabited Arabia, Mesopotamic, Chaldaa, and Persia: of which Ouid:

The East wind with Aurora hath abiding Among th' Arabian, and the Persian Hils, Whom Phabus first salutes at his vp-rising.

And if it be obiected, that Hieremie the Prophet threatning the destruction of Hierusalem, doth often make mention of Northerne Nations, it is to bee noted, that the North is there named, in respect of those Nations that followed Nabuchodonofor, 20 and of whom the greatest part of his Armie was compounded; not that Babylon it selfestood North from Hierusalem, though inclining from the East toward the

Now to the difference of this Translation, Peter Comestor giveth best satisfaction: for he vseth the word, From the beginning, that is, from the first part of the world, (A principio) id est (fayth hee) à prima orbis parte, and afterward hee affirmeth, that (d principio, and ad Orientem) have the same signification; From the beginning and Eastward is all one, à principio idem est quod ad Orientem.

But to returne to the proofe of this place, and that this Story of Mankind was not Allegoricall, it followeth in the Text of the fecond Chapter and ninth Verse, in these 30 words: For out of the ground made the Lord God to grow enery Tree pleasant to the fight, and good for meate, &c. fo as first it appeared that God created Adam elsewhere, as in the World at large, and then, put him into the Garden: and the end why, is exprest: that hee might dreffe it and keepe it; Paradife being a Garden or Orchard filled with Vafe 18. Plants, and Trees, of the most excellent kinds, pleasant to behold, and (withall) good for meate: which proueth that Paradife was a terrestriall Garden, garnished with Fruits, delighting both the eye and tafte. And to make it more plaine, and to take away all opinion of Allegoricall construction, hee affirmeth that it was watered and beautified with a River; expressing also the Region, out of which this River sprang, vale 10. which he calleth Heden; and that Heden is also a Countrie neere vnto Charan in Me- Exch. 6.27.23. 40 (opotamia, Ezechiel witnesseth.

But to all these Cabalists, which draw the Truth and Story of the Scriptures into Allegories, Epiphanius answereth in these wordes: Si Paradisus non est sensibilis, non est etiam fons, sinon est fons, non est flumen, sinon est flumen, non sunt quatuor principia. non Pison, non Gehon, non Tigris, nec Euphrates, non est ficus, non folia, non comedit Ev A de arbore, non est ADAM, non sunt homines, sed verit as iam fabula est, & omnia ad Allegorias renocantur: If Paradife be not fensible, then there was no fountaine, and then no Riner, if no River, then no such four e heads or branches, and then not any such River as Pison, or Gehon, Tigris, or Euphrates, no such Fig-tree, or fruit, or leaves, Ev = then did not eat of the fruit, neither was there any AD AM, or any man, the truth was but a Fable, and all things effec-50 med are called backe into Allegories. Words to the same effect hath Saint Hierome vpon

DANIEL: Contice Cant corum deliramenta, qui umbras & imagines in veritate sequentes, ipsam conantur euertere veritatem, ut Paradisum & flumma, & arbores putent Allegoria Legibus fe debere subruere, Let the dotages of them bee silent, who following shadowes and Images in the Truth, endeuour to subvert the Truth it selfe, and thinke that they ought to bring Paradife, and the Rivers and the Trees under the rules of Allegorie.

Furthermore, by the continuation and order of the Storie is the place made more manifest. For God gaue Adam free libertieto eate of euery Tree of the Garden, (the Tree of knowledge excepted) which Trees Moles in the ninth verse saith that they were good to eate; meaning the fruit which they bare. Besides, God left all beasts to Adam to be named, which he had formerly made; and these beasts were neither in the third Heauen, nor neere the Circle of the Moone, nor beafts in imagination : for if all these things were Enygmaticall or Mysticall, the same might also bee said of the creation of all things. And Exechiel speaking of the glory of the Assyrian Kings vseth this speech: All the Trees of Eden, which were in the Garden of God, enuied him, which to proueth both Eden, and Paradise therein seated to bee terrestriall: for the Prophets made no imaginary comparisons. But Moses wrote plainly, and in a simple stile, sit for the capacities of ignorant men, and he was more large and precise in the description of Paradise, then in any other place of Scripture; of purposeto take away all scruple from the incredulitie of future ages, whom he knew (out of the gift of Prophecie) to be apt to fabulous inventions, and that if he had not described both the Region and the Riners, and how it stood from Canaan, many of the vnbeleeing I fraelites, and others after them, would have misconstrued this Storie of Mankind. And is it likely, there would have beene so often mention made of Paradise in the Scriptures, if the fame had beene an Vtopia? For we find that the Valley, wherein Sodome and Gomorrha 20 flood, (sometimes called Pentapolis, of the five principall Cities therein) was before the destruction (which their vnnaturall sinne purchased) compared to the Paradise of the Lord, and like to the Land of Agypt toward Zoar; In like manner was Ifrael refembled to the Paradise of God, before the Babylonians wasted it: which proueth plainly, that Paradise it selfe exceeded in beautie and fertilitie, and that these places had but a refemblance thereof: being compared to a feat and foyle of farre

Besides, whence had Homer his invention of Alcineus Gardens, as Iustin Martyr noteth, but out of Moses his description of Paradise? Gen.2. and whence are their prayses of the Elisian fields, but out of the Storie of Paradise? to which also apper- 20

taine those Verses of the Golden Age in Ouid:

Ouid, Metamilia

Ver erat aternum, placidig, tepentibus auris Mulcebant Zephyri natos sine semine flores.

The joyfull Spring did euer last. And Zephyrus did breed Without the helpe of feed Sweet flowres by his gentle blaft.

And is manifest, that Orphus, Linus, Pyndarus, Hesiodus, and Homer, and after him, ouid, one out of another, and all these together with Pythagor as and Plato, and their Sectatours, did greatly enrich their inventions, by venting the stolne Treasures of Diuine Letters, altered by prophaneadditions, and disguised by poeticall conuersions, as if they had beene conceined out of their owne speculations and contemplations.

But besides all these testimonies, if we find what Region Heden or Eden was; if we proue the River that ranne out of it, and that the same afterwards was divided into foure branches; together with the Kingdomes of Hauila and Cush, and that all these are Eastward from Canaan, or the Desarts of the Amorites, where Moses wrote, 10 I then conceine, that there is no man that will doubt, but that such a place there was. And yet I doe not exclude the Allegoricall sense of the Scripture; for aswell in this there were many figures of Christ, as in all the old Testament throughout: the Storie being directly true notwithstanding. And to this purpose (saith Saint Augustine)

Tres sunt de Paradiso generales sententia: una est eorum, qui tantummo do corporaliter Paradicum intelligi volunt: alia corum, qui firitualiter tantum (id est ) Ecclesiam: tertia corum, qui vtroq, modo Paradi/um accipiunt, (that is) There are three opinions of Paradile: the one of those men, which will have it altogether corporall: a second of those which conceine it altogether spirituall, and to be a figure of the Church: the third of those, which take it in both lenles; which third opinion Saint Augustine approueth, and of which Suidas gi- Aug. de Civit. ueth this allowable iudgement : Quemadmodum homo sensibilis, & intelligibilis simul Suidas in verbo conditus erat : sic & huius santissimum nemus, sensibile simul & intelligibile, & duplici Paradissis. specie est praditum, (that is) As man was created at one time both sensible and intelligible: 10 To was this holy Grove or Garden to be taken both wayes, and endued with a double forme.

ò. IIII.

Снар.3.5.4.

🔊 V T it may be objected, that it is needleffe, and a kind of curiofitie to enquire so diligently after this place of Paradise, and that the knowledge thereof is of little or no vie. To which I answere, that there is nothing written in the Scriptures, but for our instruction; and if the truth of the Storie be necessary, then by the place proued, the same is also made more apparent. For if we should conceive that Paradise were not on the Earth, but lifted vp as high as the Moone; or that it were beyond all the Ocean, and in no part of the knowne World, from whence Adm was fayd to wade through the Sea, and thence to have come into Iudes, (out of doubt) there would be few men in the World, that would give any credit vnto it. For what could feeme more ridiculous then the report of such a place? and besides, what maketh this feare of Paradife formuch diffouted and doubted of, but the conceit that Pilhon should bee Ganges, which watereth the East India, and Schon, Nilus, which enricheth Agypt, and these 20 two Rivers fo far diffant, as (except all the World were Paradife) thele streames can no way be comprized therein?

Secondly, if the birth and workes, and death of our Saujour, were faid to have beene in some such Countrey, of which no man euer heard tell, and that his Miracles had beene performed in the Ayre, or no place certainly knowne: I affure my felfe, that the Christian Religion would have taken but a slender roote in the minds of men; for times and places are approved witnesses of worldly actions.

Thirdly, if we should relye, or give place to the judgements of some Writers vpon this place of Genefis (though otherwise for their doctrine in general, they are worthy of honour and reverence) I say that there is no fable among the Grecians or Ægyp-40 tians more ridiculous: for who would beleeve that there were a piece of the World fo fet by it felfe and separated, as to hang in the Ayre vnder the Circle of the Moone? or who so doltish to conceine, that from thence the foure Rivers of Ganges, Nilus, Euphrates, and Tigris, should fall downe, and runne under all the Ocean, and rife vp againe in this our habitable World, and in those places where they are now found? Which lest any man thinke, that I enforce or straine to the worst, these are Peter Comestors owne words. Est autem locus amænissmus, longo terra & maris tractu à nostra habitabili Zona secretus, adeò eleuatus, ut usq, ad Lunarem globum attingat, &c. (that is) It is a most pleasant place, seuered from our habitable Zone by along tract of Land and Sea, elevated fo, that it reacheth to the Globe of the Moone.

And Moses Barcephas upon this place writeth in this manner: Deinde hoc quog re- Barcaconuerted Sponsum volumus, Paradisum muliò sublimiore positum esse regione, atq, hec nostra extet by Masim. terra, eog, fieri, vt illine per pracipitium delabantur fluui tanto cum impetu, quantum verbis exprimere non possis; eog impetuimpulsi pressig, sub Oceani vada rapiuntur, vnderurfus profiliant ebulliant g in hoc à nobis culto orbe : which have this fense : Furthermore

(fayth he) we give this for an answere, that Paradise is set in a Region farre raysed about this part which wee inhabite; whereby it comes to passe, that from thence these Rivers fall downe with such a headlong violence, as words cannot expresse; and with that force so impulsed and press, they are carried under the deepe Ocean, and doe againe arise and boyle up in this our habitable World: and to this he addeth the opinion of Ephram, which is this. Ephram dicit Paradifum ambire terram, at g. ultra Oceanum ita positum esfe, ut totum terrarum orbem ab omni circumdet regione, non aliter atý, Luna orbis Lunam cingit, (which is) That Paradife doth compasse or embrace the whole Earth, and is so set beyond the Ocean Sea, as it enuironeth the whole Orbe of the Earth on every fide, as the Orbe of the Moone dothembrace the Moone. To the end therefore that these ridiculous expositions and 10 opinions doe not bring question vnto Truth it selfe, or make the same subject to doubts or disputes, it is necessarie to discouer the true place of Paradise, which God in his wisdome appointed in the very Nauel of this our World, and (as Melanchton faies) in parte terrameliore, in the best part the reof, that from thence, as from a Centre; the Vniuerfall might be filled with people and planted; and by knowing this place, wee thall the better judge of the beginning of Nations, and of the Worlds inhabitation: for neere vnto this did the Sonnes of Noah also disperse themselues after the Floud, into all other remote Regions and Countries. And if it be a generous desire in men, to know from whence their owne forefathers have come, and out of what Regions and Nations, it cannot be displeasing to vnderstaud the place of our first Ancester, 20 from whence all the streames and branches of Mankind haue followed and beene deduced. If then it doe appeare by the former, that fuch a place there was as Paradife, and that the knowledge of this place cannot be unprofitable, it followeth in order to examine the seuerall opinions before remembred, by the Truth it selfe; and to see how they agree with the sense of the Scripture, and with common reason, and afterward to prooue directly, and to delineate the Region in which God first planted this delightfull Garden.

That the Floud hath not otterly defaced the markes of Paradife, nor caused

No first, whereas it is supposed by Aug. Chysamensis, that the Floud hath altered, deformed, or rather annihilated this place, in such fort, as no man can find any marke or memory thereof: (of which opinion there were others also, ascribing to the Floud the cause of those high Mountaines, which are found on all the Earth ouer, with many other strange effects) for my owne opinion, I thinke neither the one nor the other to bee true. For although I cannot denie, but that the face of Paradise was after the Floud 40 withered, and growne old, in respect of the first beautie: (for both the ages of men, and the nature of all things Time hath changed) yet if there had beene no signe of any such place, or if the soile and seate had not remained, then would not Moses, who wrote of Paradife about 850. yeeres after the Floud, haue described it so particularly, and the Prophets long after Moses would not have made so often mention thereof. And though the very Garden it selfe were not then to bee found, but that the Floud, and other accidents of time made tone common field and pasture with the Land of Eden, yet the place is still the same, and the Rivers still remaine the same Rivers. By two of which (neuer doubted of) to wit, Tigris, and Euphrates, wee are fure to find in what longitude Paradife lay; and learning out one of these Rivers, which afterward 50 doth divide it selfe into foure branches, wee are sure that the partition is at the very border of the Garden it selfe. For it is written, that out of Eden went a River to water the Garden, and from thence it was divided and became into foure heads: Now whether the word in the Latine Translation (Inde) from thence, be referred to Eden it

selfe, or to Paradife, yet the division and branching of those Rivers must bee in the North or South side of the very Garden (if the Rivers runne as they doe, North and South) and therefore these Rivers yet remaining, and Eden manifestly knowne, there could be no fuch defacing by the Floud, as is supposed. Furthermore, as there is no likelihood, that the place could be so altered as future ages know it not, so is there no probability, that eyther these Rivers were turned out of their courses, or new Rivers created by the Floud which were not, or that the Floud (as aforefaid) by a violent motion, when it began to decrease, was the cause of high Hils, or deepe Vallies. For what descent of waters could there bee in a Sphericall and round bodie, wherein to there is nor high nor low? feeing that all violent force of waters is eyther by the ftrength of winde, by descent from a higher to a lower, or by the ebbe or floud of the Sea. But that there was any winde (whereby the Seas are most enraged) it appeareth not, rather the contrary is probable: for it is written, Therefore God made a General winde to passe upon the Earth, and the waters ceased. So as it appeareth not, that, untill the waters sanke, there was any winde at all, but that God afterward, out of his goodnesse, caused the winde to blow, to dry up the abundant slime and mudde of the Earth, and make the Land more firme, and to cleanfe the Ayre of thicke vapours and vnholesome mists; and this we know by experience, that all downe-right raines doe euermore diffeuer the violence of outragious winds, and beat downe, and levell 20 the swelling and mountainous billow of the Sea: for any ebbes and flouds there could be none, when the waters were equall and of one heighth ouer all the face of the Earth, and when there were no Indraughts, Bayes, or Gulfes to receive a Floud, or any descent, or violent falling of waters in the round forme of the Earth and waters, as aforesaid: and therefore it seemeth most agreeable to reason, that the waters rather stood in a quiet calme, then that they moued with any raging or ouer-bearing violence. And for a more direct proofe that the Floud made no fuch destroying alteration, Ioseph. anoweth that one of those pillars erected by Seth, the third from Adam, was to bee seene in his dayes, which Pillars were set vp aboue 1426. yeeres before the floud, counting Seth to be an hundred yeeres old at the erection of them, and 30 Ioseph. himselfe, to have lived some 40.or 50. yeeres after Christ: of whom although there be no cause to beleeue all that he wrote, yet that, which hee auouched of his owne time, cannot (without great derogation) be called in question. And therefore it may be possible, that some foundation or ruine thereof might then be seene. Now that fuch Pillars were rayled by Seth, all Antiquitie hath anowed. It is also written in Berofus (to whom although I give little credit, yet I cannot condeme him in all) that the Citie of Enoch built by Cain, about the Mountaines of Libanus, was not defaced by length of time: yea the ruines thereof Annius (who commented vpon that invented Fragment) faith, were to be seene in his dayes, who lived in the Raigne of Ferdinand and Isabella of Castile; and if these his words bee not true, then was hee 40 exceeding impudent. For, speaking of this Citie of Enoch, he conclude thin this fort: Cuius maxima & ingentis molis fundamenta visuntur, & vocatur ab incolis regionis, Ciuitas Cain, vt nostri mercatores, & peregrini referent; The foundation of which huge Masse is now to be seene, and the place is called by the people of that Region, the Citie of Cain, as both our strangers and Merchants report. It is also anowed by Pomponius Mela, (to whom I give more credit in these things) that the Citie of Ioppa was built before the Floud, ouer which Cepha was King: whose name with his Brother Phineus, together with the grounds and principles of their Religion, was found grauen vpon certaine Altars of stone; and it is not unpossible, that the ruines of this other Citie, called Enoch by Annius, might be seene, though founded in the first Age: but it could 50 not be of the first Citie of the World, built by Cain, the place, rather then the time, Gen.4.17. denying it.

And to prooue directly, that the floud was not the cause of Mountaines, but that there were Mountains from the Creation, it is written, that the waters of the floud ouerflowed by fifteene Cubits the highest Mountaines. And Masius Damascenus speaking of the Floud, writeth in this manner. Et supra Minyadam excelsus mons in Armenia ( qui Baris appellatur) in quo confugientes multos fermo est diluny tempore liberatos, And upon Minyada there is an high Mountaine, in Armenia (called Baris) unto which ( as it is faid) that many fled in the time of the Deluge, and that they faued themselves thereon. Now although it is contrary to Gods Word, that any more were faued then eight persons (which Masims doth not auouch, but by report) yet it is a testimonie, that such Mountaines were before the Floud, which were afterwards, and euer since, knowne by the same names; and on which Mountaines it is generally received that the Arke rested: but vntruely, as I shall prooue heereafter. And againe it appeareth, that the Mount Sion (though by another name) was knowne before the Floud: on which to the Thalmudists report, that many Giants faued themselues also, but (as Annus faith) without all authoritie, eyther Diuine or Humane.

Lastly, it appeareth that the Floud did not so turne vpside-downe the face of the Earth, as thereby it was made past knowledge, after the waters were decreased. by this that, when No AH sent out the Doue the second time, she returned with an Oliveleafe in her mouth, which shee had pluckt, and which (vntill the Trees were discouered) shee found not: for otherwise shee might have found them floting on the water; a manifest proofe, that the Trees were not torne vp by the rootes, nor swamme vpon the waters, for it is written: folium Oliua, raptum or decerptum, aleafe pluckt, (which is) to take from a Tree, or to teare off. By this it is apparent, (there being nothing writ- 20 ten to the contrarie) that the Floud made no such alteration, as was supposed, but that the place of Paradise might be seene to succeeding Ages, especially vnto Moses, by whom it pleased God to teach the truth of the Worlds Creation, and vnto the Prophets which succedeed him: both which I take for my warrant, and to guide me in this Discouerie.

That Paradifewas not the whole Earth, as some have thought: making the Ocean to beethe fountaine of those foure Rivers.

His conceit of Aug. Chyfamensis being answered, who only giueth his opinion for reason, I will in a few words examine that of the Manichies, of Nouiomagus, Vadianus, Goropius Becanus, and all those that vnder-Rood, that by Paradise was meant the whole Earth. But in this I shall not trouble the Reader with many words, because by those places of Scripture formerly remembred, this Vniuersalitie will appeare altogether improper. The places which Vadianus alleageth, Bring forth fruit and multiply, fill the Earth and Subdue it, rule over every Creature, &c. with this of the Alts, and hath made of one bloud all Mankind, to dwell on all the face of the Earth, doe no way proue such a generali- 40 tie: for the World was made for man, of which he was Lord and Gouernour, and all things therin were ordained of God for his vse: Now although all men were of one and the same fountaine of bloud originally; and Adams Posteritie inhabited in processe of time ouer all the face of the Earth; yet it disproueth in nothing the particular Garden, affigned to Adam, to dreffe and cultiue, in which he lived in so bleffed an estate before his transgression. For if there had beene no other choice, but that Adam had bin left to the Vniuersall; Moses would not then have sayd, East ward in Eden, seeing the World hath nor East nor West, but respectively. And to what end had the Angell of God beene set to keepe the East-side, and entrance into Paradise after Adams expulsion, if the Vniuersall had beene Paradife? for then must Adam have beene 50 chased also out of the World. For if All the Earth were Paradise, that place can receiue no better construction then this, That Adam was driven out of the World into the World, and out of Paradife into Paradife, except we should beleeve with Metrodorus, that there were infinite Worlds. Which to denie, hee thinkes all one, as to affirme, That in fo large a field, as the vninerfall, there should grow but one thistle. Novio-MAGVS vpon Beda, seemeth to beled by this, that it was vnpossible for those three Riners, Ganges, Nilus, and Euphrates (which water three portions of the World fo farre distant) to rise out of one Fountayne, except the Ocean be taken for the Well. and the World for the Garden.

And it is true, that those foure Rivers, being so vnderstood, there could be no coniecture more probable; but it shall plainely appeare, that Pilon was falsly taken for Ganges, and Gehon fallly for Nilus, although Ganges be a River by Hauilah in India, and Wilus runne through Ethiopia. The Seventie write Chus for Athiopia, and thereto by the errors of the Manichees, and the mistakings of Nouiomagus, Goropius, and Vadianus, with others, are made manifest. Yet was their conjecture farre more probable, then that of Ephram, Cyrillus, and Athanasius: That Paradise was seated farre beyond the Ocean Sea, and that Adam waded through it, and at last came toward the Countrie, in which he was created, and was buryed at Mount Caluary, in Hierusalem. And certainely, though all those of the first Age were of great stature, and so continued many yeeres after the floud, yet Adams shin-bones must have contayned a thousand fadome, and much more, if he had foorded the Ocean; but this opinion is lo ridiculous, as it needes no argument to disproue it.

Of their opinion, which make Paradife as high as the Moone : and of others, which make it higher than the middle Region of the ayre.

Hirdly, whereas Beda faith, and as the Schoole-men affirme, Paradife to be a place, altogether removed from the knowledge of men (locus à cognitione hominum remotissimus) and Barcephas conceiued, that Paradise was farre in the East, but mounted about the Ocean, and all the Earth, and neere the Orbe of the Moone (which opinion, though the Schoole-men charge Beda withall, yet Pererius layes it off from Beda vpon Strabus, and his Master Rabanus: ) and wheras Rupertus in his Geographie of Paradife, doth not much differ from the rest, but findes it seated next or neerest heaven; It may seeme, that all these borrowed this doctrine out of Plato, and Plato out of Socrates; but neither of them (as I conceive) well vnderstood: who (vndoubtedly) tooke this place for heauen it felfe, into which the foules of the bleffed were carryed after death.

True it is, that these Philosophers durst not for feare of the Areopagites (in this Diog. Lacrt.in and many other divine apprehensions) set downe what they beleeved in plaine sco. termes, especially Plato: though Socrates in the end suffered death, for acknowledge. 40 ing one onely powerfull God; and therefore did the Deuill himselfe doe him that right, as by an Oracle, to pronounce him the wifest man. Instine Martyr affirmeth, Instin. Mart. that Plato had read the Scriptures; and S. Augustine gauethis judgement of him, as Aug. his opinion, that (few things changed) he might be counted a Christian. And it seemeth to me, that both Tertullian and Eusebius conceine, that Socrates, by that place aforesaid, meant the celestiall Paradise, and not this of Eden. Solinus, I grant, reporteth, that there is a place exceeding delightfull and healthfull, vpon the top of Mount Atho (called Acrothonos) which being about all clouds of rayne, or other inconuenience, the people (by reason of their many yeeres) are called Macrobioi (that is) Long-lined. A further argument is vsed, for proofe of the heighth of this 50 place, because therein was Enoch preserved from the violence of the floud: approued by Isidore, and Peter Lombard; in which place also Tertullian conceived, that the bleffed foules were preserved till the last judgement; which Ireneus, and Instine Martyr also beleeved. But this opinion was of all Catholike Dinines reproved, and in the Florentine Councell damned; of which S. Augustine more modestly gaue this iudgement. Sicut certum est Enoch & Eliam nune viuere: ita vbi nune sunt. an in Paradifo an alibi, incertumest; (that is) As it is certaine that Enoch and Elias dee now line : fo where they now line, in Paradife or elsewhere, it is uncertayne. But Barcephas giues a third cause, though of all other the weakest. For (saith he) it was necesfarie that Paradife should be fet at such a distance and heighth, because the source Riuers (had they not fallen so precipitate) could not have had sufficient force to have thrust themselues under the great Ocean, and afterwards have forced their passage through the earth, and have risen againe in the farre distant Regions of India, Egype, and Armenia.

These strange fancies and dreames have beene answered by divers learned men to long fince, and lately by Hopkins and Pererius writing upon this subject; of whose arguments I will repeate these few: for to vie long discourse against those things, which are both against Scripture and Reason, might rightly be judged a vanitie in the Answerer, not much inferior to that of the Inventer.

It is first therefore alleaged, that such a place cannot be commodious to liue in: for being fet so neere the Moone, it had beene too neere the Sunne, and other heauenly bodies. Secondly, because it must have beene too ioyn& a Neighbour to the Element of fire. Thirdly, because the aire in that Region is so violently moued, and carryed about with such swiftnesse, as nothing in that place can consist or have abiding. Fourthly, because the place betweene the Earth and the Moone (according 20 to Ptolemie and Alfraganus) is seuenteene times the Diameter of the Earth, which makes by a groffe account about one hundred and twentie thousand miles. Hereupon it must follow, that Paradife, being raised to this heighth, must have the compasse of the whole earth for a Basis & foundation. But had it been so raised, it could hardly be hidden from the knowledge, or eyes of men: seeing it would depriue vs of the Sunnes light, all the fore-part of the day, being seated in the East, as they suppose. Now, to fortifie the former opinions, Tostatus addeth this, that those people which dwell neere those falls of waters, are deafe from their infancie, like those which dwell neere the Catadupa, or ouer-falls of Nilus. But this I hold as fayned. For I have seene in the Indies, far greater water-falls, than those of Nilus, and yet the people dwelling 30 neere them, are not deafe at all. Toftatu (the better to strengthen himselfe) citeth Basil and Ambrosetogether: to which Pererivs, Sed ego hac apud BASILIVM & AM-BROSIVM in corum scriptis, que nunc extant, nusquam me legere memini; But I doe not remember (faith he) that I ever read those things, either in BASIL or AMBROSE.

But for the bodies of Enoch and Elias, God hath disposed of them according to his wisdome. Their taking vp might be into the celestiall Paradise, for ought we know. For although flesh and bloud, subject to corruption, cannot inherit the Kingdome of heaven, and the seede must rot in the ground before it grow, yet we shall not all 1.co.15.36.51. die (faith S. PAVL) but all shall be changed; which change, in Enoch and Elias, was cafieto him that is Almightie. But for the rest, the Scriptures are manifest, that by the 40 floud all perished on the earth, saving eight persons, and therefore in the terrestrials Paradife they could not be.

For Toftasss his owne opinion, who foared not altogether so high as the rest, but beleeved that Paradise was raysed above the middle Region of the aire, and twentie cubits about all Mountaines, that the floud did not therefore reach it: (which Scotus and other later Schoole-men also beleeved; for, say they, there were no sinners in Paradife, and therefore no cause to ouer-whelme it:) this is also contrarie to the expresse letter of the Scripture: which directly, and without admitting of any distinction teacheth vs, that the waters over-flowed all the mountaynes under heaven. And were it otherwise, then might we aswell give credit to Masius Damascenus, and the Thalms- 50 diffs, who affirme, that there were of the Giants that faued themselues on the Mountayne Baris, and on Sion. But to helpe this, Scotus, being (as the rest of the Schoolemen are) full of diffinctions, faith; That the waters stood at Paradije, as they did in the Red Sea, and at Iordan; and as the floud was not naturall, so was Paradise saued by miracle. And Thomas Aquinas qualifieth this high conceit with this supposition, That it was not beleeved, that Paradise was so seated, as Beda and others seeme to affirme in wordes, but by Hyperbole and comparatively, for the delicacie and beautie so resembled. But this I dare anow of all those Schoole-men, that though they were exceeding wittie, yet they better teach all their Followers to shift, then to resolue, by their distinctions. Wherefore not to stay long in answering this opinion of Tostatus, I confesse that it is written, that the Mountaynes of Olympus, Atho, and Atlas, ouer-reach and furmount all windes and clouds, and that (notwithstanding) there is found on the heads of the Hills both springs and fruits; and the Pagan Priests, facri-10 ficing on these Mountaine tops, do not find the ashes (remaining of their facrifices) blownethence, nor thence washt off by raines, when they returne : yet experience hath resolued vs, that these reports are fabulous, and Plinie himselfe (who was not foaring in the report of wonders) anowerh the contrarie. But were it granted, yet the heighth of these Mountaynes is far under the supposed place of Paradife; and on these selfe Hills the ayre is so thinne (saith S. Augustine, whom herein I mistrust) that it is not sufficient to beare up the body of a bird, having therein no feeling of her wings, or any fensible resistance of ayre to mount her selfe by.

Of their opinion that seate Paradise under the Aquinoctiall: and of the pleasant habitation under the (e Climates.

Hose which come neerer vnto reason, finde Paradise vnder the Equino-Ctiall line, as Tertullian, Bonauenture, and Lurandus: iudging, that therevnder might be found most pleasure, and the greatest fertilitie of soile: but against it Thomas Aquinas obiecteth the distemperate heate, which he supposeth to be in all places so directly under the Sunne; but this is

30 (non causa pro causa) for although Paradise could not be under the line, because Eden is farre from it, in which Paradife was; and because there is no part of Euphrates, Tigris, or Ganges under it, (Ganges being one of the foure Rivers, as they suppose) yet this conceit of distemper, (being but an old opinion) is found to be very vntrue, though for the coniecture not to be condemned, considering the age when those Fathers wrote, grounded chiefly on this: that whereas it appeared, that every Countrie, as it lay by degrees neerer the Tropick, and so toward the Aquinottiall, did so much the more exceede in heate; It was therefore a reasonable coniecture, that those Countries which were fituated directly under it, were of a distemper uninhabitable: but it feemeth that Tertullian conceived better, and so did Auteenne, for they both thought 40 them habitable enough; and though (perchance) in those dayes it might be thought a fantasticall opinion (as all are which goe against the vulgar) yet we now finde, that if there be any place you the earth of that nature, beautie, and delight, that Paradife had, the same must be found within that supposed vninhabitable burnt Zone, or within the Tropicks, and neerest to the line it selfe. For hereof experience hath informed Reason, and Time hath made those things apparent, which were hidden and prouide for all living creatures, wherewith he hath filled the world, that fuch inconueniences which we contemplate a farre off, are found by tryall and the witnesse of mens trauailes, to be so qualified, as there is no portion of the earth made in vaine, or 50 as a fruitlesse lump to falhion out the rest. For, God himselfe (faith I s A y ) that formed 1/49 45.18. the earth and made it, he that prepared it he created it not in vaine, he formed it to be inhabited. Now we finde that the se hottest Regions of the world, seated under the E. quino Elial line, or neere it, are so refreshed with a daily gale of Easternely winde (which the Spaniards call the Brize, that doth enermore blow strongest in the heate could not by any contemplation be discovered. Indeede it hath so pleased God to

of the day, as the downe-right beames of the Sunne cannot so much master it, that there is any inconvenience or distemperate heate found thereby. Secondly, the nights are so cold, fresh, and equall, by reason of the entire interposition of the earth, as (for those places which my selfe haue seene, neere the Line and vnder it) I know no other part of the world of better, or equall temper: Onely there are some tracts, which by accident of high Mountaynes are barr'd from this aire and fresh wind, and some few sandie parts without trees, which are not therefore so well inhabited as the rest; and such difference of soiles we findealso in all other parts of the World. But (for the greatest part) those Regions have so many goodly Rivers, Fountaynes and little Brookes, abundance of high Cedars, and other stately trees casting shade, to so many forts of delicate fruits, euer bearing, and at all times beautified with blosfome and fruit, both greene and ripe, as it may of all other parts be best compared to the Paradise of Eden: the boughes and branches are neuer vnclothed and left naked. their sap creepeth not under ground into the roote, fearing the injurie of the frost: neither doth Pomona at any times despise her withered husband Vertumnus, in his winter quarters and old age. Therefore are these Countries called Terra vitiofa; Vicious Countries: for Nature being liberall to all without labour, necessitie imposing no industrie or trauell, idlenesse bringeth forth no other fruits then vaine thoughts, and licentious pleasures. So that to conclude this part, Tertullian and those of his opinion were not deceiued in the nature of the place: but Aquinas, who milliked 20 this opinion, and followed a worfe. And (to fay the truth) all the Schoole-men were groffe in this particular.

δ. IX.

Of the change of the names of places: and that befides that Eden in Calefyria, there is a Countrey in Babylon, once of this name, as is prouced out of Esa. 37. and Ezech. 27.

Hese opinions answered, and the Region of Eden not found in any of those imaginarie worlds, nor under Torrida Zona; it followeth that now we discouer and finde out the seate thereof, for in it was Paradise by God planted. The difficultie of which search resteth chiefly in this, That as all Nations have often changed names with their Masters; so are most of these places, by Moses remembred, forgotten by those names of all Historians and Geographers, as well ancient as moderne.

Besides, we finde that the Assyrians, Babylonians, Medes and Persians (Cyrus only and few other excepted) sought to extinguish the Hebrewes. The Gracians hated both their Nation and their Religion; and the Romanes despised once to remember 40 them in any of their stories. And as those three Monarchies succeeded each other: so did they transforme the names of all those principall Places & Cities in the East: and after them, the Turke hath sought (what he could) to extinguish in all things, the ancient memoric of those people; which he hath subjected and inthralled.

Now besides those notable markes, Euphrates & Tigris, the better to find the way, which leadeth to the Countrie of Eden, we are to take for guides these two considerations (to wit) That it lay Eastward from Canaan & Iudea; and that it was of all other the most beautiful and sertile. First then in respect of situation, the next Country to Iudea Eastward was Arabia Petrea; but in this Region was Moses himselfe when he wrote: and the next vnto it Eastward also was Arabia the Desart, both which in respect of the insertilitie could not be Eden, neither have any of the Arabians any such Rivers, as are express to run out of it: So as it solloweth of necessitie, that Eden must be Eastward, and beyond both Arabia Petrea, and Deserta. But because Eden is by Moses named by it selfe, and by the fertilitie, and the Rivers only described, we must feeke it in other Scriptures, and where it is by the additions of the neighbour Nations better described. In the Prophet Isay I finde it coupled and accompanyed Isai.37.v.i2. with other adjacent Countries, in these wordes, spoken in the person of Senachers by Rabsakeh: Have the gods of the Nations delivered them, which my Fathers have destroyed, as Gosan, and Haran, and Reseph, and the children of Eden, which were at Telassar? and in Ezechiel, where he prophecieth against the Tyrians: They of cap.27.vess.23. Haran, and Canneh, and Eden, the Merchants of Sheba, Ashur, and Chilmad, were thy Merchants. Cite.

But to avoid confusion, we must vinderstand that there were two Edens, one of which the Prophet Amos remembreth, where he divideth Syriz into three Provinces. whereof, the first he maketh Spria Damascene, or Decapolitan: the second part is cap. I. verfix that Valley called Auenis, otherwife Conuallis, or the Tract of Chamath, where Affrria is joyned to Arabia the Defart, and where Ptolemie placeth the Citie of Aueria: and the third is knowne by the name of Domus Edenis, or Caleforia, otherwise Vallis Strabe. caua, or the hollow Valley, because the Mountaynes of Libanus and Antilibanus, take all the length of it on both sides, and border it : for Coele in Greeke is Caua in Latine. But this is not that Eden, which we feeke: neither doth this Prouince lye East from Camaan, but North, and so ioyneth vnto it, as it could not be vnknowne to the Hebrewes. Yet, because there is a little Citie therein called Paradife, the Iewes beleeved 20 this Calefyria to be the same which Moses describeth. For the same cause doth Hopkins in his Treatise of Paradise reprehend Beroaldus, in that he confoundeth this Eden, with the other Eden of Paradise: though to give Berosldus his right, I conceive that he led the way to Hopkins, and to all other later Writers, fauing, That he fayled in distinguishing these two Regions, both called Eden: and that he altogether misunderstood two of the foure Rivers (to wit) Pison and Gehon, as shall appeare hereafter. Now to finde out Eden, which (as Moses teacheth vs) lay Eastward from the Desarts, where he wrote, after he had passed the Red Sea; wee must consider where those other Countries are found, which the Prophet Isay and Ezechiel joyneth withit. For (faith E s A I AH) Gofan, Haran, and Reseph, and the children of Eden, 30 which were at Telaffar. Also Ezechiel ioyneth Haran with Eden , who, together with Ezech.17. 2,23 those of Sheba, Ashur, and Chilmad, were the Merchants that traded with the Citie of Tyre, which was then (faith EZECHIEL) the Mart of the people for many Ifles. And it hath euer beene the custome, that the Persians conveyed their merchandise to Babylon, and to those Cities voon Euphrates, and Tigris, and from thence transported them into Syria, now Soria, and to the Port of the Mediterrane Sea : as in ancient times to the Citie of Tyre, afterward to Tripoly, and now to Aleppo, from whence they imbarque them at the Port of Alexandretta, in the Bay of Isicus, now Laiazzo. Executed in the description of the magnificence of Tyre, and of the exceeding trade that it had with all the Nations of the East, as the onely Mart-towne of that part of 40 the world, reciteth both the people, with whom they had commerce, and also what commodities every Countrie yeelded: and having counted the feuerall People and Countries, he addeth the particular trade, which each of them exercised: They were versian. thy Merchants (faith the Prophet) in all forts of things, in rayments of blue silke, and of broidered workes, fine linnen, corrall and pearle: and afterwards speaking of the Merchants of Sheba and Raamah, and what kindes they traded, he hath these wordes: The Merchants of Sheba and Raamah were thy Merchants, they occupied in thy Fayres, with the chiefe of all Spices, and with all precious stones and gold. Now these be indeed the riches which Persia and Arabia Falix yeeld: and because Sheba and Raama are those parts of Arabia, which border the Sea, called the Persian Gulfe, therefore did those Nations 50 both vent fuch Spice, sweet Gummes, and Pearles, as their owne Countries yeelded, and (withall) having trade with their Neighbours of India, had from them also all forts of spices, and plentie of gold. The better to convey these commodities to that great Mart of Tyre, the Shebans or Arabians entred by the mouth of Tigris, and from the Citic of Terredon (built or enlarged by Nabuchodonozor, now called Balfara)

which is seated vpon Euphrates, where it breaketh into foure heads, and which tooke

thinkes it to be Ctesiphon, but Ctesiphon is seated downelow vpon Tigris, and Canneh cannot be on that side, I meane on the East-side of Tigris, for then were it out of the Valley of Shinar. Plinie placeth the Schenite vpon Euphrates, where the same beginneth to be foordable, which is toward the border of Syria, after it leaueth to be the bound of Arabia the Defart, & where the River of Euphrates reflecteth from the De-(art of Palmirena: for these people of Canneh (afterward Schenita) inhabited both borders of Euphrates, ftretching themselues from their owne Citie of Canneb in Shinar Westward along the banks of Euphrates, as farreas the Citie of Thapfacus, where

Ptolemie appointed the Foords of Euphrates: which also agreeth with the description of the Schenita by Strabo, whose wordes are these: Mercatoribus ex Syria Seleuciam 20

& Babyloniam cuntibus iter est per Schenitas; The Merchants which trauaile from Syria to Seleucia and Babylon, take their way by the Schenites. Therefore those which take Canneh for Charran, doe much mistake it. For Charran, to which Abraham came from Vr in Chaldea (called by God) standeth also in Mesopotamia, not vpon Euphrates it selfe, but vpon the River of Chaberas, which falleth into Euphrates: and the Merchants of Charran are distinctly named with those of Canneh in Ezechiel (as) they of Haran, and that name from Seleucus, who made thereof a magnificent Citie. Hierosolymitanus 10

thence sent vp all these rich merchandises by boate to Babylon, from whence by the Now of the other Citie ioyned with Eden, as Haran or Charran, S. Hierome on body of Euphrates, as farre as it bended Westward, and afterward by a branch therethe ludges speaketh thereof in these wordes : Cuma, renerterentur, peruenerunt ad Ind.s. of, which reacheth within three dayes iourney of Aleppe, and then ouer Land they Charran, que est in medio itinere contra Miniuen, undecimo die; When they returpast to Tyre, as they did afterward to Tripoly (formerly Hieropolis) and thenceto ned, they came to Charran, (which is the mid-way against Niniue) the eleventh Alexandretta, as aforesaid. Now the Merchants of Canneh, which Ezechiel ioyneth with Eden, inhabited farre vp the River, and received this trade from Arabia & India, This Citie is by the Martyr Stephen named Charran (speaking to the high Priest:) besides those proper commodities which themselues had, and which they received

Tee Men, Brethren, and Fathers, harken: The God of gorie appeared to our Father ABRA- ASIA. HAM, while he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran. But the seate of this Citie is not doubted of: for it is not only remembred in many Scriptures, but, withall, exceeding famous for the death and ouerthrow of Crassus the Romane, who for his vnsatiable greedinesse was called Gurges anaritie; The gulse of anarice. Whereof Affrias Latio maculauit fanguine Carras,

Lucan, 1,1.105

With Roman bloud th' Assyrian Carre he defil'd.

But this Citie Canne or Chalne is made manifest by Moses himselfe, where it is written of NIMROD: And the beginning of his Kingdome was Bibel, and Erech, and Gentoto. 20 Acad, and Chaine, in the Land of Sinaar, or Shinar: where Moles the weth the first compolition of the Babylonian Empire, and what Cities and People were subject vinto Nimred, all which lay in the faid Valley of Shiner or neere it; and this Valley of Shinar is that Tract, afterwards called Bubylonia and Chaldea, into which also Eden stretchetnit selfe. Chalden, Babylonia, Sinaar, idem junt (faith Comeston.) Three names of one Countrie: which Region of Babytonia tooke name of the Tow re Babel; and the Towre, of the confusion of tongues. And that Shinar was Babylonia, it is proued in the eleventh Chapter of Genefis, in these wordes: And as they went from the Versai East, they found a Playne in the Land of Shinar, and there they abode: in which Playne Ba-

byton was built (as aforefaid.)

Now Shinar being Babylonia, and Canneb, in the first beginning of Nimrods greatnesse, and before he had subdued any strange, or farre-off Nations, being one part of his Dominion, and also named by Moles to be in Shinar, it proueth, that Canneh ioyneth to Babylonia; which also Ezechiel coupleth with Eden, and (further) affirmeth, that those of Eden were also the Merchants, which traded with the Tyrians: and Esay in the threats of Senacherib against Hierusalem ( with other Nations that Senacherib vaunted that his Fathers had destroyed) nameth the children of Eden which were at Telassar. But before I conclude where Eden it selfe lyeth, it is necessarie to describe those other Countries, which Ezechiel joyneth therewith in the places before remembred, as, those of Sheba and Raamab. It is written in Genesis the tenth : Moreover versa. 40 the sonnes of HAM were Cush, &c. And the sons of Cush were Seba, and Havilah, and SABTAH & RAAMAH, &c. And the fons of RAAMAH were SHEBA, &c. and anon after, CVSH begat NIMR OD: so as Sheba was the grand child of Culb, and Nemrod the fonne of Cush, whose elder brother was Sebah: though some there are that conceine to the contrarie, that Nimred was the elder in valour and understanding, though not in time and precedence of birth; who inhabited that part of Shinar, where Babel was built, afterwards Babylonia. His brother Raamab or Regma tooke that part adioyning to Shinar, toward the Sea fide and Persian Gulfe ( called afterward Raama and Sheba, by the Father and his Sonnes, which possessed it.) For (faith Ezechiel) the Merchants of Rasmah and Sheba were thy Merchants, they occupyed in thy Faire's with the chiefe 50 of all spices, and all precious stones, and gold. So as Sheba was that Trast of Countrie, which parteth Arabia Deferta from Arabia Fælix, and which joyneth to the Sea where Tigris and Euphrates fall out, and render themselves to the Ocean. This part, and the confining Countrie Strabo calleth Catabaria, where the best Myrrhe and Frankin- strabo, Life. cense is gathered; which people have an interchange or trade with Elana, lying on

Canneh, and Eden, the Merchants of Sheba, Albur, and Chilmad were thy Merchants. Wherefore Charran which is sometime called Charre, and Haran, and Aran, is but the fame Charran of Mefojotamia; and when it is written Aran, then it is taken forthe Region of Mesopotamia: or Aran fluuiorum, the Greeke word (Mesopotamia) impor- 30 ting, a Countrie betweene Rivers: for Mejos in Greeke, is Medius in Latine, and Potamos, stunius; and when it is written Haran or Aran, it is then taken for the Citie it selfe, to which Abraham came from Vr (as aforesaid.) For Strabo in the description of Arabia, giveth that Tract of Land from the borders of Calefyria, to the edge of Mesopotamia, to the Schenita, who also inhabited on both sides of Euphrates, and were inafter-ages accounted of these Arabians which inhabite Batañea, and the North part of the Defarts, stretching themselves toward the vnhabited Solitude of Palmirena, which lyeth betweene Syria, and Arabia the Defart So as these of Cannels ay in the very high-way from Babylon to Tyre, and were Neighbours (indifferent) to Tharran and to Eaen: and therefore they are by the Prophet Ezechiel coupled together, 40 They of Haran, and Canneh, and Eden, Gre. But S. Hierome made a good interpretation of Canneh, or Chalne, by Scleucia: for Seleucia was anciently called Chalanne (witnesse Appian; ) and so Rabanus Maurus calleth it in his Commentaries vpon Genesis; the name by time and mixture of languages being changed from Chalne or Ganneh; to Chalanne: of which name there are two other Cities, standing in Triangle with Seleucia, and almost the next vnto it, (as) Thelbe-canne; and Mann canne; the one a little to the West of Seleucia, and the other opposite vnto it, where these Rivers of Tigris

and Euphrates are readie to joyne. Therefore, which of these the ancient Canne was,

(being all three within the bound of the Valley Shinar) it is vincertayne: but it is a note as well of the importance of the place, as of the certayne seate thereof, that so many other Cities did retayne a part of the name in so many agesiafter. Neither is it unlikely, that these additions of Thelbe and Mann to the word Canne, were burto make difference betweene the East and the West, or the greater and the lesse Canne, or betweene Cannethe old, and the new: which additions to distinguish Cities by, the East side of the Persian Gulfe. By this it appeareth who were the Shebeans, spoken of by Ezechiel, and faid to have beene the Merchants of Tyre, for gold, spices, and precious stones: of which they had not onely plentie of their owne, but were also furnished from that part of India (called Elana, according to Strabo) for exchange of their Aromatiques, and other proper commodities. For as Strabe reporteth out of E-RATOSTHENES: In Perfica ora initto Infula est, in qua multi & pretiosi vniones gignantur : in alijs vero, clari & periucide lapilli. ERATOSTHENES (faith STRRBO) affirmeth, that in the beginning of the Persian Gulfe, there is an Island, in which there are many precious pearles bred: and in other, very cleare and shining stones. Now, the difference betweene Sheba, the sonne of Raamah, and Seba, the sonne of Cush, is in this, to That Seba is written with the Hebrew (Samech;) and Sheba with (Schin:) but whatsoeuer the difference may be in the Hebrew Orthographie, their Countries and habitations are diners. For sheba is that part which bordereth the Persian Sea; and Saba (whence the Queene of Saba) neighboured thered Sea; and so that place of the 72. Psalme, expounded, Reges Arabum & Saba, hath in the Hebrew this sense: Reges Sheba & Saba.

The Shebans, Ezechiel nameth together with the Edenites, because they inhabited vpon the Out-let of the same river, vpon which the Edenites were seated: and so those of Sheba, towards the Sea-coast, and vpon it, past vp the Countrie, by Tigris and Euphrates, being joined in one maine streame, and so through the Region of Eden, which 20 Tigris boundeth, thereby the better to conuey their merchandise toward Tyre. And as the Cities of Charran, and Canneb, border Eden on the West and Northwest: fo doth Sheba on the South, and Chilmad on the North-east. Chilmad being a Region of the higher Media, as appeareth in the Chaldean Paraphrast, which Countrie by the Geographers is called Coromitena, (L) placed by exchange for (R:) which change

Thus much of those Countries which border Eden, and who altogether traded with the Tyrians: of which, the chiefe were the Edenites, inhabiting Telassar: for these Senacharib vaunted, that his Fathers had destroyed; and this place of Telassar lay most convenient, both to receive the Trade from Sheba and Arabia, and also to 30 convey it over into Syria, and to Tyrus. Now to make these things the more plaine, we must remember, that before the death of Senacharib, many parts of the Babyloni. an Empire fell from his obedience, and after his death these Monarchies were vtterly difioyned. For it appeareth both in Esai the 37, and in the second of Kings, by the threates of Rabfache, the while the Armie of Affria lay before Hierusalem, that the Cities of Gofan, Haran, Reseph, and the Edenites at Telassar, had relisted the Assyrians, though Efa. 37. v. 12. by them (in a fort ) mastered and recoursed. Have the gods of the Nations delivered them, whommy Fathers have destroyed, as Gosan, and Haran, Reseph, and the children of Eden, which were at Telassar? But it appeared manifestly after Senacharibs death, that 40 these Nations formerly contending, were then freed from the others subjection: for Efar-Haddon held Affria, and Merodach Baladan, Babylonia. And after that the Ar-2. Kings 19.35. mie of Senacharib, commanded by Rabfache, which lay before Hierufalem (Ezechias then raigning) while Senacharib was in Egypt, was by the Angell of God destroyed: the King of Babel sent to Ezechias, both to congratulate the recoucrie of his health, and his victorie obtained ouer the Affrians. After which ouerthrow, Senacharib himlelfe was flaine by his owne fonnes in the Temple of his Idoles, Efar-Haddon fucceeding him in Affiria. To the Babylonian Ambassadours sent by Merodash, Ezechias shewed all his treasures, as well proper as consecrate, which inuited the Kings of Babylon afterward to undertake their conquest and subuersion. So as, the suspition of so warre encreasing betweene Babylon and Affyria, the Edenites which inhabited the borders of Shinar towards the North, and towards Affria, were imployed to beare off the incursions of the Affyrians; and their Garrison-place was at Telassar: and the very word (Telassar) faith lunius, fignifying as much, as a Bulwarke against the Ass-

rians. This place Hierofolymitanus takes for Refem , others for Seleucia : but this Telaffar is the fame, which Am Marcellinus in the Historie of Inlian ( whom he followed in the enterprize of Persia) calleth Thilutha in stead of Telassar, who describeth the exceeding strength thereof in his 24. Booke : It is seated in an Island of Eupbrates vpon a steepe and vnassaultable Rocke, in so much as the Emperour Inlian durst not attempt it; and therefore it was a convenient place for a Garrison against the Assirians, being also a passage out of Mesopotamia into Babylonia, and in which the Edenites of the Countrey adioyning were lodged to defend the same. This place Ptolomie calleth Teridata, having Refeph (which he calleth Refepha) on the left hand, and Canneb. to (which he calleth Thelbe-canne) on the right hand, not far from whence is also found the Citie of Mann-canne upon Tigrie, and all these seated together, as Elar and Exechiel haue forted them. But the vinderstanding of these places is the more difficult, because Asyria (which the Chaldaans call Atturia) and Mesopotamia, were so often confounded: the one taken for the other by interchange of Dominion. Affrized McCopotamia in Babylonia nomen transferunt ( faith NIGER, ) Affria and McCopota- Comog. Affai mia tooke the name of Babylonia. Lastly, it appeareth by those adiacent Regions by the Prophets named, in what part of the world Eden is feated, as, by Charran or Haran in Mesopotamia: also by Canneh and Reseph, according to the opinion of Vatablus, who in these wordes translateth this place : Plansauerat autem I EHOVAH Deus hor-20 tumin Eden, ab Oriente The Lord God planted a garden in Eden, Eastward: that is ( saith he in his Annotations.) Iuserat nasci arbores in Eden, Regione Orientali, in finibus Arabia & Mesopotamia, He commanded trees to grow in Eden, an Easterne Region in the borders of Arabia and Mesopotamia.

Of divers other testimonies of the land of Eden; and that this is the Eden of Paradife.

CHAP.2. $.10.

Nd for a more particular pointing out of this Eden, it seemes by the two Epistles of the Nestorian Christians, that inhabite Mesopotamia, which Epiftles in the yeere 1552. they fent to the Pope about the confirming of their Patriarch, and Andraes Massus hath published them, translated out of Syriac into Latine. By these Epistles (I say) it seemes we may have some farther light for the proofe of that, which we have said about the Region of Eden in those parts. For in them both there is mention of the Island of Eden in the River Tigris, or at least, Tigris in both these Epistles is called the River of Eden. This Illand, as Malius in his Praface to these Epistles faith, is commonly called Gozoria (as it were the Island, by an eminencie) It hath (saith he) tenne miles in circuit, and was 40 sometimes walled round about, which name of the Island Eden may (doubtlesse) remaine to this day; though in the rest of the Region so called this name be swallowed vp, with the fame of those flourishing Kingdomes of Mesopotamia, Assyria, Babylomia, and Chaldea. This Island of Eden hath up the River, and not farre beyond it, the Citie of Hasan-Cepha, otherwise Fortis Petra: below it, it hath Mosal or Mosel, from which (as in that which followeth it shall appeare out of Massius) it is not about twelue miles distant. Neither is it to trouble vs, that Mosal or Mosel by Marius Niger is remembred among the Cities higher vp Tigrie, in these wordes. Iuxta autem vi sura Tigrim, Civitates (unt Dorbeta prope Taurum montem, quanunc Mofel dicitur : magna (ane, &c. (that is) By Tigris are thefe Cities, Dorbeta neere vato mount Taurus (which is now called Mosel) which is a great one, or. This opinion of Niger, displacing Mosel, and making it to be Dorbeta (I say) needes not here to trouble vs : seeing for this matter, the testimonie of Massius informed by the Christians that dwelt there (the Seat of whose Patriarchitis) ought to be of credit, auowing that this Mosal (or Mozal) is in the confines of Melopetamia and Affria, seated vpon Tigris, and in the neighbourhood of Niniue; and that it is the famous Seleucia Parthorum. The Nestorian Christians in their former Epistle, call it Attur in these words: Ex omnibus Ciustatibus & pagis qua sunt circum Ciuitatem Mozal (hocess) Attur in vicinia Niniues; Of all the Cities and townes which are about the Citie of Mozal (that is) Attur in the neighbourhood of Niniue. As also Niger acknowledgeth Ctessphon, a Citie thereabout to be called Assume. As also Niger acknowledgeth Ctessphon, a Citie thereabout to be called Assume (which is the same as Attur, after the Dialest of those Nations, which change Sh into T.) Neither is it much that he should mistake Ctessphon (which is not farre off Seleucia) for Seleucia, to be Assume that he should mistake Ctessphon (which is not farre off Seleucia) for Seleucia, to be Assume that he nould mistake Ctessphon (which is not farre off Seleucia) for Seleucia, and that ancient Citie, which Ptolomic and Tacitus call Ninus, so and the Scriptures Nineue, Philostratus, and Simeon Seshi, Mosala, and John Lean Mosal, others Mosse, (though it bee not the same with Mosal) is set but a little higher vpon the same river of Tigris, neere Mosal: so that wee are like to finde this Ile of Eden here-about. For the same Andraes Massus, which placeth it aboue Mosal, makes it to be belowe Hasan chepha, which is vpon the same river of Tigris.

CHAP.2. $.10.

The first Booke of the first part

The onely difficultie is this, that some perhaps may thinke, that the words of the Nestorians in both their Epistles, speake not of any Ile in Tigris, called the Ile of Eden, but of an Ile in Tigris, a river of Eden. But this sense of their words in my opinion seemeth the more vnprobable. And yet if this were the meaning heere, we have a testimonie from the learned of those parts, that not onely Euphrates, but also Tigris was 20 a river of Eden, and that the name of Eden in those parts is not yet quite worne out, though the Region hath beene subject to the same change, that all other kingdomes of the world have beene, and hath by conquest, and corruption of other languages, received new and differing names. For the South part of Eden, which stretcheth over Euphrates, was after the floud called Shinar, and then of the tower of Babel, Babyloma; and the North part of Eden is that Tract of Mesopotamia, Assyria, and Armenia, which embraceth both the banks of Tigris, betweene Mount Tanrus, and Seleucia. And of this Region of Eden that ancient ETHICVS maketh mention, ( not that latter Ethicus, disciple of Callinicus, otherwise by Plutarch and ATHENEVS called ISTRI, who lived in Agypt in the reigne of PHILADEL- 30 PHVs, but another of a farre higher and remotetime) the same being made Latine out of Greeke by S. HIEROME. And though by corruption of the ancient copie it bee written in ETHICUS, Adonis for Edenis; yet Adonis being a river of Phanicia, cannot be vnderstood to beethe Region named by ETHICVS. For ETHIcys makes it a Countrie, and not a river, and ioyneth it with Mesopotamia and Athiopia, calling the land of C HV s Ethiopia, after the Vulgar, and Septuagint. And lastly, the River which watereth the Regions (layth ETHICVS) falleth into the Gulfe of Persia: which River hee calleth Armodius, for Tigris; Tigris being but a name imposed for the swiftnesse thereof. And out of Armenia both Tigris and Esphrates have their originall: for out of Eden came a river, or rivers, to water the Gar- 40 den, both which Rivers (to wit) Tigris and Euphrates, come out of Armenia, and both of them trauerse Mesopotamia, Regions sirst of all knowne by the name of Eden for their beautie and fertilitie. And it is very probable, that Eden contained also some part of Armenia, and the excellent fertilitie thereof in divers places, is not vnworthie the name of Eden. For in some part thereof ( fayth STRABO) the leaves are alwayes greene, and therefore therein a perpetuall Spring. Also STEPHANVS de urbibus mentioneth the Citie of Adama upon Euphrates: and the name of Eden was in vie in Amos time, though he speake not of Eden in the East, but of Eden in Calesyria. But to the end I may not burden the Readers patience with too long a discourse, it may suffice to know, that Euphrates and Tigris (once loyned together, and so afterward separate) are two of those foure heads, into which these Rivers which are faid to water the Garden of Paradife, were divided: whose courses being knowne, Eden, (out of which they are said to come) cannot be vnknowne. Now that Hiddekel and Perath were Tigru and Euphrates, it is agreed by all: for the Seuentie and all others convert Perath by Euphrates: & Hiddekel Tigrim omnes exponunt : and all men understand Hiddekel by Tigris (fayth VATABLE.) And because that which I have favd of the Ile of Eden, shall not bee subject to the censure of selfe-invention, I have heere-vnder fet downe the words out of the two generall Epiftles of the Nestorians. as Masius (adverbum) hath converted them into Litine. The occasion of those Letters and Supplications to the Pope were, that the Nestorian Christians which inhabit Melopotamia, Alfyria, Perlia, and Babylonia, and have to this day (at least in Queene Maries time they had) fifteene Churches in one Citie, called Seleucia Parthorum, or Mosel vpon the River of Tigris, having no sufficient authoritie to choose themselves a Patriarch (which cannot be done without foure or three Metropolitane Bishops at least) sent to the Bishop of Romein the yeere of Christ 1552. (as aforesaid) a Petition to obtaine allowance vnto fuch an election as themselves had made : having three hundred yeere before that vpon the like defect, fent one Marius thither to bee confirmed; and in this negotiation they made knowne to the Bilhop of Rome the state of the Christian Church in those parts : for vpon the death of their Patriarch (who of a couetous defire to enrich himselfe had forborne to institute Metropolitane Bishops, when the places fell void) they all affembled themselves together to consult of the Church-government. And because all the Patriarchs for 100, yeares had been of one house and family to the prejudice of the Church, and that there yet remai-20 ned one Bishop of the same Stocke and Kindred, who aspired to the same dignitio, which his Predecessours had held, the rest of the Professours refused to allow him. Vpon which occasion, and for the choice of a Governour more sufficient, the Teachers in all the Churches affembled themselves. The words of the generall Epistle to the Pope are these, about the middle of the said Epistle: Verum nos non acceptanimus neg, proclamauimus ipsum, sed subitò conuenimus ex omnibus locis Orientalibus, & ex omnibus Ciuitatibus & Pagis qua sunt circum Ciuitatem Mosel (bocest) Attur, in victnia Niniues, ex Babylonia, ex Charrha, ex Arbella, ex Infula qua est in medio Tigris, fluminis Eden, ex Tauris Persia, ex Nisibi, &c. which is: But wee did neyther accept of this man, neyther pronounced him: but suddenly we affembled our selves out of all parts of the 30 East, and out of all the Cities and Villages which are about Mosel (or Attur) neighbouring Niniue, and out of Babylon, Carrha, Arbella, and out of the Iland which lyet bin the middle of Tigris, a River of Eden, or rather, out of the Ile of Eden, which lyeth in the River Tigru. And in a fecond Epistle at the sametime sent, they vie these words: Neg, superfunt apud nos Metropolita, quorum est ordinare Catholicum, sed (oli pauct Episcopi, Episcopus Arbela, Episcopus Salmasti, Episcopus Adurbeigan; en e vestigio concenimus in Insulam, que est intra Tierim stumen. Eden, fecimulá, compactum inter nos, &c. (which is) Neither are there remaining among us any Metropolitan Bishops to whom it belongs to ordaine a Patriarch, but onely a few Bishops, as the Bishop of Arbela, the Bishop of Salmasius, and the Bishop of Adurbeigan; but loe, we assembled speedily in the Iland Eden, which is in Ti-40 gris; and agreed betweene our felues, &c.

Now this Iland of Eden Masius describeth with other places; which being well conceived, the Nestorian Epistles, and the state of the Church may bee in those parts (sayth he) the better understood. And after hee hath distinguished the source forts of Christians in those parts of the World, and in the South part of Africa, which hee calleth Nestorians, Iacobites, Maronita, and Cophti, hee goeth on in these wordes: Mos, auditaillius morte, concurrisse aiebant tumultuario in illam quam modo dixi Tigris Insulam, que duodecim circiter passum millibus supra Mosal posita, decem sere millia passum subitative continct, muris undis cinita, & a paucie alis quam Christianis hominibus habitative which is, Now hearing of the death of the Patriarch, (as those that came to Rome.)

50 reported) they ran tumultuoully together into that Iland of Tigris or Eden before spoken of, which Iland is situated about 12. miles about Mosel, containing very necre ten miles in compasse, and enery where inurroned with a wall, inhabited by a few other men than Christians. And afterward he maketh a recapitulation of the Christian Churches; among the rest he addeth the Isle of Eden by the name of Geserta, Insula Tigris: sive Geserta.

Laurner-

Furthermore, describing the Citie of Hosan-cepha, or Fortis Petra, he placeth it supra pradictam Tigris Insulam rupi aspera impositam; About the foresaid Iland of Tigris, being feated on a freeperocke. Of this Iland of Geferta, Andrew Theuet maketh mention in his tenth booke of his generall Cosmographie in these wordes : Geserta ou Gestre est an milieu de la riuiere du Tigre, & pense que c'est une terre des plus fertiles de toute l'Asie; Ge-Certaor Gesire is in the middle of Tigris, the soile the most fertile of all Asia.

By this we see that the ancient name of Eden liveth, and of that Eden, which lyeth Eastward from Arabia Petraa, and the Defart where Moses wrote, and that Eden which bordereth Charran according to Exechiel, and that Eden which is feated according to the affertion of the said Prophet, and joyned with those Nations of Re- 10 feph, Canneh, and Charran, and the rest which traded with the Tyrians, and is found at this day in the parting of the two Regions of Assyria and Babylonia, where the Edenites in Thelassar were garrisond to resist the Assyrians, whose displantation Senacherib vaunted of (as aboue written) and lastly, the same Eden, which embraceth Tigris, and looketh on Euphrates, two of the knowne Rivers of those foure, which are by all men ascribed to Paradiso.

ò. XI.

Of the difficultie in the Text, which seemeth to make the foure Rivers to rife from one streame.

>> Vtit may be objected, that it is written in the Text, That a River went out of Eden, and not Rivers, in the Plurall, which scruple Matthew Beroaldus hath thus answered in his Chronologie : The Latine Translation (saith he) hath these wordes: Et fluuius egrediebatur de loco voluptatis ad irrigandum Paradisum, qui inde dinidebatur in quatuor capita:

Que verba melius consentient cum reinarratione, & eius dem explicatione, si itareddantur. Et fluuius erat egrediens ex Edene, (hoc est) fluuy procedebant ex Edene regione ad rigandum pomarium, o inde dividebatur, o eral in quatuor capita: which is, And a River went 30 out of the place of pleasure to water Paradife, and thence was divided into four heads: which wordes (faith Beroaldue) doe better agree with the narration and explication of the place, if they be thus translated: And a River was going forth of Eden (that is) Rivers went forth, and ran out of the Region of Eden to water the Orchard, and from thence it was divided, and they became foure heads. The Tigurine differs from the Vulgar or Latine, for it converts it thus: Et fluuius egrediebatur de delicijs; And a River went out of pleasure, in stead of Eden; and the Latine addeth the word locus, or place, Et flusius egredichatur de loco voluptatis; Anda River went out of the place of pleasure: and so the word (place) may rightly be referred to Eden, which was (of all other) a Region most delightfull and fertile; and so also the word (inde) and thence was divided, hath reference to the 40 Countrie of Eden, and not to the Garden it selfe.

And for the word (Rever) for Rivers, it is vsuall among the Hebrewes: for it is written: Let the earth bud forth the bud of the herbe, that feedeth feede, the fruitfull tree, &c. Here the Hebrew vieth the Singular for the Plurall, Herbe and Tree, for Herbs and Trees; and againe, we eate of the fruit of the tree, in stead of (trees:) And thirdly, The man and his wife hid themselves from the presence of God : In medioligni Paradisi : In the middle of the tree of the Garden, for (trees.) And of this opinion is Dauid Kimhi, and Vatablus, who vpon this place of Genesis say, that the Hebrewes doe often put the Singular for the Plurall, as illud, for vnumquodg, illorum, and he giveth an instance in this question it selfe, as, A River (for Rivers) went out of Eden.

And this answere out of divers of the learned, may, not without good reason, be giuen to the obiection, That Moles speaketh but of one River, from which the heads should divide themselves. Howbeit I denie not, but with as good (and perhaps better) reason, we may expound the source heads, to be source notable passages into sa-mous Countries. And so we may take the word (River) Verse the tenth for one Riwer (to wit) Euphrates, as this name comprehendeth all the branches thereof. For this River, after he is past the place, where we suppose Paradife to have beene, divides it selfe, and ere long yeeldeth foure notable passages into seuerall Countries, though not all the way downe streame, (for this is no wherein the Text) where it is noted. that following the River downward, there is conveyance into the Countries named in the Text, though part of the way to one of the Countries (to wit, to Affyria)

To this end the Text speaking of Hiddekel, as it riseth from the River of Eden. doth not fay it compasseth or washeth the whole Region of Assyria, (as it had vsed this phrase of Pilon and Gehon) but that it runneth toward Assyria. The first branch Pilon, is Nahar-malcha, (by interpretation) Bahlus, or flumen regium, which runneth into Tieris vnder Apamia, whence ariseth the name of Pasi-tieris, (as it were) Piso-tigris. This leadeth to the Land of Hauila or Sustana. The second branch Gehon . is that which in Historians is Nabarfares, or Narragas, for Nabar-ragas: both which names signifie flumen derinatum (a River derived) also Acracanus, quasi Ranosus, by reason of the froggie Fennes which it maketh : this Gehon leadeth to the first leate of Chus, about the borders of Chalden and Arabia, and it is lost at length in the Lakes of Chaldea. The third branch, Hiddekel, may be expounded the voper freame of Pi-20 fon, or Basilius, which runneth into Hiddekel properly so called (that is, into Tigris) aboue Seleucia, where it sheweth a passage up ligris into Assiria: where, because at length it is called Hiddekel, or Tigris, having before no knowne proper name, the Text in this place calleth it Hiddekel from the beginning. The fourth Perath or Euphrates, so called per excellentiam, being the body of the River Euphrates, which runneth through Babylon and Otris. But, be it a River or Rivers, that come out of Eden, feeing that Tigris and Euphrates are noted in the Text, there can be no doubt, but that Paradife was not farre from these Rivers : for that Perath in Mofes is Euphrates, there can be no question; and (indeede) as plaine it is that Hiddekel is Tigris. For Hiddekel goeth (faith Moses) Eastwards towards Assur, as we finde. that Tigits is the River of 30 Affria proprie dicta, whose chiefe Citie was Niniue, as in Genesis the tenth it is written: That out of that Land (to wit) Babylonia, Nimrod went into Assur, and builded Niniue, which was the chiefe Citie of Affyria.

And as for the kinde of speech here vsed in the Text, speaking of source heads; though the heads of Rivers be (properly) their Fountaynes, yet here are they to be understood, to be spoken of the beginning of their division from the first streame. Caput aque (faith VLPIANVS) illudelt, unde aqua nascitur; siex fonte nascatur fons; fi ex flamine, velex lacu prima initia, &c. If the beginning of the water be out of a Fountarne, then is the Fountarne taken for the head : if out of a Lake, then the Lake ; and if from a maine River any branch be separate and divided, then where that branch doth first 40 bound it felle with new bankes, there is that part of the River, where the branch for-faketh the mayne streame, called the head of the River.

T may also be demanded, whether this Region of Eden, by vs described, be of such fertilitie and beautie, as Eden the seate of Paradise was: which if it be denyed, then must we also consider, that there was no part of the earth, that retayned that fertilitie and pleasure, that it had before the curse: neither can we ascribe the same fruitfulnesse to any beforethe floud; and therefore this Region of Eden may be now no such flourishing Countrie, as it was when it was first created in his perfection. Yet this I finde Herod. Clia. I.t. written of it: First in Herodottes, who was an eye-witnesse, and speaketh of the very place it selfe, for the Ile of Eden is but twelve miles or thereabout from Ninine, and so from Mosal. Ex Euphrate exiens in Tigrim, alterum flumen, iuxta qued Vrbs Ninus staerat, Hacregio, omnium quas nos vidimus, optima est, Gc. Where Euphrates runneth out into Tigris, not farre from the place where Ninus is feated, This Region, of all that we haue feene, is most excellent; and he addeth afterward : Cereris autem fructu procreando adeo ferax est, ut nunquam non fere ducentareddit, &c. (that is) It is fo fruitfull in bringing forth Corne, that it yeeldeth two hundred fold : The leaves of Wheate and Barley being to almost foure fingers broade: As for the height of Millet and Sesame, they are even in length like unto trees, which although I know to be true, yet I forbeare to fpeake hereof, well knowing that those things which are reported of this fruitfulnesse, will seeme very incredible to those, which never were in the Countrie of Babylon. They have commonly in all the Countrie Palme-trees growing of their owne accord, the most of them bearing fruit, out of which they make both meates, and wine, and honny, ordering them as the Fig-trees. Thus farre

To this Palme-tree so much admired in the East India, Strabo and Niger adde a fourth excellencie, which is, that it yeeldeth bread; Ex quibus panem, & mel, & vinum, & acetum conficiunt; Of which these people make bread, wine, honny, and vineger. But 20 Antonius the Eremite findeth a fist commoditie, not inferior to any of those foure, which is, that from this selfe-same Tree there is drawne a kind of fine flaxe, of which people make their garments, and with which in East India they prepare the cordage for their ships; and that this is true, Athanasius in the life of Antonius the Eremite, confesseth, saying: That he received a garment made thereof from the Eremite himselfe, which be brought with him out of this Region. So therefore those Trees, which the East Indies so highly esteeme and so much admire (as indeede the Earth yeeldeth no plant comparable to this) those Trees (I say) are in this upper Babylon, or Region of Eden, as common as any Trees of the field. Sunt etiam (faith STRABO) paßim per omnem regionem Palma sua sponte nascentes; There are of Palmes ouer all the whole Region, grow-30 ing of their owne accord. Of this place Quintus Curtius maketh this report : Euntibus à parteleua Arabia odorum fertilitate nobilis, regio campestris interest inter Tigrim & Euphratem, iacens tam obere & pingui solo, ot à pastu repelli pecora dicantur, ne satiet as perimat; (that is) As you transile on the left hand of Arabia (famous for plentie of (weet odors) there lyeth a Champaine Countrie placed betweene Tigris and Euphrates, and fo fruitfull and fat a foile, that they are faid to drive their Cattell from the pasture, lest they should perifiby fatietie. Bis in anno fegetes Babylonii fecant; The Babylonians cut their Corne twice a geere (faith Niger.) And as Countries generally are more fruitfull to the Southward, then in the Northern parts: so we may judge the excellencie of this by that report which Strabo maketh of the South part of Armenia, which is the North border 40 of Eden, or a part thereof; his wordes be these in the Latine: Tota enim hecregio fingibus & arboribus abundat mansuetis, itema, semper virentibus; Thu Region aboundetb with pleasant fruits, and trees, alwaies greene: which witnesseth a perpetuall Spring, not found elsewhere but in the Indies only, by reason of the Sunnes neighbourhood, the life and stirrer vp of nature in a perpetuallactivitie. In briefe, so great is the fertilitie of the ground, that the people are constrayned twice to mow downe their Cornefields, and a third time to eate them vp with sheep: which husbandrie the Spaniarus wanting in the Valley of Mexico, for the first fortie yeeres, could not make our kind of Wheat beare feede, but it grew vp as high as the trees, and was fruitleffe. Besides, those fields are altogether without weedes (saith Plinie) who addeth this singulari- so tie to that foile, That the second yeere the very stubble (or rather falling downe of the seedes againe) yeeldeth them a haruest of Corne without any further labour : his wordes are these: Vbertatis tanta funt, vt sequentianno sponte restibilis siat seges.

Frer the discouerie of Eden, and the testimonies of the sertilitie thereof, it resteth to proue that Pison and Gehon are branches of Tieris. and Euphrates. For that the knowledge and certaintie of these two Rivers should trouble so many wise men, it is strange to me, seeing necessitie it felfe (Tigris and Euphrates being knowne) findeth them out : for Eu-

10 phrates or Tigris, or both be that river or rivers of Eden, which water Paradife, which river or rivers Moles witnesseth afterward, divided into foure heads, whereof the one is called Pifon, the other Gehon, &c. Could there be a stranger fancie in the world, then when we finde both these (namely) Tigris and Euphrates in Asyria and Mesopotamia, to feeke the other two in India and Agypt, making the one Ganges, and the other Nilus? Two Rivers as farre distant, as any of fame knowne or discouered in the world: the Scriptures making it so plaine, that these Rivers were divided into foure branches, and with the Scriptures, Nature, Reason and Experience bearing witnesse. There is no errour, which hath not some slipperie and bad foundation, or some apparance of probabilitie, refembling truth, which when men (who studie to be singu-20 lar) finde out, (straining reason according to their fancies) they then publish to the world matter of contention, and jangling: not doubting but in the variable deformitie of mens mindes, to find some partakers or sectatours, the better by their helpe to nurse and cherith such weake babes, as their owne inventions have begotten.

But this mistaking (and first for the river of Pifon) seemeth to have growne out of the not-distinguishing of that Region in India, called Hauilah, from Hauilah, which adioyneth to Babylonia, afterward knowne by the name of Susiana. For Hauilah vpon Tieris tooke name from Hauilah the sonne of Culh; and Hauilah in India, from Hauilab the sonne of Iostan, the one remembred by Moses in the description of Paradife, Gen. 10.7: the other where Moles fetteth downe the generations of Noch, and his fonnes after 30 the floud. For the sonnes of Cush were Seba, Hauilah, Sabrah, and Raamah, and the sonnes of lottan were Ophir, and Hanilah, &c. of which latter ( to wit ) of Ophir and Havilah the sonnes of loctan, that Iland of Ophir, (whence Salomon had gold) and Hauilah adioyning had their names. Now because Ganges is a great and a famous River of the East India, and Hanilah a Countrey of the same, and is situated vpon Ganges, hence it came that Ganges was taken for Pifon, which River is faid by Mofes to water the land of Hauslah. Or perhaps it was supposed that those source Rivers, named by Moles, must of necessitie be source of the greatest in the world; whence ( supposing that Ganges was the next great and famous river after Tigris & Euphrates) they chose out this River to make one of the foure. And yet certainely there is another River. 40 whom in these respects they should rather have chosen then Ganges; for the River Indus on this side India, for beautie, for neernesse, & for abilitie, giveth no way place to Ginges, but exceedeth it in all. And how can any reasonable man conceive, that Ganges can be one of the foure heads, seeing Indus commeth betweene it and Tigris? and betweene Tigris and Indusis all that large Empire of Persia, consisting of many Kingdomes. And againe, farther toward the East, and beyond Indus, are all those ample Dominions of Indiaintra Gangem, which lie betweene those two proud Rivers of Indus and Ganges, now called the Kingdome of Mogor. So as if Indus bee not accounted for any of the foure, because it is removed from Tigris by all the breadth of Persia, then how much lesse Ganges, which falleth into the Ocean, little lesse then 50 fortie degrees to the Eastward of Indus? Surely who soeuer readeth the Storie of Alexander, shall finde, that there is no river in Afia, that can exceede Indus. For Hydaf-

Pis was of that breadth and depth, as Alexander thereon in great Gallies transported himselfe, and the greatest part of his armie, and in sayling down that branch of Indus, found it so large and deepe, and by reason thereof so great a billow, as it endangered his whole Fleete, which was ready to bee swallowed vp therein: Hydaspis (as afore-said) being but one of many branches of Indus, comparable to it, and as great as it, having besides this, the Rivers of Coas, of Saastus, Accsines, Adris, (otherwise Hirosis, Hispasis, and Zaradrus, all which make but one Indus, and by it are swallowed vp with all their children and companions, which being all incorporate and made one streame, it crosses that havart Asia, and then at Cambaia visiteth the Ocean Sea.

But because Pison, which compassed Hanilah, as also Gehon, which watereth Cash, must some where be in yeard with the rest in one body, or at least be found to proceed out of the same Country of Eden, out of which the other two heads doe proceede, out of doubt they cannot either the one or the other, bee Ganges, or Nilus: for 10 Nilus rieth in the vitermost of the South, and runneth Northward into the Mediterran Sea; and the River Ganges riseth out of the mountaine Imaus, or (as others will have it) Concassed, which divides the Northerne Seythia from India, and runneth from North to South into the Indian Ocean. And as for Perath and Fliddekel (that is, Euphrates and Tigris) the one of them is begotten in Armenia, neere Gaorgians or theria, the other not sarre off in the same Armenia, by the Gordiaan mountaines, so as Ganges, who onely travaileth in her owne India, and Nilus through Athiopia and Azypt, never saw the land of Eden, or invined themselves in one Channell, either with themselves, or with either of the other; and therefore could not at any time from thence bee separated, or divided into source heads or branches, according to 20 Moses.

Sen. 2. 2. 12.

Therefore the River Pifon, which enricheth Hauilah, is the same which by iovning it selfe with Tigris, was therefore called Pisi-tigris, or Piso-tigris, of Pison and Tigris, which River watereth that Hauilah, which Hauilah the sonne of Cush gave name vnto, and not Hauilah of India, so called of Hauilah the sonne of lottan, who inhabited with his brother Ophir in the East. And this Hauilah of the Cushites hath alfo Gold, Bdellium, and the Onyx stone. This Bdellium is a tree, of the bignesse, of an Olive, whereof Arabia hath great plenty, which yeeldeth a certaine gumme, fweete to fmell to, but bitter in tafte, called also Bdellium. The Hebrewes take the Load-stone for Bdellium. Beroaldus affirmeth, that Bdela in Hebrew signisieth 30 Pearle: so doth Eugabinus; and Hierome calls it Oleaster: beit what it will, a tree bearing gumme, or Pearle: Hauilah, or Susiana hath plenty of both. Now this Countrey of Susiana or Hauslah stretchethit selfe toward the North, as farre as the Altars of Hercules, and from thence imbraceth all that Tract of land Southward, as farre as the Persian Gulfe, on the East side thereof: from which East side had the Shebans (which traded with the Citie of Tyre, according to Ezekiel) their great plenty of gold, which Strabo also witnesseth, as was shewed before.

Steuch. Hopk.de Par.

The Greekes had a conceit, that Pison was Danubius: the Rabbines take it for Wilus, Aben-ezra (layth Hopkins) out of Rabbi Sandia translateth Pilon into Nilus: But Nilus findeth the same impossibility that Ganges doth: and Danubius hath the 40 Sea of Hellespont and all Asia the lesse, betweene it and Tigria. Now Pison, which runneth through Hauilah or Susiana, doth to this day retaine some signe of this name; for where it and Tigris embrace each other under the Citie of Apamia, there doe they agree of a joynt and compounded name, and are called Pifo tigris. And it is strange vnto me, that from so great antiquitie there should bee found remaining any resembling sound of the first name: for Babylon it selfe, which dwelleth so neere these rivers, is by some writers knowne by the name of Bandas, as, by Postellus, by Castaldus, of Baldach : by Barius, of Bagdad ; and of Boughedor, by Andrew Theues; and yet all those that have lately seene it, call it Bagdet. To this river of Pifon, Ptolomie indeed with many others give the name of Basilius, or Regius, and Gehon they terme 50 Mahar-fares and Marsias, and Baar fares. So is Euphrates, neere the Spring and fountaine, by Straboand Plinie called Pixirates: by Junius, Puckperah, out of the Hebrew, (that is) The profusion, or comming forth of Emphrates: where it breaketh through the mountaine Taurus, it takes the name of Omyra. Platarch calls it Media and Zaranda: the Hebrewes Parath, (layth Ar. Montanus:) Pagninus, Perath: Iofephus, Phorah; Eulebius, Zozimus: Ammianus, Chalymicus: Giftilanus, and Colinutius terme it Cobar: which Exechiel calleth Chebar; but this is but a branch of Euphrates. The Asyrians know it by the name of Armalchar, or Nahor Malcha: but now commonly it is called Frat.

The same confusion of names hath Tigris, as Diglito, and Diglath, Seilax, and Sollax: of the Hebrewes it was called Hiddikel: now of the inhabitants Tegil.

But Mercer vpon Genesis conceiueth rightly of these rivers: for Euphrates and Tigris (sayth he) streame into source branches, two of which keepe their ancient names, and the other two are called Pison and Gehon. The reason, why these two rivers ioyned in one (below Apania) lose their names, and are called Pistigris, and the memorie of Euphrates stringuished, is, because the best part of Euphrates running through the channell of Gehon, sinketh into the Lakes of Chaldea, not surre from Vr, the Citic of Abraham, and fall not intirely into the Persian Sea, as Tigris accompanied with Pison doth.

This errour that Pison was Ganges, was first broched by Iosephus, ( whose fieldes, though they be fertile, yet are they exceeding full of weedes) and other men (who take his authoritie to be sufficient in matter of description, whereupon depended no other important consequence) were not curious in the examination thereof. For 20 Epiphanius, Augustine, and Hierome, take this for currant; whereof it followed, that as Pilon was transported into the East India, to find out Hanilah: so was Gehon drawne into Africa, to compasse Athiopia. But if Hauilah, whereof Muses speaketh in the description of Paradise, be found to be a Region, adioining to Babylen on the one side, and Cush (which is fallly interpreted Athiopia) fastened to it on the other side, wee shall not neede then to worke wonders (that is) to impose vpon men the transportation of rivers, from one end of the world to the other, which (among other vses) were made to transport men. Now it was in the valley of shinar, where Cush the sonne of Ham first sate downe with his sonnes Shebah, Hauilah, Sabtah, Raamah, Nimrod, &c. and of Hauilah, the sonne of Cush, did that Region take name, which Pison 30 compasseth; and the land (called Cush) which Gehon watereth, tooke name of Cush himselfe. For as the sonnes of loctan, Ophir and Hauilah, seated themselues as neere together as they could in India, so did the sonnes of Cush in Shinar or Babylonia, where Nimrod built Babel: for Hauilah or Chauilah was first Chusea of Cush; then Chufa, Sufa, and Sufianz.

From this Hauilah vnto the Desarts of Sur, did the Israelites and Amslechites possessed and the interiacent Countries: for Saul smote the Amalechites from Hauilah to Sur; which Sur, the Chaldean Paraphrast converteth Hagra, and Hagra bordereth the red Sea; but this was not meant from Sur vpon the red Sea; to Hauilah in the East india, for Saul was no such travailer or Conquerour, and therefore Hauilah must be found neerer home, where the sonnes of Ismael inhabited, and which Countrie Saul was to Amalek and the Amalechites posses that necke of Countrie, between the Persian Sea, and thered Sea; Hauilah being the extreme of the one towardes the East, and Sur of the other, towards Egyps and the West, leaving that great body of Arabia selix towards the South, and they spred themselves with the Midianites and Edumeans, from the East part, or backe side of the Holle Land, to the bankes of

Of the River Gehon and the Land of Cush: and of the ill translating of the Æthiopia for Cush, 2. CHRON. 21. 16.

Ow, as Hauilah in the East India drew Pison so farreout of his way this ther, so I say did Cush (being by the Seventie translated Athopea) force Gehon into Africa. For Culh being taken for Athiopia by the Greekes, whom the Latines followed, Gehon consequently was esteemed for Nilus. But Ethiopians are, as much, as blacke or burnt faces, whole proper to

Sec more of this point, c.7. § 10.

Countrie is called Thebaides, lying to the Southward of all Agypt. And although there be many other Regions of Ethiopians, and far South in Africa, yet those of Thebaides are those so often remembred in the Agyptian stories, and out of which Nation they had many times their Kings of Agypt: all which Athopians are very neere, or else directly under the Equinoctiall line, which is very farre from that land inhabited by the Chusties; who are neither blacke of colour, nor in any fort neighbouring Torrida Zona. But this Translation of the Septuagint, Pererius doth qualifie in this manner: There are (faith he) two Athiopin's, the East, and the West: and this division he findeth in Strabo, out of Homer. Now because there is no colour to make Chulb Athiopia in Africa, Pererius will make Chulh and the Land of the Chulites 20 (which is Arabia Petras, and a part of Arabia the Happy, with the Region of Madian) to be the East Athiopia.

Now if it begranted, that Culb and the Land of the Chustes, be that Tract from Sur to Hauilah, according to the Scriptures: Habitauit I SMAEL ab Hauilah v/q, Sur, que respicit Egyptum introcuntibus Affrios; Ismael dwelt from Hauilah unto Sur, that is towards Agypt, as thou goest toward Assyria; The same sufficeth to prouethat Gehon cannot be Nilus, but a River which watereth Cush, and not Æthiopis. But this place of Scripture, Habitauit I s M A E L, &c. hath this sense: I/mael dwelt from Hauilah. which is the way of Assyria, or the Countrie bordering Assyria; and Sur, which lyethtoward £gypt, which is as much to say, as, The issues of Ismael (whereof there 30 were twelve Princes) whom God had promifed to make a great people, inhabited all those Regions betweenethe border of Agypt and Assyria. And that they were (according to the word of God) so increased and multiplyed, it well appeared, when Zearah the Chasite, which others call Tharantha, brought an Armie of ten hundred thousand against Asa King of Iuda. Which Armie came not out of Athiopia beyond Agypt; for that had beene a strange progresse for such a multitude, as ten hundred thousand, having so mightie a King as the King of Agypt, betweene Palaslina and Athiopia. But these were the Chusites, Amalechites, Madianites, Ismaelites, and Arabians. For it is written, that after Afa (strengthened by God) had defeated this world of an Armie, he in following his victorie tooke some of the Cities of King 40 Zearab round about, as Gerar. Now that Gerar is a Citie of the Æthiopians, it cannot Gen.10. v.11. be suspected: for these be the wordes of the Scripture disprouing it: And ABRA-HAM departed thence toward the South Countrie, and dwelt betweene Cadelh and Sur, and foiourned in Gerar : Now Sur is that part, vpon which Moses and the Israelites first set their feete after they passed the Red Sea, where the Amalechites in Rephidim set on them, supposing that they had beene wearie, and vnable to relist. Againe, in the storie of Ifaac it is written: Wherefore Is A A C went to ABIMELECH, and the Philifims unto Gerar: and I am fure Abimelech and the Philistims were no Athiopians. And lastly, Mofes himselfe, where he describeth the bounds of Canaan, hath these words: Then the border of the Canaanites was from Sydon, as thou commelt to Gerar: for Sydon was the 50 Frontier of Canaan towards the North, and Gerar by Gazah towards the South. But indeede, howsoeuer Pererius doth with an honest excuse salue his Translation of Chus for Ethiopia, yet it appeareth plainely, that the Septuagint and Infephus did altogether misvnderstand this place. And first, for Homers East and West Ethiopia, they are both found elsewhere. For Plinie in his fift Booke and eighth Chapter, citeth Homer for an Authour, of these two Athiopia's. But the East Athiopia is that which compasseth Nelses to the South of Agypt, and is the South border thereof; now a part of the Empire of the Aby fines, vnder Prefter John; And the West Athiopia is that, which ioyneth it felfe with the River Niger, which wee call Senega and Gambra: for thereabouts are these Athiopians called Perors, Daratites, with divers other names, which Plinie numbreth. But all these are in Africa, and beyond the Defarts Plinits of 8. thereof, fayth Plinie out of Homer, Agrippa, and Iuba; which Regions indeede (I meane that of Niger, and that of Prester Iohn, and the Troglodytes) lye due East and West. But as for Cush and the Region of the Ismaelites, &c. they are extended directly North from that Athiopia, which is beyond Agypt. Now, that Iofephus was exceeding groffe herein, it appeareth by that fiction, which hee hath of Moles when he served Pharao, in the warres against the Athiopians: for in that (to make Chus, ·Æthiopia) hee transporteth Madian by miracle oner the Red Sea, and beyond all Leypt, and fetteth it in Athiopia, as shall be shewed more at large in the Chapter of the Worlds Plantation. Againe, that Gehon was improperly translated Nilus, Pererius confesseth, and layeth it rather to the corruption of the Greeke Copie, than otherwife. And whereas the Septnagint have converted this place of the Prophet HIE-REMIE: And what hast thou now to doein the way of Agypt, to drinke the water of Ni- C.2. v.18. 20 lus? Quidtibi vis in via Ægypti, vt bibas aquam Gehon? to this saith PERERIVS, profesto Hebraice ibi non est vox Gehon, sed Sichor, que significat nigrum & turbidum: Truly (faith PERERIVS) the word Gehon in this place, is not found in the Hebrew, but Sichor, which significth blacke and troubled water. Furthermore, this is a manifest and vnanswerable argument, that Chus was ill takenfor Æthiopia. Moses married the Daughter of lethro, Prince and Priest of Madian, Exod. 2.21.3.1. whom both the Greeke and Latine call a Madianite, and not Athiopillam, as (with Iosephus.) The Geneua converts it, though it helpe it a little with a marginal note. Num. 12.1. Now it is without dispute, that Zipporah was of the Countrie of Madian, which is that part of Arabia Petraa, bordering the Red Sea, for it is written in the second of

Exodus, that Moses fled from PHARAO into the Landof Madian, and fate downe by a Well, Or. and againe, in the third of Exodus; When Moses kept the Speepe of IETHEO his father in law, Priest of Madian, &c. Indeed, these foure nations are every where mixt in the Scriptures, because they dwell confusedly together (to wit) the Madianites, the Ilmaelites, the Amalekites, and the Chalites, which were all in one generall word, Araby another, as in Gen. 37. v. 25. 27. & 28. that Io/eph was fold to the Ismaelites; and in the same Chapter, v. 26. it is written, that the Madianites fold Inseph to Putiphar, Pharao's Steward. The Geneuians, in a marginall note (to avoid this confounding of the Nations) say, that Moles wrote according to their opinion, who tooke the Madianites and Ismaelites to be all one. But Moles wrote not after any mans opinion, he wrote the truth, and these were all Arabians, and so in this very place it appeareth by their

merchandise, which they brought with them, when they bought Ieseph: for their Camels were loden with Spicery and Balme, and Myrrhe, which are the Trades of Gen. 27, 25. Arabia falix: from whence chiefly, and from the East India, all the World is served with Myrrhe and Frankincense; and their Spices they received from the East side of the Arabian Gulfe, as aforesaid. And in the 39. Chapter it is said: That Putiphar bought loseph of the Ismaelites, which the Chaldean Paraphrast in the same place calleth Arabians. Now, to make this the more manifest, it is written in the sixt of Indges, That when Israel had sowen, then came up the Madianites, and the Amalekites, and they of the East, and came vpon them: they of the East, were Arabians of the Defart;

so as where before in the buying of 10seph, the Madianites and the Ismaelites were confused, here the Madianites and Amalekites are made one Nation. For in the profecution of the Story of Gedeon, the Madianites only are named, as comprehending c.1. both Nations; and in the eight Chapter, v. 24. these Nations are all called Ismaelites,

C.8.V.24. Gen.16.12. and neyther Madianites nor Amalekites. As when Gedeon defired, that every man would give him the golden eare-rings, which they had taken after the victory against Zebah and Zalmunna, Kings of Arabia, amounting to 1700. shickles of gold, it is written : For they had golden eare-rings , because they were Ismaelites. And these Ismaelites were a great and valiant Nation, and euer in action of warre. Manus eius contraomnes, & manus omnium contra eum; His hand (fayth God of Is MAEL) shall bee against all men, and every mans hand against him. Of these Ismaelites came the Mahometan Arabians, though some Writers thinke Mahomet to be of the Schenita. And these Ifmatlites, which inhabit chiefly in Cedar, and the Defarts of Sur and Pharan (faith 10fephus) vsepoyson vpon their Arrowes, as the Indians doe. Towards the South-east are the 11 Madianites, and Chusites: and beyond them, towards the Defarts of Arabia, the Amalekites; and all are one Nation, and all Arabians.

Lastly, the ill translation of Æthiopia for Chu, is among other places, made most Chro. 2.C. 21.16. apparent, in the second of Chronicles, in these wordes: So the Lord stirred up against IEHORAM, the Spirit of the Philistines, and the Arabians, which confine the Athiopians, fo Hierome reades it : the Geneua translation bath it, which were besides the Ethiopians. Now, how farreit is off betweene the Philistines, and the Negro's, or the Ethiopians, e. uery man that looketh in a Map may judge. For the Philistines and Arabians doe mixe and ioyne with the Land of the Chustes, and are distant from Athropia about two and thirtie, or three and thirtie degrees, and therefore not their next Neighbours; but all Egypt, and the Defarts of Sur and Pharan, are between them. So as this place of the second of Chronicles, should have beene translated in these words: So the Lord firred up against IEH OR AM, the spirits of the Philistines, and the Arabians, which confine * Steuch. Eu- and border upon the Chusites, who indeed are their next Neighbours. * Nulla superes gub.in Gen.ca- dubitatio quin Æthiopia in Sacris literis sit Arabia propinqua; There remaineth no doubt (layth STEVCHIVS) but Eshiopia in the Scriptures, is taken for that Countrey, which toyneth to Arabia. Now may wethinke is it probable, or possible, that Moses could be eignorant of Wilm? No, he knew it, no living man fo well, and therefore would never have named Gehon, for Nilw, or Nilus for Gehon. Surely, if Mojes had meant Nelw, when he named? Gehon, he would have called the River (into which he was cast vpon Reeds, and preferued by God, working compassion in the Daughter of Pharao) a River of Egypt, wherein he was borne and bred, and wrought so many Miracles. Besides, the River of Nilus is often named in the Scriptures, but neuer by the name of Gehon. Andif Moses had told the Israelites, that Wilus had beene a River of Paradise, they might iustly haue thought, that hee had derided them: for they had lived there all dayes of their liues, and found no fuch Paradifeat all, nor any memory, or speech thereof; except wee shall beleeue the Paradise of Hesperides, where (fayth Plinie) there was no thing found in his time, but wild Olines in stead of golden Apples. But Mins is twice called Sichor, once in E/ay, and once in the Prophet Hieremie; and yet in those places it is not said to be a River of Ethiopia, but of Egypt. For in a word, the Ifraelites had ne uer any communion or affaires with the Atbiopians, nor any intelligence, or trade, beyond Egypt, to the South; but the Enemies which they had on the South, and East-parts, were these Nations of the Chusties, Philistines, Ifmaelites, Amalekites, and Madianites: who being often gouerned by many little Kings, or Reguli, were diffinguished in names, according to the Fathers and Heads of those Nations; but inone generall name were all Arabians. On the North-side of Canaan, they were afflisted with the Calesyrians, with the Magogians, Tubalines, and others their adherents; and thirdly within themselues, the Nations, which remained of the ancient Canaaniu, held the strongest Cities vpon the Sea-coast (as) Tyre, Sidon, Acon, Gaza, and manyo thers : yea, Hierusalem it selfe was with-held from Israel (from the dayes of Moses, euch vnto the time of Danid) by the lebusites.

That which now remaineth of most difficultie is, that it doth not appeare, that any part of Gehon watereth that part of Arabia the stonie, which the Chusites inhabited in the times of the Kings of Ifrael: and in this Defart it was that Matt. Beroaldus loft himselfe in seeking out Paradise: for hee was driven (to my vnderstanding) to create two Rivers, and call them Gehon, and Pifon; to the end that the one might water Chos, and the other Hauilah, for I finde none fuch in rerum natura, as hee hath described: by which Rivers hee also includeth within Paradise, even Arabiathe

And as he well proued that Pifon was not Ganges, nor Gehon, Wilus: So where to find them else-where it seemeth he knew not. Certainely this River of Gehon, which he maketh to fall into the Mediterran at Gaza, and whose Springs hee findeth farre East in Arabia, is but imaginary: for the Current by Gaza is but a small streame. rifing betweene it and the Red Sea, whose head from Gaza it selfe is little more then twentie English myles, as shall appeare hereafter. But questionlesse, hence it comes that many were mistaken. They all considered of the habitations of the Chusites as they were planted when the state of I/rael stood, and when it sourished, being then their neere Neighbours, and neuer looked backe to the first seates and plantation of CHVs. For after the Floud, CHVs and his children neuer rested, till they found the Valley of Shinar, in which, and neere which himselfe with his sonnes first inhabited. HAVILAH tooke the River-side of Tieris chiefly on the East, which after his owne name he called HAVILAH, (now Suliana: ) Raamah, and Sheba farther downethe o River, in the entrance of Arabia falix. NIMR OD feated himselfe in the best of the Valley, where he built Babel, whereof that Region had afterwards the name of Babylonia. CHVs himselfe and his brother MIZRAIM first kept vpon Gehon, which falleth into the Lakes of Chaldea, and in processe of time, and as their people increased, they drew themselves more Westerly towards the Red or Arabian Sea: from whence MIZRAIM pastonerinto Agyps, in which Tract the Chastes remained for many veeres after. Now because there could bee no such River found in Arabia the stonie, which they might entitle Gehon, they translated Chus Athiopia, and Gehon, Nilus. And if we doe examine this mistaking by example, wee shall the better perceive it as it was. For let vs suppose, that BRYTE, or whosever else that first peopled this o lland, had arrived vpon the River of Thames, and calling the lland after his name BRITANNIA, it might be faid that Thames or Tems was a river, that watered Britannia: and when afterwards in processe of time, the same BRVTE had also discouered and conquered Scotland, which he also entituled by the same name of Britannia, after-ages might conclude that Scotland was no part thereof, because the river of Tems is not found therein. Or let vs suppose that E v R O P A, the daughter of the King of Tyre in Phanicia, gaue the name to Europe, according to Herodottu, and that Herodotte 4: the first discouerers thereof arrived in the mouth of some river in Thrace, which then watered as much of Europe, as hee first discouered, shall wee in like fort resolue, that France, Spaine, and Italie, &c. are no parts of Europe, because that River is not found to in them, or any of them? In like manner was it faid by Moses in his description of Gehon, that it watered the whole land of Chus; but not the whole land which the Chastes should or might in future time conquer, people, and inhabit, seeing in afterages they became Lords of many Nations, and they might (perchance) have beene Masters in time, (as the Saracens which came of them were) of a great part of the world. For (though the Babylonian Empire, which tooke beginning in NIMROD the some of CHVs, consisted at the first but of soure Cities, (to wit) Babel, Erech, Acad, and Chalne, yet wee finde, that his Successours within a few yeares after commaunded all the whole worldin effect: and the fame of Babel confumed the memorie of Chusea. For of this Tower of Confusion did all that land take the name of Baby-50 lonia: and the greatnesse of that Empire sounded by NIMROD a yonger sonne, obscured the name and nation of his father CvsH in those parts, vntill they crept farther off, and in places not yet entituled, and farther from the Babylonian Empire, where the Chusites retained their names, which also they fastned to the Soile and Territorie by themselves afterwards inhabited and held. And we may not thinke, that C H v s or any of his could in haste creepe through those desart Regions, which the length of 130, yeares after the floud had (as it were) fortified with thickets, and permitted enery bush and briar, reede and tree to joyne themselves (as it were) into one maine body and Forrest. For if wee looke with judgement and reason into the worlds plantation, we shall finde, that every family seated themselves as necre together as possible they could; and though necessitie ensorced them, after they grew shall of people, to spread themselves, and creepe out of Sbinar or Babylonia, yet did full of people, to spread themselves, and creepe out of Sbinar or Babylonia, yet did full of people, to spread themselves, and creepe out of Sbinar or Babylonia, yet did full of people, to spread themselves, and creepe out of Sbinar or Babylonia, yet did full of people, to spread themselves, and creepe out of Sbinar or Babylonia, yet did full of people, to spread themselves, and creepe out of Sbinar or Babylonia, yet did full of people, to spread themselves, and successive themselves, and successive themselves, as that they might at all times refort, and successive they it with this aduice, as that they might at all times refort, and successive they on the fields being then (without all doubt) impassable. So N 1 M 2 D D, who out of wit and strength vsurped dominion over the reft, sate downein the very so on successive the successive theoremselves and strength vsurped dominion over the reft, sate downein the very so on successive the very so on successive the very so on the set of the very so on the

Now as NIMR OD the yongest, yet strongest, made his choice of Babel (as afore-said) which both Tigris and Euphrates cleansed and enriched; so did Havilah place himselse you prio-tigris: RAAMAH and his some SHEBA farther downe you the same, on the Sea-coast of Arabia: Chvs himselse you Gehon, the youther branch of Euphrates. And when they began to spread themselues farther off, 20 fairest branch of Euphrates. And when they began to spread themselues farther off, 20 yet they alwayes fastened themselues to the Rivers sides: for Niniue, Charran, Reseph, Canneb, Vr in Chaldea, and the other first-peopled Cities were all sounded you these Navigable Rivers, or their branches, by which the one might give succour and asserted.

d. XV. A conclusion by way of repetition of something spoken of befor.

VT now to conclude this dispute, it appeareth to mee by the testimonies of the Scriptures, that Paradise was a place created by God, and a part of this our Earth and habitable World, seated in the lower part of the Region of Eden, afterward called Aram sluviorum, or Mesopotamia, which taketh into it also a portion of Shinar and Armenia: this Region standing in the most excellent temper of all other, (to wit) 35. degrees from the £quinostiall, and 55. from the North-pole: in which Climate the most excellent Wines, Fruits, Oyle, Graine of all forts are to this day found in abundance. And there is nothing that better proueth the excellency of this sayd soyle and temper, then the abundant growing of the Palme-trees, without the care and labour of man. At the for wherein soeuer the Earth, Nature, and the Sunne can most vaunt, that they have excelled, yet shall this Plant be the greatest wonder of all their workes: this Tree have excelled, yet shall this Plant be the greatest wonder of all their workes: this Tree alone gineth vnto man whatsoeuer his life beggeth at Natures hand. And though it may bee said, that these Trees are found both in the East and West Indies, which Countries are also blessed with a perpetuall Spring and Summer, yet, lay downe by those pleasures and benefits the searefull and dangerous Thunders and Lightnings, the horrible and frequent Earthquakes, the dangerous diseases, the multitude of venimous beasts and wormes, with other inconveniences, and then there will be found no comparison betweene the one and the other.

What other excellencies this Garden of Paradife had, before God (for mans in 50 gratitude and crueltie) curfed the Earth, we cannot judge; but I may fafely thinke, that by how much Adam exceeded all living men in perfection, by being the immediate workemanship of God, by so much did that chosen and particular Garden exceed all parts of the Vniuerfall World, in which God had planted (that is) made to grow the Trees of Life, of Knowledge; Plants only proper, and becomming the Paradife, and Garden of so great a Lord.

The fumme of all this is, That whereas the eyes of men in this Scripture have beene dimme-fighted (some of them finding Paradife beyond our knowne World: some, aboue the middle Region of the Ayre: some, eleuated neere the Moone: others, as farre South as the Line, or as farre North, as the Pole, &c.) I hope that the Reader will be sufficiently satisfied, that these were but like Castles in the Ayre, and in mens fancies, vainly imagined. For it was Eastward in Eden (sayth Moses) Eastward in respect of Iudaa, that God planted this Garden, which Eden wee find in the 10. Prophets where it was, and whereof the name (in some part) remaineth to this day. A River went out of Eden to water this Garden, and from thence divided it selfe into foure branches; and we find that both Tigris and Euphrates swimming through Eden, doe ioyne in one, and afterward taking wayes apart, doe water Ches and Hauilah. according to Moles: the true seates of Chus and his Sonnes then being in the Valley of Shinar, in which Nimrod built Babel. That Pifon was Ganges, the Scripture, Reason, and experience teach the contrary: for that which was neuer ioyned, cannot bee divided, Ganges, which inhabiteth India, cannot bee a branch of the Rivers of Eden; That Gehon was Wilus, the same distance maketh the same impossibilitie, and this River is a greater stranger to Tigris and Euphrates, then Ganges is: for although there 20 are betweene Tigris and Ganges aboue foure thousand miles, yet they both rise in the same quarter of the World; but Nilus is begotten in the Mountaines of the Moone. almost as farre off as the Cape of good hope, and falleth into the Mediterran Sea: and Emphrates distilleth out of the Mountaines of Armenia, and falleth into the Gulfe of Persia: the one riseth in the South, and travaileth North: the other riseth in the North, and runneth South, threescore and three Degrees the one from the other. In this leafe following, I have added a Choregraphicall description of this terrestriall Paradise, that the Reader may thereby the better conceine the preceding Discourse; and this is the reward I looke for, that my labours may but receive an allowance suspended, vntill fuch time, as this description of mine be reproued by a better.

CHAP. IIII.

Of the two chiefe Trees in the Garden of Paradise.

That the Tree of Life was a materiall Tree; and in what sense it is to be taken. that man by his cating the forbidden fruit, is made sub. sect to death.

OR eating the forbidden fruit of the Trre of Knowledge was Adam driven out of Paradife, in exilium vita temporalis, into the banishment of temporal life, sayth Beda. That these Trees of Life and Knowledge were materiall Trees (though Figures of the Law and of the Gospell) it is not doubted by the most religious and 20 learned Writers: although the wits of men, which are so volatile, as nothing can fix them, and so slippery, as nothing can fasten them, have in this also delivered to the World an imaginarie doctrine.

The Tree of Life (fay the Hebrewes) hath a plurall construction, and is to be understood, Lignum vitarum, The Tree of lives, because the fruit thereof had a propertie, to preserue both the growing, sensitiue, and rationall life of man; and not only (but for Adams transgression) had prolonged his owne dayes, but also giuen a durefull continuance to all posteritie; and that, so long, as a

And although it is hard to thinke, that flesh and bloud could bee immortall, but that it must once perish and rot, by the vnchanged Law of God imposed on his creatures, Man (notwithstanding) should have enjoyed thereby a long, healthfull, and vngrieued life: after which (according to the opinion of most Diuines) hee should haue beene translated, as Enoch was. And as before the Floud, the dayes of men had the long measure of eight hundred or nine hundred yeeres; and soone after the floud, of two hundred yeeres and vpwards, euen to fine hundred: foif Adam had not difobeyed Gods first and easie Commandement, the lives of men on Earth might have continued double, treble, or quadruple to any of the longest times of the first age, as many learned men haue conceiued. Chrysoftome, Rupertus, Tostatus, and others were 40 of beliefe, that (but for Adams fall and transgression) Adam and his Posteritie had beene immortall. But such is the infinite wisedome of God, as he foresaw that the Earth could not have contained Mankind; or else, that Millions of soules must have beene vngenerated, and have had no being, if the first number, wherewith the Earth was replenished, had abode thereon for euer: and therefore that of Chrysoftome must bee understood of immortalitie of bodies, which should have beene translated and glorified.

But of what kind or Species this Tree of Life was, no man hath taken on him to teach: in which repect many have conceived, that the same was not materiall, but a meere Allegorie, taking their strength out of Salomon, where Wisedome is compared 50 to the Tree of Life, and from other places, where also Christ is called the Tree of Life, and out of the Apocalypsis, I will give to him that over commeth, to cate of the Tree of Life, which is in the Paradife of God. But to this place Saint Augustines answere may suffice, (which is) That the one doth not exclude the other, but that, as there was a terrestriall Paradise, so there was a celestiall. For although Agar and Sara were Figures of the Old, and New Testament, yet to thinke that they were not Women, and the Maid and Wife of Abraham, were meere foolishnesse. And so in this place the fense of the Scripture is manifest. For God brought out of the earth enery tree faire to light, and freet to taffe; the tree also of Life in the midft of the garden: which sheweth. that among the trees, which the Earth by Gods commandement produced, the tree of Life was one, and that the fruit thereof was also to be eaten. The report of this Tree was also brought to the ancient Poets: for as from the indigested matter or Chaos, Hesiodus, Homer, Ouid, and others, steale the invention of the created world; 10 so from the Garden of Paradise, they tooke the Plat-forme of the Orchard of Alcinous, and another of the Hefperides: and from the tree of Life, their Nettar and Ambroffa; for Nectar, according to Suidas, fignifieth making yong, and Ambrofia, immortalitie; and therefore said to be the meate and drinke of the gods.

Of BECANVS his opinion, that the Tree of Knowledge was Ficus Indica.

CHAP.4. S.2.

Ow for the Tree of Knowledge of good and euill, some men haue prefumed farther, especially Goropius Becanus, who giveth himselfe the honor to haue found out the kinde of this Tree, which none of the Writers of former times could euer ghesse at, whereat Goropius much maruaileth. But as he had an inuentine braine, so there neuer lived any man, that beleeued better thereof, and of himselfe. Surely, howsoeuer his opinion may be valued, yet he vsurpeth the praise due to others, at least if the invention be at that price at which he setteth it. For Moses Bar-cephas fastened on this consecture aboue fixe hundred veeres before Becanus was borne : and Bar-cephas himselfe referreth the invention to an antiquitie more remote, citing for his Author Philoxenus Maburgensis, and others, whose very wordes Goropius vieth, both concerning the Tree, and the reasons wherewith he would induce other men to that beliefe. For Moses Bar-cephas in his Treatise of Paradise (the first Part and fol. 49.) faith, That the Tree of Knowledge was Ficus Indica; The Indian Fig-tree, of which the greatest plentie (saith Becanus) are found vpon the bankes of scesines, one of the Rivers which falleth into Inam, where Alexander built his Fleet of Gallies in, or neere the Kingdome of Porus.

This Tree beareth a fruit of the bignesse of a great peaze, or (as Plinie reporteth) Plinia 1.6.5

somewhat bigger, and that it is a tree, se semper serens; Alwayes planting it selfe; that it spreadeth it selfe so farre abroade, as that a troupe of horsemen may hide themselues 40 vnderit. Strabo faith, that it hath branches bending downewards, and leaues no leffe Lib.1.cap.2. then a shield. Aristobulus affirmeth, that sistie horsemen may shaddow themselves vnder one of these trees. Onesieritus raiseth this number to foure hundred. This tree (faith Theophrasius) exceedeth all other in bignesse, which also Plinie and Onesicritus confirme: to the trunke of which, these Authors give such a magnitude, as I shame to repeate. But it may be, they all speake by an ill-vnderstood report. For this Indian Fig-tree is not fo rare a plant, as Becanus conceineth, who because he found it no where elfe, would needes draw the garden of Paradife to the Tree, and fet it by the River Acesines. But many parts of the world have them, and I my selfe have seene twentie thousand of them in one Valley, not farre from Paria in America. They 50 grow in moist grounds, and in this manner: After they are first shot up some twentie or thirtie foote in length (some more, some lesse, according to the soile) they spread a very large top, having no bough nor twigge in the trunke or stemme: for from the vtmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gunsmie inyce, which hangeth downe-ward like a cord or finew, and within a few Moneths reacheth the ground; which it no sooner toucheth but it taketh roote, and then being filled both from the top boughes, and from his owne proper roote, this cord maketh it selfe a Tree exceeding hastily. From the vtmost boughes of these yong Trees there fall againe the like cordes, which in one yeere and lesse (in that World of a perpetual) fpring) become also trees of the bignesse of the nether part of a lance, and as straight. as arte or nature can make any thing, casting such a shade, and making such a kinde of groue, as no other Tree in the world can doe. Now one of these trees considered with all his yong ones, may (indeede) shrowd foure hundred or foure thousand horsemen, if they please; for they couer whole Vallies of ground where these trees grow neere the Sea-banke, as they doe by thousands in the inner part of Trinidado. 13 The cordes which fall downe ouer the bankes into the Sea, shooting alway downeward to finde roote under water, are in those Seas of the Indies, where Oysters breed, intangled in their beds, so as by pulling vp one of these cordes out of the Sea, I haue scene fiue hundred Oysters hanging in a heape thereon; whereof the report came, that Oysters grew on trees in India. But that they beare any such huge leaves, or any such delicate fruit, I could neuer finde, and yet I have travailed a dozen miles together under them: but to returne to Goropius Becanus. This tree (faith he) was good for meate and pleasing to the fight, as the tree of Knowledge of good andeuill is described to be. Secondly, this tree having so huge a trunke ( as the former Authors report, and  ${\tt 20}$ Becamus beleeueth) it was in this tree that Adam and Eue hid themselves from the presence of God, for no other tree (saith he) could contayne them. But first it is certayne, that this Tree hath no extraordinarie magnitude, as touching the trunke or stemme, for among ten thousand of them it is hard to finde any one bigger then the rest, and these are all but of a meane size. Secondly, the wordes of Moles translated in medio ligni, are by all the interpreters understood in the plurall number (that is) in the middelt of the trees. But his third argument (or rather the argument of Moles Bar-cephas, word for word) is, That when Adam and Eue found themselues naked, they made them breeches of Fig-leaues; which proueth (indeede) that either the tree it selse was a Fig-tree, or that a Fig-tree grew neere it: because Adam being posses 30 with shame, did not runne vp and downe the garden to seeke out leaues to couer him, but found them in the place it selfe; and these leaves of all other were most commodious by reason of their largenesse, which Plinie auoweth in these wordes; Latitudo foliorum pelta effigiem Amazonia habet; The breadth of the leaves hath the shape of an Amazonian shield: which also Theophrast confirmeth; the forme of which Targets Virgil toucheth:

Virg. AEn. l. 1. 494.

Ducit Amazonidum lunatis agmina peltis PENTHESILÆA furens.

The Amazons with Crescent-formed shield PENTHESILÆA leades into the field.

Here Becanss desireth to be beleeved, or rather threatneth vs all that reade him, to give credit to this his borrowed discoverie, vsing this confident (or rather cholericke) speech. Quis erit tam impudenter obstinatus, si hac à nobis de sicu hac ex antiquis scriptoribus cum Mosis narratione comparet, vi audeat dicere aliam arborem inueniri poste, qua cum illa magis quadret? Who will be so impudently obstinate, if he compare these things which we have reported of this Fig-tree, and out of ancient Writers delivered with the narration of Moses, as to dare to anow, that any other tree can be found, which doil 50 more properly answere, or agree therewith? But for my selfe, because I neither find this tree, sorting in body, in largenesse of leaues, nor in fruit to this report, I rather incline to the opinion of Fhilo: That the Earth neuer brought forth any of these trees, neither before nor after; but I leave every man to his owne beliefe, for the matter is of no great weight as touching his kinde: only thereby, and by the cafe Commandement by God given to Adam, to forbeare to feed thereon, it pleated God to make tryall of his obedience : Prohibits, non propter aliud, quam ad commendandum pure ac August de Civit simplicis Obedientia bonum; Being forbidden, not for any other respect, then thereby to Destinate 200 commend the goodnesse of pure and simple Obedience.

Of BECANUS bisnot unwittie allegorizing of the Storie of his Ficus Indica.

Vt in this I must doe Becamus right, that he hath very wittily allegorized this Tree, allowing his supposition of the Tree it selfe to be true. The effects whereof, because his discourses are exceeding ample, I haue gathered in these few wordes. As this Tree (saith he) so did Man grow straight and vpright towards God, vntill such time as he had transgressed and broken the Commandement of his Creator; and then like vnto the boughes of this tree, he began to bend downeward, and stouped toward the earth, which all the rest of Adams posteritie after him have done, rooting themselves therein and fastning themselues to this corrupt world. The exceeding vmbragiousnesse of this tree, he compareth to the darke and shaddowed life of man, through which the Sunne of iustice being not able to pierce, we have all remained in the shaddow of death, till it pleased CHRIST to climbe the tree of the Crosse for our enlightning & redemption. The little fruit which it beareth, and which is hard to finde among so many large leaues, may be compared (faith he) to the little vertue, and vnperceiued knowledge among fo large vanities, which obscure and shaddow it ouer. And as this fruit is exceeding sweet, and delicate to the taste and palate: so are the delights and pleasures of the world most pleasing, while they dure. But as all those things which are most mellifluous, are soonest changed into choller and bitternesse: so are our vanities and pleasures converted into the bitterest sorrowes and repen-30 tances. That the leaves are so exceeding large, the fruit (for such leaves) exceeding little, in this, by comparison we behold (faith he) the many cares and great labours of worldly men, their follicitude, their outward shewes, & publike ostentation, their apparent pride and large vanities; and if we feeke for the fruit, which ought to be their vertuous and pious actions, we finde it of the bignesse of the smallest peaze; glorie, to all the world apparent; goodnesse, to all the world inuisible. And furthermore, as the leaves, body, and boughes of this Tree, by fo much exceede all other Plants, as the greatest men of power and worldly abilitie surpasse the meanest: so is the little fruit of fuch men, and fuch trees, rather fitting and becomming the vnworthyest Shrub, and humblest Bryar, or the poorest and basest Man, then such a flou-40 rishing statelinesse, and magnitude. Lastly, whereas Adam, after he had disobayed God, and beheld his owne nakednesseand shame, sought for leaues to couer himselfe withall, this may serue to put vs in minde of his and our sinnes, as often as we put on our garments, to couer and adorne our rotten and mortall bodies: to pamper and maintaine which, we vie so many uncharitable and cruell practices in this world,

Of the name of the tree of Knowledge of good and evill: with some other notes touching the storie of ADAMS sinne.

Ow, as touching the fenfe of this tree of Knowledge of good and cuill, and what operation the fruit thereof had, and as touching the propertie of the Tree it selse, Moses Bar-cephas an ancient Syrian Doctor (translated by Masius) giueth this judgement : That the fruit of this tree had no fuch vertue or qualitie, as that by the tasting thereof, there was any fuch knowledge created in Adam, as if he had beene ignorant before; but as Iunius also noteth: Arbor scientia boni & mali (id est) experientia boni & mali ab euentu; The Tree of knowledge of good and enill (that is) the experience of good and enill by the euent. For thus much we may conceive, that Adam being made (according to the Hebrew phrase) by the workemanship of Gods owne hand, in greater perfection then ever any man was produced by generation, being (as it were) the created plant, out of whose seede all men liuing haue growne vp; and hauing received immortalitie from the breath or spirit of God, he could not (for these respects) be ignorant, that the disobaying of Gods commandement was the fearfullest euill, and the obferuation of his Precepts the happiest good. But as men in perfect health doe (not-to withstanding) conceine, that sicknesse is grieuous, and yet in no such degree of torment, as by the suffering and experience in themselves they afterwards witnesse: so was it with Adam, who could not be ignorant of the punishments, due to neglect and disobedience; and yet felt by the proofe thereof in himselfe another terror then he had fore-thought, or could imagine. For looking into the glasse of his owne guiltie foule, he beheld therein the horror of Gods judgements, so as he then knew, he feelingly knew, and had tryall of the late good, which could not be prized, and of the new purchased euill, which could not be exprest. He then saw himselfe naked both in body and minde; that is, deprived of Gods grace and former felicitie: and therefore was this tree called the tree of Knowledge, & not because the fruit thereof had 20 any such operation, by any selfe qualitie or effect: for the same phrase is vsed in many places of the Scriptures, and names are given to Signes and Sacraments, as to acts performed, and things done. In such fort as this tree was called the tree of Knowledge, by cause of the event (as is aforesaid) so was the Well of contention therefore Gen. 2 6, 20.21. called Elek, and the Well of hatred Sitnath, because the Heardsmen of Isaac and Gerar contended for them; and the heape of stones, called the heape of witnesse, betweene Iacob and Laban, not that the stones bare witnesse, but for a memorie of the couenant. So Iacob called the house of God Bethel: and Hagar, the Well in the De-

> But, Adam being both betrayed and mastered by his affections, ambitious of a 30 farther knowledge then he had perceived in himselfe, and looking but slightly (as all his issues doe) into the miseries and forrowes incident, and greatly affecting the supposed glorie which he might obtaine by tasting the fruit forbidden, he was transported and blowne forward by the gentle winde of pleasing perswasions vnawares; his progression being strengthened by the subtile arguments of Satan, who laboured to poyson mankinde in the very roote, which he moystned with the liquor of the same

But what meanes did the Deuill finde out, or what instruments did his owne subtletie present him, as fittest and aptest to worke this mischiefe by? euen the vnquiet vanitie of the woman; so as by Adams harkening to the voyce of his wife, contrarie 40 to the expresse commandement of the living God, Mankind by that her incantation became the subject of labour, sorrow, and death: the woman being given to man for a comforter and Companion, but not for a Counseller. But because thou hast obayed the voyce of thy wife, &c. (faid God himselfe) Cursed is the earth for thy sake, in forrow (halt thou eate of it all thy life. It is also to be noted, by whom the woman was tempted; euen by the most vgly and vnworthy of all beasts, into whom the Deuill

Secondly, what was the motiue of her disobedience? euen a desire to know what was most vnsitting her knowledge, an affection which hath euer since remained in al the posteritie of her Sexe. Thirdly, what was it that moved the man to yeeld to 50 her perswasions? euen the same cause which hath moued all men since to the like consent, namely, an vnwillingnesse to grieue her and make her sad, lest shee should pine and be ouer-come with forrow. But if Adam in the state of perfection, and Salomon the fonne of Dauid, Gods chosen servant, and himselfe a man endued with the greatest wisedome, did both of them disobay their Creator, by the perswasion and for the loue they bare to a Woman, it is not so wonderfull as lamentable, that other men in succeeding ages have been allured to so many inconvenient and wicked pra-Aices, by the perswasions of their wives, or other beloued Darlings, who couer over and shaddow many malicious purposes with a counterfait passion of dishmulate forrow and vnquietnesse.

presence or fauour of God, he built a Citie, and called it by the name of his first borne, Enoch; which sheweth that he feared to wander, and rather sought to fortifie himselfe against revenge. Cyrillus saith, that Cain and Abel were figures of Christ, 20 and of the Iewes; and that as Cain, after that he had flaine Abel vniuftly, had thenceforth no certayne abiding in the world: so the lewes, after they had crucified the Sonne of God, became Runnegates: and it is true, that the lewes had never fince any certayne Estate, Common-weale, or Prince of their owne vpon the earth. Now this Land of Nod, Iunius taketh to be in Arabia Deserta, a Region of Nomades; but Arabia the Defart is not Eastward, or on the East part of Eden, neither are these Nomades any particular People or Nation. For all these, in what part of the world soener, which in old time lived by pastorage, and fed (as we call it in Ireland) voon white meate, without tilling of the ground, are called by the Greekes, Nomades, and by the Latines, Pastores vagi, as the Northerne Tartarians, the Getulians, and Numidians in 20 Africa, the ancient Brittans, and the Northerne Irish: yea, such were the inhabitants of Italie it selfe, till such time as Italia (who gave them that name) taught them the husbandrie of tillage, vsed at this day. But the Region Eastward from Eden is that part of Affria, called by Ptolemie, Calena, which also might be derived of Carena, the Countrie of Cain. And that Cain inhabited in those parts, it may be gathered by the first possession of his Father Adam; for thus it is written, GE N.3. Therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden to till the earth whence he was taken and in the

let the Cherubins: which sheweth that the entrie into Paradise was from the East, by which entrance Adam was cast out, and therefore inhabiting on that side of Paradise 40 which was Eastward, according to the Text. Cain also in the same Region sought his dwelling place. Now, if the word Nod or Naid doe fignifie profugus, that is, a fugitiue, we can give no longer time to this vncertayne habitation of Cain, then till he built the Citie of Enoch, the first of the world, which he inclosed either for his owne defence, or (as Iolephus writeth) to oppresse others thereby. So as for mine owneo-

pinion, I am resolued with the Septuagint, that Nod was the proper name of a Regions and for the word (yagabond) which Cain vieth of himselfe, it seemeth by the perclose of the same Verse, that (vagabond) is therein understood for such an one as transileth in feare of reuengement: for whofeever findeth me (faith CAIN) shall flay me; or else (vagabond) is taken for a man without protection, and cast out from the fa- 50

And because these Henochians, so called of the Citie Henoch, were the first societie and civill affembly of all other, it is likely that the fame of these people (either for crueltic, strength, or other actions) lived in the memorie of Nosh and his sonnes; so that after the Floud (as there were of all forts of natures, force vertuously, some impiously disposed, and every active minde setting before it whom to follow or imitate) those people, which delighted in crueltie and oppression tooke on them their names whole natures they most liked and allowed; of whom these Henochians were not the least. Perchance the place it selfe where Henoch stood before the Floud, and whereof the Monuments might remaine (as the pillars or the foundation of Iappe did)gaue occasion to the Planters of that place to cal themselues by the same names: for of those Henochians there were many Nations in the borders of Pontin, and Colchis in Iberia, Segdiana, and Bactria, and of the same name many Mountaines, as those to which are otherwise called Coraxici. And seeing that it is hard to find out the truth of Quotidicaliania these things, which the most aged Time hath couered ouer or defaced, we may (ac- in boc magno orcording to the counsaile of Plato) exceedingly rejoyce, and therewith satisfie our be mutatur, notative for the counsaile of Plato) exceedingly rejoyce, and therewith satisfie our be mutatur, notative for the counsaile of the c felues, if of fogreat and almost worne-out antiquitie, if of the eldest peoples names with incimitur, and Nations there remaine any print or foot-steps to Posteritie.

In * Pine, P. Mela, Strabo, Valerius Flaccus, Lucan, Stephanus, wee finde those nominalextinitis Henoches described, though diversly written, as in Plinie, sometimes Henoch, in Mela ribus joriuntur, Entochi, in Flaccus Heniochi, in Lucan Enochij, all which inhabite vpon the Sea Euxinus, Scheca ad Albibut yet none of these are on the East side of Eden, or (according to Moses words) East- "Plin.1.6.s.g. ward from Eden. For Moses, in all places where he describeth any Region, was fo 11.016.

Flace.16, wards the East or South. In the place of Gene/is the eleventh hee writeth the word Lucan. 1.3. v. 37. (East) simply and directly. And as they went from the East, they found a Plaine in the V.2, Land of Shinar, but in this of Cain he addeth the word (towards) as, in the Land of Nod towards the East side of Eden; which may be taken, as inclining some one point or two eyther to the North or to the South of the East.

But as we may coniecture that these Nations tooke name of Henoch, the Citie of Cain, or of the Region wherein it stood, when the same was repeopled after the Floud fo it is probable that these Henochij of Colchis, and other parts adjoying were not the first of that name, after the sonnes of Noah began to fill the World againe: because, had this Henoch the Citie of Cain stood in any of these parts, it had then beene seated North, and not East or Eastward from Eden. But as Planie findeth their habitation towards Pontus, so afterwards he goeth on Eastward, till hee tracke them ortrace them out to their originall. For he calleth these of Colchis (now Mengrelia) Plin.1.6.c.4.5. Sanni Heniochi; Etolomie Zani; beyond which an hundred and fiftie myle Eastward Prolital. Afa. 3. hee fin Jeth another Nation of them about Iberia and Albania; and beyond these againe hee discouerethathird Nation, from whence all the rest tooke beginning, which inhabited on the West side of the Mountaines of Paro-panifus, betweene them and the great River of Oxus, which bordereth Bactris on the North lide; and these 40 Henochij are due East from the Region of Eden, and Eastward from the very Garden

And although we cannot be affored, that these Henoshij tooke name from the memory of the Citie of Enoch directly, yet because they inhabited due East from Paradise, and afterwards spred themselves Westward (as all Noahs sonnes did that came into Shinar) the comecture is farte more probable, then that of Annius the Fryer, who fets Henoch in Phanicia, quite contrary to Moses word: Phanicia from all parts of Eden being directly West.

And besides these several Nations of the Henochy, Stephanis findeth a Region cal- stephale Pro. led Henochia, and the same also in the East, with divers Mountaines about Bastria and Sogdiana of the same name. Onely the Gracians (according to their fabulous innentions of all things else) out of the word (Heniochi) which lignifieth Carts or Coachmen, make these Nations to have sprung from the Waggoners of Castor and Pollar. of Moses his omitting fundry things concerning CAINS Generation.

V T of the remembrance and testimonies of the name of the Citie of Henoch in prophane Story , thus much may suffice; Now it followeth to answere some sew objections against certaine particulars in the fourth and fifth Chapter of Genesis: against which for the first it is demanded, how it was possible for Cain (hauing no other assistance then his sonne Henoch) to performe such a worke as the building of a Citie, seeing there is thereto required so many hands, and so great a masse of all sorts of Materials? To which it is answered, that we are first to consider, That of Cain (because he was the Parent of an impious race) Moses vseth no ample declaration; and so it best agreeth with his diuine reason, seeing that he containeth the whole Story of the first race, 20 which wasted by the least account, 1656. yeeres, in fine short Chapters. Yet thus much may every man borrow of his owne weakest reason, That seeing it pleased God to bestow on the first generations of mens lives so long a measure, as 800. and 900. yeeres, that in such a space Coin had not want of leasure and meanes to build many such Cities as Henoch, be the capacitie answering to what other of the World soeuer: for in what age of Cains life he built it, the Scriptures are silent: as of whose times, and the times of his issues Moses had the least care. And as it was sayd of Cain, that he built a Citie: so was it sayd of Woah, that his three sonnes peopled all the World; but in both, the processe of time required to bee vnderstood; which aduice feeing Moses vseth where the space lesse requireth it, as knowing that hee writ the 30 Scriptures to reasonable men, wee may easily understand, that such was his meaning also in all reports of like nature. For in making but a difference betweene the birth of Abel, and oblation of Cain, he spake it in this sort, Fuit autem post dies multos or & fine dierum (that is) in processe of time, it came to passe that CAIN brought an Oblation. And therefore it is in like fort to bee understood of Cain, that many yeeres fore-gone, and when his people were increased, he built the Citie of Enoch or Henoch.

And where it is written, as of Cain, that he built Enoch, so of Salomon, that hee built the Temple of Hierusalem; yet it is well knowne of Salomon, that hee employed in that worke, 150000. Labourers: for this phrase or speech is common with our selues to fay, The King inuaded; when hee caused an inuasion to bee made: and hee built, a when he commanded such a building. And therefore seeing wee find, that Moses had no regard to the ages, to the birth, or to the death of any of Cains iffues, it is not to be maruailed at, why he also passeth ouer in a word the building of Enoth, without addition of any circumstance: for of Cain, Moses writeth in this manner : CAIN also knew his wife, who conceived and bare HENOCH, and hee built a Citie, and salled the name of the Citic after the name of his sonne HENOCH. Andto HENOCH was borne IR AD, and IR AD begat MEHVIAEL, and MEHVIAEL begat METHV SAEL, and Me-

But in SETH was the Church of Go D established, from whom christ descended, as touching his manhood: and therefore this way and worke Mo(es walked in, and finished it with care, passing ouer the Reprobate Generation (as aforefavd. Of the Line of Adam by Cain, Moses remembreth but eight Generations. reckoning Adam for one, and of the Line of Adam by Seth ten, counting Adam also therein, as followeth:

These be the Generations of Adam by Cain, which the Scriptures mention: but Iolephus giueth vnto Lamech threescore and seuenteene Sonnes and Daughters, by his two wives Ada, and Silla: and to these three sonnes of Lamech, Moses ascribeth 20 the invention of Pastorage, of Musicke, and the working in Metall: for it seemeth that Inbal first gathered together, and made familiar those beasts which formerly were vntamed, and brought them into Heards and Droues: Tubal invented Musicke, Gen. 20.21.22 and Tubalcain the working in Brasse and Iron: the one being addicted to Husbandry, the other was Mechanicall, the third given to idlenesse and pleasure. In whom began these three meaner degrees of Sheep-heards, Handy-crafts-men, and Musicians. # ò. IIII.

Of the diversities in the Ages of the Patriarchs when they begat their children.

Second scruple hath beene made, How it came to passe that the Patriarchs begat their children at so divers Ages, as Cainan or Cenan at seuentie yeeres, Mahaleel and Enoch at threescore and fine yeeres, whereas lared begat not any of his vntill hee was 162. yeeres olde: Mathusalem begat at 187. Lamech at 182. and Noah at 500. yeeres. Now this difference hath bin the more enforced, because it cannot be coniectured, that eyther Iared, Mathusalem, or Lamech abstained from marriage out of the Religion of abstinence, 40 feeing that Enoch, who was translated by God for his singular sanctities, begat children before he was threescore and ten yeeres olde.

The apparent difference hereof ariseth in this, that Moses did not number the generations beforethe Floud precifely, according to the first begotten and eldest sonnes of the Patriarchs, but he drew downe the Line of Neah from Seth, and afterward from Noah to Abraham, by their true Ancestors, were they elder or yonger as hee found them: for it is likely that Henoch was not the eldeft of larad, nor Lamech the first borne of Mathusalem, nor Noah of Lamech; neither is there any thing knowne to the contrarie, but that Noah might have had many sonnes before Shem, Ham, and Japhet, though these three were only named, and surriuing, and which by God were reserved to bee 50 the Fathers of Mankind after the Floud; and therefore when we find Mahaleel to bee begotten by Kenan at threescore and ten yeeres who was the first sonne of Kenan, and then reckon that Mathu (alem begat Lamech in the 187, yeere of his life, the difference feemeth strange, where Lameth is taken for the eldest. But Moses rejecteth all theother sonnes of Mathusalem but Lamech only, because he was the Father of Noah as a-

But de Moles counted the Generations of the first age, and so to Abraham, and the children of the promise after him, so doth S. Matthew recite the Genealogie of their not by the eldelt fonnes, but from those whom God had chosen and blessed, without respect of the first-borne, who have hereby the prerogative in Estates, worldly and transitorie only; and therefore the Euangelist nameth Isaac, and not Ismael, though Ismael were first in time: so doth he take Iacob the yonger, and not Esau the elder: neyther is Christ derived from any of the three eldest Patriarchs, Reuben, Simeon, or Leui, but from Iuda a fourth brother, and so from Dauid a yonger sonne of lessa; & and lastly we find, that the Kingdome it selfe of Iuda was not given to the Heirein nature, but to the Heire of grace, namely Salomon.

Q. V. Of the long lines of the Patriarchs: and some of late memoric.

HE third Objection is, that the great difference of yeeres betweene those of the first Age, whereof some of them had well-neere seenea thousand yeeres, makes it disputable, whether the account of times 20 were of the same measure as in after-ages, seeing, that soone after the Floud, men lived not a third part of that time, and in succeeding ages

They that have hereon resolved that those yeeres were but Lunarie yeeres, (to wit) of a Moneth or thereabouts, or Egyptian yeeres, are easily consuted. For whereas Seth begat Enosh in the yeere of his life 105. if those yeeres bee taken but for Moneths, then had Seth lived but eight yeeres and one Moneth when hee begat Enosh: and if the time of Enosh haue the same allowance, when he begat Kenan, then could Enosh at that time have beene but fixe yeeres and fortie eight weekes old; and fo it may be gathered of the rest; excepting only Adam, who was created perfect in to his kind, as were the Trees in their kinde, bearing fruit and feed. But this were too ridiculous to imagine. For to giue an abilitie of Generation at 6.7. or 8. yeeres, agreeth with the short lives of the Pigmies, and not with the constitutions of our first Fathers, who being descended from Adam, the workemanship of Gods hands, and begotten and borne in the strong youth of the World, had length of daies and ability of body agreeable. Againe, if we allow this idle conceit of the Lunarie yeeres, then there would follow this extremitie, that those which lived longest, and vpwards of nine hundred yeeres, had by that account but the time of fourescore and tenne and odde yeeres, which were not only leffe by farre then the Patriarchs lived after the Floud, but short of many mens lives in this decrepit age of the World, wherein many exceed fourescore, and some hundred yeeres. Further (if need bee) to disproone this reckoning, whereas it is written, Gen. 25. That Abraham dyed in a good Age, an old man, and of great yeeres: all which (if the former account were of Lunarie yeeres) makes but seuentoene and an halfe of our yeeres.

And if we seeke for a cause of this long life in Nature, then is it reasonable, that the first man, created in highest perfection, should also beget children of equall strength or little differing : for of the first and purest seed there must of necessitie spring up the fairest and fruitfullest Plants. Secondly, the Earth it selfe was then much lesse corrupt, which yeelded her increase, and brought forth fruit and food for man, without any such mixture of harmefull qualitie, as since that time the Curse of God for the crueltie of mans heart brought on it and Mankind: Neither had the Waters of the Floud infused such an impuritie, as thereby the naturall and powerfull operation of all Plants, Herbes, and Fruits vpon the Earth received a qualification and harmefull change. And as all things under the Sunne haue one time of strength, and anCHAP.5. S.5. of the History of the World.

other of weaknesse, a youth and beautie, and then age and deformitie: so Time it felfe (vnder the deathfull shade of whose wings all things decay and wither) hath wasted and worne out that lively vertue of Nature in Man, and Beasts, and Plants: yea the Heauens themselves being of a most pure and clensed matter, shall waxe old as a garment; and then much more the power generative in inferiour Creatures, who Pfil. 102. 11.15. by the ordinance of God receive operative vertue from the superiour.

But besides the olde age of the World, how farre doth our education and simplicitie of living differ from that old time? the tender bringing up of children, first fed and nourished with the milke of a strange Dugge; an vnnatural curiositic hauing to taught all women (but the begger) to find out Nurses, which necessitie only ought to commend vnto them: The hastie marriages in tender yeeres, wherein, Nature being but yet greene and growing, we rent from her and replant her branches, while her selfe hath not yet any root sufficient to maintaine her owne top; and such halferipe feeds (for the most part) in their growing vp wither in the bud, and waxe olde even in their infancie. But about all things the exceeding luxuriou fnesse of this gluttonous Age, wherein we presse Nature with ouer-waightie burdens, and finding her strength defective, we take the worke out of her hands, and commit it to the artificiall helpe of ftrong Waters, hot Spices, and prouoking Sawces; of which Lucan hath these elegant Verses:

Epigenes findeth in his Philosophie, that the life of man may reach to the period of an hundred and twenty yeeres, and Berofus to a hundred and feuenteene veeres. These opinions Plinie repeateth and reproducts, producing many Examples to the contrary. In the last taxation, number and review of the eighth Region of Italie, there were found in the Roll (fayth Plinie) Plinie, case foure and fiftie persons of an hundred yeeres of age: seuen and fiftie of an hundred and ten: two, of an hundred and five and twentie: foure, of an hundred and thirtie: as many that were hundred and fine and thirtie, or hundred and fenen and thirtie yeeres old: and last of all three men of an hundred and fortie: and this fearch was 50 made in the times of Vespasian the Father and the Sonne.

Hellanicus affirmeth of the Epeians, that some of them live full two hundred yeere: and so doth Diodorus Siculus of the Egyptians; and that these reports are not fabulous; Iolephus bringeth many witnesses with himselfe, as Marethon, Berofus, Mochus, Estius, Hieronymu Agyptius, Hecataus, Ephorus , and others. And Anthonie Fume an Hillorian of good reputation reporteth, that in the yeere 1570, there was an Indian pre. fented to Solyman, Generall of the Turkes Armie, who had out-lived three hundred vecres. I my selfe knew the old Countesse of Defmond of Inchiquin in Munster, who lived in the yeere 1589, and many yeeres fince, who was married in Edward the to Fourths time, and held her loynture from all the Earles of Defmond fince then; and that this is true, all the Noblemen and Gentlemen of Munster can witnesse. Strozzius Cigogna, Out of Torquemada Maffaus, and the like Authours, telleth of some that have not only farre exceeded the terme prescribed by Epigenes; but beene repayred from the withered estate of decrepit age to fresh youth. But for length of life, if we note but the difference betweene the abilitie of men in those dayes wherein Galenthe Phisician lived, it may easily prove vnto vs what reeds we are in respect of those Cedars of the first age. For Galen did ordinarily let bloud fixe pound weight, whereas wee (for the most part) stop at sixe Ounces. But to conclude this part, there are three things (not counting Constellations) which are the naturall causes 20 of a long and healthfull life; (to wit) strong Parents, a pure and thin Ayre, and temperate vie of dyet, pleasure, and rest: for those which are built of rotten timber, or mouldring stone, cannot stand long vpright; on Ayre wee feed alwayes and in euery instant, and on meates but at times: and yet the heavy load of abundance, wherewith we oppresse and ouercharge Nature, maketh her to sinke vnawares in the midway; and therefore with a good constitution, a pure Ayre, and a temperate vie of those things which Nature wanteth, are the only friends and companions of a long life.

δ. V I.

Of the Patriarchs delivering their knowledge by Tradition: and that ENOCH writ before the Floud.

Fourth scruple hath beene made, How the certaine knowledge of the Creation came to Moses, seeing there was no Storie thereof written, and if any such had beene, yet it is conceived, that all memorie of Antiquitie perished in the Vniuersall Floud.

But if we consider the curiositie and policie of elder ages, we shall find, that knowledge was the greatest treasure that men sought for, and which they also couered 40 and hid from the vulgar fort, as Iewels of inestimable price, fearing the irreverent construction of the ignorant and irreligious: so as what soeuer was attained vnto concerning God, and his working in nature, the same was not left to publike dispute, but deliuered ouer by heart and tradition from wife men to a posteritie equally zealous; Ex animo in animum fine literu , medio intercedente verbo: From minde to minde without Letters, by way of tradition or word of mouth. And it was thought by Efdras Origen, and Hilarius, (as Mirandula conceineth) that Moses did not onely vpon the Mount receiue the Law from God, but withall, secretiorem & veram legis enarrationem; a mort fecret and true explanation of the Law; which (faith he, out of the same Authours,) hee delivered by mouth to Iosuah, and Iosuah to the Elders: For to teach these mysteries, 50 which hee called fecretiora, to the rude multitude, were no other quam dare fanctum canibus, & inter Porcos [pargere Margaritas, then to give holy things to Dogges, and to cast Pearles before Swine. In succeeding times this vinderstanding and wisedome began to bee written in Ciphers, and Characters, and Letters bearing the forme of beafts, birds, and other creatures; and to be taught onely to such as served in their Temples, and to their Kings and Priefts. Of the first the Cabala of the Iewes was an imitation: the invention of the other is ascribed to Zoroafter, Mercurius, Cadmus, and others; but falsely.

This Cabala importeth a Law, received by tradition and vnwritten. Cabala in He- cabalaeff fienbrew is receptio in Latine, and a recessing in English. And this custome was also held non veuelata. by the Draids & Bards of our ancient Britaines, and of later times by the Irilb Chroni- P. M. 82. elers called Rymers. If then fuch as would feeme wifest in the vie of reason, will not Miranda 10, fel acknowledge, that the storie of the Creation or beginning of all things was written ro by inspiration, the holy Gholt guiding the hand of Moses; yet it is manifest, that the knowledge thereof might by tradition (then vied) be deliuered vnto him by a more certayne presumption, then any or all the testimonies which prophane antiquitie had preserved and left to their successors: which their wise men (as they terme them) did lay vp and defend from the iniurie of the time and other hazzards. For, leaving to remember that Adam instructed Seth, and Seth his children and succesfors, which cannot be doubted of, it is manifest, that Methulalem lived together with Adam himselfe two hundred fortie and three yeeres, and Noah with Methusalem no lesse then fine hundred yeeres : and before Noah dyed, Abraham was fiftie and eight yeeres old; from whence this knowledge by an easie and ordinarie way 20 might come to Ifrael, and lo to Moles.

But besides this tradition, it is questionlesse, that the vse of letters was found out in the very infancie of the world, proued by those prophecies written on pillars of stone and bricke by Enoch : of which losephus affirmeth, that one of them remayned lof l.r. euenin his time (meaning belike some ruine or foundation thereof) which pillars by others are ascribed to Seth. But of these prophecies of Enoch Saint Inde testifi- Ind. Ep. v. 14. eth; and some part of his Bookes (which contayined the course of the Starres, their names and motions) were afterward found in Arabia falix, in the Dominion of the Queene of Saba (faith Origen) of which Tertullian affirmeth that he had seene Origen. Homil. 1 and read some whole pages. It is not therefore strange, that Moses came to the know-30 ledge of the Creation, and storie of the first Age, seeing he might receive it both by tradition and letters, had not the spirit of God instructed and inspired him as it did: which also his many and strange miracles (performed before he wrote the Scriptures) make more manifelt. Now for the Bookes of Enoch, how soeuer some men make question of them, sure I amthat Tertullian, Origen, Augustine, Beda, Procopius, Gazeus, (with others) cite Orig. Homil. 28. them in their writings : although Medina, for an argument to proue them vnwrittentraditions, alleageth that Pope Geiafius among other the Apocryphall Scriptures Euang. Iohan.

But I ra-40 therthinke with Pererius, that such a Booke there was, and that the same was corrupted after the death of the Apostles, and many things added thereunto by Heretikes, who tooke occasion upon the antiquitie thereof, and out of that place of Michael contending with the Deuill about the body of Moses, to frame and adde thereunto many inventions of their owne. One of the greatest arguments against these Bookes, is, that neither Philo, nor Iosephus (the most diligent searchers of Antiquitie) make mention thereof. But against it I will set this opinion of Saint Av-GVSTINE, Scripsisse quidem nonnulla diuina Enoch ellum septimum ab Adam negarenonpossumus: That ENOCH the sewenth from ADAM did write divers divine things we cannot denie. Now his writings which came afterwards to light, were suspected be-50 cause of the antiquitie, and of fables of Giants, supposed to be begotten of Angels, and others; and by so much the more, because no such Booke was found amongst those Canonicall Scriptures, kept by the diligence of the Hebrew Priests in Armario Iudaico (faith Tertullian) who yet affirmeth that this Booke might be preserved by mulicrum. Noah. Surely, that Enoch wrote the prophecies remembred by Inde, no man can denie; how they were delivered to posteritie I know not, whether by the lewes Cabala, or by what other meanes, the same is but mans coniecture. And (certainely) by the knowledge ascribed to Noah of the motions of the Heauens, and of the Natures and conjunctions of the Starres; and afterwards to some of his sonnes, to Zoreaster, and then to Abraham, it is very probable that Woah had feene and might preserve this booke. For it is not likely, that so exquisite knowledge therein (as these men had) was suddenly invented and found out, but left by Seth to Enoch, and by Enoch to Noah, as hath beene said before. And therefore if letters and arts were knowne from the time of Seth to Enoch, and that Noah lived with Methusalem, who lived with Adam, and Abraham lived with Noah, it is not strange (I say) to conceive how Moses 10 came to the knowledge of the first Age, be it by letters, or by Gabala and Tradition. had the vindoubted word of God neede of any other proofe then selfe-authoritie.

Of the men of renownee before the floud.

Ow let vs consider the relation of Moses, who nameth seuen descents of Cains children, and of Adam by Seth ten: Seth being given by God in stead of Abel; and of Seth was Enosh begotten, in whose time men 20 began to professe Religion, and to offer facrifice in publike. For although Adam instructed his children in the knowledge of God their Creator, as appeared by the facrifice offered by Cain and Abel; yet it seemeth that after the birth of Enolb men began publikely to call on the name of the Lord, that is, they serued and praised God by Communion and in publike manner, or calling vpon the name of the Lord, and thereby were the sonnes of God or the godly distinguished from the wicked. From the birth of Enosh the sonne of Seth, to the time of Henoeb the some of Iared, there is nothing remembred by Moses, but their owne births, the births of their fonnes, the length of their lives, and deaths. But of Henoch it is written, That he walked with God, and he was no more seene: for God tooke him a- 20 way. By that, that he walked with God, was meant, that he was a just and vpright man, and that he feared, loued, and obayed God. For the same phrase Moses vieth of Noah. NOAH was a just and vpright man in his time, and NOAH walked with God. The Seuentie connert it, ENOCH placuit Deo; HENOCH pleased God. And although Aben-Ezra and others understand this place, (tulit eum Deus : ) scilicet, mortuus est; God tooke him away (that is ) he dyed, which (indeede) agreeth both with the phrase of the Scripture, and with our manner of speech to this day, to say, God tooke him away, when he dyed; yet the difference which Moses maketh betweene the pietie of Henoch and the rest of the Patriarchs, and by omitting the word (death) which he vfeth to all elfe, makes it manifest, that Henoch was not dissolved as the rest. For to all 40 the rest of the Patriarchs, Moses vseth these wordes, And he dyed; but of Henoch he spake otherwise, saying only, he was missing, or he was not seene. Et non inueniebatur (Saith the Epistle to the Hebrewes) quia Deus eum transsulit; And be was not found, for the Lord tooke him away. In the same place it is expressly added, that he saw not death.

But whether this taking away of Enoch were not with the same kind of changing, which S. Paul promiseth, when he saith, that when the end shall come, we shall not all die, but all shall be changed, I leave it to the learned Divines.

After Henoch, Moses passeth ouer to Methusalem and Lamech, remembring (as of the rest) the times of their birth and death : saving that Lameth prophecied of his fonne Noah, faying, This same shall comfort us concerning our worke, and forrow of our to bands, as touching the earth which the Lord hath cursed. Of Noah, Mofes writeth more amply, then of any of the rest of Adams children by Seth, being the last of the ten generations of the first Age, whom God (with his familie) prescrued, because he was an vpright man in his time, and feared God.

Bur of the warre, peace, gouernement, and policie of thefestrong and mightie men, so able both in body and wit, there is no memorie remayning : whose stories if they had beene preferued, and what else was then performed in that newnesse of the world, there could nothing of more delight have been electro posteritie. For the exceeding long lines of men (who to their strength of body and naturall wirs had the experience added of 800. and 900. yeeres) how much of necessitie must the same adde of wisedome and undertakings? Likely it is, that their works excelled all whatsoener can be told of after times; especially in respect of this old age of the world. when we no fooner begin to know, but we begin to die; according to HIPPOCRA-10 TES. The breus, ars long a, tempus praceps; (which's) Life is fort, Arte is long and Time is Allera beadling: And that those people of the first age performed many things worthy admiration, it may be gathered out of these words of Moses: These were might ween, Gon. 5.4 which in old time were men of renowne. But these men of renowne ( whom the Scripture afterwards calleth Giants, both for strength of body and crueltie of minde) trufled fo much to their owne abilities, as they forgat altogether the pierie of Seth, and the waves wherein Henoch walked: for all the imaginations of their hearts were emillonly verfs. enill, and continually enill. And this wickednesse was not only found in the issues of Cain, but it was then vinue fall, when the children and fonnes of God (or of the godly) were corrupted and misted by their idolatrous. Wives, the Daughters of cain, or 20 of those other men, louing themselves and the world only.

That these fonnes of God were Angels, which being taken with the beautie of wo- Gen. 5. v. 24. men, accompanied them and begat Giants, some of the Fathers supposed, namely, Lactantius and Eufebius, missed by 10fephus: of whom I cannot doubt, but that they afterward changed their former opinions. And of this millaking many Writers haue taken great aduantage, and haue troubled themselues with large answeres and very needlesse: the question being vncapable of dispute, especially since S. Chrysoflome and S. Augustine have answered it largely long agoe. For, that good and godly men were honored with the title of Gods children, it dothencry where appeare in the Scripture; and on the contrary, to thinke that Angels, who (as Christ witnes-30 feth) behold the face of God, (that is) alwayes attend his Commandements, should after a separation from the rest which fell with Lucifer, for sake the glorious presence of their Creator, and become Incubi, or Succubi, contrarie both to Nature and Grace, were more then madnesse to imagine.

That the Giants by Moses (o called, were indeede men of huge bodies : as also diners in later times.

F these Giants which Moses calleth mightie men, Goropius Becanus an Antuerpian (who thought his owne wit more Giganticall then the bodies of Nimrod or Hercules) hath written a large discourse, intituled Gigantomachia, and strained his braines to proue, that there were neuer any such men: his reasons (who soeuer desires to lose time) he may finde them in the Treatises beforenamed. It is true that Cyrillus reproues the Gracian Poets for their monstrous fictions: who affirme shamelesty, That the Giants haue in elder times not only cast vp Mountaynes vpon Mountaynes, but remoued Islands out of the Sea, with like fooleries. And for that invention of casting vp Hils, 50 and making warre with the Gods, no doubt but that the same was borrowed out of the storie of Nimrod, as before remembred; and even out of this Scripture, That the Sonnes of God faw the Daughters of Men, of whom the first Giants were begotten, was that conceit taken of Orpheus and Heliodus, That Giants were the sonnes of the Heauen and the Earth; meaning by the Heauens the sonnes of God, and by the Earth the Daughters of men : which verses of Orpheus are by John Caffam (who hath written a wittie discourse of this subject) thus changed into Latine :

> Nomine cœlestes illos dixère Gigantes Orti quod terra fuerint & sanguine cali.

From the Earth, and from thy bloud, ô heaven, they came, Whom thereupon the Gods did Giants name.

But what will not Opiniators and selfe-beleeuing men dispute of, and make doubt 10 of if they cannot conceive that there were in the first Age such kind of men; and of which there have beene in all times fince ? Seeing the Scriptures auow the one manifeftly, and common experience the other?

And for that superlative strayning of wordes, and the meaning of them, that the name of Giants was given to Oppressors and Tyrants, and not to strength of body and eminent stature: such men might with better reason call them Oppressors, because they were Giants, and therefore had abilisie to oppresse, then say, That they were called Giants onely, because Oppressors. For first, Moses himselfe calleth them mightie men; which sheweth a strength surpassing others: and asterwards. men of renowne, (that is) of great vndertaking and aduenterous action. And if the fame stature of body, and abilitie had not beene found among divers Nations after the generall floud, then might this place of Moses have more willingly harkened to a dispute, and yeelded to interpretation. But besides all these famous Giants found in prophane Histories (which I will referue to accompanie the Giants of Albion, in the storie of Britanie) the Scriptures doe cleerely and without all allegoricall construction anow, That, besides Nimrod, there were found of these Giants in the time of Abraham, of Moses, of Iolua, and of David: namely, the Rephaims in Afteroth; the Zuzai or Zanzummims in Ham, and the Emims, which dwelt anciently in the Land of Moab : whom Moses (for stature) compareth with the Anakims, which dwelt in Hebron; for they also were taken for Giants 30 as the Anakims: Likewise, where Moses speaketh of the Land of Ammon, he vseth these words: That also was taken for a land of Giants, for Giants dwelt therein afore-times: and whom the Ammonites call Zamzummims: a people that was great, and many, and tall as the Anakims. And these Giants called Rephaims in Asteroth and Karnaim. and the Zuzei or Zanzummims, Chedorlaomer King of Elam ouer-threw, affifted by other Kings his affociates. Also the Prophet Amos found among the Ammonites men of Giantlike stature, whom he compareth to the Cedar, and whose strength to the Okes; and the Prophet BARVCH, These were the Giants famous from the beginning, that were of so great stature, and so expert in warre. Particularly it is written of og, King of Basan, that his bed of yron was nine cubits long, and soure cubits broad: for onely 40 og King of Basan remayned of the remnants of the Giants, who commanded the Kingdome of Basan, foure hundred yeeres after the Expedition of Chedorlasmer. Moreouer, those Discouerers and Searchers of the Land of promise (sent by Moses from Cadesbarre in Paran) made report at their returne of the great stature of those Num.13. v.34. people in generall, and especially of the sonnes of Anak, in these wordes: All the people which we faw in it are men of great stature: for there we saw Giants, the sonnes of Anak, which come of the Giants, to that we feemed in our fights like Graffe-hoppers, and fo we were in their fight, (that is) the Searchers found in their owne judgements a maruailous difference between the Anakims and themselves: insomuch that the Israelites were so stricken with feare, as they rather sought and defired to returne againe into 50 Egypt, and were more willing to endure their former flauerie, then to fall by the strokes of those fearefull Nations. Furthermore, the Scriptures put vs out of doubt, that Goliab the Philistine of Gath, was a Giant of fixe cubits and a span long: the Armor which he wore waighed five thousand shickles of brasse: the shaft of his speare was like a Weauers beame, and his speare head waighed sixe hundred shickles of vron. Also in Samuel there is mention of another Goliah, lurnamed Getheus, because 2.Sam.21,2.19. he was of Gath: and of three other Giants; of which the first was slaine by Iehona- 1.chron. 20.21. than, Davids Nephew, who had twelne fingers, and as many toes : a man of great flature, and the fangers were by fixes, even foure and twentie.

If then it be approved by every judgement, that both Nature and the Heavens waxe old, and that the great age of Time hath (withit selfe) infeebled and almost worncout the vertue of all things, then I fay, That as in all other kindes the Earth (before that sinne had increased the curse and corruption) brought forth her yong ones more throng and beautifull, then it did in after-ages: so also those Giants, those mightie men, and men of renowne as farre exceeded the proportion, nature, and ftrength of those Giants, remembred by Moses of his owne time, and after him their

and in times farre off, exceeded the bulkes and bodies of men which are now borne 20 in the withered quarter and Winter of the world: If therefore Giants were common in the third and fourth age, much more in the first flourishing youth and new-

That in old corruptions we may finde some signes of more ansignt truth.

ERE before wee proceede any further, the occasion offereth it selfe for vs to consider, how the Greekes and other more ancient Nations, by fabulous inuentions, 20 and by breaking into parts the Storie of the Creation. and by delivering it over in a mystical sense, wrapping it vp mixed with other their owne trumperie, have fought to obscure the truth thereof; and have hoped, that after-ages, being thereby brought into many doubts, might receive those inter-mixt discourses of God and Nature, for the inventions of Poets and Philosophers, and not as any thing borrowed or stolne out of the bookes of God. But as a skilfull and learned Chymist can aswell by separation of visible elements draw helpfull medicines out of poyson, as poyson out of 30 the most healthfull herbs and plants (all things having in themselves both life and death) so, contrarie to the purposes and hopes of the Heathen, may those which seeke after God and Truth finde our enery-where, and in all the ancient Poets and Philosophers, the Storie of the first Age, with all the workes and maruailes thereof, amply and liuely exprest.

ð. I I.

That the corruptions themselves were very ancient: as in the family of NOAH, and in the old Ægyptians.

Vt this defection and falling away from God, which was first found in Angels, and afterwards in Men (the one having erred but once, the other euer) as concerning mankinde it tooke such effect, that thereby (the liberall grace of God being with-drawne) all the posteritie of our first Parents were afterwards borne and bred in a world, suffering a perpetuall Eclipse of spirituall light. Hence it was that it produced plants of such imperfection and harmefull qualitie, as the waters of the generall floud could not fo wash out or depure, but that the same defection hath had continuance in the very generation and nature of mankinde. Yea, even among the few sonnes of Noah, there 50 were found frong effects of the former poylon. For as the children of Sem did inherit the vertues of Seth, Enoch, and Noah; so the sonnes of Cham did possesse the vices of the sonnes of Cain, and of those wicked Giants of the first Age. rure, which was only due to the Creatour. First, they worshipped the Sunne, and then the fire. So the Egyptians and Phanicians did not only learne to leave the true God, but created twelve feuerall gods, and divine powers, whom they worshipped; and vnto whom they built Altars and Temples. That from the reliques of ancient Records among the Azyptians and others the first Idols and Fables were invented: and that the first IVPITER Was CAIN, VVLCAN, TVBALCAIN, 66.

V T in fo great a confusion of vanities, were among the Heathens themselues there is no agreement or certaintie, it were hard to finde out from what example the beginnings of these inuentions were borrowed, or after what ancient patterne they erected their building, were to it not certaine, that the Egyptians had knowledge of the first Age, and of what soener was done therein, partly from some inscriptions vpon stone or metall remaining after the Floud, and partly from Mizraim the sonne of Cham, who had learnt the same of Cham, and Cham of his Father Noah. For all that the Agyptians write of their ancient Kings, and date of times cannot be fained. And though other Nations after them had by imitation their Iupiters also, their Saturnes, Vulcans, and Mercuries with the rest, which S. Augustine out of Varro, Eusebius out of many prophane Historians; Cicero, Diodorus Siculus, Arnobius, and many more have observed. to wit, the Phanicians, Phrygians, Cretians, Greekes, and other Nations; yet was Cain the some of Adam (as some very learned men conceiue) called and reputed for the 20 first and ancient Jupiter; and Adam for the first Saturne: for Jupiter was sayd to have Deorum.

Armob.a. contra invented the founding of Cities; and the first Citie of the World was built by Cain, which he called Enoch, of whom were the Henochij before remembred. And so much may be gathered out of Plato in Protagorus, which also Higinus in his 275. Chapter confirmeth. For besides that, many Cities were founded by divers men : Tamen primam latissimam à primo & antiquissimo Iova adificatam : yet the first and largest was built by the first and most ancient IVPITER, seated in the East parts, or in India, according to that of Moses: And CAIN dwelt towards the East side of Eden, &c. where also the Henocky were found after the Floud. And therefore was Inpiter by the Athenians called Policus, a Founder of Cities, and Herceios, an Incloser or strengthener of Cities; 30 (fay Phornutus and Paufanias) and that to Jupiter Herceios there were in very many places Altars & Temples erected. And that there were Cities built before the Floud, Plato also witnesseth, as may be gathered in this his affirming, that soone after Mankind began to increase, they built many Cities; which as his meaning hee deliuereth in plaine termes, in his third Booke of Lawes: for he faith, that Cities were built an exceeding space of time before the destruction by the great Floud. This first supiter of the Ethnickes was then the same Cain, the sonne of Adam, who marrying his owne Sifter (as also lupiter is sayd to have done) inhabited the East, where Stephanus de vrbibus placeth the Citie Henochia. And besides this Citie of Henoch, Philo Indans conceiveth that Cain built fixe others, as Maich, I ared, Tehe, 40 Gen.4.20.21.22 lefea, Selet and Gebat: but where Philo had this I know not. Now as Cain was the first Jupiter, and from whom also the Ethnickes had the invention of Sacrifice: so were Jubal, Tubal and Tubalcain (Inventors of Pastorage, Smiths-craft, and Musick) the same, which were called by the ancient prophane Writers, Mercurius, Vulcan and Apollo; and as there is a likelihood of name betweene Tubalcain and Valcan: so doth Augufine expound the name of Noema or Namath, the Sister of Tubalcain, to signifie Venusta, or beautifull Voluptas, or pleasure; as the wife of Vulcan is sayd to be Venus, the Ladie of pleasure and beautie. And as Adam was the ancient and first Saturne, Cain the eldest Iupiter, Eua, Rhea, and Noema or Naamah the first Venus: so did the Fable of the dividing of the World betweene the three Brethren the Sonnes of Saturne arise, 50 from the true Storie of the dividing of the Earth betweene the three Brethren the Sonnes of Noah: so also was the Fiction of those Golden Apples kept by a Dragon taken from the Serpent, which tempted Euah: so was Paradife it selfe transported out of Asia into Africa, and made the Garden of the Hesperides: the prophecies, that christ should breake the Serpents head, and conquer the power of Hell, occasioned the Fables of Hercules killing the Serpent of Helperides, and descending into Hell. and captinating Cerberus: so out of the taking vp of Henoch by God, was borrowed the conversion of their Heroes (the Inventors of Religion, and such Arts as the life of man had profit by) into Starres and Heauenly Signes, and (withall) that leaving of the World, and ascension of Astrea; of which ouid:

20 From this Storie also of the first Age, and from that part where Moses remembreth the Giants begotten by the Sonnes of good men youn the Daughters of the wicked (whom Moses calleth mightie men, and men of renowne) did they steale those wondrous great acts of their ancient Kings, and powerfull Giants; and againe their warre vndertaken against the gods, from the building of the Towre of Babel by the Giant Nimord, as S. Augustine termeth him. Which warre of their Giants L. de Civit. Dei. Cornelius Seuerus thus describeth:

Tentauêre (nefas) olim detrudere mundo Sydera, captiniá, lovis transferre Gigantes . 1 Imperium, er victo leges imponere calo.

The Giants did advance their wicked hand Against the Starres, to thrust them headlong downe, And robbing love of his Imperiall Crowne, On conquered Heauens to lay their proud command.

Whereby was meant that Nimrod purposed to raise the building of Babel to that height, as God neither by drawing waters from the deepe, nor by any conjunction of the Starres, should bury them under the moysture of a second Floud, but that by this building (if they had beene herein victorious) they would have given the Law to Heauen it selfe. Also the making of Leagues, Peace and Couenants among Heathen Nations and Kings, confirmed by Sacrifice, wherof Virgil both in the eight and twelfth of his Eneides hath a touch, was as it feemeth borrowed from Mofes, Exod. 24. Who when he read the Booke of the Couenant, sprinkled the people with bloud:

We find also many remembrances of Seth, the paternall Ancester of Henoch and Ioseph.Li.comra Noab: for Amenophis, the same King of £gypt, which raigned at such time as Mofes Appear. carried thence the children of Ifrael, (as of late some learned men mistaking his time supposed) called his Sonne and Successour Setho, of Seth, and of the same Seth (as many men of good judgement have granted) were the Princes of Thrace called O Seuthes, whereof there were many very famous. But herein was the memorie of Plut. in Iside. Seth most manifestly preserved, that the Agyptians worshipped Seth, as their most ancient parent, and of the first tradition: in honour of whome they called a principall Prouince Setheitica. Of the three chiefest Ivpiters; and the strange Storie of the third.

V T of all those Armies of Iupiters remembred by the Ancients, Cicero maketh but three, because those were of most fame : which other Writers have also done, who sought out, and laboured in their originals. 10 The first was supiter, the sonne of Ether and Dies, so called, because the one had reference to his celestiall conditions (for ather is as much as (hining or pure fire ) the other discouered his naturall vertues, which dayes and times make more perfect, and are the witnesses of mens actions.

The second was said to beethe sonne of Calum or Heauen, for the same former respect; and this Iupiter was an Arcadian, and King of Atheus.

The third of whom all the Gracian Fables were deuised, was of Creet (now Candie) the sonne of Saturne and Ops. The name derived from the Latine is taken of Juuans Pater, from the Greeke Word Zeus, it signifieth life, but somewhat strained. Boccas in his Genealogie of the gods conceiveth, that his name was borrowed from 20 Jupiter the Planet; but whether that Starre had fuch a name, before the same was giuen to men, I know not. Inpiter is hot and moist, temperate, modest, honest, aduenturous, liberall, mercifull, louing, and faithfull, (that is) giving these inclinations. And therefore those ancient Kings beautified with these conditions, might be called there after Iupiter; but howfoeuer they were, or were not with those vertues enriched, vet, by imitation, all kings in the eldest times assumed those Titles and Sirnames: great Princes affecting as high Titles of honor and reputation in the World, (howfoeuer deserved) as the worthiest, that ever were, acquired by their well deseruings. Ioues omnes Reges vocarunt antiqui, The Ancients called all Kings IVPITERS, as TZETZES in his Varia historia confirmeth: Regesolim Ioves vocarant omnes: Inolde 30 times all Nations called their Kings IVPITERS. But where this last and most remembred IVPITER was borne it is vncertaine. Some there are that make him of Creet: Mai.com.lii.c.7 others, that hee was but fent thither by his Mother Ops or Opis, to bee fostered and hidden from the furie of Titan his Vncle: because it was conditioned betweene Saturne and Titan, that Saturne being a yonger brother, and raigning (for his owne life) by Titans permission, hee should put to death all his male children, lest the Titans might be interrupted by any of them in their succession; which agreement because Saturne performed in his first borne, it is fained that Saturne denoured his owne children. Hereof Lycophron, thus turned into Latine:

Saturne to be the fatter is not knowne, By being the grave and buriall of his owne.

This composition betweene Titan and Saturne, Sybilla also witnesseth in these; Conceptis verbis : TITAN iurare coegit. SATURNUM, de se natum ne nutriat vilum, Quo possint regnave (enis post fata Nepotes.

> Things thus agreed: Titan made Saturne Sweare No Sonne to nourish; which by raigning might Vsurpe the right of Titans lawfull Heire.

But Opis the mother of Impiter, being delinered at once both of Impiter and Iuno, conveied Iupiter (first called Ly [anias) into Crete, as shee did afterwards his two brothers, Neptune and Pluto: where hee was brought up in Gnoffus, the chiefe Ci-tie of that Iland, by Cresta the King, or by the Curetes, a people and Nation thereof. Other challenge him to be of Thebes, and a Thebane; others call him an Arcadum.

others make him of Messena. The like contention is found among the Greekes touching his education and first fostering. Some affirme, that he was fed by Hony-bees: in recompence whereof he changed their blacke coats and skins into yellow; a reward well fitting fuch a God: others, that he was nourished by Beares: others, by To Goats: and of all these the idle Greekes have many prettie Tales. But in the end when Titan had knowledge, that Saturne had broken his faith, he fet on him, and tooke him

CHAP.6. S.5. of the Historie of the World.

But lastly, the Father and the Sonne equally ambitious, the one doubted the other. Saturne being the leffe powerfull fled into Italie, and left his Kingdomes in Greece to his sonne. And although this Prince at the first purchased great honour, and for his many vertues the name of Iupiter was given him; yet, after he was once fettled and became potent, he gaue himselfe ouer wholly to palliardize and adultery. without all respect of honour, Law, or Religion. And it is reported by such, as doe ascribe the actions of many to one Jupiter, that not therewith satisfied, hee was after-20 wards knowne to offend in the sinne of Sodome with Ganimedes and others; and did not onely begin with incest, marrying his owne fister Iuno, but he rauished, betraved. stole away, and tooke by strong hand all the beautifull women borne in his time, within the limits of his owne Kingdomes, or bordering them. Among whom these hereafter written were of greatest same, Niobe, Laodemia, and Alemena the wife of Amphitryon, by whom he had Pelasgus, Sarpedon, Argus, and Hercules: by Tayget he had Taygetus of whom the Mountaine Taygetus tooke name, with another some called Saon, of whom Sauona: by Antiope he had Amphion and Zetus: by Leda Castor and Pollux . Helen and Clytemnestra: by Danae Perfeus: by Iordana Deugalion: by Charme (the daughter of Eubulus ) Britomartis, by Protogenia hee had Athleus the Fa-30 ther of Endymion; and by Io (the Daughter of Inachus) Epaphus, the Founder of Memphis in Agypt: which Epaphis married Libya, of whom that Countrey tooke name, for so the Greekes afterward called Africa. Hee rauished Agina the Daughter of Elopus, and carryed her into the Iland Oenopia or Oenotria, afterward called Agina, on whom he begat Accus: by Torrhebia hee had Archefilaus and Carbius: by Ora Colaxes: he had also Dardanus by Electra, who built Dardanium, afterward Ilum and Troy. Hee begat the Brothers Talici, on Thalia, and on Garamantis Hiarhas. Hee had besides these (if they belye not their chiefe God) Phileus and Pilumnus, inventors of Bakers Craft; and I know not how many more; but I know well that hee could not be Father to all these, who were borne in Ages so farre differing. And of to these his seuerall ranishments, betrayings, stealing away of mens Wiues, Daughters and Sonnes, buying of Virgins, and the like, came in all those ancient Fables of his transformations into showres of Gold, Eagles, Buls, Birds, and Beasts; and of him, and by him (in effect) all that rabble of Gracian Forgeries. And yet did not the Greekes and Romanes feare to entitle this Monster, Optimus Maximus, though Cicero in his second Booke de natura Deorum affirme, that he deserved nothing lesse, and in his Oration pro domo sua, reprocheth Clodius for his Incest, by the name of supiter. His buriall was in Crete (laith Lucian) Cretenfes non folum natum apud se & sepultum Luc. in Sacrif. IOVEM testantur, (edetiam sepulchrum eins ostendunt: The Cretians or Candians doe not onely anow that IVPITER was borne and buried among them, but they shew his grave and O sepulchre: which Epiphanius also confirmeth, for in his time there remained the Monuments of his Tombe in the Mountaine Ialius. This Callimachus in his Hymnes also witnesseth, but as offended thereat, sayth thus;

The Cretians ever Lyars were, they care not what they fay: For they a Tombe haue built for thee, O King, that liu'st alway.

Diod.1.2.c.5.

Diodorus Siculus tels by way of report from the Libyan Fables, confirmed (as hee faith) by some Greeke Writers, that the originall of these gods was from the Westerne parts of Africk. For there among the Atlantida raigned one Vranus (which fignifieth Heauen) called so for his great skil in Astrologie, and for his knowledge, and benefits to the people, honoured by them as a God after his death. He had by many Wiues 45. Sons; but by his principall Wife Titea, hee had 17. Sons and two Daughters, all which were called after their Mothers name the Titanes. Of Titea, likewise it is said. that the for her goodnesse was canonized as a Goddesse, being dead, and called the Earth, as her Husband was stiled Heauen. But of al the children of Titea, her Daughter Basslea (which name sounding as Queene in English, she is by the Latine Trans- 10 lator of Diedorus called Regina) excelling the rest as far in vertue as in yeeres, was by generall consent of her Brethren, and of the people, appointed to rule as O ucene after her Fathers death, being as yet a Virgin. Shee tooke to Husband her Brother Hyperion, to whom thee bare a Sonne and a Daughter, called Sunne and Moone. The beautie and towardlinesse of these children moued her Brethren to enuie, and bred in them a feare of being excluded from the Succession: wherefore they tooke the Boy and drowned him in the River Eridanus, now called Poe. The losse of this childe caused his Sister to breake her owne necke; and the losse of both her Children made the Mother to play many mad prankes, dancing with Cymbals, after a wild fashion, in fight of all the people, before whom shee is said to have vanished away. Ere shee 20 dyed, her Sonne (as the Fable hath it) fignified vnto her in a Dreame, that he and his Sifter by the providence of God should become immortall, that also the Sunne and Moone should bee called by their names, and that their death should bee revenged vpon the Murderers. According to which it is faid, that the people did so call those two Planets, and withall held her selfe as a Goddesse, and termed her the great Mother, which name they had formerly given to her, for her motherly care in cherishing her Brethren whilest they were young. Hyperion and his Race being extinguished, the other Sonnes of Franus divided the Kingdome. Of these Alias and Saturno were chiefe. Atlas raigned ouer the Countries lying about the Mountaines, which afterward bare his name; a just and wife Prince, deeply skilfull in Astrologie, and for 30 inuention of the Sphere, sayd to haue supported Heauen. Hee had many Sonnes; but the principall of them called Hefperus, being of his Fathers qualities and studies, was fayd to have beene carried away by the Winde, from the top of an high Hill in the midst of his Contemplations, and his name in honour of him, imposed by the people vponthe Morning Starre. The seuen Daughters of Atlas were also sayd to have beene excellent Ladies, who accompanying such as came to be deisted, or registred among the Worthies, brought forth Children, answerable in qualitie to those that begat them. Of these it is held, that the seuen Starres called Pleiades tooke name. Saturne the Brother of Atlas raigned in Sicilia, part of Africk and Italie. Iupiter another of the Sonnes of Vranus, raigned in Crete; who had tenne Sonnes which he 40 called Curetes; he called that Iland after his Wives name Idea; in which Ile he dyed, and was buried. But this Inpiter must not have beene that great one, but Vncle to the Great Iupiter, if these Fables of the Libyans were true. Saturne (as these Libyans tell the Tale) was a great Tyrant, and fortified strong places, the better to keepe his people in subjection. His Sister Rhea was married to Hammon, who raigned in some part of Africk. Hammon louing others as well as his Wife, or better, got a Daughter, called Minerua, neere to the River Triton, who thereupon was called Tritonia. Hee also begat on Amalthea a Sonne called Bacchus, whom he caused secretly for feare of his life to be brought up at Ny/a, an Iland in the River Triton, under the tuition of his Daughter Minerua, and certaine Nymphes. To Amalthea he gaue in reward a goodly 50 Countrie, that lay on the Sea-coast, bending in forme of a horne, whence grew the Tale of Amaleheas plentifull Horne, famous among the Poets. When Rhea heard these newes, she fled from her Husband to her Brother Saturne, who not onely entertained her as a Sister, but tooke her to wife, and at her instigation made warre vpon Hammen.

Hammon, vanquished him by affistance of the Titanes, and made him flee into Crete. The Curetes, Impiters children before mentioned, held the Iland at that time; which was new named Crete by Hammon, after the name of Creta the Kings Daughter, whom he tooke to wife, and had with her (women as may seeme being very gracious in those times) the Kingdome. Bacchus was growne a proper yong man, had found out the making of wine, the arte of planting trees, and many things else commodious for mankinde, before the flight of his Mother in law. Now therefore hearing report of all that had hapned, and that Saturne was comming against him with the Titanes; he leuved an Armie, to which the Amazons living not farre from o Ny/a, added great forces, in love of Minerua, who was entred into their profession. So Bacchus leading the men, and Minerus the women, they fet forward against Saturne, met him, ouerthrew him, and taking many of the Titanes prisoners, returned to Nyla; where pardoning the prisoners, that promised to become his true followers, he prepared for a fecond Expedition. In the fecond Expedition he behaued himfelfe fo well, that he wan the love of all the people by whom he passed; infomuch that partly for good affection to him, partly in hatred of Saturnes rigorous gouernement, he was greatly strengthened, and the Enemie as much infeebled by daily reuolts: Comming to the Citie of Hammon, he wan a battaile of Saturne, before the very walls. After which Saturne with his wife Rhea fled by night, fetting the Towne on fire to despight Bacchus. But they were caught in their flight, pardoned by Bacchus, and kindly entreated. Saturne had a yong sonne by Rhea, called Jupiter. This child Bacchus tooke with him in a great Expedition that he made into the East countries; and comming into £gypt, he left this Iupiter, being then a Boy, Gouernour of the Countrie; but appointed vnto him as an Ouer-feer, one Olympus, of whom Impiter grew to be called Olympius. Whilest Bacchus trauayled through all Nations, as far as into India, doing good in all places, and teaching many things profitable to the life of man; the Titanes had found out his Father Hammon in Crete, and began to warre vpon him. But Bacchus returned out of India, with whom Iupiter from &gypt, and his fifter Minerua, together with the rest that afterwards were held as o gods, ioyning all their forces, went into Crete, ouerthrew the Titanes, chased them, tooke, and fluethem, and freed the world of them all. After all this, when Hammon and Bacchus were dead, they were deified; and the great Impiter the sonne of Saturne fucceeding them, reigned Lord alone over all the world, having none of the Titanes left aliue, nor any other to disturbe him. Betweene this tale of the Libyan Gods, and the Levotian fables of Olivis, there is a rude refemblance, that may cause them both to be taken for the crooked Images of some one true historie. For the expeditions of Ofiris, and of Bacchus; the warres of the Giants in the one storie, of the Titanes in the other; the Kingdome of Agypt given by Hercules Lybicus to Orus, by Bacchus to Impirer, the Rattles of 1/is, and the Cymbals of Basilea, with many pettie circumstan-40 ces, neerely enough resemble each other, howsoener not alike fitted to the right persons, Sanchoniato (as Eusebius cites him) would have all these to be Phanicians, Eusebhians. and is earnest in saying, That it is a true storie, and no Allegorie. Yet he makes it feeme the more allegoricall, by giving to Vranus or Heaven for Daughters, Fate and Beautie, and the like, with addition of much fabulous matter, omitted by Diederus, though Diedorus have enough. To the Genealogie he addes Elius or the Sunne, as Father of Vranus, and among the children of Vranus, Iapetus, Betilus, and Dagon (whom Diedorus doth not mention by their names) giving withall to Vranus the proper name of Terrenus or Indigena, and of Illus to Saturne, but omitting Iupiter of Crete. The Pedigree of them is this:

1/4: Buch Bafilea Amal Iapetu: thea. Bacchu Epime theus. Deuca-Alcyo-Elettra.

Of CHAM, and other wicked ones, whereof some gat, some affected the name of Gods.

F Inpiter Belus, the sonne of Saturnus Babylonicus, otherwise Nimred, it seemeth that Cicero had not heard, (at least by that name) who was more ancient than any of the former three by him remembred: for long after these times were the Greekes but Saluages, if they seeke no farther off for their Gods.

But the Agyptians, euen after the floud, began (somewhat before this Chaldaan Inpiter) to intitle Cham, the parent of their owne Mizraim, Inpiter Chammon, or Hammon. For the Etymologie of this word (Hammon) which the Greekes deduce ab arenis; from the fands, is ridiculous (faith Peucer;) neither yet is his owne much better, who brings it from Hammath, which fignifieth heate : because the said Temple of Jupiter Hammon was seated in Libya, where the ayre is exceeding hot and fcortching. And as for the antiquitie of the latter Inpiter (among the Greekes and Romans the most renowned) it is certaine that he was borne not long before the war of Troy, as by many of his sonnes is made manifest; namely, Castor, Pollux, Hercules, Sarpedon, and others, which lived in that age of Priamus, vnder whom, and with whom Troy was destroyed.

Now feeing that mortall men, and the most wicked, were esteemed immortall among the Heathen; it was not to be wondred at, that Alexander Macedon, Tyberius, 10 Nero, Caligula, and others, fought to be numbred among them, who were as deformed monsters as the rest: For by what reason could the same Deitie be denved vnto Laurentia and Flora, which was given to Venus? feeing they were as notorious and famous Harlots as shee was.

d. VII.

That the wifer of the ancient Heathen had farre better opinions of God.

Vt that euer Pythagoras, or Plato, or Orpheus, with many other ancient and excellently learned, believed in any of these fooleries, it cannot be suspected, though some of them (ouer-busily) have mixed their owne inventions with the Scriptures: for, in punishment for their fictions, did Pythagor as hang both Homer and Hesiodus in hell, where he fayned that they were perpetually stung and pinched with Serpents. Yet it cannot be doubted, but that Homer had read over all the bookes of Moles, as by places stolne thence, almost word for word, may appeare; of which Instine Martyr remembreth many in that Treatise converted by Mirandula. As for Plato, though he disfembled in somethings, for feare of the Inquisition of the Areopagites, yet S. Augu-O fline hathalreadie answered for him (as before remembred) Et mirifice is delectatus est, qua de uno Deo tradita fuerant; And he was greatly delighted in the doctrine of one God, faith Iustine Martyr. Now howsoeuer Lattantius pleased to reprehend Plate, because (saith he) Plato sought knowledge from the Egyptians, and the Chaldeans, neglecting the lewes, and the bookes of Moses: Eusebius, Cyrillus, and Origen, finde Euseb, Preb. E. reason to beleeve the contrarie, thinking that from thence he tooke the grounds of uang. lib. 11. all by him written of God, or fauouring of Divinitie: and the same opinion had S. Ambrele of Pythagoras.

But whether it were out of the same vanitie, which possess all those learned Philosophers and Poets, that Plate also published (not vnder the right Authors names) those things which he had read in the Scriptures; or fearing the severitie of the Areopegites, and the example of his Master Socrates, by them put to death by poylon, I cannot judge. Instine Martyr (as it seemeth) ascribeth it wholly to Platoes feare, whose wordes among many other of the same effect, are these: PLATO Mosis mentionem facere, ob id, quod vnum folumg, Deum docuerat, sibi apud Athenienses tutum tall matters non putauit, veritus Arcopagum; PLATO fearing the Arcopagites thought it not fafe for him among the Athenians to make mention of Moses, that he taught that there is but one God. But for that Divinitie which he hath written in TIMEO; id ipfum de Deo dif- therein first feruit quod & Moses; He discoursed and taught the same of God (faith Ivstine Mar-TYR) which Moses did. For where it pleased God by his Angell to answer Moses, O Ego sum existens (which is) Iam; and, existens missi me advos; I am hath sent me unto Pausanin Attic. Jou, herein did Plato (faith Iustine Martyr) no otherwise differ then that Moses vied Nat. com. 1.2.6.7 the word (qui) and Plato the word quod: Moses enim qui existit (inquit) PLATO Gent. sol.8. quadexistit; For Moses saith, He who is; PLATO, That which is. Now of Gods in- 14. ve sup. comprehensible nature, and of the difficultie either to conceiue, or expresse the same, Exad 3.14.

he giueth this testimonie : Genitorem Vniuersitatis tam difficile est inuenire, quam inuentum impossibile digne profari; It is as hard to finde out the Greator of the Vniner fall, as it is impossible, if he were found, to speake of him worthily. And what can be more agreeable to the Maiestie of Gods nature, then this propertie by Plato acknowledged ? Deus bonus & quidem. Deus causa bonorum: malorum autem omnium non sausa; God is absolutely good, and so (assuredly) the cause of all that is good but of any thing that is evill he is no cause at all : and againe, Charitas Dei fuit causa factionis mundi , & originis omnium rerum: The love of God was the cause of the worlds creating, and the original of all things. Apple 1vs the Platonist : Summus Deus infinitus est, non (olum loci exclusione, sed etiam natura dignitate: Et nihil est Deo similius & gratius, quam vir animo perfecto bonus; The 10 mest high God is also an infinite God, not only by exclusion of place, but by the dignitie of nature : neither is there any thing more like or more acceptable to God then a man of a perfect beart. THALES affirmed, that God comprehended all things, and that God was of all things the most ancient : Quia nunquam effe capit; Because he neuer had any beoinning. ZENO, that God beheld euen the thoughts of men. Athenodorus, that therefore all men ought to be carefull in the actions of their life, because God was euervwhere present, and beheld all done. But what can be more agreeable to Moses storie of the Creation, then this opinion and description of the Worlds beginning in Euripides, Scholler of Anaxagoras?

> Cælum terrag, vnius formæ fuit: Sed cum fuissent abiuncta amplexu mutuo, Emersit omnis in lucem res progenita, Arbores, aves, fera, quafg, affert mare, Genusg, mortalium.

Heaven and Earth one forme did beare: But when disioyned once they were From mutuall embraces. All things to light appeared then, Of trees, birds, beafts, fishes, and men The still-remayning races.

And as in Pythagoras, in Socrates, and in Plato: so we finde the same excellent understanding in orpheus, who enery-where expressed the infinite and sole power of one God, though he vie the name of IVPITER, thereby to avoid the entire and danger of the time; but that he could attribute those things to the sonnes of men, and mortall creatures, which he doth to this IVPITER, there is no man who hath ever heard of God, that can imagine.

Nomina Deorum (saith MIRANDVLA) quos ORPHEVS canit, non decipientium da- 40 monum , à quibus malum & non bonum prouenit ; (ed naturalium virtutum dininarumg, funt nomina; The names of those Gods whom ORPHEVS doth sing, are not of decesuing Deuils, from whom enill comes, and not goodnesse; but they are the names of natural and diuine vertues. Yea, that he yet reacheth higher, and speaketh of God himselfe, this his instruction to Musaus, and the Hymne following teach vs : Respiciens vero ad divinum hunc sermonem ei diligenter animum aduerte intendens cor dis rationis capax conceptaculum : rectam autem ascende viam, & solum aspice mundi Regem. Vinus est ex fe genitus, ex eo omnianata sunt : Ipse vero in illis versatur, nec quisquam cum intueri potest mortalium, sed ipse nihilominus omnes intuetur.

The first of all is Goo, and the same last is he. God is the head and midst, yea from him all things be. God is the Base of earth, and of the starred skie. He is the male and female too, shall never die. The spirit of all is God, the SVNNE, the MOONE, and what is higher. The King, th'originall of all, of all the end. For close in holy brest he all did comprehend, Whence all to bleffed light, his wondrous power did fend.

Now besides these former testimonies, that all the learned men of ancient times were not so stupid and ignorant, as the Agyptians, Grecians, and other Nations by them infected were I will onely repeate two or three other opinions, and leaue the Reader to those large and learned Collections of Instine Martyr, Clemens, Lattantius, Eusebius, Engubinus, Pencer, Plesis, Danaus, and others. For Cleanthes the Stoick, being demanded of what nature God was, described him by these attributes and 30 properties: Boms, iustus, sanctus, seipsum possidens, viilu, speciosus, optimus, seuerus, liber, semper commodus, tutus, gloriosus, charitas, &c. Good, inst, holy, possessing himselfe, profitable, beautifull, best, senere, free, alwayes doing good, safe without feare, glorious, and selfe charitie. Erich ARMVs affirmed, that God who beheld all things, and pierced enery nature, was only and enerywhere powerfull: agreeing with DEMOCRITYS: Rex omnium ipfe folus; He is the only King of Kings: and with Pindarus the Poet, Deus unus, Pater, creator summus, atq. optimus artifex, qui progressus singuis dinersos secundum merita prabet; One God, the Father, the most high Creator, and best artificer, who giueth to every thing divers proceedings according to their deferts. This God (faith Antis-THENES) cannot be resembled to any thing, and therefore not elsewhere knowne; Nisi in o patria illa perenni, cuius imaginem nullam habes : Saue onely in that euerlasting Countrey, whose image thou hast none at all. Hereof also XENOPHANES COLOPHONIVS: Vnus Deus inter Deos & homines maximus, nec corpore, nec mente mortalibus similis, There is one God among gods and men most powerfull, neither corporally, nor mentally like unto mortals : and X ENOPHON . Deus qui omnia quatit, & omnia quicscere facit , magnus potenfa, quod omnibus patet : qualis autem forma sit, nemini patet, nisi ipsi soli, qui luce sua omnia perluftrat; God who shaketh all things, and setteth all things at rest, is great and mightie, as is manifest to all: but of what forme he is, it is manifest to mone, saue only to himselfe, who illuminateth all things with his ownelight. Finally, Plato faith : Totius rerum nature caufa, & ratio, & origo Deus, summus animi genitor, aternus animantium sospitator, asi-50 duus mundi sui opisex, sine propagatione genitor, neg, loco, neg, tempore vilo comprensus, cog, paucis cogitabilis, nemini effabilu; God is the cause, ground, and original of the whole nature of things, the most high Father of the Soule, the eternal preserver of living creatures, the continual framer of his world, a begetter without any propagation, comprehended neither in any place nor time: therefore few can conceive him in thought none can expresse what he is. Hieron. in Com. Therefore was it faid by S. HIEROME, St enim cunctos Philosophorum reuoluas libros. neselle est ut in eu reperias aliquam partem vasorum Dei, ut apud PLATONEM, fabricatorem mundi, Deum: apud Zenonem Stoicorum Principem, inferes & immortales animas, Oc. If thou consider all the bookes of the Philosophers, thou canst not but finde in them Come part of the Vestels of God, as in PLATO, God the Creator of the world: In ZENO Prince of the Stoicks . Hell and immortall soules , &c. And this is certayne, that if we looke into the wifedome of all Ages, we shall finde that there neuer was man of folid vnderstanding or excellent judgement : neuer any man whose mind the arte of education hath not bended; whose eyes a foolish superstition hath not afterward blinded; whose apprehensions are sober, and by a pensiue inspection aduised; but 10 that he hath found by an vnresistable necessitie, one true God, and everlasting being, all for euer causing, and all for euer sustayning; which no man among the Heathen hath with more reuerence acknowledged, or more learnedly express, then that Agyptian Hermes, how soeuer it fayled afterward in his posteritie: all being at length by deuillish policie of the Agyptian Priests purposely obscured; who invented new gods, and those innumerable, best forting (as the Deuill perswaded them) with vulgar capacities, and fittest to keepe in awe and order their common people.

d. VIII.

That Heathenisme and Indaisme, after many wounds, were at length about the same time under IVLIAN miraculously confounded.

Vt all these are againe vanished: for the inventions of mortall men are no lesse mortall then themselves. The Fire, which the Chaldeans worshipped for a God, is crept into euery mans chimney, which the lacke of fuell starueth, water quencheth, and want of ayre suffocateth: Iupiter is no more vexed with Iunoes ielousies; Death hath perfwaded him to chastitie, and her to patience; and that Time which hath deuoured it selfe, hath also eaten vp both the Bodies and Images of him and his : yea, their 10 stately Temples of stone and durefull Marble. The houses and sumptuous buildings erected to Baal, can no where be found vpon the earth; nor any monument of that glorious Temple consecrated to Diana. There are none now in Phanicia, that lament the death of Adonis; nor any in Libya, Creta, Thessalia, or elsewhere, that can aske counsaile or helpe from Inpiter. The great god Pan hath broken his Pipes, Apolloes Priests are become speechlesse; and the Trade of riddles in Oracles, with the Deuills telling mens fortunes therein, is taken vp by counterfait Agrptuns, and coozening Aftrologers.

But it was long ere the Deuill gaue way to these his ouer-throwes and dishonors : for after the Temple of Apollo at Delphos (one of his chiefe Mansions) was 40 many times robbed, burnt, and destroyed; yet by his diligence the same was often enriched, repayred, and reedified againe, till by the hand of God himselfe it received the last and veter subnersion. For it was first robbed of all the Idols and Ornaments therein by the Eubaan Pyrates: Secondly, by the Phlegians vtterly fackt: Thirdly, by Pyrrhus the sonne of Achilles: Fourthly, by the Armie of Xerxes: Fiftly, by the Captaynes of the Phocenfes: Sixtly, by Nero, who carryed thence fine hundred brazen Images: all which were new made, and therein againe fet vp at the common charge. But what soeuer was gathered betweene the time of Nero and Constantine, the Christian Armie made spoile of, defacing as much as the time permitted them; notwithstanding all this it was againe gloriously rebuilt, and so remayned till such time as Iulian the Apostata sent thither to know the successe of his Parthian enterprise, at which time it was veterly burnt and consumed with fire from Heauen; and the image of Apollo himselfe, and all the rest of the Idols therein molten downe and lost in the earth. The

The like successe had the lewes in the same tulians time, when by his permission they affembled themselves to rebuild the Temple of Hierusalem: for while they were buffed to lay the foundations, their buildings were overthrowne by an Earthquake. and many thousands of the lewes were overwhelmed with the ruines, and others flaine, and scattered by Tempest and Thunder: though Am. Marcellinus report it more Am. Mar. 123; favourably for the lewes, ascribing this to the nature of that Element. For, saith hees cap.1. Allypius and the Ruler of the Province of Indea, being by Iulian busied in the reedifying of this Temple, flaming Bals of fire iffuing neere the foundation, and oft confuming the Workemen, made the enterprize frustrate.

Of the last refuges of the Deuill to maintaine his Kingdome.

Ow the Deuill, because hee cannot play upon the open Stage of this World (as in those dayes) and being still as industrious as euer, findes it more for his aduantage to creepe into the mindes of men; and inhabiting in the Temples of their hearts, workes them to a more effe-Auall adoration of himselfe then euer. For whereas hee first taught them to facrifice to Monsters, to dead stones cut into faces of Beasts, Birds, and other mixt Natures; hee now fets before them the high and shining Idoll of glorie. the All-commanding Image of bright Gold. He tels them that Truth is the Goddesse of dangers and opressions: that chastitie is the enemie of Nature; and lastly. that as all vertue (in generall) is without taste: so pleasure satisfieth and delighteth euery sense: for true wisedome (sayth hee) is exercised in nothing else, then in the obtaining of power to oppresse, and of riches to maintaine plentifully our worldly delights. And if this Arch-politician finde in his pupils any remorfe, any feare or feeling of Gods future Judgement, hee perswades them that God hath so great need of mens foules, that he will accept them at any time, and vpon any conditions: interorupting by his vigilant endeuours all offer of timefull returne towardes God by lave ing those great blockes of rugged pouertie, and despised contempt in the narrow passage leading to his divine presence. But as the minde of man hath two Ports, the one alwayes frequented by the entrance of manifold vanities; the other defolate and ouer-growne with graffe, by which enter our charitable thoughts and divine contemplations: so hath that of death a double and twofold opening: worldly miferie passing by the one, worldly prosperitie by the other: at the entrance of the one wee find our fufferings and patience to attend vs: (all which have gone before vs to prepare our joyes) at the other our cruelties, couetous nesse, licentious nesse, injustice, and oppressions (the Harbingers of most fearefull and terribe forrow) staying for vs. And as the Deuill our most industrious enemie was euer most diligent: fo is he now more laborious then euer: the long day of Mankind drawing fast towards an euening, and the Worlds Tragedie and time neere at an end.

CHAP. VII. Of NOAHS Floud.

Of Gods fore-warning; and some humane testimonies; and some doubting touching the truth of NOAH'S Floud.

this destruction it pleased God to give warning vnto Noah: who (faith lo (ephus) fearing to perish among the rest, Secedens cum suis in aliam regionem migrauit: He departed with his children, and transiled into another Region. And of these Giants from whom Noab withdrew himselfe, Berofus writerh in this manner; That they exceeded in all forts of inhumane and unnaturall wickednesse, and that they were contemptores & religionis & Deorum, contemners of religion and of the Gods: a- 20 mong which mightie men (layth Berefus) vnus erat qui Deorum venerantior, & prudentior cunctis, &c. huic nomen erat NoAH, There was one more wife and renerencing the Gods then the reft, whose name was No AH: who with his three sonnes Sem, Iaphetus and Cham, and with their Wines, and the Wife of Noah, (namely Titea the great, Pandora, Noela, and Noeela) preserved themselves in the Arke. This Arke God commanded Noah to prepare: And God Saydunto No AH, Make thee an Arke of Pine-trees: thou shalt make Cabines in the Arke, and shalt pitch it within, and without with Pitch. For God made Noah to know that an end of all flesh was at hand, and that the graves of the rebellious and cruell Generations were alreadie fashioned in the Cloudes, which soone after should swal-, low vp and couer all living creatures, which breathed in the Ayre: Noah and his Family excepted.

But this vniuerfall graue of waters, and generall Deluge hath not beene received by all; for divine testimonies doe not perswade all naturall men to those things, to which their owne reason cannot reach : Dum obvoluta in obscuro veritas latet : whilest the truth lieth wrapped up in obscuritie. Many there are who have disputed against the universalitie of this overflowing, and have judged that this Floud of Noah fell but on some particular places and Kingdomes: moued so to thinke, because in elder ages there haue beene many other Flouds (as they suppose) of that nature. Hereof Nicholaus Damascenus writeth in this manner, as his words are cited by Iosephvs: Istopantia ca. Est super Minyadam excelsus mons in Armenia, qui Baris appellatur, in quo multos consu-Euleb de prapile gientes sermo est diluui tempore liberatos, & quendam simul in Area deuectum in huiui vertice halisse, lignorumg, relliquias multo tempore conservatas, qui fortasse is suit, de quo etiam Moses Iudaorum Legislator scribit : thus farre this Authour. There is (fayth hee) aboue Minyada (or the Countrey of Minya) an exceeding high Mountaine in Armenia, called Baris : on which it is reported, that many having fled thither were faued in the time of the Deluge: and that one was carried in an Arke, and refted upon the top of the Mountaine, whereanthere remained a long time after certaine pieces thereof; and this might be the same, of which Moses the Law-giver of the lewes maketh mention. And of this opinion were the Thalmudists (fayth Annius) that many Giants saued themselves of vpon Mount Ston.

But Berosus (who after Moses was one of the most ancient, howsoener hee have beene since deformed and corrupted) doth in the substance of all agree with Mosts as touching the generall Floud, taking from thence the beginning of his Historiein these words: Ante aquarum cladem famosam, qua universus perit Orbis, oc. Before that famous destruction of Waters, by which the world V niner sall perished : witnessing withall, that Noah with his Wife Tites, and his three Sonnes with their Wines (in all eight persons) were onely saued.

ò. I I.

Of the Floud in the time of Ogyges: and that this was not NOAH'S Floud.

Снар.7. $.2.

VT from the vanitie of the Greekes, the Corrupters of all truth, (fayth Lactantius) who without all ground of certaintie vaunt their Antiquitie, came the errour first of all: who therein flattering themselues alfo, fought to perswade the World, that there was no Floud preceded the Floud of Ogyges, King of the Thebans in Baotia, or rather of Attica;

and therefore fayth Rhodoginus; OGYGVM id appellant Poeta, tanquam peruetus dinerio, Rhodos, 15,033; ab OGYGE vetuftismo: The Poets gave the name of OGYGIA to thines exceeding ancient, as of OGYGES the most ancient.

But let Ogyges be as ancient as those men can make him, yet it is manifest, that hee o lived but in Iacobs time (though Eufebius makes him later, and in Mofes time) and Eufebide prap. was borne 67. yeeres after him. There is also an opinion, that Ogyges was Cadmus Enang. l. 100.30 (and then was he farre later) as Rhodoginus in the ninth Booke of his Antiquities remembreth : Sunt tamen qui in Agypto regnasse autument bunc : vnde sit CADMVs qui in Graciam profectus Thebas condidit, à boue ingulato sie nuncupatas; quontam Syrorum lingua bos dicitur Thebe. There are (fayth he) who thinke that this Ogyges did raigne in Egypt, whereby he should be CADMVS, who transiling into Grecce built Thebes, fo named of a Beefe flaine: because in the Syrian Language, a Beefe is called Thebe.

But this Floud of Ogyges fell in the yeare of the World 3440. according to Eusebius, who followed the account of the Septuagint: and the Floud of Noah in the yeere 20 2242, after the same account; and so there came 1200, yeeres betweene these Flouds, wanting but two, though heerein Eufebius was much mistaken, and corrected this opinion in his Chronologie. Now although the verie yeere and time of this ouerflowing in Achaia, or rather Attica, be not precisely set downe, but that there is a great differenceamong Writers, yet wholoeuer makes it most ancient, finds aboue 500. yeeres difference betweene that and the generall Floud.

For Paulus Orofius affirmes, that this tempest fell voon the Athenians, but 1040. Liba.c.1. yeeres before Rome built. Bucholzerus fayth it was 1042. elder then Rome; which was founded (according to the same Buchelzerus) in the Worlds yeere 2219.though after the account which I follow (and whereof I will give my reasons in the Story of Abraham) it was built in the Worlds yeere 3280. Now the general! Floud preceded the building of Rome (fayth Bucholzerus) 1563. yeeres: and the Floud of Ogyges 40 (as before) 1043. Hence it followeth by easie calculation, that (if he place Ogyges in his true age) the difference betweene these two Flouds must bee 520. yeeres, to which we (allowing 60.more) find 580. And that this of Ogyges was not the same of Noah (except we call Noah, Ogyges prifens, as some doe) it appeares by this, that xenophon. Anthe Floud of Ogyges then King of Attica or Ogygia, did not extend it selfe any fur- mianus. ther then the bankes of Archi-pelago, or the Agean Sea. For whereas Mela, Plinie, and Mela.lib.3. Solinus witnesse, that the Citie of Toppe in Indea was founded before the Floud; and Plin.lib.5. that (notwithstanding the waight of Waters) there remained on certaine Altars Ioppe opoidum of stone the Title of the King, and of his Brother PHINEVS, with many of the antiquissimum grounds of their Religion: fure, it is no where found among prophane Historians on the toto, others antenundation of the Solitorians of the Solito nor in the Scriptures, that ever the Floud of Ogyges spred it selfe over any part of Sy-nem terrarum ria, much lesse over all the Earth. But that it drowned both the Regions of Attica conditum. Soline about Athens, and that of Achaia in Peloponnesus, it is very probable. For it see- ibid.

Of this Floud of Ogyges was invented the Fable of Apollo and Diana. For Latona 10 the Daughter of Caus, the Son of Tstan, being beloued and forced by IVPITER, and by him gotten with childe, Iv No thereat enraged, permitted her (as they fay) no part of the Earth to bee deliuerd on; and withall caused the monstrous Serpent Python to follow and affright her, where soeuer shee trauailed, till at length arriving at the Ile of Ortigia she was there received: in which she was delivered, first of Diana, and then of Apollo, being Twins; whereof BARLAAM makes this exposition: That at fuch time as the Deluge (which happened in Ogyges his Raigne) ceased, out of the abundant moissure of the Earth (heat by putrefaction being thereto mixed) there were exhaled such thicke mists and fogges, that in Attica, and along the Coasts of the Agaan Sea, neyther the beames of the Sunne by day, nor of the Moone by 10 night could pierce the Ayre, or be perceived by the inhabitants: so as when at length (the Earth being dryed, and these vapours dissipated) the Ayre began to be cleere, and the people of Ortygia espied the light of the Moone somewhat before day, and in the same morning the Sunne also appeared: fabulously (because DIANA represented the Moone, and Arorio the Sunne) they were reported to bee borne in the Ile of Ortygia, thereof afterwardes called Delos: which fignifieth ma-

And surely it is not improbable, that the Floud of Ogyges, being so great, as Hiflories have reported it, was accompanied with much alteration of the Ayre sensibly discerned in those parts, and some vnusuall face of the Skies. Varre in his Bookes, De 20 gente populi Romani (as he is cited by Saint AVGVSTINE) reporteth out of CASTOR, that fo great a Miracle happened in the Starre of Venus, as neuer was seene before, nor in after-times: For the colour, the greatnesse, the figure, and the course of it, were changed. This fell out as ADRASTVS CYZICENVS, and Dion Neapolites, famous Mathematicians affirmed in the time of Ogyges.

Now concerning the course of that or any other Planet, I doe not remember, that I have any where read, of lo good Altrologers flourishing among the Greekes, or elle where in those dayes as were likely to make any calculation of the revolutions of the Planets so exact, that it should need no reformation. Of the colour and magnitude. I see no reason why the difference found in the Starre of Venus should bee so held miraculous; confidering that leffer mifts and fogges, than those which couered Greece with so long darknesse, doe familiarly present our senses with as great alterations in the Sunne and Moone. That the figure should varie, questionlesse it was very strange : Yet I cannot hold it any prodigie : for it stands well with good reason, that the fide of Venus which the Sunne beholds, being enlightned by him, the opposite halfe should remaine shadowed, whereby that Planet would, vnto our eyes, descrying onely that part whereon the light falleth, appeare to bee horned, as the Moone doth seeme; if distance (as in other things) did not hinder the apprehension of our

GALILEVS, a worthy Astrologer now living, who by the helpe of perspective p Glaffes hath found in the Starres many things vnknowne to the Ancients, affirmeth fo much to have beene discouered in Venus by his late observations. Whether some waterie disposition of the Ayre might present as much to them that lined with ogges, as Galilaus hath feene through his Instrument; I cannot telifure I am, that the dif

concrie of a truth formerly vnknowne, doth rather convince man of ignorance, then nature of errour. One thing herein is worthy to be noted, that this great, but particular Floud of Ogyges, was (as appeareth by this of Saint Avgvstine) accompanied with fuch vnufuall (and therefore the more dreadfull, though naturall) fignes testifying the concurrence of causes with effects in that inundation; whereas the Floud of Noah which was generall and altogether miraculous, may feeme to haue had no other token, or foreshewing, then the long preaching of Noah himselfe, which was not fegarded: for they were eating and drinking, when the Floud came fodainly, and tooke them all away.

Of DEVCALIONS Floud: and that this was not No AHS Floud: nor the Vmbri in Italie a remnant of any univer fall Floud.

CHAP. 7. S.3.

Second Floud of great fame, and of which the time is more certaine. was that of Deucation in Theffalia, of which Saint Augustine out of Varro: His temporibus ( Dt VARRO Scribit ) regnante Atheniensibus CRANAO. Successore Cecropis (vt autemnostri, Evsebivs & Hieronymys) adhuc codem CECROPE permanente, diluuium fuit, quod appellatum est

DEVCALIONIS: (that is) In these times (as VARRO reporteth) CRANAVS the succellour of CECROPS governing the Athenians, or (as our EVSEBIVS and HIEROME

(ay) CECROPS yet lining, that Floud (called DEVCALIONS) happened.

And in the beginning of the elementh Chapter of the same eighteenth Booke, hee vieth these words: Eduxit ergo Moses ex Egypto populum Dei nouisimo tempore CECROPIS Atheniensium Regis, cum apud Asserbaret Ascat Ades, apud Sicvonies MARATHUS, apud Arginos TRIOPAS: Moses led the People of Godout Agypt about the latter times of CECR OPS King of the Athenians. ASCATADES raigning over the Assyrians, over the Sicyonians MARATHYS, and over the Argives TRIOPAS: fo as to leaving the curiolitie of a few yeeres, more or leffe, it appeareth, that this Floud of Deucalion was eyther at the egression of the children of Israel out of Agypt, or neere it: and then after Noah 753. yeeres, according to Functius, who makes Cecrops to liue in the yeere of the World 2409 or if we follow MERCATOR, then 739 yeeres after Noah, and in the yeere of the World 2395. But if Deucation were borne in the age of the World 2356. according to Codoman; then giving vnto Deucalion fortic yeeres of age when this Floud happened, it falleth within one yeere of Mercators account. But Deucalion by all approoued Historians is said to have beene 82. yeeres olde at that time. Now Clemens Alexandrinus dates the time of this Floud of Deucalion, and the conflagration and burning in Phaetons time, by the Raigne of Crotopus 40 King of the Argines; but Crotopus lived King of the Argines fixe yeeres after Ifrael departed £ 2796, which makes twentie yeeres difference, according to Functius, who will have this Floud and burning to have fallen fourteene yeeres before Moles left Egypt: for he gaue of the Worlds yeeres to the Floud and burning the yeere 2440. and to Moles his egression the yeere 2454. And yet Cedrenus thinkes that Moles was cedron. 1. 1.34. more ancient, and lived with Inachus; but that cannot bee true: for then had the Floud of Dencalion, and the burning of Phaeton, preceded the Floud of Ogyges, which is denied by all: for that of The falie (called Deucalions) followed that of Attica (called Ogygia) at least 250. yeeres or thereabouts. Eusebius in his Chronologie makes it 230. and so doth P. Orosius: Eusebius about the 50. yeere of Moses life, and 50 Cyrillus about the 67. and both after 2V gahs Floud 770. yeeres : for these bee Clemens Alexandrinus his words: Fuit autem in Gracia tempore quidem PHORONEI, qui fuit Clem. Alex. I. post In Achym, inundatio que fuit tempore Ogygis, There happened in Greece in the time of PHORONEYS, who lived after INACHVS, the Floud of OGYGES. Now if the Floud of Ogyges in Attica were 1020. or 1016. yeeres before the first Olympiad, according to Eusebius and Orosius; (as before) then is it manifest, that taking 763. out of this number of 1020 it fals out that ogyges Floud happened before the Hebrewes left £gypt 250. yeeres, or 260. yeeres, according to the difference betweene the o-Eusebin Chron. pinions of Eusebius and Orosius. And for my selse (who rather follow those Chrono. logers, which give 60. yeeres more to Abraham after the Floud, then the rest) I reckon the times which come betweene these Flouds in this fort. The generall Floud was in the yeere of the World 1656. Jacob was borne in the yeere of the World 2160 fo as from the beginning of the Floud to IACORS birth, there were confumed 512. veeres. Ogyges Floudhappened 100. yeeres after IACOB was borne; and therefore after the generall Floud 613. yeeres. Now Deucalion was borne in the yeere of the to World 2356, and had lived 82: yeeres, when his Kingdome of Theffalie was overwhelmed; (which added to 2356. make 2438.) his Floud was after Noahs Floud ended 782. yeeres. And hereto Annius his Xenophon agreeth, who makes 700. yeeres betweenethe generall Floud and Deucalions birth; to which adde 82. yeeres of his Age(as before) and then the Floud of The false followed the general 782. yeeres. The words of that Xenophon are thefe: Ab inundatione terrarum adortum DEVCALIONIS, (ecundo anno Sphari, feptingenti supputantur anni, qui natus anno dues & octoginta Thef-Caliam vidit inundatam, From the drowning of the World to the birth of DEVCALION. in the second yeere of Spharus, are numbred 700. yeeres, and when DEVCALION was 82. yeeres old, he saw Thessalia drowned. This Floud happened in the Winter time a- 20 bout Parnaffus : witnesse Aristotle in the first of his Meteors. And Varro (whom Saint Augustine so often citeth for his excellent learning, especially in Antiquities) findeth this Floud of Deucation to have happened in the time of Cranaus, who succeeded Cecrops: Orofius thinkes it somewhat later, Amphitryon raigning in Athens, the third from Cecrops. Only this of Deucation was very great, and reached not only ouer The sale it selfe, and the Regions adioyning Westward; but it covered the greatest part of Italie: and eyther the same, or some other particular Floud then happening opprest Egypt, sayth Eusebius. And therefore did the Greekes eyther thinke it, or faine it to be vniuerfall; and Deucalien, then King, fauing himselse and some others on the Mountaine of Thessale (of all other the highest, sayth Solinus ) was by reason 30 thereof (as Strabo witnesseth) sayd to be the preserver of Mankind. That this Floud couered a great part of Italie, Plinie and Solinus makeit probable: who affirme that the people then inhabiting Italie were therefore called ouspriot quia ab imbribus dilung (uperfuissent; and therefore also were they esteemed the most ancient Nation, as Strabo confirmeth in his first Booke, and Trezenius in his second : which Vmbri these Authours make the Parents of the Sabines, and the Sabines to bee the Parents of the Samnites, Piceni, Lucani, Bruty, and all others inhabiting anciently the bankes of the Mediterrane Sea. But that these Vmbri were not the Inhabiters of Italie before the Floud of 200ah, and so tooke name by saving themselves vpon the Appenine Mountaines, the Scriptures teach vs: shewing who, and who only then were preserued, 40 Albeneus dipmo- which is sufficient. Report hath aduentured further, telling vs that the first people which after the generall Floud inhabited Italie, were the Camefenes; (so named from Camele, whom CATO in originibus, another of Annius his Authours names for a confort of Ianus) which people lived altogether a savage life; till such time as Saturne arriving on those Coasts, deuised Lawes to gouerne them by: the memorie of whose afts in that Region Diodor and Thallus among the Greekes, Wepos Cassus and Varroamong the Latines have preserved; and of whom Virgil:

Then came th'Ausonian bands, and the Sicanian tribes.

Of these Sicani (which lest Spaine and sate downe in Italie) Thucy dides and Plinie give Thucyd. 16. testimonie: who were againe expelled by the Ligi, faith Thucydides. After all these Plin.l.3.c.5. plantations and replantations came the Vmbri, descended of the Gaules (faith Annius) Annius ex Sanot of those Gaules of France, but of those of Scythia, who commanded a great part muele Thalmuof Italie, even all Hetruria and Campania, as Herodotus, Plinie, and Dionysius have af-20 fured vs; and therefore this floud of Deucalion was long after that of Noah. For all Plin.13.6.5. those Nations were planted in Italie, and disposses of Italie againe, beforethe Vmbri Dion, i.z. & 2. were ever heard of, or had being. So that Kingdome was first called Camasene, then Latium or Saturnia, then Ausonia, then Sicania; before the Vmbri (in whose time Deucalions floud happened) possess the same, about 306, yeeres before the war of Troy: Lycaon then gouerning Arcadia; who being the Father of two and twentie Sonnes, the yongest called Ocnotrius inuaded Italie, who gave it the name of Ocno- Pansan, Arcad. tria. This name it held vntill Italus of the same Nation changed it into Italie, after lib.8. his owne name, about 250, yeeres before the fall of Troy. After these came the Pe- arif. pol.7.c.10. lasgi, of whom Plinie in histhird Booke and fift Chapter; and Strabo in his fift; 30 Thucydides in his fixth speakes at large: and after them the Lydi under Tyrrhenus their Herod.L.2. Captayne, that gaue name to the Tyrrbeni; who casting thence the Vmbri, tooke Plinds.c.4. from them three hundred Castles, and built therein twelve Cities; to which (after they had possess and past ouer the Appenine Mountaynes) they added divers others, whereof Telsina (afterward Bononia) was one.

Now that there was not anciently such a Nation, as these Vmbri, in those parts, I doe not affirme: having respect to the testimonies before repeated. And Stephanus thinkes, that the name was derived from the Greeke word ombros; but that these Vmbri of Italie were descended of the Nation of Soythians (called Galli) it shall be shewed hereafter.

Of some other records testifying the universall floud : and of two ancient deluges in Ægypt: and of some elsewhere.

Aint Avgvstine out of Varro affirmeth, that the Greekes and Latines made not any mention of the vniuerfall floud, because they had nothing of antiquitie foregoing that of ogyges, and therefore (according to Rhodoginus before remembred) were all things among the Greekes (which antiquitie had worne out of knowledge) called Ogygia, which we in English commonly call (worme-eaten) or of defaced date. But as all the parts of the earth were successively planted and peopled; and as all Nations had their proper times, and not their beginning at once and at the instant: so did every familie which afterward became a great People, with whom the knowledge of diume letters was not received, finde no parent of more antiquitie, then fuch as they had themselues, nor allow of any before their owne; and as the Grecians, so did others vaunt themselves to be Indigena, and growing out of the earth, or invent some other prophane or ridiculous beginning. But the Chaldeans had certayne knowledge of No. hs floud, as Berofus witnesseth; and Nicolaus Damafcenus maketh particular mention thereof (as is aforefaid) though he also affirme by heare-say, that some Giants faued themselues voon the Mountaynes Baris in Armenia, but speaketh not thereof as from any authoritie approued : vling the word fermoest; That such a Euf. de prep. E- speech there was. And Eusebius remembreth a place out of the ancient Historian Abydenus: who writeth that Sissibrus, to preserve himselfe from a floud foretold him is by Saturnus, fled to the hils of Armenia by ship, ad Armenian nauigio confugiebat: who the third day (after the waters were fallen) fent forth birds, that finding no land to rest on, returned againe; which he also did a second time, but at the third returne the birds feet were couered with mudde and flime. To this effect are Eusebius words out of Abydenus, which may seeme a true description (though in other termes) of Cyrillus also affirmeth, that Alex. Polyhistor maketh mention of this generall floud.

And Plate in Timee produceth an Agyptian Priest, who recounted to Solon out of the holy Bookes of Egypt, the storie of the floud vniuersall, which (saith he) happened long before the Gracian inundations. Fryer Annius his Xenophon remembreth 20 a third floud, which also Diodorus Siculus confirmeth, somewhat more ancient then that of Ogyges in Attica. For he named the generall floud for the first, which happened (faith he) under the old Ogyges, Sub prisco Ogyge, which was Noah; he calleth the second Wiliaca: Hercules and Prometheus then living, 44- yeeres before that of Attica, in the 34. yeere of Belochus King of the Affyrians, though I doe not beleeue him as touching the time. But this floud covered a great part of the nether Agypt, especially all that Region subject to Prometheus; and hereof came the fable of the Nat. com.l. 4.2.6 Vulture on Prometheus his liver, afterward flaine by Hercules of Agypt: which fiction Diod, Siculus delivereth in these wordes : Fluuium propter cursus velocitatem, profunditatema, aquarum Aquilam tunc appellatum, HERCYLEM cum consily magnitudine, 30 tum virtute, volunt è vestigio compresisse, & aquarum impetum ad priorem cursum conuertisse : Vnde & Graci quidam Poeta rem gestam in fabulam vertentes, HERCVLEM tradunt Aquilam PROMETHEI jecur depascentem occidisse; This floud (meaning of Nilus) for the swiftnesse of his course, as also for the depth, was in those dayes called the Eigle: but HERCVEES by his great judgement and vertue did againe compresse and straighten this River, so farre extended and over-spred, turning it into the old channels: Whence certayne Greeke Poets (converting this labour and worke of HERCVLES into a fable) denifed that HERCYLES flue the Eagle, which fed on PROMETHEVS liner; meaning that he delivered Prometheus of that forrow and torment, which for the

A fourth floud chanced about Pharus in Agypt, where Alexander Macedon built Alexandria, as Annius conceineth out of his Xenophon, who in this briefe fort Xonop de aquin, writeth of all these inundations: Inundationes plures fuere: prima nonimesti is inunda-Comm.pu An- tio terrarum sub prisco Ogyg E: secunda Niliaca, &c. There were many inundations (saith this same Xenophon) the first which was uninerfall of nine Moneths, and this happened under the first Ogyges: the second was Niliaea, and of one Moneths continuance in the time of Hercules and Prometheus Egyptians: a third of two Moneths under Ogyges Atticus : the fourth of three Moneths in The falia under Deucalion : and a fift of the like continuance (called Pharonica) under Proteus of Agypt, about the time of Helens 50 rape. Diodorus in his fift Booke and eleventh Chapter, taking the Samothraces for his Authors, remembreth a floud in Asia the leffe and elsewhere, of no leffe destruction then any of the other particular inundations, faying, that the same happened before that of Deucalion: the Sea of Pontus and Hellespont breaking in ouer the land.

losse of his People and Countrie (by the waters destroyed and couered ouer) he 40

But there have beene many flouds in divers times, and ages, not inferior to any of these two last remembred, Niliaca and Pharonica in Agypt: as in the yeere of our Redemption 590. when in October of the same yeere, Gregorie then being Bishop of Rome, there happened a maruailous ouerflowing in Italie, and especially in the Venetian Territorie, and in Lyguria, accompanied with a most fearefull storme of thunder and lightning: after which followed the great plague at Rome, by reason of the many dead Serpents cast vp and left vpon the Land, after the waters decreased and returned. And in the yeere 1446, there perished 10000, people, by the breaking in Munster. of the Sea at Dordroch in Holland: of which kinde I take that floud to be of Achaia 10 or Attics. Before that and in the yeere 1238. Trithemus speaketh of an earthquake Edwis, & terwhich swallowed many thousands: and after that of a floud in Friseland, in which multa hominaum there perished 100000 persons. Strozius Sigog. in his Magia omnifaria, telleth of milia opprettean inundation in Italie, in the time of Pope Damafus, in which also many Cities of runt. Frifti quog, Sicil were swallowed: another in the Papacie of Alexander the fixth: also in the yeere fluctus tota ex-1515. Maximilian being Emperor. He also remembreth a perilous ouer-flowing ne submersa fuit . in Polonia, about Cracouia, by which many people perished. Likewise Viginier a & perierunt French Historian speaketh of a great floud in the South part of Languedoc, which fell 100000. in the yeere of our Lord 1557, with so dreadfull a tempest, as all the people attended therein the very end of the world, and judgement day; faying, That by the violent 20 descent of the waters from the Mountaynes, about Nismes there were remooned diversold heapes and mountures of ground, and many other places torne vp and rent: by which accident there was found both covne of filuer and gold, divers peeces of plate, and vessels of other metall, supposed to be hidden at such time as the Goths inuaded that Province, in the yeere 1156.

That the floud of NOAH was supernaturall, though some say it might have beene forescene by the Starres.

Ow howfoener all thefe flouds and many other, which have covered at fenerall times feverall Regions, not only in thefe parts of the world, at feuerall times leuerall regions, do only in the butin America also, (as I have learned of some ancient Southsayers among them) may be ascribed to natural causes and accidents, yet that vniuerfall floud (in the time of Noah) was powred ouer the whole face of the earth by a power aboue nature, and by the especiall commandement of God himselse, who at that time gave strength of influence to the Starres, and abundance to the Fountaynes of the deepe: whereby the irruption of waters was made more forcible, then any abilitie of nature could effect, or any second causes by whatsoeuer vnion could performe, without receiving from the Fountayne of all power, strength, and faculties supernaturall. Henricus Mechlimensis, a Scholler of Albertus Magnus, in his Commentaries vpon the great conjunctions of Albu Masar obser-40 ueth, that before the floud of Noah, the like conjunction of lupiter and Saturne, happened in the last degree of Cancer, against that constellation since called the Ship of Argos; by which the floud of Noah might be foretold, because Cancer is both a waterie signe, and the house of the Moone, which is the Ladie of the Sea, and of moviture, according to the rules of Astronomie, and common experience. And this opinion Petrus de Aliaco vpon Genesis confirmeth, affirming that although Alio de Concor-Noah did well know this floud by divine revelation, yet (this conjunction being notorious) he could not be ignorant of the second causes thereof: for those were not 50 only fignes, but also working causes, by strength received from the first cause, which Gen. 7.11. is God himselfe: and further that by * Catarratte cali (Englished the windores of * The word heauen) Moses meant this great and waterie coniunction; the word (Catarratta) fignifying flowing downe or comming downe. Now (faith P. de Aliaco) it pleased God to ordaine by the course of the Heauens such a constellation, by which all men might behold therein their destruction towards, and thereby for sake those wicked wayes wherein they walked, and call vnto God for mercy.

Of this iudgement was Gul. Parisiensis, who understood that the wordes Catarralla cali, or windores of heaven, were to be taken for the former conjunction, or for these waterie signes, Cancer, Pisces, Pleiades, Hyades, and Orion, and of the Planets. Mars, Venus, and the Moone: which are the forcible causes of the greatest inundations. His owne words are these: Nondum intelligo Prophetam Hebraorum catarract as 10 cœli vocâsse, nisi partes illas cœli, qua generatiua sunt pluniarum & inundationum aquarum. quales funt signa aquatica, vt Cancer, &c. as aforesaid. As yet (saith he) I perceiue not what the Prophet of the Hebrewes meaneth by those wordes (Catarract aceli, or windores of Heauen) unlesse he thereby understand those celestial powers, by whose influences are engendred the rayne, and inundations of waters, such as are the waterie signes of Can-

But in a word, as it might please God, that in the course of his vnsearchable wisedome this conjunction should at such time be: so did he (as aforesaid) adde vigour and facultie, and gaue to every operation increase of vertues, violent eruptions to Springs and Fountaynes, commanding them to cast out the whole treasure and 20 heape of their waters; taking retention from the cloudes, and condenfing ayre into water by the ministerie of his Angels, or howsoeuer else best pleased his Al-powerfulnesse.

ò. V I.

That there was no neede of any new Creation of matter to make the uniuerfall floud : and what are Catarracta Cali, GEN. 7. VERS. 11.

Ow if it be objected, that God doth not create any thing of new; (for God restet the seuenth day: (that is) he did not then after create any new species) which granted, it may seeme that then all the earth and aire had not waters sufficient to cover the habitable world sifteen cubits about the highest Mountaynes. Of this proposition, whether God hath so restrayned himselfe or no, I will not dispute; but for the consequent (which is) that the world had want of water to ouer-couer the highest mountaynes, I take that conceit to be vnlearned and foolish; for it is written, that the fountaynes of the great deep were broken up (that is) the waters for fook the very bowels of the earth; 40 and all whatfoeuer was disperst therein pierced and brake through the face thereof. Then let vs confider, that the Earth had aboue one and twentie thousand miles: the Diameter of the Earth according to that circle seuen thousand mile, and then from the Superficies to the Center some three thousand five hundred miles: Take then the highest Mountayne of the world, Caucasus, Taurus, Olympus, or Allas, the Mountaynes of Armenia or Scythia, or that (of all other the highest) in Tenuerif, and I doe not finde, that he that looketh highest stretcheth about thirtie miles voright. It is not then impossible, answering reason with reason, that all those waters mixed within the earth three thousand fine hundred miles deepe, should not well helpe to couer the space of thirtie miles in height, this thirty miles vpright being found in the to depths of the earth one hundred and fixteene times: for the Fountaynes of the great Deepe were broken up, and the waters drawne out of the bowels of the earth. Secondly, if we consider what proportion the earth beareth to the extension of the ayre ouer and aboue it, wee shall find the difference exceeding great. If then it pleafed God to condense but so much of this ayre as euery-where compasseth and embraceth the earth, which condensation is a conversion of ayre into water, a change familiar in those elements, it will not seeme strange to men of judgement, yea but of ordinarie understanding, that the Earth (God so pleasing) was couered ouer with waters without any new Creation.

of the History of the World.

Lastly, for the opinions of Galielmus Parisiensis, and Aliacensis, to which I may adde Berolus and others, That such a conjunction there was, foreshewing that destruction by waters which followed; and that by the word Catarracte coli, or Windores of heaven, was meant this conjunction; there needes no other answere then to that observation of Ludouicus Viues, who affirmeth that by the gravest Astrologian it was observed, that in the yeere 1524. there should happen the like conjunction, as at Noahs floud, then which (faith he) there was never a more fayre, drie, and feafonable veere : the like destruction was prophecied of the yeere 1588. But Picus Earle of Mirandula proueth that there could not be any such conjunction at that

To conclude, I finde no other mysterie in the word Catarrasta cali, then that the cloudes were meant thereby: Moses vsing the word Windores of Heauen (if that be the fenfe of the word) to expresse the violence of the raynes, and powring downe of waters. For whofoeuer hath feene those fallings of water, which sometimes hap-20 pen in the Indies, which are called the Spowts (where cloudes doe not breake into drops, but fall with a reliftleffe violence in one body) may properly vie that manner of speech which Moses did; That the windores or floud-gates of heaven opened: (which is) That waters fell, contrarie to custome, and that order which we call naturall. God then loofened the power retentiue in the vppermost ayre, and the waters fell in abundance : Behold (faith Io B) he which holdeth the waters, and they drie 1000,12.0.15 vo, or better in Latine, Et omnia siccantur; And all things are dryed vo; but when he sendeth them out, they destroy the earth : and in the 26. Chapter : He bindeth the waters in the cloudes; but these bonds God loosed at that time of the generall floud, and called up the waters which slept in the great deepe: and these ionning together couered 30 the earth, till they had performed the worke of his will: which done, he then com- Gen.8.2. manded them to returne into their darke and vast Caues, and the rest (by a winde) rarified againe into ayre, formerly condensed into drops.

OAH commanded by God, before the fall of those waters, entred the Arke which he had built, with his owne Wife, and his Sonnes, and his Sonnes, and his Sonnes, taking with them of enery Creature, which tooke life by generation, seuen of the cleane, and of the vncleane, two. Noah, according to Philo, fignifieth quietnesse: after others, and according to the prophecie of his Father Lameth, cellation; to whom after-times gaue many names answering his antiquitie, zeale, vertue, and other qualities: as, The first Ogyges, because in the time of the Grecian Ogyges there was also a great floud of Achaia: Saturne they called him, because he was the Father of Nations: Others gave him the name of Promethem, who was faid to steale away Iupiters fire; fire in that place being taken and vinderstood for the knowledge of God and heauenly things. Others thinke that he was so called for his excellent wisedome and foresight. He had also 50 the name of Ianu, (id eft) vinosus, because Iain signifieth wine in the Hebrew. And so Tertullian finds him written in libris ritualibus; In the bookes of ceremonies, preceding both Saturne, Vranus, and Ione: which three enjoyed an elder time then all the other ancientest fayned gods. And this name Iain is taken from the Hebrew and Syrian, and not from the Latine: for it was in vse before there was any Latine Nation, or any Kingdome by that name knowne. Of the antiquitie of Ianus, Fabius Pictor giueth this testimonie : IANI atate nulla erat Monarchia, quia mortalibus pectoribus nondum haserat vlla regnandi cupiditas, Go. Vinum & far primus populas docuit IANVE ad (acrificia: primus enim aras & Pomæria & Sacra docuit; In the time of IANVS (faith he) there was no Monarchie: for the desire of rule had not then foldedit selfe about the bearts of men. IANV's first taught the people to sacrifice Wine and Meale: hee first fet vo Altars, instituted Gardens and Solitarie Groues, wherein they vsed to pray; with other holy rites and ceremonies. A greater testimonie then this there cannot be found among the Heathen, which in all agreeth so well with the Scriptures. For first, whilest 20 04h flourished, there was not any King or Monarch: Nimrod being the first that to tooke on him foueraigne authoritie. Secondly, Woah after the floud was the first that planted the Vine, and became a Husbandman; and therefore offered the first fruits of both (to wit) Wine and Meale. Thirdly, he was the first that rayled an Altar, and offered facrifice to God, a thankes-giving for his mercifull goodnesse towards him. Noah was also fignified in the name of Bifrons ( which was given to Ianus) because he beheld the times both before and after the floud, Quia praterita noue-Arn. cont.Gent. rit, & futura prospexerit, saith ARNOBIVS; Because he knew what was past, and provided for what was to come. He was also in the person of Ianus shaddowed by the name of Chaos, and semen orbis; The seede of the world; because as out of that confused heape was drawne all the kindes of Beasts and Plants: so from Noah came all mankinde: whereof Ouid in the person of Ianus:

He was also intituled Calamand Sol, Heaven and the Sunne, for his excellent knowledge in Astronomie : Vertumnus, Baschus, and Liber Pater; not that latter, which Diod. Siculus, and Alex. Approdifeus fo call, because he was the restorer of the Greeker to their former libertie, but in respect of the floud. For the Greekes called Liber wis, and his Nurses Hyades, of rayne, because Noab entred the Arke, when the Sunne iovned with the Starres Hyades, a confiellation in the brow or necke of Taurus, and ever after a monument of Noahs floud. He was also by others surnamed Triton, a Marine God, the Sonne of Neptune: because he lived in safetie on the waters. So Nat. com. lib.5. was he knowne by the name of DIONYSVS, quasi Stavioron, mentem pungens; Bitebraine, or wit-stinger, though Diodorus conceine otherwise, and derine that name à patre & loco; Of hu Father, and the place of his birth (to wit) of loue, and Nisa a Towns of Arabia falix, faith Suidas out of Orpheus. He had also the by-name of 40 Taurus, or Taurophagus; because he first yoked Oxen and tilled the ground, according to that of Moses: And Non H became an bushandman. Now how locuer the Grecians vaunt of their Theban Bacchus (otherwise Dionysus) it is certayne that the name was borrowed, and the invention stollen from Noah. But this name of Bacchus, more anciently Boacus, was taken (faith Gul. Stuckins, and out of him Daneus) from Woachus, (N) being changed into (B); and it is the more probable, because it cannot be doubted but that Noah was the first planter of the Vineaster the floud : and of Noah (the first and ancient Bacchus) were all those fables deuised, of which Diodorus complayneth in his fourth Booke, and fifth Chapter. This first Bacchus (to wit) Noah, was furnamed Nysius, of the Mountayne Nysain India, where the Grecian Bacchus ne-50 uer came, what soeuer themselves saine of his enterprises ; and these Mountaynes of Ny/a ioyne with those of Paropanifus, and those other Easterne Mountaynes, on which the Arke of Noah rested after the floud.

Furthermore, to the end that the memorie of this second parent of mankinde might the better bee preserued, there were founded by his issues many great Cities which bare his name; with many rivers and mountaines: which oftentimes forgat that it was done in his regard, because the many names given him brought the same confusion to places as to himselfe. Notwithstanding all which, we find the Citie of Plint.6. Noah vponthe bankes of the red Sea and elsewhere: the River of Noas in Thrace, Hered 14.

Of sundrie particulars touching the Arke: as the place where it was made. the matter, fashion and name ).

2330w in what part of the world Noah built the Arke, it doth not appeare in the Scriptures, neither doe I finde any approved Authour that hath written thereof: onely Goropius Becanus in his Indo-Scrthia conceineth, that Noah built his Arke neere the mountaines of Cancalus. because on those hils are found the goodliest Cedars: for when Alex.

Macedon made the warre among a people, called Nyfer, inhabiting the other fide of 20 Caucasius, hee found all their burials and Sepulchers wrought ouer with Cedar. To this place (faith Bocanus) Noah repaired, both to separate himselfe from the reprobate Giants, who rebelled against God and Nature, as also because he would not be interrupted in the building of the Arke; to which also hee addeth the conveniencie of rivers, to transport the Timber which he vsed, without troubling any other car-

Onelv this wee are fure of, that the Arke was built in some part of the Easterne world; and to my vnderstanding, not farre from the place where it rested after the floud. For Noah did not vse any mast or saile (as in other ships) and therefore did the Arkeno otherwise mouethen the Hyske or body of a ship doth in a calme Sea. o Alfo because it is not probable, that during these continuals and downe-right raines. there were any windes at all, therefore was the Arke little moved from the place where it was fashioned and set together. For it is written: God made a winde to passe Gene, 8, 1, vpon the earth, and the waters ceased, and therefore it may be gathered, that during the fall of the waters, there was not any storme or forcible winde at all, which could driue the Arke any great distance from the place where it was first by the waters lifted vp. This is also the more probable, if that ancient opinion bee true, as it is very likely, that the Arke had fundum planum, a flat bottome, and not raised in forme of a ship with a sharpnesse forward, to cut the waves for the better speede.

This kind of Vessell the Hebrewes call Thebet, and the Greekes Larnax, for so they to termed Deucalions ship: and some say, that the hill Parnassus, to which in eight dayes he arrived, was first called Larmassus, and by the change of (L) into (P) Parnassus; Suph,de Vit. but Pausanias thinkes that it tooke name of a Sonne of the Nymphe Cleodora, called foliary. Parnassus, the inventour of Auguration.

Peucerus findes the word (Parnaffus) to have no affinitie with the Greeke, but De Oracul. fal. thinkes it derived from the Hebrew word Wahas, which fignifieth Auguration and 94. Distination: or from Har or Parat, as in his Chapter of Oracles in the leafe before Insephus cals the Arke Machina, by the generall name of a huge Frame: and Epi- Epi, b. in Ancor. phanius out of the Hebrew Aron; but herein lieth the difference betweene Aron and O Theuer, That Aron fignifieth properly the Arke of the Sanctuarie, but Thebet fuch a Vessell, as swimmeth, and beareth it selfe vpon the waters.

Lastly, this Arke of Noah differed from the fashion of a ship in this, that it had a couer and roofe, with a creft in the middest thereof, and the sides declining like the roofe of an house; to the end, both to cast off the waters, and that thereunder Nosh himselfe and his children might shelter, and separate themselves from the noysomnesse of the many beasts, which filled the other roomes and parts of the Arke.

Of what wood the Arke was built it is vncertaine. The Hebrew word Gopher once and in this place onely yied is diverfly understood; and though the matter bee of little importance, yet this difference there is, That the Geneva Translation cals it Pinetree, the Rabbine Cedar, the Scuentie, square timber, the Latine smooth timber. Others will haue it Cypres trees, as dedicated to the dead. because Cypres is worne at funerals. But out of doubt, if the word Gopher fignificany speciall kind of timber, Noah obayed the voyce of God therein; if not, hee was not then curious as touching the kinde or nature of the wood, having the promise of God, and his grace 10 and mercie for his defence. For with Noah God promised to establish his couenant. Plinie affirmeth that in Agypt it was the vse to build ships of Cedar, which the wormes eate not; and hee anoweth that hee faw in Vtica, in the Temple of Apollo Cedar beames, laid in the time of the foundation of the Citie, and that they were still found in his time, which was about 1188. yeares after: prouing thereby, that this kinde of wood was not subject to putrifying or moulding in a very long time. But in that it is easie to cut, light to carie, and of a sweete sauour, lasting also better then any other wood, and because neere the place where the Arke rested, there are found great store of these Cedar trees, as also in all the mountaines of the East, befides those of Libanus, it is probable enough that the Arke might be of that wood:20 which hath besides the other commodities the greatest length of Timber, and therefore fittest to build ships withall. Pererius conceineth that the Arke had divers sorts of timber, and that the bottome had of one fort, the decke and partition of another; all which may be true or false, if Gopher may be taken for timber in generall. True it is, that Cedar will serue for all parts of a ship, as well for the body, as for mast and wards. But Noah had most respect to the direction received from God: to the length, breadth, and height, and to the partitions of the Arke; and to pitch it, and to divide it into Cabines, thereby to seuer the cleane beasts from the vncleane, and to present their seuerall sorts of foode; and that it might bee capable of all kinde of living creatures, according to the numbers by God appointed. All which when Noah had ga- 20 thered together, he cast his confidence wholly on God, who by his Angels steered this ship without a rudder, and directed it without the helpe of a Compasse or the North starre. The pitch which Noah vsed, is by some supposed to have beenea kinde of Bitumen, whereof there is great quantitie about the Valley of Sodome and Gomorra, now the dead Sea or Alphaltes: and in the Region of Pabylon, and in the West India, and herein it exceedeth other pitch, that it melts not with the Sunne, but by the fire onely, after the manner of hard waxe.

By what kinde of Cubite the Arke was measured, it hath beene a disputed queftion among the Fathers, and others; and the differences are in effect these: The first kinde of cubit (called the Common) containeth one foot and a halfe, measured from the sharpe of the elbow to the point of the middle finger. The second (the palme cubit) which taketh one handfull more then the common. The third is called Regius Cubitus, or the Persian Cubit, which exceedeth the common cubit three inches. The fourth is the facred cubit, which containeth the common or vulgar cubit double, wanting but a quarter or fourth part. Lastly, there is a fift cubit, called Geometricall, which containeth fixe common cubits. But of all these fortes, which were commonly measured by the vulgar cubit, the alteration and diminution of mens statures hath made the difference. For as there is now a leffe proportion of bodies: fo is the common cubit, from the sharpe of the elbow to the point of the middle finger, of leffe length then it was in elder times.

S. Augustine confidering the many fortes of beafts and birds which the Arke held. with their food and water, was sometimes of opinion, that the Arke had proportion after the Geometricall cubit, which containeth almost fixe of the Common. For measuring the Arke by the vulgar cubit, it did not exceede the capacitie of that vessel lib.a. built by Hiero of Syracuse, or the ship of Ptolomie Philo-pater. But S. Augustine (who Plutar. in vita at the first was led by Origen) changed his judgement as touching the Geometrical 1 Demetry. 20 cubit; and found vpon better confideration, that there needed not so huge a bodie to præserue all sortes of creatures by God appointed to bee reserved. For it was not needfull to take any kindes of fishes into the Arke, because they were kept living (faith S. Augustine) in their owne element. Non fuit necesse conservare in Arca que posfent in aquis vinere; non folum mer fa sicut pifces, verum super-natantia, sicut multa alites. It was not needfull to conferue those creatures in the Arke, which could live in the waters: and not only filles which can line under water, but also those fowls which sit and swim on them: and againe, Terra, non aqua, maleditta, quià Adam non huius, sed illius fruttum vetitum come- Aue.de Civit. dit. Augustine gathereth hereupon, (asafore-30 faid) that so huge a Frame needed not.

Andif wee looke with the eyes of judgement hereunto, wee shall finde nothing monstrous therein; although the imaginations of men, who (for the most part) have more of mischiefe and of ignorance, then of any reverend reason, finde many impossibilities in this worke of God. But it is manifest, and vndoubtedly true, that many of the Species, which now sceme differing and of seuerall kindes, were not then in rerum natura. For those beasts which are of mixt natures; either they were not in that age, or else it was not needfull to præserue them: seeing they might bee generated againe by others, as the Mules, the Hyana's and the like: the one begotten by Asses and Mares, the other by Foxes and Wolues. And whereas by dis-40 couering of strange landes, wherein there are found divers beastes and birdes differing in colour or stature from those of these Northerne parts, it may be supposed by a superficiall consideration, that all those which weare red and pyed skinnes, or feathers, are differing from those that are lesse painted, and were plaine russet or blacke: they are much mistaken that so thinke. And for my owne opinion I finde no difference, but onely in magnitude, betweene the Cat of Europe, and the Ounce of India; and even those dogges which are become wilde in Hispagniola, with which the Spaniards vsed to deuoure the naked Indians, are now changed to Wolues, and begin to destroy the breed of their Cattle, and doe also oftentimes teare asunder their owne Children. The common Crowe and Rooke of India is full of red feathers in the Acoft. bifl. India. 50 drown'd and low Islands of Caribana; and the Blacke-Bird and Thrush hath his feathers mixt with blacke and carnation: in the North parts of Virginia. The dog-fish of England is the Sharke of the South Ocean: For if colour or magnitu te made a difference of Species, then were the Negro's, which wee call the blacke-mores, non animalia rationalia, not men, but some kinde of strange beastes: and so the Giants of the South America should be of another kinder then the people of this part of the World. Wee also see it daily that the natures of sruites are changed by transplantation, some to better, some to worse, especially with the change of Clymate. Crabs may bee made good fruit by often grafting, and the best Mellons will change in a yeere or two to common Cowcummers by being set in a barren sovle: Therefore taking the kindes precisely of all creatures, as they were by God created. or out of the earth by his ordinance produced: The Arke, after the measure of the common Cubit was sufficiently capacious to containe of all, according to the number by God appointed: For if we adde but halfe a foot of measure to the Common Cubit, which had a foot and a halfe of Giantly stature (and lesse allowance wee can-10 not give to the difference betweene them and vs) then did the Arke containe 600. foot in length, and 100, foot in breadth, and 60. foot deepe.

But first of all to make it manifest, that the Geometricall Cubit is not vsed in the Scripture, the stature of the Giants therein named may suffice. For if the bed of Og King of Ba/an had beene nine Geometricall Cubites long, it had taken 54. Cubites of the common, which make 80. foot: and Goliah, who had the length of 6. Cubites and a handfull, which makes nine foote and a handfull, (a proportion credible) if these Cubites had beene Geometricall, then had beene 54. foot in heighth and vowardes, which were monstrous and most incredible: for (according to this proportion) had the head of Goliah beene nine foot long, and farre waightier and bigger then all Da-20

uids body, who caried it away.

Againe, if the Geometricall Cubit had been vsed for a measure in the Scripture as many Commenters have observed, then had the Altar (appointed to containe five Cubites of length, fine of breadth, and three of heighth) have reached the length of 27. foot vpright, and so must their Priestes have ascended by steps or ladders to have performed their facrifices thereon, which was contrarie to Gods Commandement given in these wordes: Thou Shalt not goe up with steppes unto mine altar, that thy shame bee not discouered thereon; and therefore was the Altar but three Common Cubites high which make foure foot, that their Priests standing thereby might execute their office: Wherefore I may conclude, that the Cubit mentioned in the Scriptures was 30 not the Geometricall, but the ordinarie Cubit of one foot and a halfe, according to the measure of Giantly stature; which measure (doubtlesse) might give much the more capacitie to the Arke, although it be also probable, that as the men were, so were the horses whereon they rode, and all other creatures of a correspondent size. And yet (as I take it) though by this meanes there were not any whit the more roome in the Arke, it were not hard to conceiue, how all the distinct Species of Animals, whose lives cannot bee preserved in the waters, might according to their present quantities bee contained in a vessell of those dimensions which the Arke had; allowing to the Cubit one foot and a halfe of our now vsuall measure: whence it followeth of necessitie, that those large bodies which were in the daies of M puh 40 might have roome sufficient in the Arke, which was measured by a Cubit of length proportionable.

How the appointed number of creatures to be saued, (that is) seuen of the cleane, two of the vicleane (with necessarie foode) might have place in the Arke, But as hath very learnedly declared: the briefe summe of whose discourse to that purpose is this. The length of the Arke was three hundred cubits, which multiplyed by the breadth, namely fiftie cubits, and the product by the heighth of thirtie cubits, sheweth the whole concavitie to have beene 450000. Now whereas the posts, walles, and other partitions of lodgings may feeme to have taken vp a great part of the hollow: the heighth of the roofe which (the perpendicular being one cubit) contained 7500. cubicall cubes, was a 50 sufficient recompence: If therefore in a ship of such greatnesse wee seeke roome for 89. distinct species of beasts, or (lest any should be omitted) for 100 seuerall kinds, we shall easily finde place both for them, and for the birds, which in bignesse are no way answerable to them, and for meate to sustaine them all. For there are three forts of beafts, whose bodies are of a quantitie best knowne; the Beefe, the Sheepe: and the Wolfe: to which the rest may be reduced, by saying, (according to Aristotle) that one Elephant is answerable to foure Beenes, one Lyon to two Wolnes, and so of the rest. Of beasts, some feede on vegetables, others on flesh. There are one and thirtie kinds of the greater fort, feeding on vegetables: of which number, onely three are cleane, according to the law of Moses, whereof seuen of a kinde entred into the Arke, namely three couples for breede, and one odde one for facrifice: the other eight and twentie kindes were taken by two of each kinde, fo that in all there were in the Arke one and twentie great beafts cleane, and fixe and fiftie vncleane, estimable o for largenesse as ninetie one Beeues; yet for a supplement (lest perhaps any Species be omitted) let them be valued, as 120. Beeues. Of the lesser fort feeding on vegetables were in the Arke fixe and twentie kinds, estimable with good allowance for supplie, as fourescore Sheepe. Of those which denoure flesh were two and thirtie kinds, answerable to threescore and foure Wolues. All these 280. beasts might bee kept in one storie or roome of the Arice in their seuerall Cabbines; their meate in a fecond: the Birds and their prouision in a third, with place to spare for Noah and his family, and all their necessaries.

Apraterition of some questions lesse materiall: with a note of the vse of this question, to finde out the Metropolis of Nations.

Hat time Noah tooke to build the Arke, I leave to others to dispute, but he received the Commandement from God 100, yeares before the waters fell: and had therefore choice of time and leifure sufficient. As for the number of deckes and partitions, which Origen deuides into foure, S. Augustine into three, I will not trouble the Reader with the controuersie: or whether those creatures which sometimes rest on the land, other times in the waters, as the Crocodiles (now called Alegartos) the Sea-cowes or Seahorses, were kept in the Arke, or no, I thinke it a needlesse curiositie; and yet to this faith Pererius, and others before him, that a fish-poole might bee made as well within the Arke, as in Hiero his ship of Segracuse. Lastly, to consider or labour to disproue the foolerie of the Hebrewes, who suppose that the Arke was lightened by a Car-40 buncle, or had windores of Christall to receive in light, and keepe out water, were but to reviue the buried vanities of former times. But that which I seeke most to satisfie my selfe and others in, is in what part of the world the Arke rested after the floud: because the true vnderstanding of some of these places (as the seate of the terrestrials Paradise, and the resting of the Arke) doe onely and truely teach the worlds Plantation, and the beginning of Nations, before and after the floud; and all storie, as well generall as particular, thereby may be the better understood.

A proposall of the common opinion, that the Arke rested upon some of the hils of Armenia.

and plantation, I am resolued (without any presumption) that therein the most writers were vtterly mistaken. And I am not led so to thinke out of my humour or newnesse of opinion, or singularitie, but doe herein ground my selfe on the original land first truth, which is the word of God, and after that vpon reason, and the most probable circumstances thereon depending. For whereas it is written, that the Arke staiedupon one of the mountaines of Ararat, which the Chaldean Paraphrast hath converted Kardu, meaning the hils Gordai or Gordiai in Armenia the greater: (as the wordes Gordei and Kardu, feeme to bee one and the same) of which opinion also the most of our Interpreters are; I finde neither Scripture nor reason which teacheth any such thing: (to wit) that it rested on that part of Ararat, which is in the greater Armenia, 10 Nicolaus Damalcenus cals this mountaine of Ararat, Baris, being the same which the Sec 1.7.5.1. Chaldean nameth Kardu, to which mountaine the Fryer Annius (citing this place out of Isfephus) makes him finde another adioyning, called Ocila, and to fay that the Arke (of which Mofes the Lawgiuer of the Hebrewes wrote) did first take ground on this Ocils. But I doe not finde any fuch mountaine in being, as this Ocila; neither is there any mention of it in the place of lofephus. Strabo remembreth a Promontorie in Arabia falix, of that name, and Plinie findes a Mart-towne fo called in the same, which Pto'omie cals Ocilis, Pinetus Acyla, and Niger Zidon. But this Ocila of Damascenus, or rather of Annius, seemeth to bee one and a part of the Armenian mountaines. Berolus calleththole mountaines of Armenia Cordiai, and Curtius Cordai: Ptolomie Gordai 10 and Gordiae: of which the Countrie next adioyning is by this Nicolaus Damascenus called Ninyada, perhaps (as Becanus coniectures) for Milyada or rather Minni: which word is vsed for Armenia Miner. And the very word of Armenia seemes to be com-Hierem.51.27. Nat. bifl. 1.5.6.12 pounded of this word Minni, and Aram: as if we should say Minni of Syria; for that Armenia also was a part of Syria, Plinie witnesseth. Epiphanius placeth the Cardyes about these mountaines, whom others call Gordieni or Gordeni. The mountaines are feated apart from all other to the North of that Ledge of mountaines called Taurns, or Niphates in the plaines of Armenia the great, neere the Lake Thospitis: whence the River of Tigris flowethin 75. degrees of longitude, and 41. and 42. degrees of latitude. One of the mountaines Gordiei (that which surmounteth the rest) Epiphanius 30 cals Lubar, which in the Armenian signifieth a place of descent: but this out of Isle-Loseph. de datiq. phus, which name (faith Iunius) was of the euent, because of Noahs comming downe with his children. But this also I take to bee a supposed euent; seeing any hill, from whence on euery side we must descend, may thus bee called: as Iunius corrects the place in tosephus sousapis (Kubaris.) That the place is thus to be read, he coniectureth, because Iosep.d. 1. 6.4. sayes, the place is called an flan plan (as it were the descent or com-

lowance without any farther examination; although the name of Lubar might otherwise rightly be given, especially to that mountaine, by reason that the passage was

The first argument against the common opinion. They that came to build Babel, would bane come fooner, had they come from fo neere a place as Armenia.

Byt there are many arguments to perswade me, that the Arke of Noah did not rest it selfe in any part of Armenia, and that the mountaines Ararat was not Bark, nor any one of the Gordican mountaines. For

CHAP.7. S.10. +.4. of the Historic of the World.

For first, it is agreed by all which follow Berofes, that it was in the 130, yeare, or in the yeare 13 1. after the floud, when Nimrod came into the valley of Shinar, which Valley was afterward called Babylonia, Chufb, and Chalden. If then the Arke had first foundland in Armenia, it is very vnprobable, that the children of Noah which came into that valley could have spent so many yeares in so short a passage: seeing the Region of Mesapotamia was onely interiacent, which might by calle iourneies have beene past ouer in twentie dayes; and to hasten and helpe which passage the nauigable riner of Tigris offered it felfe, which is enery where transpassable by boates of great burden: so as where the Desart on the one side resisted their expedition, the rito uer on the contrarie fide ferued to advance it; the river rising out of the same Ledge of mountaines, or at the foote of them, where the Arke of Noah was first supposed to fettle it felfe; Then, if the Nations which followed Nimrod still doubted the furprise of a second floud (according to the opinions of the ancient Hebrewes) it soundethill to the eare of reason, that they would have spent many yeeres in that low and ouerflowne Valley of Mesopotamia, so called of the many Rivers which imbrovder or compaffe it: for the effects witneffed their affections, and the workes, which they undertooke, their unbeliefe; being no sooner arrived in Shinar, but they began to prouide themselues of a defence (by erecting Babel) against any future or feared invndation. Now at Babel it was that Nimrod began his Kingdome, the first knowne 20 Citie of the world founded after the floud, about 131. yeares, or (as others suppose) ten yeeres later: though (for my selfe) I rather thinke, that they undertooke that worke in two respects; first, to make themselves famous, To get vs a name (faith the Berossia). Text:) Secondly, thereby to vsurpe dominion ouer the rest.

The second argument, That the Easterne people were most ancient in populositie, and in all humane glorie.

30 FOr a fecond Argument: The civilitie, magnificence and multitude of people (wherein the East parts of the world first abounded) hath more waight then any thing which hath beene, or can be said for Armenia, and for Noahs taking land there. And that this is true, the vie of Printing and Artillerie (among many other things which the East had) may easily perswade vs, that those Sunne-rising Nations were the most ancient. The certaintie of this report, that the East Indians (time out of minde) haue had Gunnes and Ordnance of batteric, confirmed by the Portugals and others, makes vs now to vnderstand, That the place of Philostratus in vita Apollonij Tianeid.2.c. 14. is no fable, though exprest in fabulous wordes: when he saith, that the wife men, which dwell betweene Hyphasis and Ganges, vie not themselves to goe forth into battaile: but that they drive away their enemies with thunder and lightning fent from Iupiter. By which meanes there it is faid, that Hercules Agyptius and Bacchus, ioyning their forces were defeated there; and that this Hercules there cast away his golden shield. For the invention of letters was ignorantly ascribed to Cadmus, because he brought them first into Greece : of which the people (then rude and sauage) had reason to give him the honour, from whom they received the benefit. But it is true, that letters are no lesse ancient then Seth or Henoch were: for they are said to have written on pillars of stone (as before remembred) long before the sloud. But from the Easterne world it was that Iohn Cuthenberg a Germane, brought the denice of Printing: by whom Conradus being instructed, brought the practice thereof to to Rome: and after that Nicholaus Gerson a Frenchman, bettered both the letters and inuention. And notwithstanding that this mysterie was then supposed to bee but newly borne, the Chinaos had letters long before either the Egyptians or Phanicisans; and also the Art of Printing, when as the Greekes had neither any civill know. ledge, or any letters among them. And

And that this is true, both the Portugals and Spaniards have witnessed, who about an hundred yeares since discouered those Kingdomes, and doe now enjoy their rich trades therein: for the Chinaos account all other Nations but Saluages, in respect of themselues.

And to adde strength to this argument, the conquest and storie of Alex. Macedon may justly bee called to witnesse, who found more Cities and sumptuositie in that little Kingdome of Porus, which lay fide by fide to the East India, then in all his other trauailes and vndertakings. For in Alexanders time learning and greatnesse had not trausiled so farre to the West as Rome: Alexander esteeming of Italie but as a barbarous Countrie, and of Rome as of a Village. But it was Babylon that stood in his to eye, and the same of the East pierced his ear's. And if wee looke as farre as the Sunriling, and heare Paulus Venetus what he reporteth of the vttermost Angle and Island thereof, we shall finde that those Nations have sent out, and not received, lent knowledge, and not borrowed it from the West. For the farther East (to this day) the more civill, the farther West the more salvage. And of the Ise of Iapan (now Zipingari) Venetus maketh this report : Incola religioni, literis, & sapientia sunt addictissimi, & veritatis indagatores acerrimi; nibil illis frequentius oratione, quam (more nostro) sacris in delubris exercent: vnum cognoscunt Principem, vnum Deum adorant, The Ilanders are exceedingly addicted to religion, letters, and Philosophie, and most diligent searchers out of truth: there is nothing among them more frequent then prayer, which they vie in their 20 Churches, after the manner of Christians. They acknowledge one King, and worship one God. The antiquitie, magnificence, civilitie, riches, sumptuous buildings, and policie in gouernement, is reported to be such by those who have beene employed into those parts, as it seemeth to exceede (in those formerly named, and divers other particulars) all other Kingdomes of the world.

t. V.

The third argument, From the wonderfull resistance which SEMIRAMIS found in the East Indies.

 $\mathbf{B}^{\mathrm{Vt}}$  for a third argument, and also of a treble strength to the rest, I lay the inualism of Semiramis before the indifferent and adulted Reader: who may consider in what age shee lived, and how soone after the worlds new birth shee gathered her Armie (as Diodorus Siculus out of Ctesias reporteth) of more then three Millions to inuade India, to which hee adioyned also 500000. Horse, and 100000. Waggons: whereof if we beleeve but a third part, it shall suffice to prove that India was the first planted and peopled Countrie after the floud. Now as touching the time wherein Thee lived: All Historians consent, that shee was the wife of Ninus; and the most approved Writers agree, that Winus was the Sonne of Belus, and Belus of Nimrod, 40 that Nimrod was the Sonne of Cush, Cush of Cham, and Cham of Noah. And at such time as Nimrod came to Shinar, hee was then a great Nation, as by the building of the Citie and Tower of Babel may appeare; and being then so multiplied and increased, the two descents cast betweene Nimrod and Semiramis, brought foorthin that time those multitudes, whereof her Armie was composed. Let vs then see with whome shee encountred in that warre with this her powerfull Armie: euen with a multitude, rather exceeding, then equalling her owne, conducted by Staurobates King of India beyond India; of whose multitudes this is the witnesse of Died. Siculus. Stavrobates, auitis maioribus quam qua erant Semiramidis copis. STAVROBATES gathering together greater troupes then those of SEMIRAMIS. If then S these numbers of Indians had beene encreased but by a Colonie sent out from Shinar, (and that also after Babel was built, which no doubt tooke some time in the performance) this encrease in the East, and this Armie of Staurobates must have been made of stone, or somwhat else by miracle. For as the numbers which Semiramis gathered might eafily grow up in that time, from so great a Troupe as Nimrod brought with him into Babylonia (as shall be demonstrated hereafter in the Storie of Israel) so could not any fuch time, by any multiplication naturall, produce so many bodies of men, as were in the Indian Army victorious ouer Semiramis, if the Colonies fent thither had beene so late as Babel ouerturned, and the confusion of Languages. For if we allow 65. yeeres time after the Floud, before Nimrod was borne: of which, 20. yeeres to Cufe ere he begat Seba, after whom hee had Hauilah, Sabtah, Raamah, and Sabtecha: Gin. 104. and then 30. yeeres to Raamah, ere hee begat Sheba and Dedan, both which were borne before Nimred: and five yeeres to his five elder brothers, which make 65. and o then twice 30. yeeres for two Generations more, as for Wimrod, Sheba and Dedan with others, to beget their sonnes; and that a third Generation might grow vp, which makes in all 125. yeeres, there will then remaine fixe yeeres to have beene foent in trauailing from the East, ere they arrived in Shinar in the yeere after the Floud 121. And so the followers of Nimrod might bee of sufficient multitude. But as for those which make him to have arrived at Shinzar in the yeere 101.: and the confusion to haue beene at Pelegs birth, these men doe all by miracle: they beget whole Nations without the helpe of time, and build Nimrods Towre in the Ayre; and not on those low and marish grounds (which require found foundations) in the Plaines of Shimaar. For except that huge Towre were built in a day, there could 20 beno confusion in that yeere 101. or at Pelegs birth. And therefore it is farre more probable, that Nimrod vsurped Regall authoritie in the 131. yeere after the Floud, (according to Bero(us) and that the worke of Babel lasted fortie yeeres (according to GLYCAs) Hominibus in ea perficienda totis 40 annis incassum laborantibus: Menlabou- Glyc.inGen. ring in vaine 40. yeeres to finish it. By which account it fals out, that it was 170. Gione. fol. 173. veeres after the Floud, ere a Colonie was fent into East India; which granted (the one being the maine bodie, and the other but a Troupe taken thence) it can hardly bee beleeved, that Staurobates could have exceeded Semiramis in numbers: who being then Empresse of all that part of the world, gathered the most of Nations into one

The fourth Argument from divers considerations in the person of NOAH.

Ourthly, it is no way probable, that Noab, who knew the world before the floud, I and had lived therein the long time of 600. yeeres, was all that space 130. yeeres after the floud, without any certaine habitation: No, it will fall out, and better agree with reason, that Nimrod was but the conducter of those people, by Noah destined and appointed to fill and inhabite that middle part of the earth and the Westerne world; (which trauailes Noah put ouer to yong and able bodies) and that Noah himselfe then couered with many yeeres, planted himselfe in the same place which God had affigned him: which was where he first came downe out of the Arke from the waters: For it is written, that after Noab came downe out of the Arke he planted a Vineyard, and became a Husbandman: whose businesse was to dresse and manure the earth; and not to range ouer so many parts of the world, as from Armenia into Arabia fælix, where he should (if the tradition be sound) have left certaine Colonies: thence into Africa towards Triton; then into Spaine, where they say he settled other companies, & built Cities after the names of N oela and Noegla his sons wives: from thence into Italie, where they say hee found his sonne Cham the Saturne of Egypt, who had corrupted the people and subjects of Gomer in his absence: with whom Noah (as they make the storie) had patience for three yeeres; but then finding no amendment, they fay he banisht him out of Italie. These be but the fancies of Bero-Su Annianus, a plaine imitation of the Gracian fables. For let euery reasonable man of the sense of Annivs the Commenter upon Beros vs: who finds divers places where the Arke rested; as the Caspian and Gordican hils which are three hundred miles a sunder; and also some place of Scythia.

Tremaineth now that we examine the Arguments and authorities of Frier An-I nim, who in his Commentaries vpon Berofus and others, laboureth maruailously 10 to proue, that the Arke of Noah rested vpon the Armenian mountaines called Cashi: which mountaines separate Armenia from the vpper Media, and doe equally belong to both. And because all his Authours speake of the mountaines Gordiei, hee hath no other shift to vnite these opinions, but by vniting those farre-distant mountaines together. To effect which, he hath found no other invention, then to charge those men with errour, which have carefully overseene, printed, and published Ptolomies Ptol.tab. Asia. 3. Geographie, in which they are altogether diffeuered. For that last edition of Mercators, sets these hils fine degrees (which makes three hundred English miles) asunder. And certainly, if we looke into those more ancient copies of Villanouanus and others. we shall finde nothing in them to helpe Annius withall : for in those the mountaines 20 Caspij stand seuen degrees to the East of the Gordiei, which make 420. miles. And for those Authours by whose authoritie Annius strengtheneth himselfe, Diodorus whom hee so much followeth, giveth this judgement vpon them in the like dispute. Aberrarunt verd omnes, non negligentia, sed regnorum situs ignorantia, They have allerred Diodisa. (faith he) not through negligence, but through ignorance of the situation of Kingdomes. But for an induction, to proue that the Arke of Weah stood on the mountaines of Armenia, he beginneth with the antiquitie of the Scythians: and to proue the same hee citeth Marcus Portius Cato, who anoweth that 250. yeares before Ninus, the earth cate de orig. was overflowne with waters, & in Scythia Sagarenatum mortale genus, and that in Scy- pars prima. this Sagathe stocke of mortall men was renewed. The same Authour also teacheth that 30 the Vmbri before remembred (who were so called, because saued from Deucalions floud) werethe Sonnes of the Galli, a Nation of the Scythians. Ex hijs venisse IANVM sum DYRIM & Gallis progenitoribus Vmbrorum, From these Scythians, he saith, that IANV s came with DYRIM and with the Gallithe progenitours of the Vmbri; And againe, Equidem principatus originis semper Scythis tribuitur, Certainely, the Prime antiquitie of off-fring is alway given to the Soythians. And herein truly I agree with Annius. that those Regions called Scythia, and now Tartaria, and by some Writers Sarmatia Assatica, were among the first peopled: and they held the greatest part of Asia vnder tribute till Ninus time. Also Plinie calleth the Vmbri which long fince inhabited Plin.13.c.14. Italie, Gens antiqui Sima, a most ancient Nation, who descended of these Scythians. Now 40 that which Annius laboureth, is to proue that these ancient Scythians (meaning the Nephewes of Noah) did first inhabite that Region of the mountaines, on which the Arkerested; and confessing that this great ship was grounded in Armenia, he faineth a nation of Scythians called Araxea, taking name of the mountaine Ararat, neere the River of Araxes. And because his Authour Cate helpeth him in part (to wit, That in Scythia mankinde was restored after the great floud, 250. yeares before Ninus) and in part vtterly destroyeth his conceit of Armenia, by adding the word Saza, as in Scythia Sagarenatum mortale genus, in Scythia Sagamankinde was restored hee therefore in the Proame of his Commentarie vpon Berofus, leaueth out the addition of Saga al-Boroflat. together in the repetition of Cato his wordes, and writes homines in Scythia faluatos. 50 For Seythia Saga or Sace, is vindoubtedly under the mountaines of Paropanifus, on Pio. Afia. tab.q. which, or neere which it is most probable that the Arke first tooke ground; and from Tower of Babel in Shinaar or Babylonia.

But now the best authoritie which Annius hath, is out of Diodoriu: where he hath read, those East parts (according to Moses) came all those companies which erected the General as conceiue, what it was to trauaile farre in fuch a forrest as the World was, when after fo great a rotting of the earth by the floud, the same lay waste and ouer-growne for 130. or 140. yeeres, and wherein there could hardly be found either path or passage through which men were able to creepe for woods, bushes and bryars that in those veeres were growne vp. And there are so many reasons, prouing that Woah neuer came into the valley of Shinaar, as we need not suspect his passage into Italie or Spaine: For Ivoah, who was Father of al those Nations, a man reverenced both for his authoritie, knowledge, experience and pietie, would neuer haue permitted his children and issues to haue vndertaken that vnbeleeuing presumptuous worke of Babel. Rather by his presence to and prevalent perswasions he would have bound their hands from so vaine labours, and by the authoritie which he received even from God himselfe, hee would have held them in that awfull subjection, as whatsoeuer they had vainely conceived or feared, yet they durst not have disobeyed the personall commandement of him, who in the beginning had a kinde of Regall authoritie ouer his children and people. Certainely, Noah knew right well, that the former destruction of mankinde was by themselues purchased through crueltie and disobedience; and that to distrust God. and to raise vp building against his Almightie power, was as much as in them lay, a prouocation of God to lay on them the same, if not a more sharpe affliction. Wherefore, there is no probabilitie, that euer he came so farre West as Babylonia; but rather, 20 that hee sent those numbers which came into Shinaar (being the greatest troupe, because they had the greatest part of the world to plant) vnder Nimred, or those vpon whom he vsurped. Nauclerus and Calestinus take the testimonie of Methodius Bishop of Tyre for currant, that there were three Leaders of the people after their encrease (to wit) Nimred, Suphene, and loctan: of which Nimred commaunded the issues of Cham, Iectan of Sem, and Suphene of Iaphet. This opinion I cannot judge of, although I will not doubt, but that so great a worke as the worlds plantation, could not bee effected without order and conduction.

Of the Sonnes of Sem: Iostan, Hauilah, and Opbir, are especially noted to have dwelt in the East India. The rest of Sems issues had also the Regions of Persia and the 30 other adjoying to Indus, and held also a part of Chaldea for a time: for Abraham inhabited Pr, till he was thence called by God, and whether they were of the Sonnes of 10st an, or of all the rest a certaine number (Cham and his issue onely excepted) that Noah kept with himselse, it cannot be knowne. Of which plantation I shall speake at

Now another reason which moues me to beleeue, that Noah stayed in the East far away from all those that came into Shinar, is, that Moses doth not in any word make mention of Noah in all the storie of the Hebrewes, or among any of those Nations which contended with them. And Noah, being the Father of all mankinde, and the chosen servant of God, was too principall a person, to bee either forgotten or negles steed, had he not (in respect of his age and wearisome experience of the world) withdrawne himselfe, and rested apart with his best beloued, giving himselfe to the scruice and contemplation of God and heavenly things, after hee had directed his children to their destined portions. For hee landed in a warme and settile soile, where hee planted his Vineyard, and drest the earth, after which, and his thankes giving to God by sacrifice, he is not remembred in the Scriptures, because hee was so farreaway from those Nations of which Moses wrote: which were the Hebrewes chiefly, and their enemies and borderers.

read, that the Scythians were originally Armenians, taking name & Scytha Regecorum. from Scythatheir King. But (in a word) we may see his vanitie, or rather (indeede) his fallhood in citing this place. For Diodorus a most approued and diligent Authour beginneth in that place with these words: Fabulantur Seytha, The Seythians fable: and his Interpreter in the table of that worke giueth this title to that very Chapter. Scytharum origo & successus, fabula, The original and successe of the Scythians. Afable, And (indeede) there needes no great disproofe hereof, since Ptolomie doeth directly delineate Seylhia Saga, or Saca, and sets them in 130. degrees of longitude: and the Persians (saith Herodotus) call all the Scythians, Saca, which Plinie confirmeth: for in respect that these Sace (faith Plinie) are the next Scythians to the Persians, there- 10 fore they give all the rest that name. Now that any Nation in Armenia can neighbour the Persians, there is no man beleeueth. But this supposed Scythia Araxea in Armenia lyeth in 78. degrees of longitude (that is) 42. degrees distant from the Saca; and the Countrie about Araxes, Ptolomie calleth Colthene and Soducene and Sacapene, without any mention of Scythia at all: and yet all those which are or were reputed Scythians, either within Imatio or without, to the number of 100. feuerall Nati-

Teb. Asia. 7. 68 ons are by Ptolomie precisely set downe. But to come to those later Authours, whereof some have written, others have seene a great part of those North-east Regions, and searched their antiquities with great diligence: First, Marius Niger boundeth Seythia within Imaus, in this manner: 20 (for Seytina without these mountaines is also beyond our purpose.) Seythia intra Imaum montem ea est, qua proprio vocabulo Gassaria hoc tempore dicitur: ab Occasu Sarmatia Aliatica: ab Oriente Imao monte : à Septentrione terra incognita: à Meridia Saccis, Sordianis, Margianis, vfq. ostia Oxaamnis in Hyrcanummare excuntis; & parte infini mari bine vife, ad Rha flumines offia terminatur : Scythia within the mountaine Imaus is that part of the world, which in their owne speech is at this time called Gasaria; and the same is bounded on the West side by Sarmatia Asiatica, (or of Asia) on the East by the Imaan mountaines: on the North by unknowne lands: on the South by the Sacca (which are the Saca) the Sogdiani, and the Margiani, to the mouth of Oxus, falling into the Hyrcan Sea, and by a part of

Ad meridiem Rexo Bolbhoro pars septentriomalis ponte Euxini víq in oftite Coracis flunii : underclichis à parte dextra Colchis, 1beris, Albanisq, in litgus Hyrcani maris prouenit. Spec.bift.1.30.

Now if Niger sets all Sarmatia Asiatica, to the West of Scythia, then Sarmatia (que magna sand regio est , & que innumeras nationes complectitur , Which is a great Region, comprehending innumerable Nations, (faith Niger) much of it being betweene Senting and Armenia, doth sufficiently warrant vs, that Armenia can bee no part of Scythia; and to make it more plaine, he diffeuereth Sarmatia it selfe from any part of Armenia, by the Regions of Colchis, Iberia, Albania, which he leaueth on the right hand of Surmatia, and yet makes Sarmatia but the West bound of Scythia.

And for Paulus Venetus, he hath not a word of Armenia among the Tartarian, or Scythian Nations; neither doth his fellow Frier John Plancarpio (cited by Vincentius in his description of Scythia) make any mention of Armenia; neither doth Haytonus an 40 Armenian borne, of the bloud of those Kings, (though afterward a Monke) euer acknowledge himselfe for a Tartarian, or of the Scythian races descended: though he write that storie at large, gathered by Nicholaus Salcuni, and (by the commandement of Pope Clement the fifth) in the yeare 1307. published.

Neither doth Mathias a Michou (a Canon of Craconia in Polonia)a Sarmatian borne, and that trauailed a great part of Sarmatia Asiatica, finde Armenia any way within the compasse of Tartaria, Scythia, or Sarmatia; and yet no man (whose trauailes are extant) hath observed so much of those Regions as he hath done: proving and disprouing many things, heretofore subject to dispute. And among others hee burieth that ancient and received opinion, That out of the mountaines Riphai, and 50 Hyperborei in Scythia, spring the Rivers of Tanais or Don, Volga or Edel, proving by vnanswerable experience, that there are no such mountaines in rerum natura; and (indeede) the heads and fountaines of those famous Riners, are now by the trade of Masconia knowne to every Merchant, and that they arise out of Lakes, low, wooddie, and marish grounds. The River of Tanois or Don, ariseth to the South of the Citie Tulla, sometwentie English miles, out of a Lake called Imanowesero in the great wood Okenitz kilies or Iepiphanolies. Volga, which Ptolomie cals Rha, and the Tartars call Edel. risethout of a Lake called Fronon, in the great Wood Vodkonzki: from which Lake the two other famous Rivers flow of Borysthenes (now Negrer) and Dsuina or Di- signer berskin. uidna. And this learned Polonian doth in this fort bound the European Sarmatia. In Sarmatia of Europe are the Regions of Russians, Lithuanians, Muscouians, and those adioyning, bounded on the West by the River of Vissa, the name perchance misprinted consequentleth Vissa for Vissula, a River which parts Germanie and Sarmatia: and for the East border the Rater Vista for Vissula, a River which parts Germanie and Sarmatia: 10 hee nameth Tanais or Don. Sarmatia Affatica hee cutteth from Europe by the same namanga.

River of Tanais, and the Caspian Sea, to with-hold it from stretching farther East: this Pon. Mica, Vi. Assantia being part of that Scythia which Ptolomie calleth Scythia intra Imaum Visibia. montem: Scythia within the mountaine Imaus. And the farne Mathias Michon farther affirmeth, that the Soythians (which Frier Annius would make Armenians) came not into Sarmatia Asiatica it selfe aboue three hundred and a few odde veeres before his ownetime: these be his wordes: Constat cam esse gentem nouam, & acuentitiam à partibus Orientis, (mutatis fedibus) paulo plus abbins trecentis annis Afia Sarmatiam ingref-Sam: It is manifest (fayth hee, speaking of the Soythian Nation) that this is a late planted Nation come from the Coasts of the East: from whence they entred into Asia, and gat new 20 feates a little more then three hundred yeeres finee: For (indeed) before that time the Gothes or Pouloci inhabited Sarmatia Miatica. And this Mathias lived in the yeere 1511. and this his Discourse of Sarmatia was printed at Augusta in the yeere 1506. as Bucholzerus in his Chronologie witnesseth. Now these Soythians (sayth hee) came from the East, for in the East it was that the Arke of Noab rested; and the Seytha Saca were those people which lived at the North foot of those Mountaines of Taurus or Ararat, where they encounter or beginne to mixe themselves with the great Imaus. And were there no other testimonie then the generall description of the Earth now extant, and the witnesse of Ptolomie, it is plaine, that betweene al parts of Armenia and Soythia, there are not only those three Regions of Colchis, Iberia, and Albania, but 30 the Caspian Sea: on the East shore of which Sea, but not on the West, or on that part which any way toucheth Armenia, there are (indeed) a Nation of Scythians (called Ariace) betweene luxartus and lattus; but what are these Scythians to any Ariaca, or Scythia Araxea which Annivs placeth in Armenia, more then the Scythians of Europe?

t. VIII.

The fift argument, The Vine must grow naturally neere the place where the Arke rested.

TO this if we adde the consideration of this part of the Text, That No Au plan-Gen.9.22. ted a Vineyard, wee shall finde that the fruit of the Vine or Raysin did not grow naturally in that part of Armenia, where this resting of the Arke was supposed: for if the Vine was a stranger in Italie and France, and brought from other Countries thither, it is not probable that it grew naturally in Armenia, being a farre colder Countrie. For Tyrrhenas first brought Vines into France, and Saturnes into Latium: Servius Meide yea at such time as Brennus and the Gaules invaded Italie, there were few or no Vines Eutropius. in France. For (fayth Plutarch in the life of Camillus) the Gaules remained betweene 50 the Pyrene; and the Alves, neere vnto the Senones, where they continued a long time. vntill they drunke Wine, which was first brought them out of Italie; and after they tafted thereof they hafted to inhabite that Countrie, which brought forth such pleafant fruit: fo as it appeared, that the Plant of the Vine was not naturall in France, but from Italie brought thither; as by Saturne from elsewhere into Italie.

Now

Now it is manifest that Noah travailed not farre to seeke out the Vine. For the Plantation thereof is remembred, before there was any counfaile how to dispose of the World among his children: and the first thing he did was to till the ground, and to plant a Vineyard, after his Sacrifice and Thankesgiuing to God; and wheresoeuer the Arke rested, there did the Vine grow naturally. From whence it doth no where appeare that hee trauailed farre: for the Scriptures teach vs, that hee wasa Husbandman, and not a Wanderer.

t. IX.

Answere to an objection out of the words of the Text: The Lord scattered them from thence upon the face of the whole earth.

 $\mathbf{A}_{\mathrm{D}}$  that all the children of Noah came together into Shinar, it doth not appeare, fauing that it may be inferred out of these wordes (from thence) because it is written: So the Lord feattered them from thence upon all the earth; which hath no other sense, but that the Lord scattered them (to wit) those that built this Towre: for those were from thence dispersed into all the Regions of the North and South, and to the Westward. And by these words of Sybilla (as they are converted) it seemeth that all came not together into Shinaar, for they have this limitation : Quidam 10 eorum turrem adificarunt altisimam,quasi per eam calum esfent ascensuris Certaine of them built a most high Towre, as if they meant thereby to have scaled the Heavens.

An answere to the objection from the name of Ararat, taken for Armenia; and the beighth of the Hils there.

 $B^{V\, au}$  before I conclude this part, it is necessarie to see and consider, what part of Scripture, and what reason may be found out to make it true or probable, that %the Arke of Noah was forsaken by the waters on the Mountaines of Armenia. For the Text hath only these wordes: The Arkerested on (or vpon) the Mountaines of Ararat or Armenia, saith the marginall note of the Geneua, the Chaldean Paraphrast cals Epiph.l.s.contra it Kardu; of which the highest hath the name of Lubar, saith Epiphanius. Now this Ararat (which the Septuagint doe not convert at all, but keepe the same word) istakento be a Mountaine of Armenia, because Armenia it selfe had anciently that name: fo as first out of the name, and secondly out of the heighth (which they supposeexceeded all other) is the opinion taken, That the Arke first fate thereon.

But these suppositions have no foundation: for neyther is Ararat of Armenia lone, neyther is any part, or any of those Mountaines of equal stature to many o-4 ther Mountaines of the World; and yet it doth not follow, that the Arke found the highest Mountaine of all other to rest on : for the Plaines were also vincouered, before Noah came out of the Arke. Now if there were any agreement among Writers of this Ararat, and that they did not differ altogether therein, wee might give more credit to the conceit. For in the Bookes of the Sybils it is written, that the Mountaines of Ararat are in Phrygia, vpon which it was supposed that the Arke stayed after the Floud. And the better to particularize the place and seate of these Mountaines, and to prooue them in Phrygia, and not Armenia, they are placed where the Citie of Cælenes was afterward built. Likewise in the same description the maketh mention of Mar/yas, a River which runneth through part of Phrygia, 9 and afterward ionneth it selfe with the River Maander, which is farre from the Gordiean Mountaines in Armenia. We may also find a great mistaking in Iosephus, (thoughout of Berosvs, who is in effect the Father of this opinion) that Io-SEPHVS fets Ararat betweene Armenia and Parthea toward Adiabene, and affirmeth withall, that in the Pronince of Caron by others Kairos and Arnos . fo called by reason that the waters have from thence no descent, nor issue out, the people vaunt that they had in those dayes referred some pieces of Noahs Arke. But Parthia roucheth no where vpon Armenia, for Armenia bordereth Adiabene, a Prouince of Allyria; fo that all Media and a part of Affyria is betweene Parthia and Armenia. Now whereas the discouerie of the Mountaines Cordiai was first borrowed out of Berofus by losephus; yet the Text which losephus citeth out of Berofus, differs farre from the wordes of that Berofus, which wandreth vp and downe in these dayes, set out by Annius. For Lerofus cited by lofephus, hath these words: Fertur & namen hutus pars in 10 Armenia, apud montem Cordicorum superesse, & quos dam bitumen inde abrasum secum reportare, quo vice amulesi loci buius homines vii (olent: (which is) It is reported also that a part of this ship is yet remaining in Armenia upon the Cordican Mountaines; and that diuers doe lorage from it the Bitumen or Pitch, and carrying it with them, they we it in stead of an amulet. But Annius his Edition of the Fragment of Berofus vieth these wordes: Nameleuata ab aquis in Gordiai montis vertice quieuit, cuius adbuc dicitur aliqua pars effe, & homines ex illa Bitumen tollere quo maxime otuntur adex piationem: For the whole Arke being lifted up by the waters, refled on the top of the Gordiean Mountaines, of which it is reported that some parts remaine, and that men doe carry thence of the Bitumen to purge by sacrifice therewith: so as in these two Texts (besides the difference of words) the name 20 is diverfly written. The ancient Berofus writes Cordiai with a (C.) and the Fragment Gordiai with a (G.) the one that the Bitumen is vsed for a preservative against Poyson or Inchantment; the other in Sacrifice; And if it bee faid that they agree in the generall, vet it is reported by neither from any certaine knowledge, nor from any approued Authour: for one of them vseth the word ((ertur) the other (dicitur) the one, that so it is reported, the other, that soit is sayd; and both but by heare-say, and therefore of no anothoritie nor credit. For common bruit is so infamous an Historian, as wise men neyther report after it, nor give credit to any thing they receive from it.

Furthermore, these Mountaines which Ptolomic cals Gordini, are not those Mountaines which himselfe giueth to Armenia, but hee calleth the Mountaines of Armenia 30 Moschici. These be his owne wordes: Montes Armenia nominantur ij, qui Moschici ap- Pto. Asia. tabe pellantur, qui protenduntur vfg, ad superiacentem partem Ponti Cappadocum; & mons qui Paryardes dicitur: The Mountaines of Armenia are they which are called Moschici, which Gretch along to the higher part of Pontus of the Cappadocians: also the Hill which is called Pargardes; which Mountaines Plinie calleth Pariedri, and both which lye to the Plinie Calleth North of Gordiai or Baris, in 43. and 44. and a halfe; and the Gordiaan Mountaines in 39. and a halfe : from the Northermost of which did the Georgians take their names, who were first Gordians and then Georgians, who amidst all the strength of the greatest Infidels of Persia and Turkie, doe still remaine Christians. Concerning the other suppositions, that the Mountaines of Gordini, otherwise Baris Kardu or Lu-40 bar, (which Ptolomie calleth Togordiaion) are the highest of the World, the same is absolutely false.

t. XI.

Of Cancasus, and divers farre higher Hils then the Armenian.

FOR the best Cosmographers with other, that have seene the Mountaines of Armenia, find them farre inferiour, and under-fet to divers other Mountaines even in 50 that part of the World, and elsewhere : as the Mountaine Athos betweene Macedon and Thrace, which Ptolomie cals Olympus, now called Lacas, (faith Castaldus) is farre furmounting any Mountaine that euer hath beene seene in Armenia: for it casteth shadethree hundred furlongs, which is seuen and thirtie miles and vpwardes: of plut. Munst. which Plutarch: Athos adumbrat latera Lemnia bouis: Athos shaddoweth the Cow of Lem- cosm.

Gen. 8-14.

t. XIII. Of the contrary situation of Armenia to the place noted in the Text: and that it is no maruaile that the same ledge of Hilsrunning from Armenia to India, should keepe the same name all along: and even in India bee called Ararat.

Aftly, we must blow up this Mountaine Ararat it selfe, or else wee must digge it Ldowne, and carry it out of Armenia; or find it elsewhere, and in a warmer Coun-10 trie, and (withall) fet it East from Shinsar: or else wee shall wound the Truth it selfe with the weapons of our owne vaine imaginations.

Therefore to make the mistaking open to enery eye, wee must understand, that Ararat (named by Moses) is not any one Hill, so called, no more then any one Hill among those Mountaines which divide Italie from France is called the Alpes: or any one among those which part France from Spaine is the Pyrenian; but as these being continuations of many Hils keepe one name in divers Countries: fo all that long ledge of Mountaines, which Plinie calleth by one name Taures, and Ptolomie both Plinie in his Taurus, Niphates, Coatras, Corones, Sariphi, vntill they encounter and croffe the description of Mountaines of the great Imaus, are of one generall name, and are called the Moun-Lycia, 15,6,27. 20 taines of Ararat or Armenia, because from thence or thereabout they seeeme to arise. So all these Mountaines of Hyrcania, Armenia, Coraxis, Caspij Moschiei, Amazonici, Heniochi, Scythici, (thus diverfly called by Plinie and others) Ptolomie cals by one name Cauca (us lying betweene the Seas Caspium and Euxinus: as all those Mountaines which cut afunder America, euen from the new Kingdome of Granado, to the streight of Magellan, are by one name called Andes. And as these Mountaines of Argrat runne

East and West: so doe those maruailous Mountaines of Imaus stretch themselves North and South; and being of like extent well-neere, are called by the name of I. maus, even as Plinie calleth these former hils Taurus, and Moses the hils of Ararat. The reason of seuerall names given by Ptolomie was, thereby the better to distinguish the 30 great Regions and Kingdomes, which these great mountaines bound and disseuer; as Armenia, Mesopotamia, Assyria, Media, Susiana, Persia, Parthia, Caramania, Aria,

Margiana, Bactria, Sogdiana, and Paropanisus: having all these Kingdomes either on the North or South fide of them. For all the mountaines of Asia (both the leffe and the greater) have three generall names, (to wit) Taurus, Imaus, and Caucafus: and they receive other titles, as they feuer and divide particular places and regions. For these mountaines which sunder Cilicia from the rest of Asia the lesse on the North fide, are called Taurus; and those mountaines which part it from Comagena (a Prouince of Syria) are called Amanus: the mountaines called Taurus running East and 40 ceth her passage, leaving the name of Amanus to the mountaines on her West banke; and on her East side the mountaines are sometimes knowned by the name of Taurus, (as in Ptolomies three tables of Asia) and sometimes Niphates: (as in the fourth) retaining that vincertaine appellation follong as they bound Armenia from Melopota-

mia: and after the River of Tygris cutteth them afunder, they then take the name of Niphates altogether, untill they separate Assyria and Media; but then they call themselnes Coatras, though betweene the vpper and nether Media, they doe not appeare, but altogether discontinue. For at Mazada in Media they are not found, but runnethrough the Easterne Media by pieces: in the middle of which Region they call themselves Orontes, and towards the East part Coronus; out of the Southerne 50 part whereof the Riner of Bagradus riseth, which divideth the ancient Persia from Caramania: and then continuing their course Eastward by the name of Coronus, they giue to the Parthians and Hyrcanians their proper Countries. This done, they change

themselues into the mountaines of Sariphi, out of which rifeth the Riner Margus, afterward yeelding her selfe to O. ws: (now Abia) and drawing now neere their wayes

the Winds, Cloudes, or Raine ouertop it. Againe, the Mountaine of Antandrus in Mylia, not farre from Ida, whence the River Scamandrus floweth, which runneth through Troy, is also of a farre more admiration then any in Armenia, and may bee seene from Constantinople. There are also in Mauritania neere the Sea, the famous Mountaines of Allas, of which HERODOTVS: Extat in hog mari Mons, cui nomen Allas. ita sublimis esse dicitur, ut adillius verticem oculi mortalium peruenire non posint : Vpon this Coast there is a Mountaine called Atlas, whose heighth is sayd to be such, as the eye of no Aris, Met. cord. mort all man can discerne the top thereof. And if we may believe Aristotle, then are all these inferiour to Caucasus, which hee maketh the most notorious both for breadth to and heighth: Caucalus Mons omnium maximus, qui astiuum ad ortum sunt, acumine atá, latitudine, cuius iuga à Sole radiantur v fg, ad conticinium ab ortu : & iterum ab occasu; Caucasus (saith ARISTOTLE) is the greatest Mountain both for breadth and beighth of all those in the North-east, whose tops are lightned by the Sun-beames, vs addonticinium (which is faith Macrobius betweene the first crowing after mid night and the breake of day: Others affirme, that the top of this Mountaine holds the Sunne-beames when it is darkein the Valley; but I cannot beleeue eyther: for the highest Mountaine of the World knowne is that of Tenerife in the Canaria: which although it hath nothing to the Westward of it for 1000. Leagues together but the Ocean Sea, yet doth it not eniov the Sunnes companie at any fuch late houres. Besides, these Mountaines which Ari- 20 flotle calleth Caucas, are those which separate Colchis from Iberia; though (indeed) Cauca (us doth divide both Colchis, Iberia, and Albania from Sarmatia: for he acknowledgeth that the River of Phasis riseth in the same Mountaine, which himselfe calleth Caucasus, and that Phasis springeth from those Hils which sunder Colchis from Iberia. falling afterward into Euxinus: which River (it is manifest) yeeldeth it selfe to the Sea, two degrees to the North of Trapezus (now Trabefunda) how soeuer Mercator bring it from Peryardes.

mos. Also the Mount of Olympus in Thessale, is sayd to be of that heighth, as neither

t. XII.

Of divers incongruities, if in this Storie we should take Ararat for Armenia.

SO as it doth first appeare, that there is no certaintie what Mountaine Ararat was: for the Bookes of the Sybils set it in Phrygia: and Berosus in Armenia: and as for Berosus authoritie, those men haue great want of proofes that borrow from thence.

Secondly, that Baris was the highest Hill, and therefore most likely that the Arke grounded thereon, the affertion and supposition have equal credit: for there are many Hils which exceed all those of Armenia; and if they did not, yet it dothnot follow (as is before written) that the Arke should sit on the highest.

Thirdly, it cannot be proued that there is any fuch Hill in Armenia, or in rerum natura, as Baris; for Baris (fayth Hierome) fignificth high Towres; and fo may all high Hils bee called indifferently; and therefore wee may better give the name of Baris to the Hils of Cancasus (out of which Indus riseth) then to any Hils of Armenia. For those of Caucasus in the East, are undoubtedly the highest of Asia.

Fourthly, the Authours themselues doe not agree in what Region the Mountaines Gordiei fland: for Ptolomie diffinguisheth the Mountaines of Armenia from the Gordiam, and calleth those of Armenia Moschier and Paryardes, as aforesaid. Now Paryardes is seated neere the middle of Armenia, out of which on the West-side riseth Euphrates, and out of the East-side araxis: and the Mountaines Moschici are those 50 Hils which distoyne Colchis, Iberia, and Albania (now the Countrie of the Georgians) from Armenia.

end, they first make themselves the South border of Bactria, and are then honoured with the Title of Paropanisus; and lastly of Caucasi, even where the famous River of Indus with his principal companions Hydaspis and Zaradrus spring forth, and take beginning. And here doe these Mountaines build themselves exceeding high, to equall the strong Hils called Imaus of Scythia, which encounter each other in 35.36. and 37. degrees of Latitude, and in 140. of Longitude: of the which the West parts are now ealled Delanguer, and the rest Nagracot; and these Mountaines in this place onely, are properly called Caucasi (sayth Ptolomie) that is, betweene Paroponisu and Imau: and improperly, betweene the two Seas of Cashium and Pontus.

NOw in this part of the World it is, where the Mountaine and River Ianus, and the Mountaine Nyfeus (so called of Baccinus Nifeus or Roa) are found: and on these highest Mountaines of that part of the World did Goropius Becamus conceines that the Arke of Noah grounded after the Floud : of all his coniectures the most probable, and by best reason approued. In his Indoscythia hee hath many good Arguments, though mixt with other fantasticall opinions of this subject. And as the same Becanus also noteth; that as in this part of the World are found the best Vines: foit is as true, that in the same Line, and in 34.35 and 36 degrees of Septentrionall Latitude are the most delicate Wines of the World, namely, in Indea, Candia, and other parts of Greece: and likewise in this Region of Margiana, and under these Mountaines, Strabo affirmeth, that the most excellent Vines of the World are found; the clusters of Grapes containing two Cubits of length: and it is the more probable, because this place agreeth in Climate with that part of Palestana, where the Searchers 30 of the Land by Moles direction found bunches of equall bignesse at E/col.

The fruitful nesse of this place (to wit) on the South bottome of these Hils, Curtius witnesseth. For in Margiana neere the Mountaine of Meros did Alexander feast himselfe and his Armie ten dayes together, finding therein the most delicate Wine of all other.

A No therefore to conclude this opinion of Ararat, it is true, that those Mountaines doe also trauerse Armenia: yea, and Armenia it selfe sometime is knowne by the name of Ararat. But as Plinie giveth to this ledge of high Hils, even from Cilicia to Paroponisus and Caucasus, the name of Taurus: and as the Hils of France and Germanie are called the Alpes: and all betweene France and Spaine the Pyrenes: and in America the continuation of Hils for 3000. miles together, the Andes: fo was Ararat the generall name which Moles gave them; the diversitie of appellations no otherwife growing, then by their dividing and bordering divers Regions and divers Countries. For in the like case doe we call the Sea, which entreth by Gibraltar, the Mediterran and inland Sea; and yet where it washeth the Coasts of Carthage, and over against it, it is called Tyrrhenum: betweene Italie and Greece, Ionium: from Venice to Durazzo, Adriaticum: betweene Athens and Asia, Ageum: betweene Sestus and Abydus, Hellespont: and afterward Pontus, Propontis, and Bosphorus. And as in thefe, fo is the Ocean to the North-east part of Scotland called Deucaledonroum: and on this fide, the Brittaine Sea: to the East, the Germane and Baltick, and then the

For a finall end of this question we must appeale to that Judge which cannot erreeven to the word of Truth, which in this place is to be taken and followed according to the plaine fense: seeing it can admit neither distinction, nor other construction on then the words beare literally, because they are vsed to the very same plaine purpole of a description, and the making of a true and precise difference of places. Surely, where the fense is plaine (and being so vinderstood, it bringeth with it no subfequent inconvenience or contrarietie) we ought to be warie, how we fancie to our felues any new or frange exposition; and (withall) to resolue our selues, that euery word (as aforesaid) hath his waight in Gods Booke. And therefore we must respect and reverence the testimonies of the Scriptures throughout, in such fort as S. Jugustine hath taught vs touching the Gospell of CHRIST IESVS (which is) Nequis aliter accipiat quod narrantibus Discipulis Christi) in Enangelio legerit, qu'am si ipfammanum Det, quamin proprio corpore geflabat, conflexerit; That no man otherwise take or understand that which he readeth in the Gospell (the Disciples of Christ bauing writtenit) then if he had feene the very hand of the Lord, which he bare in his owne body, fetting it downer.

The wordes then of Moses which end this dispute, are these: And as they went General sone from the East, they found a Playne in the land of Shinaar, and there they abode: which proueth without controuersie, that Nimrod and all with him came from the East into Shinar; and therefore the Arke of Noah rested and tooke land to the East-ward thereof. For wee must remember, that in all places wheresoener Moses maketh a difference of Countries, hee alwayes precifely nameth toward what quarters of the world the same were seated: as where he teacheth the plantation of loctan, he nameth Sephar, a Mount in the East: where he remembreth Cains departure from the presence of God, he addeth: And CAIN dwelt in the land of Nod towards the East. Gen. 10,30. side of Eden: And when he describeth the Tents and Habitations of Abraham after Gen 4.16.

30 he departed from Sechem, he yied these wordes: Afterwards remoduling thence water Gen. 2.8. a Mountagne Eastward from Bethel, he pitched his Tents : having Bethel on the Westfide, and Has on the East: and afterward in the ninth Verse of the same Chapter it is written: And ABRAHAM went forth iournying towards the South: also when Exechiel Exech 38.6. prophecied of Goz and Magog, he sheweth that these Nations of Togorma were of the North quarters and of the Queene of Sabait is written, that Thee came from the Matth. 12.42. South to visit SALOMON: And the Magi (or wisemen) came out of the East to offer pre- Mauha,vis fents unto Chrift. And that all Regions, and these trauailes were precisely set downe vponthe points of the Compasse and quarters of the World, it is most manifest: for Eden was due East from Indaa, Saba South from Hierusalem: the way from 40 Bethel to Agypt directly South; and the Calefyrians, the Tubalines and Magazians inhabited the Regions directly North from Paleftina, and so of the rest. But Armenia answereth not to this description of Shinaar by Moses. For to come out of Armenia, and to arrive in that Vally of Babylonia, is not a journying from the East, nor so neere vnto the East as the North: for Armenia is to the West of the North it selfe; and we must not say of Moses (whose hands the holy Ghost directed) that he erred total calo, and that he knew not East from West. For the body of Armenia standeth in fortiethree degrees Septentrionall, and the North part thereof in fortie fiue; and those Gordiean Mountaynes, whereon it was supposed that the Arke rested, stand in fortie one. But Babylonia, and the Valley of Shinaar are situated in thirtie five, 50 and for the Longitude (which maketh the difference betweene East and West) the -

Gordiean Mountaynes stand in 75. degrees, and the Valley of Shinaer in 79. and 80. And therefore Armenia lyeth from Shinaar Northwest, nineric five degrees from the East; and if Armenia had beene but North, yet it had differed from the Eastone whole quarter of the Compasse. But Gregorie and Hierome warne vs. In feripinris ne minima differentia omitti debet: nam finguli sermones, syllaba, apices, & puncta in diuina Scriptura plena sunt sensibus; In the Scriptures the least difference may not be omitted : for every speech, syllable, note, or accent, and point in divine Scriptures are replenished with their meanings. And therefore seeing Moses teacheth vs that the children of Woah came from the East, we may not beleeue Writers (of little authoritie) who also speake by heare-fay and by report, vt fertur, & vt dicitur, as Berofus and Nicolaus Damascenu. determining herein without any examination of the Text, at all-aduenture. But this is infallibly true, that Shinaar lyeth West from the place where the Arke of Noah rested after the floud; and therefore it first found ground in the East, from whence came the first knowledge of all things. The East parts were first civill, 10 which had Noah himselse for an Instructer : and directly East from Shinaar in the same degree of 35. are the greatest grapes and the best Wine. The great Armies alfo, which ouertopped in number those Millions of Semiramis, proue that those parts were first planted: And whereas the other opinion hath neither Scripture nor Reafon sufficient: for my selse I build on his wordes who in plaine termes hath told vs, that the Sonues of Noah came out of the East into Shinaar, and there they abode. And therefore did the Arke rest on those Easterne Mountaynes, called by one generall name Taurus, and by Moses the Mountaynes of Ararat, and not on those Mountaynes of the Northwest, as Berofus first fained, whom most part of the Writers have followed therein. It was, I say, in the plentifull warme East where Noah rested, 20 where he planted the Vine, where he tilled the ground and lived thereon. Placuit vero No Acho agricultura studium, in qua tractanda ipse omnium peritissimus esse dicitur : ob eamq, rem sua ipsius lingua I sh-Adamath ( hocest ) telluris vir appellatur celebratufg, eft; The studie of Husbandrie pleased No AH (faith the excellent learned man ARIAS MONTANUS) in the knowledge and order of which it is faid, that NOAH excelled all men: and therefore was he called in his owne language a man exercised in the earth. Which also sheweth that he was no Wanderer: and that he troubled not himselse with the contentions, beginning againe in the world, and among men, but stayed in his destined places, and in that part of the world, where he was first delivered out of the prison of the Arke, whereinto God had committed him, to preserve him and man-

Of the first planting of Nations after the floud; and of the Sonnes of NOAH, SEM, HAM, and IA-PHET, by whom the earth was repeopled.

ð. · I.

Whether SHEM and HAM were elder then IAPHET.

these Sonnes of Nosh, which was the eldest there is a question made. S. Augustine esteemed Shem for August, de civit. the eldest, Ham for the second, and laphet for the yon- Dei, 1.16.c.3. gest : and herein the opinions of Writers are divers. But this we finde everywhere in the Scriptures, and especially in Moses, that there was neuer any respect giuen to the eldest in yeeres, but in vertue, as by the examples of Henoch, Abraham, Iacob, and David, is made manifest. In a few wordes, this is the ground of the controuersie; The Latine translation, and so the

Geneua, hath converted this Scripture of Genesis the 10.v.21. in these wordes: Vnto SHEM also the Father of all the Sonnes of HEBER, and elder brother of IAPHET, were children borne. But Iunius agreeing with the Sequence thagint, placeth the same wordes in this manner: To SHEM also the Father of all the Sonnes of Heber, and brother of IAPHET, the eldest sonne were children borne : So the transposition of the word (elder) made this difference. For if the word (elder) had followed after Iapket, as it is in the vulgar translation placed before it, then had it beene as plaine for Iaphet, as it is by these translations for Shem. Now (the matter being otherwise indifferent) seeing Gods blessings are not tyed to first and last in blond, but to the eldest in pietie, yet the arguments are stronger for Iaphet then for Shem. And where the Scriptures are plainely understood without any danger or inconvenience, it feemeth strange why any man of judgement should make valuation of coniecturall arguments, or mens opinions. For it appeareth that Noab in the five hundreth yeere of his life, begat the first of his three Sonnes, Shem, Ham, and Iaphet: and in the fixe hundreth yeere (to wit) the hundreth yeere following, came the generall floud; two veeres after which Shem begat Arphaxad, which was in the yeere 602. of Noahs life, and in the yeere of Shems life one hundred : so as Shem was but 100. yeeres old two yeeres after the floud: and Woah begat his first borne being 500. yeeres old; and therefore, were Shem the elder, he had then beene a hundred yeeres old at the floud, and in the fixe hundreth yeere of Noahs life, and not two yeeres after, Which seeing the Scripture before remembred hath denyed him, and that it is also written: Then NOAH awoke from his wine, and knew what his yonger fonne had Gen. 11. 2.24 done unto him (to wit) HAM; of necessitie the first place doth belong to laphet. This yonger sonne so converted by the vulgar and Geneua, Junius turnes it filius minimus; His yongest some; but S. Chrysostome takes it otherwise, and findes Cham to be the middle or fecond brother, and Laphet the yongest sonne of all: which Cham for his disobedience and the contempt of his Father (whose nakednesse he derided) was difinherited, and loft the preeminencie of his birth, as Efau and Reuben did. Pere- in Gen. rius conceineth that Ham was called the yonger in respect of shem the eldest, but

anoweth withall, that the Hebrew hath not that precise difference of yonger and rongest, because it wanteth the comparative degree. It is true that Shem himselse was alwaies named in the first place yet whereas in the first Verse of the tenth Chapter of Genesis, Shem is accounted before laphet: in the second Verse Moses leaveth to begin with the issue by Shem, and reciteth the children of Iaphet first. So the first place was given to Shem for his election and benediction, and for this waightierespect, that the Hebrew Nation, Abraham, the Prophets, David, and Christ our Sauiour were descended of him. And therefore, whether we shall follow the Vulear Pagninus, and the Geneua, who agree in this conversion, S HEM frater IAPHET major; or with the Septuagint, Iunius, and Tremelius, SHEM fratri IAPHET majoru; 10 or with Pererius, SHEM frater IAPHET ille magnus : inferring that Shem was the great and famous brother of Iaphet, let the Reader judge. But for ought that I have feene to the contrarie, it appeareth to me that laphet was the eldest. For where Pererius qualifieth the strength of the former Argument, That Shems age at the time of the floud did not agree with his eldership (with a supposition that the Scriptures tooke no account of smaller numbers) I doe not finde in the Scriptures any such neglect at all: for it is written, that SHEM was an hundred yeeres old, and begat Ar-PHAXAD two yeeres after the floud; and againe in the 12. Verse : So SHELA lined after he begat EBAR, foure hundred and three yeeres, &c. so as the number of two yeeres, of three yeeres, of fine yeeres, and afterward of two yeeres were alwayes 20 precifely accounted.

II.

Of divers things that in all reason are to be presumed, touching the first planting of the World, as that all Histories must yeeld to Moses : that the world was not planted all at once, nor without great direction : and that the knowne great Lords of the first ages were of the issue of 🥦 Vt let vs goe vnto the Worlds plantation after the floud, which being rightly vnderstood, we shall finde that many Nations have supposed or fayned themselues those Ancestors and Fathers, which never saw or approched the bounds of their Countries, and of whom they are by no way or branch descended. For it is plaine in the Scriptures how the sonnes and issues of Noah were distributed, and what Regions were first planted by them, from whence by degrees the rest of the world was also peopled. And if any prophane Author may receiue allowance herein, the same must be with this caution, That they take their beginning where the Scriptures end. For so farreas the storie of Nations is therein handled, we must know that both the truth and antiquitie of the bookes of God finde no companions equall, either in age or authoritie. All record, memorie, and testimonie of antiquitie whatsoeuer, which hath come to the knowledge of men, the same hath beene borrowed thence, and thereforelater then it, as all carefull observers of time have noted: among which thus writeth Eusebius in the Prowme of his Chronologie: Moses is found more ancient then all those whom the Grecians make most ancient, as Homer, Hesion, and the Troian warre, and farre before Hercules, Musæus, Linus, Chiron, Oapheus, Castoa, POLLVX, ESCYLAPIVS, BACCHUS, MERCURIVS, and Apollo, and the rest of the gods of the Nations, their Ceremonies, or holy Rites, or Prophets: and before all the deeds of IVPITER, whom the Greekes have feated in the top and highest Turret of their Divinitie.

For of the three Impiters remembred by Cicero, the ancientest was the sonne of Æther, whose three sonnes begotten on Proserpina, were borne at Athens, of which Cecrops was the first King : and in the end of Cecrops time did Moles bring the chil dren of Ifrael out of Agypt: Eduxet Moses populum Dei ex Agypto nouisimo tem pore CECROPIS Atheniensis Regis; Moses brought the children of Israel out of Agypt, in the last dayes of CECROPS King of the Athenians, faith S. Augustine : and ver De Civil. Dei. was not Cecrops the Founder of the Citie it selfe, but Thefens long after him. But his.c.i. hecause the truth hereof is diversly proved, and by many learned Authors, I will not cut asunder the purpose in hand, by alleaging many authorities in a needlesse question, but leave it to the proper place.

First, weare to consider that the world after the floud was not planted by imagination, neither had the children of Noah wings, to flie from Shinaar to the yttermoft border of Europe, Africa, and Asia in haste, but that these children were directed by a , wife Father, who knew those parts of the world before the floud, to which he dispofed his children after it, and fent them not as Discouerers, or at all-adventure, but asfigned and allotted to every Sonne and their iffues, their proper parts. And not to harken to fabulous Authors, who have no other end then to flatter Princes (as Virgil did Augustus in the siction of Eneas) or else to glorisie their owne Nations; Let vs build herein vpon the Scriptures themselves, and after them vpon Reason and Nature. First, therefore we must call to minde and consider, what manner of face the earth enerywhere had in the 130. yeere after the great inundation, and by comparing those fruitfullest Vallies with our owne barren and cold ground, informe our selues thereby, what wonderfull Desarts, what inpassable fastnesse of woods, reeds. brvars, and rotten graffe, what Lakes and standing Pooles, and what Marishes, Fens and Bogs, all the face of the earth (excepting the Mountaynes) was peftered withall. For if in this our Climate (where the dead and destroying winter depresset all vegetative and growing Nature, for one halfe of the yeere in effect) yet in twentie or thirtie yeeres these our grounds would all ouer-grow and be courred (according to the nature thereof) either with Woods or with other offensive Thickets and Bushments: much more did all forts of Plants, Reedes, and Trees, prosper in the most fruitfull Vallies, and in the Climate of a long and warme Summer, and having withall the start of 130. yeeres, to raise themselves without controlement.

This being confidered, it will appeare, that all these people which came into Shimar, and ouer whom 20 imred either by order or strength tooke the Dominion. did after the confusion of Languages, and at such time as they grew to be a mightie People, disperse themselves into the Regions adjoying to the said Vally of Shinar. which contayned the best part of Mesopotamia, Babylonia, and Chaldea; and from the borders thereof in time they were propagated: some of them towards the South. others towards the West and North. And although there were allotted to Shem many Regions, both East and West from Shinaar, with the Dominion of Palestina, which the Canaanites first possest; yet could be not enjoy the lot of his inheritance on the suddaine, but by time and degrees. For we finde, that Abraham the true succeffor of Shem dwelt in Chaldea at Vr; and from thence (called by God) he rested at Charran in Melopotamia: from whence after the death of Thare he traugiled to Sichem in Palestina: and yet there had passed betweene Shem and Abraham (reckoning neither of themselves) seven descents, before Abraham moved out of Chaldaa: where, and in Babylonia, all those people by Nimrod commanded, inhabited for many yeeres, and whence Nimred went out into Affria, and founded Ninine. deed the great Masters of Nations (as farre as we can know) were, in that Age of the iffues of Ham; the bleffing of God given by Noah to Shom and Iaphet taking leffe effect, untill divers yeeres were confumed; and untill the time arrived, which by the wifedome of God was appointed. For of Chus, Mizraim, and Canaan, came the People and Princes, which held the great Kingdomes of Babylonia, Syria, and Ægypt, for many descents together.

Of the Iles of the Gentiles in IAPHETS portion: of BEROSVS his too speedie sea- 10 ting Gomen the sonne of IAPHET in Italie; and another of IA-PHETS Connes TVBAL in Spaine: and of the antiquitie of Longinque Nauigation.

O begin therefore (where Moles beginneth) with the sonnes of 14pheth, among whom the Iles of the Gentiles were divided: which divided; which came into Shinaar, was (if the dividen were made or Phylage birth) in the into Shinaar, was (if the division were made at Phalegs birth) in the yeere of the World 1757. or 1758. and (by that account) in the yeere after the floud one hundred and one, of which question elsewhere.

The habitations proper to the sonnes of laphet were the Iles of the Gentiles. which include all Europe with all the Ilands adioyning, and compaffing it about: Europe being also taken for an Iland, both in respect that the Sea Hellespont and Egeum, Bosphorus and Euxinus cut it off from the great Continent of Asia, as also because Europe it selfe is (in effect) surrounded with water, saving that it is fastned to Alia by the North, for it hath those Seas before named to the East, the Mediterran to the South and Southwest, the Ocean to the West, and Brittish, Germane, and Baltick Sea, with that of Glaciale to the North North-east, and North-west. Besides, it hath about it all the Cyclades or Iles lying betweene Greece and the leffer Asia, and the Iles of Rhodes, Cyprisa, Crect or Candia, Sicilia, Corfica, Sardinia, Malta, the Iles of 20 Brittanie and Zealand, with their yong-ones adiacent.

This partition and portron of Iapheth, with the part which he held in Asia, and the North, which was also very great, answereth to that bleffing of God by 200ah. Delatet Deus IAPHETH; Let God spresde abroad (orincrease the posteritie of) lapheth; and let him dwell in the Tents of SHEM. For though Junius here yeth the word (alliciat) and not dilatet: and the Geneua persuadeat; yet the Septuagint have dilatet or amplificet; and such was the bleffing given to our Fathers, which God promised to Abraham and his feede for euer. And the dwelling in the Tents or Tabernacles of Shem was a bleffing by God to the posteritie of Iapheth: noting not onely an enlargement of Territories; but that thereby they should be made participant of Gods Church. 40 But to come to laphets sonnes, of whom Gomer is the eldest. This Gomer ( if we may beleeue Berofus and Annius, whose authoritie the greatest number of all our late Writershaue followed) did in the tenth yeere of Nimrods reigne depart from Fund. (bronol. Babylonia, and planted Italie: which also Function confirmeth in these words: Anno decime NIMRODI, Ge. In the tenth yeere of NIMRODS reigne, GOMERUS GALLYS playted a Colonie in that land afterward called Italie: and in the twelfth yeere of the fame NIMRODS reigne TUBAL Seated himselfe in Asturia in Spaine (now called Biscay) which was in the 140. and in the 142. yeeres after the floud, according to BEROSV'S. But this opinion is very ridiculous. For before the confusion of tongues the children of Noah did not separate themselves, at least so many of them as came with Nimrod in- 10 to Shinaar. Let vs therefore consider with reason, what time the building such a Citie and Towrerequired, where there was no prepared matter, nor any readie meanes to performe such a worke as Nimrod had erected (and as Function himselfe out of his Author Berofus witnesseth) ad altitudinem of magnitudinem montium; To the heighth and magnitude of the Mountaines. Sure that both this Citie and Towre were almost builded the Scriptures witnesse: But the Lord came downe to fee the Citie General. and Towre, which the Sonnes of menbuilded. Let vs then but allot a time sufficient for the making of Bricke to fuch a Worke, of the greatest heighth (and therefore of circuit and foundation answerable) that euer was. For where the vniuerfall Floud conered the highest Mountaines sisteene Cubits; Let vs build vs a Citie and a Town (faith NIMROD) whose top may reach unto the Heaven; meaning, that they would rayle their Worke aboue fifteene Cubits higher then the highest Mountaine, otherwise they could not affure themselves from the seare of a second inundation: a great part 10 whereof was finished before it fell, and before they left the Worke. They also began this building upon a ground, the most oppressed with waters of all the World: as by the great ruine which these waters forceably ouer-bearing and ouer-flowing, made in the time of the succeeding Emperours, is made manifest, approved also by the Prophet Hieremie, speaking of Babylon in these wordes: Thou that divellest woon many waters. It cannot be doubted but that there needed a substantial foundation, for so high a raised building on a marish ground: and to which, Glycas vpon Genesis giueth fortie yeeres. For it seemeth, that the Towre was neere similard when God ouerthrewit it being afterward written, So the Lord feattered them from thence upon all the earth, and they left to build the Citie. Out of which place it may bee gathered 20 (because the Towre is not then named) that they very neere had performed the Worke of their supposed defence, which was the Towre: and that afterward they went on with the Citie adioyning, wherein they inhabited. It is also to bee noted, that till fuch time as this confusion seized them (whereupon the Towre was throwne downe) these Nations did not disperse themselves: for from thence the Lord scattered Genit. them upon all the Earth, (that was) when they perceived not one anothers speech. Now to thinke that this Worke in the newnesse of the World (wanting all instruments and materials) could be performed in ten yeeres; and that Tubal and Gomer in the same yeere could creepe through 2000. miles of Desart, with Women, Children, and Cattell: let those light Beleeuers, that neyther tye themselues to the Scrip-20 ture, nor to reason, approoue it, for I doe not. And if the Arke of Noah was 100. veeres in building, or but neere fuch a time, (and then) when the World had stood 1556. veeres, it were more then foolishnesse and madnesse it selfe, to thinke that such a Worke as this could be performed in ten; when the World (from the Floud to the arrivall at Babel, and beginning of this building there) had but 131. yeeres, and whereof they had spent some part in travailing from the East. Againe, if all Asia set to their helping hands in the building of the Temple of Diana, and yet they confumed in that Worke 400. yeeres (or bee it but halfe that time) and in such an Age as when the World flourished in all sorts of Artificers, and with abundant plentie of materials and carriages: This Worke of the Towre of Babel could hardly (with all 40 the former wants supposed) bee erected in those few yeeres remembred. And for conclusion, let all men of judgement waigh with themselves how impossible it was for a Nation or Family of men, with their Wiues and Children, and Cattell, to trauaile 3000 miles through Woods, Bogs, and Defarts, without any Guide or Condustor; and we shall find it rather a Worke of 100. yeeres then of 100. daies. For in the West Indies of which the Spaniards have the experience, in those places where they found neither path nor Guide, they have not entred the Countrey ten miles in tenne yeeres. And if Nimrods people spent many yeeres by the account before remembred in passing from the East-India or the higher part thereof, which standeth in 115. Degrees of Longitude, untill they came into Shinaar which lyeth in 79. Degrees (the di-50 stance between ethose places containing 36. Degrees, which make 720. Leagues, which is 2160. miles) and did all the way keepe the Mountaines and hard ground; then the difference betweene Babylon and Biscay is much more: for the bodie of Biscay lyeth in ten Degrees, and Babylon or Shinaar, (as aforesaid) in 79. so the length of way from Shinaar to Asturia or Biscay is 69. Degrees, which make 1380. Leagues, or

of miles 4140. And therefore if Nimrod tooke divers yeeres to find Shinaar, which was but 2160. miles: or (supposing that the Arke rested in Armenia) little aboue 400. miles: there is no cause to the contrarie, but to allow as many veeres to

Gomer and Tubal to trauaile 3000 miles to Countries lesse knowne vnto them by farre then the Land of Shinaar was to Nimred. For Paradise was knowne to Noah before the Floud: and so was the Region of Eden by Moles afterward remembred;

but what hee vnderstood of most part of the World else it is vnknowne. And therefore did Annius ill aduise himselfe to plant Gomer in Italie, and Tubal in Spaine, in the tenth and twelfth of Nimrods Raigne: Shall the earth be brought forth in one day, or shall come by Sea, and so saue this great trauaile through Desarts by Land. But we neuer read of any Nauigation in those dayes, nor long after. Surely he that knoweth what a Nation be borne at one? But it may bee obiected, That the Sonnes of Inpheth might 10

And although it cannot bee denyed, when Noab by Gods infpiration was instructed in so many particulars concerning the Arke, that then many things concerning Nauigation were first renealed; yet it appeares that there was much difference betweene the Arke of Noah, and such Ships as were for any long Nauigation. Yea ancient Stories shew, that it was long after these times, ere any durst presume vpon any long Voyages to Sea: at least with multitudes of Women, and Children, and Cattell: as also common reason can tell vs, that even now when this Arte is come to her perfection, fuch Voiages are very troublesome and dangerous. So as it doth appeare, that there was not in that Age of Nimred any Ship, or vie of Ships fit for any long Nauigation, For if Gomes and Tubal had passed themselves and their people by Sea; the exercise of Nauigation would not have beene dead for so many hundred yeeres 30 after. Leauing therefore the fabulous to their Fables, and all men else to their fancies, who have cast Nations into Countries farre off, I know not how, I will follow herein the Relation of Moses and the Prophets: to which Truth there is ioyned both Nature, Reason, Policie, and necessitie: and to the rest, neither probabilitie, nor possibilitie.

Ow although many learned and reuerend men haue formed (I know not whereby led) a Plantation of the World, which also hath beene and is received: yet I hope I may be excused, if I differ altogether from them in many particulars. Certainely, that great learned man of this latter Age, Arias Montanus was also in some things much mistaken: and for Inserting and the hath many good things, and is a Guide to many errours with-all, so was he in this Plantation of the World very grosse and fabulous, whereby both Eusebius, Hierosolymitanus, Epiphanius, and others, that haue taken his testimonies for 50 currant, haue beene by him farre misled. But the better to conceiue what Regions of the World Gomer the first some of lapher posses, as also Tubal, it is needfull to beginnewith Magog; because the Scriptures take most knowledge of Gog and Magog, which two names haue troubled many Commentators, saith Matth, Beroaldus, who hath laboured herein with great diligence, and whom (of all that euer I read) I find most

it is to imbarke so great a people as we may justly suppose those Conducters carried with them, will not easily believe, that there were any Vessels in those dayes to transport Armies, and (withall) their Cattell, by whose Milke they lived and fed their Children: for Milke and Fruit were the banquetting dishes of our Forefathers. And in the eldest times, euen the Kings and Fathers of Nations valued themselues by the Heards and numbers of their Cattel:who had flocks of Sheep, and great Droues and Heards of their owne, and their owne Sheep-heards and Heardsmen. Now if Tubal had past by Sea from any part of Palastina, Syria, or Cilicia, he might have made 20 good choice within the Streights, and not have overgone Granado, Valentia, and other Provinces in that Tract : past the Streights of Gibralter, disdained all Andalusia and Portugal, with all those goodly Ports and Countries; and have sought out the yron. wooddy, and barren Countrey of the World (called Bifear) by a long and dangerous Nauigation. But before the iourney of the Argonauta there were scarce any Vessels that durst crosse the Seas in that part of the World: and yet that which Island had (if the Tale be true) was but a Galley, and a poore one (God knowes) and perchance fuch as they vsethis day in Ireland: which although it carried but foure and fiftie Paffengers, yet was it farre greater then any of the former times: Erat enim antea paruarum nauicularum vsus: For in former times they vsed very small Vessels. I denie not 30 but that the Tyrians gaue themselves of olde to farre-off Nauigations, whence Tibul-

And for those boates called long a naues or Gallies, Plinie faith that Agesias ascribeth the device to Paralus: and Philostephanus to Iason: Ctesias to Samyras; and Saphanus 40 to Semiramis: Archimachus to Ageon: to which invention the Erythrai are said to haue added certaine numbers of Oares: and then Aminocles the Corinthian to haue increased them: the Carshaginians afterwards to have brought them to foure Bankes: the Quing, Remi first to have beene vsed by Nesichthon the Salaminian, with which Vessels in those parts of the World, the Romans served themselves in the Punick War. But these be perhaps but the partialities of Writers, or their ignorance. For there are that as constantly cast the denising of these Gallies on Sefostris, though Semiramis vied them in the passage of her Armie ouer Indus in Abrahams time. So it is said, that Danaus was the first that brought a Ship into Greece: and yet the Samothracians challenge the invention; and yet Tertullian (on the contrarie) gives it to Minerua: 50 others to Neptune; Thucydides to the Corinthians. And so ignorant were the people of those Ages, as the £gyptians vsed to coast the Shores of the Red Sea vpon raffes, deuised by King Erythrin: and in the time of the Romans, the Brittans had a kind of Boat (with which they croft the Seas) made of small twigs, and couered ouer with most judicious in the examination of this plantation. He takes authoritie from the Prophet Ezechiel chiefly, who in the 38: and 39: Chapter directeth vs, what Nations the Gomerians, Tubalines, and Togormians were, together with the Magogians: of which Gog was Prince or chiefe Conductor in their attempts against Israel. For besides the portions of Europe, and the North-east parts of the greater Asia, which Iapheths issues possest, all Asiathe lesse was peopled by them. And that those of the issue of Iapheth (whom Ezechiel speakes of) were leated hereabout, it may best appeare, if wee consider the circumstances of the place, and the dependencie vpon the former prophecie in the 37. Chapter. For in that 37. Chapter, Ezechiel prophecieth of the vniting of the two Kingdomes of Israel and Iuda, after their deliuerie from 10

By which prophecie of Ezechiel, it appeareth, that God purposed to gather together his people, to give life to dead bones, and to rule them by one Prince. For to that purposeitis written; And DAVID my servant shall bee King over them, and they shall have one sheepe-heard, (that is) they shall bee vnited as they were in Davids time. Heereupon in the 38. Chapter Ezechiel prophecieth against those Nations, which should seeke to impeach this Vnion, and disturbe the people of Ifrael, whom God purposed to receive to grace, and promised to restore. And so in the same Chapter are those Nations coupled together, which insested the Israelites after their returne, and fought to subject them : all which were the subjects or Allies of Gog, 20 Prince of the Magogians, or Calefyrians, next bordering Palastina, or the holy Land, followed also by the rest of the Nations of Asia the lesse, which lay North from Indea. The words of Ezechiel are these: Sonne of man, set thy face against Goo, and against the land of MAGOG, the chiefe Princes of MESECH(or MOSOCH and Tv-BAL: and afterward; Behold, I come against the chiefe Prince of MESHECH and Tv-BAL: and in the fixth Verse; GOMER and all his bands, and the house of TOGORMA of the North quarters. Herein Ezechiel hauing first deliuered the purpose of his Prophecie, teacheth what Nations they were, that should in vaine assaile Israel. He iovneth them together vnder their Prince Gog, and sheweth that their habitations were on the North quarters of Inda, and how feated and ioyned together. Gog fignifieth 30 in the Hebrew (laych Saint Hierome ) tectum or covering of a house: and Pintus vpon Ezechielaffirmeth, that by Gog is meant Antichrist: for (sayth hee) Antichristus erit Diabolitegumentum Sub Specie humana: That Antichrist Shall be the couring of the Deuill under humane forme. Hee addeth that Magog is as much to fay as Gog: the letter (M) being an Hebrew Preposition, and importeth as much as of or from: so he taketh Magog for those people which follow Antichrist. So farre Pintus; at least in this not amisse, that he expoundeth Magog not for any one person, but for a Nation, with which agreeth this observation of Beroaldue. Magog (sayth he) in Hebrewis written Ham-Magog, which sheweth Magog to bee a Region or Nation: for the letter (He) which is vied but for an Emphasis (which the Hebrewes call Heliaiedia ) is neuer added 40 to proper names of men, but often to place. So as Gog was Prince of that Nation (called eyther Magog, or according to others, the people of Gog) also Prince of Meshech, (or Mosoch) and of Tubal: as by the first Verse of the 39. Chapter is made manifest: Bebold, I come against thee Gog the chiefe Prince of Meshech and Tv-BAI. This must needes bee meant by the Successours of Selencus Nicates, who this not (as other conquering Nations) seeke to make the Iewes their Tributaries onely, but endeuoured by all meanes, and by all kind of violence to extinguish the Religion it selfe (which the Hebrews profest) and the acknowledging of one true God; and to force them to worship and serue the mortall and rotten gods of the Heathen; of which nothing remained but the very name, and dead Images. S. Ambrose and Isi- 50 dore take Gog for the Nation of the Goths: belike because they inuaded Europe, and facked Rome, and many other places and Cities thereabout. Hermelaus Barbarus out of Pomp. Mela deriues the Turkes from the Scythians, esteemed Magocians of Goe. Many take Gog for the proper name of a Man: other of a Region: others for a Nation

inhabiting a Region, as Junius, who faies that Gog is the name of a Nation, denominated from him whom the Greeke Stories call Gyges: who in former time having Slaine Candaules the Lydian, gave his owne name to that Nation, thence after called Gygades: and thereofalfo the Gygean Lake; which Lake Strabo alfo findeth in Lydea, (of which Gyges was King ) fortie Furlongs from Sardis. Planie calleth it Gygeum Strab.l.12. stagnum. Herodotus and Nisander set it about the Rivers of Hyllus, and Marander; but the difference is not great. Marius Niger maketh mention of this Gyges King of Lydia: who after he had subdued the Countrie about the River Rhodius which runneth into the Hellespont, called the Promontorie Trapele after his ownename Grees. These suid col. 207. 10 opinions doe also seeme to strengthen that of Junius. For Magog, fayth hee, is that part of Asia the leffe, which Halyattes obtained, and after him his sonne Crassus; who (as Inning further notes) having maltred all those Regions as farre South as Innin Except;8 Libanus in that border built the Citie Gigarta or Gogkarta (which in the Syrian fignifieth the Citie of Gog) seated in Calefyria, whose people were the ancient Enemies

Bambyce, which by another name is called Hierapolis, but of the Syrians Magog. Hee further telleth vs that the monstrous Idoll Atergatic, called by the Greekes Derceto, was 20 hereworshipped, Lucian makes mention hereof, faying that the Citie had anciently another name, which yet hee expresseth not; for bearing perhaps the word Magog, as founding nothing elegantly in the Greeke. But if wee may beleeue Strabo, Snabilité. then was Edellain Mosapotamia the same Bambyce or Hierapolis, where the same Idoll was worshipped. Ortelius is doubtfull whether one of these Authours did not mistake the place of this Bambyce or Hierapolis. It may well enough bee that the same name and Religion was common to them both. Certaine it is, that both of them lay due North from Palestina, and were both subject vnto the Kings of the Race of Seleucus. Now I doe not condemne the opinion of Hermolaus Barbarus following Islephus, but grant that perhaps Magoz might also bee the Father of the 30 Stythians; notwithstanding that in this place, where Gog is made the Prince of Magog, the Nations of Calefyria and the North parts adiovning bee meant by Magog: for by a latter Plantation from these parts they might bee propagated into Scythia. Yet it is not to bee denied, that the Scythians in olde times comming out of the Northeast wasted the better part of Asia the lesse, and possest Calesgria, where they built both Scythopolis and Hierapolis, which the Syrians call Magog. And that to this Magog Ezecbiel had reference, it is very plaine: for this Citie Hierapolis or Magog standeth due North from Indea, according to the wordes of Ezechiel, that from the North quarters those Nations should come. For as the Kings of the South which infested the Israelites were the Prolomes Kings of Agypt: so those of the North were 40 the Kings of Afia and Syria, the Successiours of Selencus, the Successiour of Alexander Macedon. Gulielmus Tyrinsthinkes that this Hierapolis is that Rages, mentioned in the Lib. 4 cap.de Storie of Tobias. Plinierakes it not onely to have beene called Bambyce, as we have bello, Sacros faid, but also Edessa: not that by Euphrates; but another of the same name; now the knowne name is Allepo: for fo Bellomms expounds this Hierapolis, or Magog. This Citie had the title of Sacred, as the Sacred Citie, (for fo the word Hierapolis fignifieth) yet was it a place of most detested Idolatrie, and wherein was worshipped the Idoll

If then wee conferre the words of Ezechiel in the third verse of the thirtie eight 50 Chapter, wherein heeiovneth together Gog Mefech, and Tubal: and withall remember that Hierapolis was the Citie of Magog, which also is seated directly North from Indea: with whom also Ezechiel coupleth Gomer, and all his bands of the North quarters; we may (as I conceiue) safely conclude, that these Followers and Vassals of Gog (which were Northerne Nations in respect of Indea) were not the Gomeri-of the Mermaide Atergatis, or Atirgitis, according to Plinie, which the Greekes call ans of France, nor the Tubalines of Spaine, but a people of the leffer Asia, and Calefyria: and therefore that the opinions of Berofus, lofephus, and who foeuer else hath followed them therein are to bee reiected. But if lofephus referre himselse to later times, and thinke that some Colonie of the Tubalines might from Iberia and Asia passe into Spaine (to wit, from that piece of Land betweene Colchis (or Mengrelia) and Albania: (most part possest by the Georgians) then is his judgement of better allowance. For without any repugnancie of opinions, it may bee granted, that in processe of time these people might from their first habitation passe into the Countries neere the Euxine Sea, and from thence in after-Ages into Spaine.

Tofephus makes mention of the Iberi, faying, that they were anciently called Tho- 10 belos, as of Tubal; from whence (faith Iustine) they paffed into Spaine to fearch out the Mines of that Region : having belike vnderstood that it was a Southerly Countrie and Mountainous. For it seemeth that the Tubalines called Chalybes lived altogether by the exchange of Iron, and other Metals, as Apollonius witnesseth in these following Verses, telling how the Argonautes did visit them;

Hac genstellurem rigido non vertit aratro, Sed ferri venas [cindit [ub montibus altis: Mercibus hac mutat, que vita alimenta ministrant :

The Calybes plough not their barren soyle But vndermine high Hils for Iron Veines: Changing the purchase of their endlesse toyle For marchandize, which their poore lines sustaines.

But it is more probable, that Spaine was first peopled by the Africans, who had ever fince an affection to returne thither, and to repeople it anew. This appeared by the Carthaginians of old, who were easily drawne to passe ouer the Streights into that Countrie; and after by the Moores who held Granado, and the South parts eight hundred yeeres, till the time of Ferdinand and Isabel. And either of these opinions are 30 more probable, then that in the twelfth yeere of Nimrods raigne, Tubal past into Spaine, and therein built St. Pual: a poore Towne, and a poore deuice, God knowes. Certaine it is that we must finde Mosoch or Mesech, and Tubal neighbours, and Gomer and Togarma not farre off, or elle we shall wrong Ezechiel: for he called Gog the Leader or Prince of Mesech and Tubal, and maketh Gomer and Togorma their affistants. And that Mefech inhabited Asia, Functius (though he followed Berofus) confesseth, for thefe be his wordes: Mes acvs, qui à Mose Mesech, priscos Messos de dula monte v/q, ad Ponticam regionem posuit: hac regio posteà Cappadocia dicta est, in qua wrbs Mazica, coc. hac est terra M A G O G principalis. Mes Acvs, whom Moses calleth MESECH, placed the ancient Messans from the mount Adulas, unto the coast of Pontus. 40 This Region was afterward called Cappadocia, in which is the Towne Mazica, Oc. this is the principall Countrie of M A G O G. And this doth Annius also auow, and yet forgets that Gog was Prince both of Mefech and Tubal: and therefore, that the one was a Nation of Spaniards, the other of Cappadocians, is very ridiculous; Spaine lying directly West, and not North from Iudea. Also Ezechiel in the 27. Chapter, where he prophecieth of the destruction of Tyre, nameth Mesech and Tubal joyntly. And for a finall proofe, that these Nations were of a Northerne neighbour land (how farre soeuer stretched) Ezechiel in the 38. Chapter makes them all horsemen. Thou, and much people with thee, all shall ride upon horses, even a great multitude and a mightie. Then if any man beleeue that these troupes came out of Spaine ouer the Pyrenes, and 50 first passed over a part of France, Italie, Hungarie, and Sarmatia, and imbarqued againe about the Hellespont, or else compassed all Pontus Euxinus, to come into the lesser Afis, which is halfethe length or compasse of the then knowne world, he may be called a strong beleeuer, but he shall neuer be justified thereby. But on the contrarie it is knowne, that Seleucis was a Province neighbouring Palestina or Iudea, and that Hierapolis (or Magog) ioyned vnto it: whose Princes commanded all Syria, and Alia the leffe, (namely the Seleucide) and held it, till Scipio Asiaticus ouerthrew Antiochus the Great : after which they yet possest syria till the time of Tigranes : and whether Melhech be in Cappadocia, or vnder Iberia, yet is it of the Tubalines, and one and the

Of Gomer the like may be faid. First he seated himselfe with Togorma, not farre from Magog and Tubal, in the borders of Syria and Cilicia. Afterward he proceeded further into Asathe leffe; and in long tract of time his valiant issue filled all Germany, 10 rested long in France and Brittaine, and possessed the vtmost borders of the earth, accomplishing (as Melanctan well notes) the fignification of their parents name, which is Vimolt bordering. But when these borderers wanted further place, whereinto they might exonerate their swelling multitudes, that were bounded in by the great Ocean, then did they returne vpon the Nations occupying the Countries, through which they had formerly passed, oppressing first their Neighbours, afterwards the people more remote. Hereupon it was (as the worthy restorer of our antiquities, M. William Cambden hath noted) that they were called Cimbri, which in their old language doth signifie Robbers; necessitie inforcing them to spoile their Neighbours, to whom in their original they were as necre joyned, as afterwards in the leates which 20 they possessed. For that the warlike Nations of Germanie were in elder ages accustomed to be beaten by the Gaules, the authoritie of Cafar affirming it is proofe sufficient. But in times following they pursued richer conquests, and more easie though further distant, by which (to omit their other enterprises not here to be spoken of) they were drawne at length into Asa the lesse, and occupyed those parts, which had formerly beene held by their Progenitors. I say not that they claymed those Lands as theirs by descent; for likely it is, that they knew little of their owne pedigree. Neither can any man therefore denie, that they were of old feated in Asia, because in late ages they returned thither; vnleffe he will thinke, that all those Nations which from farre parts have invaded and conquered the land of Shinaar, may by that argument 30 be proued not to have iffued from thence at the first.

Now concerning Samothes for his excellent wisedome surnamed Dis, whom Annius makes the brother of Gomer and Tubal (which brother Moses neuer heard of, who spake his knowledge of Japhets sonnes) they must finde him in some old Poet: for Functius, a great Berofian, confesseth: Qui bie Samothes fuerit incertum est; Who inchron. this SAMOTHE & was it is uncertagne; neither is there any proofe that he was that same Dis, whom Cafar faith the Gaules Suppose to be their Ancester; yea, and Vignier con- Cafar Comments fesseth with Functivs : Mais on ne scayt qui il estoit; No man knowes who be was.

T Vr before I goe on with Woah his sonnes, I thinke it necessarieto disprove the fiction which Annius hath of Noah himselse : an inuention (indeede) very ridiculous, though warranted (as he hath wrested) by those Authors of whom himselse hath Commented: as the Fragment of Berofus, Fabius, Piotor, Cato, Lauinius and others. Am, de Herruf.

50 For Annius feekes to perswade vs, that Noah (furnamed Janus) was the same which pullate our fafounded Genoa, with other Cities in Italie, wherein he lived 92. yeeres. This to dif catode origin. proue, by Moses silence, is a sufficient argument to me, if there were nothing else Lauin, illusticate to disproue it. For if he vouchsafed to remember the building of Babel, Erec, Achad, Gall.

Chaine and Ninine by Nimrod, Noah was a man of too great marke to be forgotten, with all the acts he did in 92. yeeres. But it were a needlesse labour for me to disproue the authoritie of that Berofus, on whom Annius groundeth, feeing fo many learned Men haue so demonstratiuely proued that Fragment to be counterfeit. Befides that, Tatianus the Affyrian in his Oration against the Greekes auoweth, that the ancient and true Berolus wrote onely three Books, dedicated to Antiochus the succeffor of Seleucus Nicanor: but Annius hath deuised fine Bookes, wherewith he honoreth Berosus. And whereas Berosus handled onely the estate of the Chaldeans and Affrians, Anniu hath filled this Fragment with the businesse of all the world: And if we may beleeve Eusebius better then Annius, then all the Kings of the La- 10 tines (before Aneas) consumed but 150. yeeres : whereas no man hath doubted. but that from Noah to Eneas arrivall into Italie there past 1126. (after the least rate of the Hebrew account) and (after Codoman) 1291. For Ianus (who was the first of their Kings) lived at once with Ruth, who marryed Booz, in the Worlds veere (as some reckon) 2717. after the floud 1064. and Noah dyed 350. yeeres after the floud : and so there past betweene lanus of Italie and Noah surnamed lanus 704. yeeres. For Saturnus succeeded lanus, Picus after Saturnus, Faunus after Picus, and Latinus followed Faunus: which Latinus lived at once with Tautanes the 27. King of Assyria; with Pelasques of Peloponnesus; with Demophoon of Athens; and Sampson Judge of Ifrael. Now all these five Kings of the Latines having consumed but one 20 hundred and fiftie yeeres; and the last of them in the time of Sampsen: then reckoning vpwards for one hundred and fiftie yeeres, and it reacheth Ruth, with whom Janus lined.

True it is, that the Greekes had their lanus; but this was not Noah : fo had they Ion the some of Xuthus, the some of Deucalion, from whom they draw the lones, who were indeede the children of Ianan, the fourth sonne of Iapheth. For the vulgar & so the place translation (where the Hebrew word is Iauan) writes Greece, and the Sopiuagint, Hellas; of E(ai 66, 19. which is the same. So had they Medus the sonne of Medez, whom they make the lada: and (for parent of the Medes, though they were descended of a farre more ancient Father (to wit) Madai the third sonne of Iapheth. Lastly, we see by a true experience, that the Brittish language hath remayned among vs aboue 2000. veeres, and the English speech euer since the invasion of the Angles, and the same continuance have all Nations observed among themselves, though with some corruption and alteration. Therefore, it is strange if either Noah (by them called Isnus) had left in Italie his grand-child Gomer after him, or Tubal in Spaine, that no plaine resemblance of the Hebrew, Syrian, or Seythian (which no time could have quite extinguished) should have beene found in the languages of those Countries. For which reasons we doubt not but these personall plantations of lanas, Gomer, Tubal, &c. in Italie, Spaine, or France, are meerely fabulous. Let the Italians therefore content themselves with the Grecian Janus, which commanded them and 40 planted them, and who preceded the fall of Trey but 150. yeeres (faith Eusebius) which was in the time of Latinus the fift King: which also S. Augustine and Iustine confirme: and this agreeth with reason, time, and possibilitie. And if this be not sufficient to disproue this vanitie, I may out of themselues adde thus much : That whereas some of them make Volta (others Camasena) the wife of this laws, who inflituted the holy Pire of the Veftal Virgins in Rome (the Latines and Romans taking from tunus all thein Idolatrous and Heathenish ceremonies) there is no man fo impious, as to beleeuethat Noab himselfe (who is faid by Adjes to bene walked with God, to be a inft man, and whom God of all mankinde made choice of could be either ignorant of the reme and only God, or fo wicked and ungratefull, total up or devile 50 any Heathen Saluage, or idolarrous adoration, or have instituted any ceremonie, contrarie to that which he knew best pleasing to God himselfeli when

That Gomer also and his sonne Togorma of the posteritie of Iapheth were first seated about Asia the lesse: and that from thence they spred Westward into Europe : and Northward into

O turne now to the sonnes of Noah, and the worlds plantation after the floud: therein I observe, that as both reason and necessitie taught them; so, when they multiplyed in great numbers, and dispersed themselves into the next Countries bordering to their first habitations of themselves themselves the second themselves are second to the second themselves the second the second themselves the second themselves the second the second themselves the second the second themselves the second themselves the second themselves the second the second the second themselves the second the second themselves the second the sec ons, & from thence fent forth Colonies elsewhere, it was in such a manner as that they might repaire to each other, and keep intelligence by Riuer: because the Land was yet Defart and ouer-prest with Woods, Reedes, Bogs, and rotten Marilhes. As when Nimrod feated in Babylonia, Chus tooke the South part of Chaldea, downe the River of Gehon, by which he might passe to and fro from Babylon to his owne plantation: those also, which were of the race of Shem, inhabiting at Vr or Orchos neere the Lakes of Chalasa, might by the fame River get up to Babylon, and receive fuccour from thence. All which Tract of Land vpon Gehon Southward, 20 Moses in the description of Paradise calleth the Land of Chush: because the Dominion and Empire was then in the hands of Nimrod a Culhite, by whom the children of Shem (which came into that Valley and stayed not in the East) were for awhile opprest, till God afterward by the seede of Abraham made them his owne Nation and victorious. Hauilah, the brother of Nimrod, and sonne of Cush, tooke both bankes of Tigris, especially on the East side of the River: by which River his people might also passe to and fro to Babel.

The Imperiall seate of which Region of Hanilah or Susian, was anciently called Chulian or Chulan, afterward Sula. Culh himselfe tooke the bankes of Gehon, and planted those Countries Westward, and Southwest-ward towards Arabia the Stony, 30 and the Defart, where Ptolemie placeth the Citie of Chusidia, first Chusia.

Seba, and Sheba with the rest that planted Arabia falix, had Tigris to convey them into the Persian Gulfe, which washeththe bankes of Arabia falix on the East side: so as those sonnes of Cush might take Land downethe River as they pleased. Also the Citie of Miniue was by Nimrod founded on the faid River of Tigris; and from thence a Colonie past to Charran, standing also vpon a nauigable branch of Euphrates, In like manner did Iapheths sonnes settle themselues together, and tooke their seates in Asa the leffe: from whence they might indifferently stretch themselves Northward, and Westward, into the next parts of Europe, called the Isles of the Gentiles. And it seemeth very agreeable to reason, that both Gomer, Magog, and Tubal, sate 40 downe first of all in that part of Syria, to the North of Palestina and Phanicia: and from thence Gomer or his children past on into Asia the lesse, as those of Magog and Tubal did; from whence the Tubalines spred themselves into Iberia: and the Magogians more Northerly into Sarmatia. The first Gomerians, and first planters in Afa the leffe, held the Countrie of the Cymmerians (witnesse Herodotus) the same Re- Lib.4. gion which was afterward by the Gallo-greekes called Galatia, to whom S. Paul wrote his Epistle so intituled. This Nation of the Cymmerians (whom the intinicible Seythians afterwards dispersed, and forced from their first plantations) gaue names to divers places; as to the Mountaynes aboue Albania (called Cymmerini) and to the Citie of Cymmeris in Phrygis: also Bosphorus Cymmerius tooke appellation from this 50 Nation, in the out-let whereof was also a Citie of that name, called Cymmerian: which Plinie faith (mistaking the place) had sometime the name of Cerberion; but Cerberion was a Towne in Campania, fo called of the vnhealthfull waters, fauouring of brimstone, which Augustus caused to be cleansed by letting in the water of the Lake

The children of Tubal ranged as farre as Iberia, to whom the Moschici were neighbours, which others write Melhech. The Prophet Ezechiel (coupling them together) calleth Gog the Prince of Meschech and Tubal. For these Meschi (which Ptolemie calleth Moschi) inhabite Syracena a Prouince of Armenia, directly South from the Mountaynes Moschiei, in the Valley betweene the Mountaynes Moschiei, and the Mountaynes Paryardes: out of whose North part springeth the River Phasis from the East part Araxu; and from the West Euphrates; and of this Meschech are defcended also the Moscourans (saith Melanchion) and it may be, that in processe of rime some of them inhabited those Regions also : For Meshech (faith Melanchton) fignifieth extendens, enlarging or stretching forth. Togorma also at first did inhabitea- 10 mongst his parents and kindred. The Togormians were also called Giblei, a people neighbouring the Sydonians in Gabala, a Tetrarchie of Phanicia, the same which Plinie 1. King. 1. v.18. calleth Gaben: from whence Salomon had his most excellent Masons, which hewed stones for the Temple of Hierusalem. Thence the Togormians stretched into the lesse Iun.in Gen. 10. Armenia, whose Kings were hence called Tigranes, and their Cities Tigranokaria: of which Cities Tigranes subdued by Lucullus the Roman, built one. Hierosolymitanus hath planted the Togormians in Barbarie : forgetting the prophecie of Ezechiel against the Tyrians. They of the house of Togorma, brought to thy Fayres horses, and horse-men, and mules, which could not well be driven over the whole length of the Mediterran Sea, but from the neighbour Countries by land. But 10/ephu takes them 20 for the parents of the Phrygians; which I doe not denie, but they might be in the enfuing ages : and so might the Tubalines be of the Spaniards; but it was from Iberia, and many hundred yeeres after the twelfth of Wimrods reigne. The lewes conceine that the Turkes came of those Togormians, because their Emperor is called Togar. The Chaldwans make them the Fathers of the Germanes. But Laonicus affirmes, that the Turkes descended of the Crim Tartar, which borders Musicouia. But for these subderivations it were infinite to examine them. Only of the first and second plantation, and of the first Nations after the floud is the matter which I labour to discouer; and therein to open the ignorance of some, and the corruption of other fabulous Writers. And this we must Wote, that those grand-children of Noah which were 30 of a more quiet, or (perchance) of lesse vinderstanding, and had not theresore the leading of Colonies sent out, their proper habitations can be hardly knowne: onely reason hath taught vs, that they dwelt among the rest, and were couered with the fame of others, who tooke on them the Conduction and Dominion ouer

of IAVAN the fourth some of IAPHETH: and of MESCH, of ARAM, and MESHECH of IAPHETH.

F Jauan the fourth sonne of Japheth came the Janes , which were afterwards called the Greekes: and so the Latine and Greeke Interpreters terwards called the Greekes: and to the Laime and Orters and appearance for Isuan write Greece, as in Esay: Et mittam ex is qui sand shafe fuerint ad gentes, in mare, in Italiam, & Greeciam; And twill fend those that efcape of them to Nations in the Sea, in Italian din Greece. The Greeu

Company of the here vseth the word (Tarshich) for Tarsus, a Citie in Cilicia, though Tarsis in many places betaken for the Sea. The Tigurine and the Geneua vie the names Tubal and to Iauan, and not Italie and Greese: keeping the same Hebrew wordes. Of these Iones were the Athenians, though themselves dreame that they were Aborigines, or men without Ancesters, and growing (as it were) out of the soile it selfe : who abounding in people sent Colonies into Asia the lesse, of whom came the lones of those parts. Others derine the Athenians from Ion the sonne of Nuthus, the sonne of Den- Thucyd, falion; but the antiquitie of Ianan marres the fashion of that supposition, who so many veeres preceded Xuthus, Ion, or Deucalion. Paulanias tells vs that Xuthus stole out of Theffalie with all his Fathers treasure, and his Brothers portions, and arriving at Athens, he was graciously received by Exictheus, who gave him his Daughter in marriage; of whom he received two sonnes, Ion, and Acheus, the supposed Ancesters of the Athenians. For Attica was called Ionia (faith Plutarch in the life of The-(eus) who, when he had joyned Megara to Attica, erected a piller in that Ilthmos or Strait, which fastneth Peloponnefus to the other part of Greece : writing on that part 10 which looketh towards the East, these wordes : Hac non funt Peloponne fus, ast Ionia : Thele Countries are not of Peloponne (us, but of Ionia: and on the other fide which looked towards the South and into Peloponne fus, this : Thefe parts are Peloponne fus . and not Ionia. Strabe out of Hecateus affirmeth, that the Iones came out of Affa into Greece, which is contrarie to the former opinion: That the Iones of Greece transporting certayne companies into Alia the leffe, the name of Iones was thereby therein retayned. And though Strabo knew no more thereof then he learned of the Greekes themselves, yet I finde this coniecture of Hecataus reasonable enough. For though it were to him vnknowne, yet fure I am that Asia the lesse had people before Greece had any : and 20 that Iduan did not flie from Babylonia into Greece, but tooke Afia the leffe in his paffage; and from thence past ouer the neerest way, leaving his owne name to some Maritimate Province on that fide, as he did to that part of Greece so called. But yet Strabo himselfe beleeved, that Jonia tooke the name from Ion the sonne of Xuthus: for so much he had learned from themselves; which was also the opinion of Paufanias. True it is, that the Greekes in after-times cast themselves into that part of Afia the leffe, opposite vnto them, which they held for divers yeeres. And howsoeuer the Greekes vaunt themselues to be the Fathers of Nations, and the most ancient; yet all approued Historians (not their owne) deride and disproue their pride, and vanitie therein. For this dispute of Antiquitie (among prophane Writers) rested 30 betweene the Soythians and the Agyptians, as Iustine out of Trogus, in the warre betweene Vexoris of Agypt, and Tanais of Scythia, witnesseth: which preceded far the reigne of Ninus, and was long before the name of Greece was ever heard of. And it is also manifest, that in Georops time the Greekes were all salvages without law or religion, living like brute beafts in all respects : and Cecrops (faith S. Augustine) lived to- Lib. 18. de Civits gether with Moses.

The fixth sonne of lapheth was Meshech, whom the Septuagint cal Mosoch: (a part of thole Nations commanded by Gog the chiefe Prince of Melbech and Tubal.) But this we must remember, that betweene Mefech the sonne of Aram, and Meshech (or Mosoch) the sonne of lapheth, there is little difference in name, and both by divers In-40 terpreters diverfly written. Montanus with the Vulgar writeth Melch, the sonne of Aram, Mes; the Geneua, Mash; Iunius, Mesch. But it may be gathered out of the 120. Plaime, that either Melhech the sonne of Iapheth, was the parent of those people, or gave name to that Province wherein Danid hid himselfe : or else ( which may rather feeme) that it tooke name from Mesch the sonne of Aram. For David bewayling his exile (while he lived among a barbarous and irreligious People) vseth these words: Woeis me that I remayne in Mefech, and dwell in the Tents of Kedar: which Iunius con- pfd, 120, v.s. uerteth thus: Hei mihi quia peregrinor tam diù: habito tanquam Scenita Kedareni: The Septuagint gives it this fence: Woe is me because my babitation (or abode) is prolonged, who dwell with the inhabitants of Kedar; with which this of the Latine agreeth: Hen 50 mihi, quia incolatus meus prolongatus est, habitani cum habitantibus Kedar: The Chal-

dean otherwise, and in these wordes: O me miserum, quia peregrinatus sum Asianis, habitaui cum taber naculis Arabum; O wretch, that I am, for I have travailed among those of Asia: I have dwelt in the Tabernacles of the Arabians. But how soeuer or which soeuer conversion be taken for the best, yet all make mention of Kedar: which is a Province it selfe hath Mesech. And if it be to be taken for a Nation, (asit is most likely, because it answeres to Kedar, the name of a Nation) seeing Melb the sonne of Aram,

1. Chron. 17. is called Meshec, it is indifferent whether this Nation tooke name from

Meshech or Mesh, both bordering Indea, and like enough to be commanded by one

Prince; for so Ezechiel makes Mefech and Tubal. But as for those that take Mefech out of the word Mosoch (given by the Septuagint) to be the Musconian : fure they presume much vpon the affinitie of names, as aforesaid. And sure I am that Dauid neuer trauailed so farre North; (for to him Musconia was vtterly vnknowne) but on: the same being a Citie on the Mountaynes of Sanir or Galaad. And yet Arias

Montanus makes Mosoch the father of the Muscouians : and herein also Melanchien

runnes with the tyde of common opinion, and fets Mefech in Musconia, though with some better aduice of judgement; as, first seated in Cappadocia, and from thence trauailing Northward : expounding the places of the 120. Pfalme, (Heimihi quòd exulo in Melech) to signifie, Gentis eius feritatem insignem esfe; That the feritie of that Nation exceeded: which fiercenesse or brutalitie of the Mulcoutans, David neuer proued, or (perchance) neuer heard of. But the same feritie or crueltie which those Northerne

Muscoujans had, may aswell be ascribed to the Arabians and Kedarens. For this quall fiercenesse to any of the world were begotten, both in those times and long after, euen to this day (if the Arabians, Ismaelites, and Saracens, may be accounted one people:) the same being foreshewed by the speech of the Angell to Hagar, Gen. 16.

v.12. And be fall be a wild man : his hand shall be against every man, and every mans hand against him. Now Arabia the Desart (saith Plinie) confronteth the Arabians Cochlei on the East, and the Cedrai Southward, both which toyne together vpon the Nabaneighboured Canaan and Israel, and that Kedar also did toyne to Mesech: all which were Regions of Syria, or of Asia the lesse, commanded by the Successors of Seleumight passe into Cappadocia, and thence into Hyrcania, and give names, both to Macega in the one, and to the Mountaynes Moschici in the other, and from thence might of ASCANEZ and RIPHATH, the two elder Sonnes of GOMER.

Scanez was the Father of those which the Greekes call Regimi, (fayth lo(ephus) but he gives no reason why.

Eulebius makes Alcanez the Father of the Goths. The Jewes in their Thargum make him the root of the Germane Nation, but their expositions are commonly very idle. Plinie findeth Afrania in Phrygia, neere the Rivers of Hylas and Cies: Melanchton being of the same opinion, that the Tufcones were descended of the Ascanez, (for Tuiscones, fayth hee, is as much to say, as of the Ascanez, preposito articulo die Ascanez) and that the word signifieth a Religious Keeper of fire: it being an ancient superstition to pray at the fire of Sacrifices, as af- Melan, in card. it terwards at the Tombes of Martyrs. Not farre from Phrygia was the Lake Ascania. knowne by that name in the Romanes time. And among the Kings which came to the succour of Troy, was Ascanius (Deo similis, fayth Homer) like vuto God: because Hom. Iliad. 2. he was beautifull and strong: for in the same manner doth Virgil grace Anews, Os humeroff, Deo similis, in face and bodie like one of the Gods. Virgil also remembreth such 20 a River together with the Hils Gargara: as, Illas ducit amor trans Gargara, transif, fo- ving Georgia. nantem Ascanium, Appetite leades them both ouer the Mountaines Gargara, and the roring Ascanivs. But this Plinic maketh more plaine in the description of Phragia. For he placeth the Citie of Brillion vpon the River Ascanius, which is adioyning to Milia. and is necre the border of the Troian Empire; and the Lake Acanez he directs vs to find by the description of Prusia, founded by Hannibal at the foot of Olympus, which Iyeth farre within the Countries of Bithynia: and then from Profia to Nicea are accounted fiue and twentie miles, in which way this Lake lyeth, euen betweene Profia and Nicea. And fo Iunius (as I conceiue him) takes them of Ascanez, to bee the inhabitants of Pontus, and Bithynia, and those North parts of Asia. Stephanus de Vrbibus 30 makes it a Citie of Troas, built by Ascanius the sonne of Aneas: saying, that there was another of that name in Mysia. Of Ascania a Lake of Buhynia, Ptolomie witnesfeth: and Strabo giueth Ascania botha Lake, a River, and a Towne in Mysia, neere vnto Cio; which also agreeth with Plinie. For Plinie findeth Prusia (before spoken of) neere Cio, and calleth the Islands before Troy Ascanes.

Now, whether these places tooke name of Asanez the sonne of Gomer, or of Ascanius the sonne of Aneas, it might be questioned : sure it is, that Ascanius which brought succour to the Troians, could not take his name from Aneus sonne, who was then eyther exceeding yong, or rather vnborne: and it seemeth that the Countries whence those succours came, were not out of any part of Phrygia or Mysia, but 40 farther off, and from the North parts of all Asa the lesse, which by Hieremie is called Ascanez, by the figure Synechdoche, as Iunius thinketh. Out of those testimonies therefore which deceiue not, we may confidently determine. For of the Prophet Hieremie we shall learne of what Nation the Ascenez were, whose wordes are thele: Set up a Standard in the Land, blow the Trumpet among the Nation against her, call C.51.0.17. up the Kings of Ararat, Minni, and Ascanez against ber, &c. meaning against the Babylonians. Ararat was Armenia the greater, as most Interpreters consent, so called of the Mountaines of Ararat which runne through it : Minni the leffer Armenia: Armenia being compounded of Aram and Minni. For Minni was the ancient name: (fayth Iunius and others before him) and Aram anciently taken for Syria, which con-50 tained all that Tract from Euphrates to the Sea-coasts of Phanicia and Palastina; and therefore Mesopatamia being in elder times but a Prouince of Syria, the Scriptures difference it in the Storie of Iacob and Esan, and call it Aram-padam. Then if these two Nations were of the Armenians, and Afcanez joyned with them (who altogether vnited vader Cyrus and Darius, came to the spoile of the Babylonian Empire) we shall erre fend people more Northerly into Museouia, and so all opinions saued. But all saluage Nations ouer-growne and vncultivated, doe (for the most part) shew a late plantation, euen as Civilitie, Letters, and magnificent Buildings, witnesse anti-Tires, the feuenth sonne of lapheth, which Montanus reckons among the sonnes of Gomer, was the Father of the Thracians, as all Authors (worthie the examinati-Montan, in Chr. on) affirme. Is fephus was the first that determined hereof: and because the Scrip- 40 tures are altogether silent, what part of the world Tiras peopled, the coniectures are indifferent, and give no ground at all of dispute. It followeth now to speake of the

much to call Askenaz Germanie or Almsine, for weeheare of no Swart Ruttiers at that siege. But the Aikenaz were of those Nations which were either subject or allied to the Medes: of which, if any of them came afterward into Phrygia, I know not: for the dispersion of Nations was in aftertimes without account. But for the opinion of Eusebius, who makes them to be Goths; or that of 10sephus, who cals them Rhegini; or of the lewes, who will have them to be Almaines; when they confirme it either by Scriptures or Reason, I will thinke as they doe. Of Riphath the second sonne of Gomer there is mention in the first of Chronicles. Beroaldus and Pererius thinke that hee wandered farre off from the rest of his Brothers, and therefore no memorie of his plantation. But I see nothing to the contra-10 rie, but that he might seate himselfe with the rest of his Family: for there wanted no roome or soile in those dayes for all the sonnes and Grand-children of Moah. Therefore I take it to bee well vnderstood, that the Riphei were of Riphath, which the Greekes afterwards (according to Iosephus) called the Paphlagones: and Ripbes (fayth Melanchton) signifieth Giants. These people were very famous in the North parts, and in Sarmatia: the most of number and power among them, Sarmatarum gens maxima Heneti. The greatest number of the Sarmatians were the Heneti; who spake the ancient Polac: which being first called Riphei (for the love of some of their Leaders or Kings) changed their names and became Heneti, (a custome exceeding common in those times) and dwelt first in Paphlagonia, as Homer witnesseth, and so doth Apollo- 20 nius in his Argonauticks: Now, when these Riphes (afterward Heneti) lought new Regions, they came along the shores of Euxinu, and filled the North part of Europe, contayning Russa, Lituania, and Polonia. From thence they croft thwart the Land, and peopled Illyria, desirous (sayth Melanchton) of a warmer soile of fruit and Wine. These Heneti or Veneti, whom Melanchton taketh to be one people, filled al that Land betweene the Baltick and Adriaticke Sea; and to this day the name of the Gulfe Venedieus is found in Russia. This Nation, after they were possess of Lituania and Polonia, disturbed the plantation of the Boij and Hermondury. Therefore, it seemeth to mee, that of Riphath came the Riphei, afterward Heneti; and fo thinketh Arias Montanus, first seated in Paphlagonia, but in course of time Lords of Sarmatia, and those other 30 parts before remembred, chiefly betweene the Rivers of Vifula and Albis. The name ((aith Melanchton) (ignifieth wandering or Wanderers, or Nomades: a people which lined by White-meates and fruits, as (indeed) all Nations did in the first Ages.

Of the third sonne of Gomer, Togorma, I have spoken alreadie; now therefore of Iauans children, which were foure:

d. IX.

Of the foure Sonnes of IAVAN: and of the double signification of Tharsis, either for a proper name or for the Sea.

F Elifa or Elipha, came the Loles: and of this Elifa all the Greekes were called Hellenes, fayth Montanus. Melanchton makes Elifathe Father of 50 the Loles in Asia fide : others of Elis in Peloponnessus, or of both. And seeing the Greekes were descended in generall of Janan, it is probable that the Loles and the Elei, tooke name of Elifa, his eldest Sonne. Ezechiel in the 27. speaking of Tyre, nameth the Isles of Elisa. Hyacynthus & purpura de insulis Elisa facta sunt operimentum tuum ; Blue Silke and Purple, brought from the Isles of Elifa, was thy covering: The Chaldwans for Elifa write Italia: but the Vulgar, the Tigurine, the Geneua, and Iunius, keepe the word Elifa: and fo I thinks they might doe with reason. For there was not found any such Purple Dye in Italie in those dayes nor since, that I can read of : but those illes of Elisa, were by a better coniecture the Isles of Greece; and the best Purple was found afterward at Tyre it selfee and before that, among the Cyclades, and on the Coast of Getulia.

CHAP. 8. S. 9. of the History of the World,

Tharfis, the second Sonne of Janan, inhabited Cilicia, of which Tharlis is the Metropolis. Montanus for Tharfis in Cilicia, vnderstands Carthage in Africa; but (referuing to the respect due to so learned a man) he was much mistaken in that conjecture. The Chaldean Paraphrast puts Carthage for Tharsis, but it hath no authoritie, nor warrant of reason therein. So likewise, where it is written, that the Ships of Salomon went euerv three yeeres to Tharsis, and brought thence Gold, Siluer, Elephants teeth, &c. the Chaldean Paraphrast translates Tharsis (Africa.) But Salomons Ships were prepared in the Red Sea at Elion Gaber, in the Bay of Elana, neere vnto Madian, where Iethro (Moses Father in Law) inhabited; a Province of Arabia Petras, Idumas, or of the Chustes; and they sayled to the higher part of the East India. For it had beenea strange Nauigation to have spent three yeers in the passage betweene Indea and Carthage, or any other part of Africa, which might have beene sayled in six or ten daies. 20 And if so great riches might have beene found within the bounds of the Mediterran Sea, all other neighbouring Princes would soone have entertained that Trade also. But this enterprize of Salomon is in this fort written of in the first of Kings: Also King SALOMON made a Nauie of Ships in Esion Gaber, which is beside Elath and the brinke of the Red Sea in the Land of Edom: and HyRAM fent with the Nanie his servants, that were Mariners, and had knowledge of the Sea, with the servants of Salomon: and they came to Ophir, and fet from thence 420. Talents of Gold, Oc. But as the Nations about Pontus thought no Sea in the World like vnto their owne, and doubted whether there were any other Sea but that only: (whereof it came, that Pontus was a word vsed for the Sea in generall) so, because the Israelites and the Phanicians knew no o-30 ther Seathen that of the Mediterran in the beginning; and that the people of Thars had the greatest Ships, and were the first Nauigators in those parts with such Vesfels, they were therefore called men of the Sea : and the word Tharsis vsed often for the Sea. And whereas it is faid that the Ships of Salomon went every three yeeres to Thar sis, that phrase is not strange at all; for we vie it ordinarily where souer ween auigate, (namely) that the Kings Ships are gone to the Sea, or that they are set out euery yeere, or every three yeere to the Sea, and therefore Tharlis was not therein named, eyther for Carthage, Africa, or India, but vsed for the Sea it selfe. But in this place Thar sis is truly taken for Thar sis, the chiefe Citie in Cilicia, founded by Thar sis

the second sonne of Jauan, or by his Successionrs in memorie of their first parent. To 40 this Citie arrived Alex. Macedon, before he gave the first overthrow to Darius, and casting himselfe into the River to bathe and wash his bodie, he fell into an extreme Feuer, and great danger of death: and in this Citie of That sis was Saint Paul borne. Now this agreeth with the reason and nature of a Plantation. For (Gomer and his other fonnes inhabiting Alia the leffe, and that part of Syria adjoyning) Jauan, who was to passe ouer the Sea into Greece, tooke the edge of the same Coast, and first planted the Iones on that shore: gaue the Islands betweene Asia the lesse and Greece, to Elifa, and left Tharfis vpon the Sea-side in Cilicia; of whom that Citie tooke

The third sonne of Isnan was Cethim, of whom were the Romans and Italians, 50 faith Beroaldus, but I allow better of Melanchtons opinion, who makes Cethim the Father of the Macedonians. Cethim is a voice plurall (faith he) and fignifieth percussores, though in that respect it may be meant by either. But it seemeth more probable, that the place of Esai.23. (according to Melanchton ) had relation to Alexander and the Macedonians: Hac calamitas ab Es AI pradictaeft, qui capite vicessimo tertio inquit, bited Macedonia.

was foreshewed by Es at the Prophet, who in the three and twentieth Chapter pronounced, that the Destroyers of Tyre were to come out of Cittim. And although the children of Israel esteemed all men Islanders, which came vnto them by Sea, and separate from that Continent; (and so also Cittim might be taken for Italie, saith Beroaldus) yet wee must take the sirst performance of the former Prophesie, which tooke effect with the destruction of the Tyrians by Alexander, who after seuen Moneths siege entred that proud Citie, and cut in pieces 7000. principall Citizens; strangled 2000. and changed the freedome of 13000. others into bondage and flauerie. Now, that Macedon was taken for Ceshim, it appeareth plainly in the first of the Maccabees, in these Io wordes. After that ALEXANDER the Macedonian, the Sonne of PHILIP, went forth of the Land of Cethim, and flew DARIVS. King of the Persians and Medes. IOSEPHVS fets Cethins in the Isle of Cyprus, in which (fayth hee) there remaineth the Citie Ci-

tium, the Countrey of Zene the Philosopher (witnesse Laertius) which Citie Pintus

vpon Exechiel affirmeth, that it flood in Saint Hieromes time. So it may be that all the Islands in ancient times by the Hebrewes were called the Islands of Cethim: and in that sense might Cyprus bee so called also; and yet because Tharsis was the very next Port to Cyprus, and directly ouer against it, it is also very probable, that Cethim dwelt by his brother Tharsis: and finding that Island too streight for his people after they were increased, and that the rest of the Coasts, both on Asia side and Greece, were in-20

nions) sate downe at Rhodes, as neere Cethim, Tharsis, and Elisa, as he could. For Do-

danim and Rhodanim are vsed indifferently by many Translators: the Hebrew (D) and the Hebrew (R) are so like, as the one may easily bee taken for the other, as all Hebricians affirme. There is also found in Epirus the Citie of Dodona, in the Prouince of Molosia. And as Cethim, when he wanted soile in Cyprus : so Dodanim (seated in a farre lesse Island) did of necessitie send his people farther off; and keeping alongst the Coast, and finding Peloponnesus in the possession of Elifa, hee passed a little 30 farther on the Westward, and planted in Epirus. And though the Citie of Dodona was not then built, or (perchance) not so ancient as Dodanim himselfe, yet his Poste-ritie might giue it that name in memorie of their first parent, as it happened all the World ouer. For names were given to Cities, Mountaines, Rivers, and Provinces, after the names of Noahs children, and grand-children; not in all places by them-

felues, but by their successours many yeeres after: euery of their Families being defirous to retaine among them by those memories, out of what branch themselues were taken, and grafted elsewhere. And because great Kingdomes were often by new Conquerers newly named, and the greatest Cities often fired and demolished:

names, or the names of their Ancestors, to Mountaines and Riuers, as to things (af-

therefore those that hoped better to perpetuate their memories, gaue their owne 40

Thus then did Iauan settle himselse and his children, in the edge and frontier of habited by his Father and Brothers, he fent Colonies ouer the Agean Sea, and inhafonnes of shem, which spred themselves towards the West, and the borders of the Mediterran Sea: of which I shall speake hereafter. But first of the sonnes of Cham or Ham, which were foure:

> Mizraim, 6 Phut, and

That the feate of CHVSH the eldest sonne of HAM, was in Arabia, not in Athiopia: and of Brange Pables, and ill Translations of Scripture, grounded upon the mistaking of this point.

Of Iosephus his Tale of an Ethiopesse wife to Moses, erounded on the miltaking of the feate of CVSH.

Hat Ham was the Father of the Egyptians, it is made manifest in many Scriptures, as in the 105. Pfalme verfe 51. Then ISRAEL came to Egypt, and IACOB was a stranger in the land of HAM: and in the 78.

Plaine, Hee stew all the sirst-borne in Egypt, euen the beginning of their strength, in the Tabernacles of HAM. There is also found a great Citie in Thebaida, called Cheramis: (as it were the Citie of Ham ) of which name Herodo- Herodin Entertus also dicouers an Handin the same Region. But because chush is the elder sonne pe. 30 of Ham, it agreeth with order to speake hirst of him. Now though I have already in the description of Paradise handled this question, and (I hope) prooued that Chush could not be Athiopia: yet seeing it commeth now to his turne to speake for himselfe, I will adde some farther proofe to the former. For the manifestation hereof fers many things straight, which had otherwise very crooked constructions, and senselesse Interpretations. Surely, how soever the Septuagint and Insephus have herein failed, yet it is manifest that Chush could not be Athiopia, but Arabia: ( to wit) both that Arabia called Petraa, and a part of Arabia the Happie and the Defart: which Regions Chulh and the Chulites presently planted, after they left Babylonia to Nimrod, wherein they first sate downe altogether. And there is nothing which so 40 well cleereth this Controuersie, as the true interpretation of the place, Num. 12.v. I. where Moles his Wife is called a Chulite; together with some places which speake of Nabuchodonofors Conquests. For whereas lofephus and the Septuagint in the place, Num.12.v.1. as also elsewhere, vnderstand Chush for Athiopia, we must give credit to Mofes himselfe herein; and then it will appeare that lofephus was grosly mistaken, or vainely led by his owne inuention. For loscophus presuming that Chush was Athiopia, and therefore that the Wife of Moses (which in Scripture, Num. 12. verse 1. is called a woman of Culh) was a woman of the land of Ethiopia, faineth that Tharbis the Daughter of the King of Athiopia, fell in love with the person and same of Mos, while he besieged Saba her Fathers Citie; and to the end, to obtaine Moses for 50 her Husband, shee practised to betray both her Parents, Countrie, and friends, with the Citie it selfe, and to deliner it into Moses hands. The Tale (if it bee worth the reciting) lyeth thus in losephus. After hee had described the strength of the Ethiopian Citie Meroe, which he faith at length Cambyfes called fo from the name of his Sister, (the olde name being Saba) he goeth on in these wordes : Hic cum Mos Es de- Aniq. Lac. 5.

Asathelesse, towards the Sea-shore: and afterward in Greece, and the Islands, and neighbour Provinces thereof, as Iapheth their Father had done in the body of the leffer Asia, together with Isuans brethren, Gomer, Magog, Madai, Tubal, Mefech, and the rest round about him. And in like fort did Chush (the some of Cham) people B4bylonia, Chaldes, and the borders thereof towards the West and Southwest: and the fonnes of Chush (all but Namrod, who held Babylonia it selfe) travailed Southward in Arabia felix, and Southwestward into Arabia petree: the rest of his children holding 50 the Regions adioyning to Nimrod. Mizraim the brother of Chush in like manner tooke the way of Agypt: and his brother Canaan the Region of Palestina adioyning.

The Sonnes of Canaan had their portions in Canaan, of whom all those Nations came, which were afterward the Enemies both to the Hebrenes, and to those of the sidere exercitumotiosum agrè ferret, hoste non audente manus conferere, tale quiddam accidit. Erat Ethiopum Regi filia, nomine THARBIS, Oc. which Tale hath this sense in English: When Moses was griened that his Armielay idle, because the Enemie besieged, durst not Sally and come to handy strokes, there happened this accident in the meane while. The Ethiopian King had a Daughter called THARBIS, who at some affaults given beheld the person of Moses, and withall admired his valour. And knowing that Moses had not only up-held and restored the falling estate of the Egyptians, but had also brought the conquering Athiopians to the very brinke of Subuersion : these things working in her thoughts, together with her owne affection, which daily increased, shee made meanes to send unto him by one of her trustiest servants to offer her selfe unto him, and become his Wife; 10 Which Moses on this condition entertained, that thee should first deliver the Citie into his possession: whereunto shee condescending, and Moses having taken outh to performe this contract, both the one and the other were instantly performed.

†. II. A dispute against the Tale of Iosephys.

THis Tale (whereof Moses hath not a word) hath Iosephus fashioned, and therein also vtterly mistaken himselfe, in naming a Citie of Arabia for a Citie of A. 20 thiopia: as he names Ethiopia it selfe to have beene the Countrie of Moses his Wife, when (indeed) it was Arabia. For Sabais not in Athiopia, but in Arabia, as both Strabo and all other Geographers, ancient and moderne teach vs, saying that the Sabeans are Arabians and not Athiopians; except lofephus can perswade vs , that the Queene of Saba which came from the South to heare the wisedome of Salomon, were a Negro, or Blacke-Moore. And though Damianus à Goes speake of certaine Letters to the King of Portugall from Prester John, of the Abisines: wherein that Athiopian King would perswade the Partugals that hee was descended of the Queene of Saba, and of Salomon; yet it doth no where appeare in the Scriptures, that Salomon had any Sonne by that great Princesse: which had it beene true, it is likely that 30 when Sishac King of Egypt inuaded Roboam, and sackt Hierusalem, his Brother (the Sonne of Saba and Salomon) who loyned upon Egypt, would both have impeached that enterprize, as also given aide and succour to Roboam against Ieroboam, who drew from him tenne of the twelue Tribes to his owne obedience. Neyther is it any thing against our opinion of Moses his Wife, to have beene an Arabian, that the Scriptures teach vs, that Moles married the daughter of lethro Priest of Midian or Madian: which standing on the North Coast of the Red Sea, ouer against the bodie of Egypt, and neere Esion Gaber, where Salomon prouided his Fleet for India, in the Region of Edom, may well bee reckoned as a part of Arabia, as the Red Sea is called Sinus Arabicus. For Edumaa ioyneth to the Tribe of Iuda by the North, to Arabia Pe- 40 trea by the East, to the Mediterran by the West, and to the Red Sea by the Southeast. And if wee marke the way which Moses tooke when he left Egypt, and condu-Cted Israel thence, it will appeare that hee was no stranger in Arabia: in the border whereof, and in Arabia it selfe, hee had formerly liued fortie yeeres; where it seemeth, that besides his carefull bringing vp in Egypt, hee was instructed by lethroin the Egyptians learning. For 10/ephus confesseth, and Saint Stephen confirmeth, that he was learned in all the wisedome of the Egyptians. But on the other side this Text makes much against losephus, whereit is written in Exodus the second, Therefore Moses fled from PHARAO, and dwelt in the Land of Madian or Midian, and not in Æthiopia. And in the third Chapter it is as plaine as wordes can expresse, in what 50 Region Madian was, where it is written, When Moses kept the Sheepe of IETHRO his Fatherin Law, Priest of Madian, and draue the Flocke to the Defart, and came to the Mountaine of Go D in Horeb. Now that Mount Horeb is not in Athiopia, enery Infantknoweth. And if wee may beleeue Moles himselfe, then was not the Wife of Moles purchased in that manner which Iosephus reporteth (which was for betraying her Countrie and Friends) neither had shee the name of Tharbis, but of Suppora, or Zippora: neither was shee a Negro, but a Madianitish. And as God worketh the greatest things by the simplest meanes: so it pleased him from a Sepherd to call Moles, and after him David, and by them to deliver his people first and last. For Mofes sitting by a Well (as disconsolate and a stranger) defended the daughters of Re- Exod.1. quel from the other shepherds, and drew them Water to water their sheepe: vpon which occasion (by God ordayned) he was entertayned by lethro, whose Daughter he marryed: and not for any betraying of Townes or Countries.

From hence also came lethroto Mojes at Rephidim, not farre from Idumea, and finding the insupportable gouernement of such a multitude, he aduised him to distribute this waightie charge, and to make Gouernours and Iudges of enery Tribe and Familie. And if Iethro had beene an Ethiopian, it had beene a farre progresse for him to have passed through all Egypt with the Wife and Children of Moles, and to have found Moles in the border of Iduraes : the Egyptians hating Moles and all that fauoured him. But the passing of Moles through Arabia Petres (which ioyneth to Madian) proueth that Moses was well acquainted in those parts: in which the se-cond time he wandred fortie yeeres, and did by these late transiles of his, seeke to instruct the children of Ifrael in the knowledge of one true God, before he brought 20 them to the Land of plentie and rest. For he found them nourished yp with the milke of Idolatrie, and obstinate in the Religion of the Heathen, and finding that those stiffe plants could not be bowed or declined, either by perswasion or by miracle, he ware them out in the Desarts, as God directed, and grafted their branches anew, that from those he might receiue fruit, agreeable to his owne desire, and Gods Com-

Lastly, this opinion of Iosephus is condemned by Augustinus Chrisamensis, where also he reprehendeth Apollinaris, who anowed that Moses had marryed both Tharbu and Sephora: His owne wordes have this beginning: Mentitur etiam APOLLI- Sixt. Sentiff NARIS duas uxores habuisse Mosen, &c. Apollinar is also lyeth in affirming that Bibl. 20 Moses had two wines : and who doth not perceine thefe things fayned by them? for it is manifest that the wife of Moses was Zephor A, Daughter to the Priest or President of Madian : and that Madian cannot be taken for Ethiopia beyond Egypt; being the same that ionneih to Arabia : so farre Chrisamensis.

Now as Chush is by the Septuagint converted Ethiopia, and the wife of Meses there ore called Athopiss: so in the conquest of Nabuchodonosor is Athopia written for Arabia. For by the wordes of Ezechiel it is manifest that Nabuchodonofor Ezech.19.10. was neuer in Athiopia. Behold (faith Ezechiel, speaking of the person of this great Assyrian) I come upon thee and upon thy Rivers, and I will make the Land of Egypt utterly waste and desolate, from the Towre of Seuench, euen to the borders of the Black-moores : which last wordes should have beene thus converted: From the Towre of Seseneh to the borders of the Chustes or Arabians: betweene which two is situated all Egypt. For to fay, from the borders of Seueneh to the Athiopians, hath no sense at all. Seueneh it selfe being the border of Egypt, confronting and ioyning to Athiopia, or the Land of the black-Moores. So as if Nabuchodonofors conquest had beene but between so Seueneh and the border of Athiopia, it were as much to fay, and did expresse no other victorie then the conquest of all that Land and Countrie, lying between Middlefex and Buckingham, where both the Countries ioyne together; or all the North parts of England, betweene Barwick and Scotland: for this hath the same sense with the former, if any man fought to expresse by these two bounds, the Conquest of England: Barwick being the North border of England, as Senench or Syene is the South bound of Agypt, seated in Thebaida which toucheth Athiopia. But by the wordes of Ezechiel it appeareth, that Nabuchodonofor neuer entred into any part of Athiopia, although the Septinagint, the Vulgar, the Geneua, and all other (in effect) have written Athiopia for Chush.

Tet. IIII

Another place of EZECHIEL, cap. 30. verf. 9. in like manner mistaken.

Nd as the former, so is this place of Ezechiel mistaken, by being in this fort A converted: In divilla egreduntur nuncij d facie mea in trieribus ad conterendam Athiopia confidentiam: Which place is thus turned in English by the Geneuans: In that day shall there Messengers goe forth from me in ships to make she carelesse Moores afraid. Now the Latine for (Thips) hath the Greeke word Trieres for Triremes which are Gallyes of three bankes, and not ships. But that in this place the Translation should have beene (as in the former) amended by vling the word Chulb, or Arabia for Æthiopia or the blacke Moores, every man may fee which meanely understandeth the Geographie of the World, knowing, that to passe out of Agypt into Athiopia there neede no Galleys nor fhips, no more then to paffe out of Worthampton into Leicestershire: Athio- 20 pia being the conterminate Region with Agypt, and not divided so much as by a River. Therefore in this place of Ezechiel it was meant, that from Agypt Nabuchodonofor should send Galleyes alongst the coast of the Red Sea, by which an Armie might betransported into Arabia the Happy and the Stony (sparing the long wearisome march ouer all Agypt, and the Defarts of Pharan) which Armie might thereby surprise them vnawares in their securitie and confidence. For when Nabuchodonofor was at Seueneh within a mile of Athopia, he needed neither Galley nor Ship to passe into it: being all one large and firme Land with Ægypt, and no otherwise parted from it, then one In-land shire is parted from another; and if he had a fancie to hauerowed vp the Riuer but for pleasure, he could not haue done it : for the fall of 20 Nilus (tumbling ouer high and steepie Mountaynes) called Catadupa Nile, were at

Lastly, as I have alreadie observed, the sonnes of every father seated themselves as neere together as possibly they could, Gomer and his sonnes in Asia the lesse; I avan and his sonnes in Greece, and the I lands adioyning; Shem in Persia and Eastward. So the Sonnes and Grand-children of Chuss from the River of Gehon (their Fathers first seat) inhabited ypon the same, or ypon some other contiguat vnto it, as Nimrod and Hamilah on the one side, and Saba, Sheba, and Sabsecha (with the rest) did on the other side. And to conclude in a word, the Hebrewes had never any acquaintance or sellowship, any warre, treatie of peace, or other intelligence with the Ethiopian blacke 40 Moores, as is alreadie remembred in the Chapter of Paradis.

A place, Esay 18. v. 1. in like manner corrupted, by taking Chush for Æthiopia.

A Nd as in these places before remembred, so in divers other is the word £thiopia put for Arabia or Chush, which puts the storie (where it is so understood) quite out of square; one Kingdome thereby being taken for another. For what sense hath this part of Scriptive E/ay 18. Vaterra Cymbalorum alarum quaeft trans slumina £thiopia, or according to the Septuagine in these wordes: Vaterra nausum alarum quae est trans sluvios £thiopia? Wo to the land shaddowing with wings, which is beyond the Rivers of £thiopia, sending Ambassadors by sea, even in vessels of reeds upon the waters. Vaterra umbrofæöra; Woe to the Land of the shadie coast, saith Innius. The former Translators understand it in this sense. That the waters are shaddowed with the sailes, which are significatinely called the wings of the ships, the other, that the Coast of the Sea was shaddowed by the height of the Land.

But to the purpose: That this Land here spoken of by the Prophet Esay, is Egypt, no Interpreter hath doubted. For they were the Egyptians that fent this message to the Israelites which Esay repeateth, and by the former translation enery man may see the transposition of Kingdomes: for hereby Egypt is transported vnto the other fide of Æthiopia, and Æthiopia fet next vnto Iudaa, when it is the Land of Chulb and To Arabia indeed that lyeth betweene Indea and Egypt, and not Atbiopia, which is feated vnder the Equinoctial line. And of this Beroaldus asketh a materiall question, (to wit) what Region that should be, of which the Prophet speaketh, and placeth it beyond the Rivers of ETHIOPIA: Nam de ignota agi regione dici nequit; For it cannot be faid that he treateth of an unknowne Region. Now if Athiopia it selfe be under the Equinoctial line, with whom the lewes had never any acquaintance, why should any man dreame that they had knowledge of Nations farre beyond it againe, and beyond the Rivers of Athiopia? except we shall impiously thinke that the Prophet spake he knew not what, or vsed an impertinent discourse of those Nations, which were not discouered in 2000. yeeres after, inhabiting as farre South as the Cape of 20 good Hope, commonly knowne by the name of Bona esperanza.

t. VI.

That upon the like missaking, both Terrhara in the storie of Sena-CHERLB, and Zera in the storie of Asa are unadustedly made Ethiopians.

And by this translation is the storie of Senacherib vtterly mistaken in the cause of his retrait. For Senacherib was first repulsed at Pelusium, at the very entrance 30 of Egypt from Indea: when having certayne knowledge that Thirrhaca, (which all the Interpreters call King of Ashiopia) was on the way to fet on him, he began to 10feph. 1.10.6.56 with-draw himselse: and searing to leave his Armie in two parts, he sent threatning Messengers to Ezechia King of Juda, perswading him to submit himselfe : the Tenor whereof is set downe in the second of Kings in these wordes: Haue any of the gods of the Nations delinered his Landout of the hands of the King of Ashur? Where is the god of Hamah? c'ce. By which proud Ambassage, if he had obtayned entrance into Hierufilem, he then meant to have vnited that great Armie before Hiernfalem, commanded by Rablekeh, with the other which lay before Pelusium, a great Citie vpon the branch of Nilus next Arabia. For Senacherib had alreadie mastered the most part of all those Kings 2.19. 40 Cities in Iudea and Beniamin with a third Armie, (which himselfe commanded) being then at the fiege of Lebna. But vpon the rumor of that Arabian Armie led by their King Thirrhakeh (whom Iosephus calls Tharfices) Rabsakeh hasted from the siege Aniiq.Lio. of Hierufalem, and found Senacherib departed from Lachis & fet downe before Lebna, Kings 2.196 which was afterwards called Eleuthoropolis, as some haue supposed. But while he had ill successe at Pelusium and seared Thirrhakeh, God himselfe whom he least seared, strooke his Armie before Hierusalem by the Angell of his power, so as 185000. were found dead in the place, as in the life of Ezechias is hereafter more largely written. And that this Armie of Tirrakeh was from Arabia, Iosephus himselse makes it plaine. For he confesseth in the tenth Booke the first Chapter of the lewes Antiqui-50 ties, that it was come to Senacheribs knowledge, that the Armie which was afoote (both to relecuethe Agyptians and the lewes) marched towards him by the way of the Defart : Now the Defart which lay indifferent betweene Hierufalem and Pelu- Lib.10, 149.1. fiam, was that of Pharan or Sur, which also toucheth on the three Arabiaes, to wir, the Stonie, of which it is a part: the Defart, and the Happy; and by no other way indeede could the Arabians come on to succour either Pelusium or Hierusalem. But.

that there is any Defart betweene Pelusium and the South part of Egypt, hath neuer

yet beene heard of, or described by any Cosmographer or Historian. So then this Scripture of the second of Kings, Verse the ninth, hath the same mistaking as the rest. For here the word (Chush) is also translated Athropia; and in this sense have all the Interpreters, (but tunius) expressed the beginning of the ninth Verse: He heard also

men far of THIRRHAKEH King of Athiopia, &c. whereas it should have beene

thus converted with Iv. NIVs: Andiens autem de THIRRHAKEH Rege Chushi; Hee heard allow THIRRHAKEH King of the Chushites. For they were the Chusites and Arabians, whose Houses and Cities were next the fire, and vpon whom the very to smoke of Iuda flaming was blowne, being their neerest Neighbours : and so were not the Athiopian blacke-Moores under the Equinoctiall, whom neither warre nor peace (which discouereth all Regions) euer found out, saith Plinie. For this King was no more King of Ethiopia then Zerah was, who inuaded Ma King of Iuda, with an Armie of a Million and three thousand Charriots. Indeed, how such an Ar-

mie and those Charriots should passe through all Egypt, (the Kings of Egypt being mightie Kings) let all men that know how these Regions are seated, and how farre distant, judge. For Princes doe not easily permit Armies of a Million to runne through them; neither was there ever any fuch strength of Black-Moores heard of the word Chulb being first so converted for Athiopia, the rest of the Interpreters (not looking into the seates of Kingdomes, or the possibilities of attempts, or inualions) followed one another in the former mistakings.

in that part of the World, or elsewhere. Neither are these Athiopians such trauai- 20 lers or Conquerors; and yet is this King Zerah also called King of Æthiopia. Bur

Q. XI. Of the plantation and antiquities of Egypt.

That MIZRAIM the chiefe planter of Egypt, and the rest of the Sonnes of HAM, were feated in order, one by another.

He second sonne of Ham was Mizraim, who (according to the place of a fecond brother) was fent fomewhat farther off to inhabite. For Chufb first possess on the West side of Gehon chiefly: and from thence, as he increased in people, so he entred Arabia, and by time came to the border of the Red Sea, and to the South-east-side of Iu-aes. Mizraim his brother (with Phut) past ouer into Africa. Mizraim held Egypt: and Phut (as a third brother) was thrust farther off into Mauritania. Canaan tooke the Sea-coast, and held the side of Palestina: and these foure brothers possest all that Tract of Land, from Gehon in Chaldan, as farre to the West as the Mediterrane 20 Sea: comprehending all Arabia Deferta, and Petraa, all Canaan which embraceth Galilea, Samaria, and Indea; with the two Egypts, whereof the nether is bounded by Memphis on the South, and by the Mediterrane Sea on the North: and Thebaida (called the upper Egypt) firetcheth it selfetoward the South as farre as Syene, the border of the Athiopians or black-Moores. All the rest of the coast of Africa Westward Phut peopled; which brothers had not any other Nation or Familie that dwelt betweene them. And in the same manner did all their sonnes againe, and all the fonnes of the rest of Noahs children, sort themselues.

Oncerning these wordes in that eighteenth Chapter of EsAY, Nauium alarum; 30 Winged Ships, (so the Septuagint turne it) or Cymbalo alarum (according to the Latine) (ayles whiftling in the windes, or terra vimbrofa or a (after Iv NIVs) the Land of a shaddowed coast, or the Land shaddowing with wings, as our English Geneua hath it. The two first interpretations of the Septuagint and S. Hierome have one sense in effect. For the failes are commonly called the wings of a ship; and we vieto say ordinarily when our ships saile slowly, that shee wanteth wings: (that is) when her sailes are either worne or too narrow; and we also vie the same phrase of the winde whistling in the failes. And it may be that the Egyptians employed so many of those small ships, as their sailes were said to give a shaddow over the Red Sea. But to make both interpretations good, Pintus (vpon Esay) affirmeth, that the word (Sabal) doth signifie 40 both to shaddow and to gingle (which is) to make a kinde of Cymbaline sound : so as the meaning of this place (faith Pintus) is this : Woc to thee, O Egypt, which doeft promise to others safegard, under the shaddow of thy wings, which (indeede) seemeth to agree with the argument of the eighteenth Chapter of E/ay: and this phrase is often elsewhere vsed, as in the fixteenth Psalme : Sub ombra alarum tuarum protege me ; Defend me under the shaddow of thy wings. The Boates of reede spoken of are of two kindes; either of basket-willow couered with hides (as anciently in Brittaine) or a Tree made hollow in the bottome, and built vpon both fides with Canes. Of the one fort I have seene in Ireland, of the other in the Indies.

Of the time about which the name of Egypt began to be knowne: and of the Egyptians Lunarie yeeres, which made their antiquities Ceeme the more fabulous.

His flourishing Kingdome possest by Mizraim, changed her ancient name, and became Egypt, at such time as Agyptus (otherwise Ramesses, as some thinke) the sonne of Belus, chased thence his elder brother Danaus, shifting him into that part of Greece now called Morea, by whom the Argines were made Danas, abandoning their proper names: which happened 877. yeeres after the floud, in the time 40 of lofua, as S. Augustine coniectureth out of Eusebius. But in Homers Odysses it appeareth that the Egyptians were so called at the time of the Troian Warre. And beforethis, Egypt was knowne by divers other names, as Oceana, Aria, Ofriana, Ge. And Manethon (whom Iosephus citeth in his first booke against Appion) numbrethall the Kings of Egypt after Moses departure, who consumed 393. yeeres. By which other men coniecture, that the Egyptians tooke on them that name 330. yeeres after Iosua, and about 1000. yeeres after the floud. But where tosephus in the same booke taketh Israel to be those Hresos, which he also calleth Passores or Shepherds, which are said to have reigned in Egypt 511. yeeres: whom also he calleth his Ancesters, (meaning the Ancesters of the lewer) in this I am sure he was grossy deceived, or that 50 he vainely boasted : for the Israelites had no such Dominion as Manethon fayneth: nor abode in Egypt fo long a time by many yeeres.

Of the Egyptian Antiquities there are many fancies in Trogus, Herodotus, Plato, Diod. Siculus, Mela, and others. For they affirme (faith Pomp. Mela) that there had reigned in Egypt 330. Kings before Amasis, who was contemporarie with Cyrus;

and that they had memorie and storie of 13000. yeeres; and that the Starres had fouretimes changed their course, and the Sunnetwice set in the East. These Riddles are also rife among the Athenians and Arcadians, who dare affirme, that they are more ancient then Jupiter and the Moone, whereof Ouid:

The Arcadians the earth inhabited Ere yet the Moone did shine, or love was bred.

But for those 13000, yeeres it may well be true: seeing it is certayne that the Ægyptians reckontheir yeeres by Moneths, which makes after that account not aboue 1000. or 1100. yeeres, whether we take their Moneths or Lunarie yeeres to hane beene of the first kinde of 27. dayes and eight houres; or otherwise 29. dayes and twelue houres; or after any other of those fine dinersities of their Lunarie yeeres.

Of certayne vaine affertions of the Antiquitie of the Ægyptians.

GERARDUS MERCATOR in his Chronologie, reasoneth for the Egyptians Antiquitie in this manner: That the sixteenth Dynassie (where Eusebius begins to reckon the Agyptians times) had beginning with the generall floud and that therefore the first of the other fifteene reached the Creation, or some after it. To which coniecture of Mercator, Pererius maketh this answere. That therein Mercator was first deceived, because he taketh it for granted, that the beginning of the fixteenth Dynastie was at once with the generall floud: which Eusebius maketh 292. yeeres after, and in the time of Abraham. Secondly, Mercator maketh the beginning of the 30 shepherds Dynastia (being in number the 17.) in the time of their first King, Salis, to have beene in the yeere of the World 1846. which Eusebius findeth in the Worlds age 2140. For the 16. Dynastia was begunne but in the 292. yeere after the floud, as they account, and continued 190. yeeres. Thirdly, whereas Mercator maketh every Dynastia to endure 115. yeeres, Eusebius reckoneth many of them at lesse then 100. yeeres: for the 28. had but fixe yeeres; the 29. but 20. and the 30. but Now Annius in his Supplement of Manethon affirmeth, That all these 15. Dynaflies lasted but 162. yeeres : and that the first of the 15. beganne but in the 131. yeere after the floud: so as where Mercator makes all the 15. to precede the floud, 40 and the i6. to have beene then in being at the time of the floud, Annies makes them all after it. But the contrarietie of fallhood cannot be hidden, though disguised. For Annius had forgotten his former Opinion and Assertion, that it was in the 131. yeere that Nimrod with the fonnes of Noah came into the Valley of Shinaar : so he forgets the time which was confumed in the building of Babel: and that before the confusion of Speech there was no dispersion, nor farre-off plantation at all. And though lie hastily conveyed Gomer into Italie, and Tubal into Spaine, in the 10 yeere of Nimrods reigne: (which was ten yeeres after his arrivall into Babylonia) yet herein heis more vnaduised. For he makes Agypt possest, and a gouernement established in the very first veere of the arrivall of Nimrod into Shinaar, before all partition, or 50 any expedition farre off or neere in question: for from thence (that is, from Babel) did the Lord scatter them upon all the earth.

Mainst Pererivs: that it is not unlikely, but that Agypt was peopled within 200. yeeres after the Creation; at least, that both it, and the most parts of the World were peopled before the Floud.

VT whereas Pererius seeketh to ouerthrow this Antiquitie of the Agyptians Drouching their Lynasties, (which Eufebius doth not altogether destroy, but lessen) 10 I doe not find any great strength in this opinion of Pererius; (to wit) that it was eyther vnlikely or impossible that Agypt should be peopled within 100.0r 200. yeeres after Adam, in the first Age. And whereas he supposeth that it was not inhabited at all before the generall Floud, I doe verily beleene the contrarie: and that not only of Agypt, but the better part of all the World was then peopled: Pererius his words are thefe: Quomodo enim primos mundi ducentos, veletiam centum annos AD AMI proles adeo multiplicari potuit, vt ad Ægyptum víá, habitandum & complendum propagata fit, Oc. For how could the children of AD AM bee so multiplied in the fo ft two hundred, or in the first hundred yeeres of the world, and so propagated as to inhabite and fill Agypi? for allowing this (faith Pererim) wee must also confesse, that there were then both the 20 Assyrians, and other Nations.

Now feeing that the Scriptures are filent herein, and that it is no point of our fauing beleefe, it is lawfull for every man to bee guided in this and the like questions by the best reason, circumstance, and likelihood; and herein, as in the rest, I protest that I doe not gainfay any mans opinion out of any croffing or cauelling humour: for I thinke it the part of euery Christian, rather to reconcile differences, where there is possibilitie of vnion, then out of froward subtletie, and prejudicate resoluednesse, to maintaine factions needlesse, and dangerous contentions. First therefore, to this opinion, that Agopt was not planted so some after Adam, no, not at all before the Floud, I say that there is no reason why wee should give a 30 leffe increase to the sonnes of Adam, then to the sonnes of Noth. For their length of life, which exceeded those which came after the floud double; & (after a few yeeres) treble, is an infallible proofe of their strength and abilitic, to beget many Children: and at that time they observed no degrees of kindred, nor consanguinitie. And that there was a speedie increase of people, and in great numbers, it may in some fort appeare by this, that Cain, who (being searefull that the death of abel would haue beene reuenged on him) withdrew himselse from the rest, which were afterward begotten, and dwelt in the Land of Nod, and there, by the helpe of his owne issues built a Citie, (called Enoch) after the name of his first borne. Now if it beegathered that Mimrod came into the Valley of Shinaar with so many multitudes, as suf-40 ficed to build the Citie and Towre of Babel: and that to this increase there was giuen but 130. yeeres by Berofus, and after the account of the Scriptures (reckoning, as it is commonly vuderstood, by the birth of Arphaxad, Selah, Heber, and Phalegh) but one hundred and one yeere: I see no cause to doubt, but that in the infancie of the first age, when the bodies of men were most perfect, euen within 130. yeeres, the same (if not a greater) number might be increased; and so within 70. yeeres after (that is, by such time as the World had stood 200. yeeres) aswell Assyria, Syria, and Agypt might be possest before the Floud, as they were within the same or lesses time after it. Neyther doth it agree with the circumstance or true Storie of the Babylonian and Assyrian Empire, that all those people, which were increased in the first 50 hundred or 130. yeeres after the Floud, came into Shinaar and Babylonia. For that euer 2004 himselfe came out of the East, as there is no Scripture or Authoritie to prooue it, so all probable coniecture and reason it selse denies it. Againe, those multitudes and powerfull numbers, which Semiramis (but the third from Nimrod) found in India, confidered with her owne Armie of three Millions, (and shee left not 158

all her Kingdomes emptie) doe well prooue, that if the World had fuch plentie of people in so few yeeres after the Floud, it might also bee as plentifully filled in like time before it. For after their owne account Winter gouerned Babylonia and Affyria but 202. yeeres after the Floud of Noah. And these Troupes of Semiramis were gathered out of all those Easterne Kingdomes, from Media to the Mediterran Sea: when there had now past from the Floud to the time of this her inualion, somewhat lesse or more then 360. yeeres: for much more time the true Chronologie cannot allow; though I confesse, that in respect of the strange greatnesse of Semiramis Armie, and the incredible multitudes gathered, this is as short a time as can well be given. And if but the one halfe be true of that which is faid, That her Armie confifted of 10 1200000. Footmen, and 500000. Horsemen, it must needes bee, that long before Semiramis Raigne, the greatest part of Asia (whence her huge Armie was gathered) was full of people: yea Arabia it felse (much part whereof is barren) must long beforethis time of Semiramis haue beene plentifully peopled; when Ninus hauing a determination to make himselfe Master of all Nations, entred (notwithstanding) in League with the King thereof: whom therefore he eyther feared, or fought his affistance. And if Arabia were then so well replenished, I see no cause but Agypt might also be peopled. Now if we may believe Trogus Pompetus (Epitomiz dby Iu-(tine ) Levyt was a most flourishing and magnificent Nation before Nimus was borne. Forthese be his owne wordes, speaking of NINVS. Fuere quidem tempori- 20 bus antiquioribus VEXORIS Rex Agypti, &c. But there were in times more ancient VEXORIS King of Egypt, and TANAIS King of the Scythians: of which the one inuaded Pontus, the other Agypt. And how full of people all that part of the World was, the Conquests of Ninus witnesse, who subdued with no small force the Armenians, the Medes, and afterwards the Bactrians; yea, all that whole bodie of Alia on this fide India. For Diodorus out of Ctesias numbreththe Armie, wherewith Ninus inuaded Zoreaster, at 1700000. Footmen, and 200000. Horsemen: and the Stories generally shew, that though Zoroasters Armie was farre short of this, yet it was greater then any that those parts of the World euer since beheld. But to what end should I seeke for forraine authoritie? for no man doubteth but that £gypt was possest by 30 Mizraim, the sonne of Ham; and that it was an established Kingdome, filled with many Cities in Abrahams time, the Scriptures tell vs. And sure to prepare and cultiue a desolate and ouergrowne ground, to beautiste it with many Cities, Lawes, and Policies, cannot be esteemed a labour of a few dayes: and therefore it must bee inhabited in a lessetime then 200. yeeres after the Floud; and in the same time (if not in a shorter) before the Floud. For if so many Millions of men were found within 200. yeeres after the generall Floud; fo as not only Babylon, and Assyria, Bactria, Armenia, Media, Arabia, Egypt, Palestina, yea the farre-off Lybia on the one side, and India on the other, and Scythia (inferiour to neyther) were all filled : into what fmall corners could then all those Nations be comprest, which 1656. yeeres brought 40 forth before the Floud? euen necessitie, which cannot be resisted, cast the abundance of mens bodies into all parts of the knowne World; especially, where Death forbare the Father, and made no place for the Sonne, till he had beheld liuing Nations of his owne bodie.

t. V.

Of some other reasons against the opinion of Pererivs.

 ${f F}$  Or what a strange increase did the long lives of the first Age make, when they 50 continued 800. or 900. yeeres. Surely, we have reason to doubt, that the World could not containe them, rather then that they were not spred ouer the World. For let vs now reckon the date of our liues in this Age of the World: wherein if one exceed 50, yeeres, tenne for one are cut off in that passage, and yet wee find no want of people; nay, weeknow the multitude fuch, as if by warres or peftilence they were not sometimes taken off by many thousands, the earth with all the industrie of man could not give them food. What strange heapes then of soules had the first Ages. who enioyed 800.or 900. yeeres, as aforefaid? These numbers, I say, cannot bee counted nor conceived. For it would come to the same reckoning in effect, as if all thosewhich have beene borne in Brittaine since 3. or 4. hundred yeeres before the Norman Conquest (saving such as by accident or by violence were cut off) were now aliue; and if to thesethere were added as many as by Polygamie might have beene increased. For (to omit, that the Giants and mightie ones of the first Age observed to no law of Matrimony) it is to be thought that those Louers of the world and of pleafure, when they knew the long and liberall time which Nature had given them. would not willingly or hastily present themselues to any danger which they could five from or eschew. For what humane argument hath better perswasion to make men carelesse of life, and searclesse of death, then the little time which keepes them asunder, and that short time also accompanied with so many paines and diseases. which this envious olde Age of the World mingleth together, and foweth with the

feeds of Mankind? Now if that Berofus or Annius may be alleaged for sufficient Authours, whom Pererius himselie in this question citeth, then is it by them affirmed, and by losephus confirmed, that the Citie of Enoch was feated neere Lybanus in Syria: and it other parts of Syria were peopled in Cains time, I fee no caufe why Palastina (which is also a Province of Syria) and Egypt (which neighboureth it) could bee left desolate both all the life time of Cain, and all those times betweene his death and the Floud, which were by estimation 700. or 800. yeeres. And sure though this Fragment of Berofus with Annius his Comment beevery ridiculous in many places (the ancient Copies being corrupted or lost) yet all things in Berolus are not to bee reiested. Therefore Saint Hierome for such Authours giues a good rule. Bona eorum eligamus, vitemus contraria; Let ws choose what is good in them, and reiest the rest. And certainly in the very beginning of the first Booke, Berofus agreeth (in effect) with Mofes, touch-30 ing the generall Floud and in that first part Berofus affirmeth, that those mightie men and Giants which inhabited Enoch, commanded ouerall Nations, and subjected the vniuerfall World: and though that phrase (of all the World) bee often vsed in the Scriptures for a part thereof; as in the second of the Atts, That there were dwelling at Hierusalem lewes: men that feared God of enery Nation under Heanen: yet by wordes which follow in Berofus, it is plaine that his words and sense were the same : for hee addeth from the Sunnes rifing to the Sunnes fetting, which cannot be taken for any small part thereof. Againe, wee may safely coniecture, that Woah did not part and proportion the World among his sonnes at aduenture, or left them as Discouerers, but directed them to those Regions which he formerly knew had beene inhabited. 40 And it cannot be denyed that the earth was more passable and easie to trauaile ouer before the Floud, then after it. For Pererius himselfe confesseth, that Attics (by reafon of mudde and flime which the water left vpon the Earth) was vninhabited 200. yeeres after Ograes Floud, whereby wee may gather that there was no great pleasure in passing into farre Countries after the generall Deluge, when the earth lay (asit were) incopsed for 100, or 130, yeeres together. And therefore was the face thereof in all coniecture more beautifull, and lesse cumbersome to walke ouer, in the first Age then after the generall ouerflowing.

of the words of Moses, Gen. Io. v. vitimo, whereupon Pererivs grounded his opinion.

Aftly, whereas Pererius drawes this Argument out of the last Verse of the tenth of Genesis, And out of these were the Nations divided after the Floud: Quo significatur talem divisionem non suisse ante diluvium, By which it appeareth (layth Pererius) that there was no such division before the Floud; which hee also seeketh to confirme out of the eleuenth of Genesis, because the division of tongues was cause of the dispersion of the people. This consequence, quo significatur, &c. seemeth to me very weake: the Text it selferather teaching the contrarie : for out of these (fayth Moses) were the N ations divided in the earth after the Floud; inferring, that before the Floud the Nations were divided out of others, though after the Floud out of these only. But whatsoever fense may be gathered from this place, yet it can no way bee drawne to the times before the Floud, or to any Plantation or division in that Age: for if there were none else among whom the earth could bee divided after the Floud, but 2 eahs Sonnes, wherein doth that necessarie division controule the planting of the World before it? And whereas it is alleaged that the confusion of speech was the cause of this dispersion, it is true, that it was so for that present; but if Babel had neuer beene built, nor 20 any confusion of Languages at all, yet increase of people and time would have enforced a farther-off and generall Plantation: as Berofus fayes well, that when Mankind were exceedingly multiplyed, Ad comparandas nouas sedes necessitas compellebat, They were drinen by necessitie to seeke new Habitations. For we find (as is before said) that within 300. yeeres after the Floud, there were gathered together into two Armies, fuch multitudes as the Valley about Babylon could not have fustained those numbers with their increase for any long time : all Asia the greater and the lesser; all scythia, Arabia, Palastina, and Agypt, with Greece, and the Islands thereof; Mauritania and Lybia being also at that time fully peopled. And if we believe Berofus, then not only those parts of the World, but (within 140. yeeres after the Floud) Spaine, Italie 30 and France were also planted: much more then may wee thinke, that within 1656. yeeres before the Floud, in the time of the chiefe strength of Mankind, they were replenished with people. And certainly seeing all the World was ouerslowne, there were people in all the World which offended.

t. VII.

A conclusion, resoluting of that which is most likely, touching the Agyptian Antiquities: with somewhat of PHVT (another Sonne of HAM) which peopled Lybia.

T'Herefore, for the Antiquitie of the Agyptians, as I doe not agree with Mercator, nor judge with the Vulgar, which give too much credit to the Agyptians Antiquities: fo I doe not thinke the report of their Antiquities fo fabulous, as either Pererius or other men conceine it. But I rather incline to this, That Agypt being peopled before the Floud, and 200. or 300. yeeres, more or lesse after Adam, there might remaine vnto the Sonnes of Mizraim some Monuments in Pillers or Altars of stone or metall) of their former Kings or Gouernours: which the Egyptians hauing added to the list and Roll of their Kings after the Floud, in succeeding time (out of the vanitie of glory or by some corruption in their Priests) something beyond the 50 truthmight be inferted. And that the memorie of Antiquitie was in such fort preferued, Berofus affirmeth it of the Chaldeans, and so doth Epigenes. For they both write that the vse of Letters and the Art of Astronomie was knowne to the Babylomians 3634. yeeres before Alexanders Conquest: and this report Annius findeth to agree and reach to the time of Enells, who was borne 1034 yeeres before the Floud, and wrote of the Worlds destruction, both by Water and Fire; as also of christ his comming in judgement, as Saint Inde hath witnessed. But leaving these Antiquities to other mens indgements, and every man to his owne reason, I will conclude this Plantation of Agypt. It is agreed by all, that it was peopled by Mizraim, and that it tooke the name of Agypt from Agyptus the some of Belus, as a foresaid. Being divided into two Regions, that part from Memphis or Nicopolis to the Mediterran Sea, was called the inferiour Agypt; furnamed also Delta: because the seuerall branches of Nilus breaking as funder from one bodie of the River, gaueit the forme to of the Greeke letter Delta, which is the forme of a Triangle. That branch, which ranne toward the North-east and imbraced the Sea, mext vnto the Defarts of Sur and Phasan, had on it the Citic of Pelusium, where Sen scherib was repulsed: The other branch, which yeelded it selfe to the Salt-water towards the North-west, is beautified by that famous Citie of Alexandria: The upper part of Egypt is bounded beweene Memphis and Syene neere Libiopia, and had the name of Thebaids, of that ancient Citie of Thebes, which (according to Homer) was adorned with 100. Gates: and therefore called Civitas centum portarum; and by the Greekes Diospolis; in the Scriptures No-hamon, which fignifieth multitudes of Inhabitants, exceeding beliefe. Iosephus cals Egypt Mersin of Muzrain : and Herodotus affirmes that it had Ios. Li. Anteg. 20 once the name of Thebais.

Phut the third sonne of Ham tooke the next portion of Land to his other Mizraim, and inhabited Lybia: whose people were anciently called Phutei; ( sayth Isfeplus I and Plinie mentioneth the River Fut in Mauritania: which River from the Lact. Mountaine Atlas (knowne to the Inhabitants by the name of Dyris) hee maketh to bee distant the space of two hundred miles. It also appeareth in the thirtieth Chapter of Ezechiel, that Phut, Chush and Lud were contermini and Associates with the Egyptians.

Of the eleven Connes of CANAAN, the fourth fonne

Of the bounds of the Land of Canaan : with the names of his eleuen sonnes.

Annan (the fourth some of Ham) possest all that Region called by the Romanes Palastina; in the Scriptures Galilea, Samaria, and Indea; in the latter times knowne by the name of the Holy Land and Iuric: the limits whereof are precifely set downe by Moses, Genesis the tenth, Then the border of the Canaanites was from Zidon as thou goest to Gerar untill Azzah, and us thou goest unto Sodome and Gomorha, and Admah, and Zeboim, euen unto Lasha. Now how soeuer these words of the Hebrew Text (as thou goest) be converted, Moses meaning was that Gerar was the South bound of Canaan and Ziden the North; Sodome and Gomorha the East, and the other Cities named stood on 50 the Frontiers thereof. For Gerar standeth in a right Line from Gaza in the way of Ægypt, the vttermost Territorie of Canaan Southward: and this was properly the Land of Canaan.

Now the sonnes of Canaan which possess this Countrie, and inhabited some part of the borders thereof, were in number eleuen:

Of the portions of ZIDON and HETH.

ZIDON the first borne of Canaan, built the famous Citie of Zidon in Phænicia, which afterward fell in partition to the Tribe of Assert for Assert, Zabulon, and Nephrali had a great part of the ancient Phanicia distributed among them; but the Assertes could neuer obtaine Zidon it selfe.

The second sonne of Canaan was Heth or Cethus: of whom came the Hethites, or Hittites, one of those seuen principall Nations (Commanders of Canaan) appointed by God to bee rooted out; namely, the Gergesites, the Amorites, the Canaanites, the Perizzites, and Heuites, and the lebusites. The Hittites inhabited about Bersabe. and towards Hebron neere the Torrent Befor, and about Gerar, which Mofes maketh 30 the vttermost limit of Canaan, having the Desart of Pharan to the South: for about Berlabe (otherwise Puteus iuramenti) foure miles from Gaza dwelt Heth and his Posteritie, as farre to the Northeast as Hebron, and Mamre; and of Ephraim the Hittite did Abraham buy the field of Sarahs buriall. Of which Nation Rebecca bewailed her selfe to Isaac, saying, That shee was wearie of her life for the Daughters of HETH. The Giants Anakim were of these Hittites, a strong and fierce Nation, whose enter-4-Kings 67, 2.6 tainment by the Kings of Ifrael against them the Syrians greatly seared : as in the fourth of the Kings; Ifrael hath hired against vs the Kings of the Hittites.

Of the lebulites and Amorites.

TEnvsævs, the third sonne of Canaan, of whom came the Iebusites, and whose principall seat was Iebus, (afterward Hierusalem) were also a valiant and stubborne Nation, and held their Citie and the Countrie neere it, till fuch time as David by Gods affistance recouered both: yet were not the Iebusites extinguished, but were Tributaries to Salomon.

Amoreus was the fourth sonne of Canaan, of whom the Amorites tooke name, who inhabited that Land to the East of Iord in below the Sea of Galilee, having Ar- 50 non and the Mountaines of Galaad on the East, and Iordan on the West: of whom Og (King of Basan) and Sihon (ouerthrowne by Moses) were Princes.

The Amorites had also many other habitations dispersed within the bounds of Canaan: as behind Libanus in the edge of Calefyria, or Syria Libanica. They had also their being in the Mountaynes of Inda, and in Idumea neere the Metropolis thereof, Deut.1. called Duma. And hereof it came that all the Canaanites were sometime called Amorites : as in Genesis the fifteenth : For the wickednesse of the Amorites is not yet full. And that this was also a powerfull Nation, we finde in the Prophet Amos : Yet de- Amos 2. Groyed I the Amorite before them, whose heighth was like the heighth of a Cedar, and he was strong as the Okes.

t. IIII.

Of the Gergefites, Houites, and Harkites.

The fift sonne of Canaan was Gergejeus or Gergefion, (otherwise Girgasi) who inhabited on the East side of the Lake of Tiberias, or the Sea of Galilee, where Ptolemie sets the Citie Gerasa, which losephus calls Gefera in the Territorie of Decapolis. Here it was that CHRIST disposses the possessed with Deuilis; and the Gergefites desired him to depart their Coasts: because their Swine filled with the euill spirits, drowned themselues in the Sea of Galakee. Gergeseus also built Berytus (sometime Geris) afterward Fælix Iulia, three miles from the River Adons in Phanicia: in which the Romanes held a Garrison; and to which Augustus gane many large Hencus the fixth sonne; and Father of the Henites, inhabited under Libanus neere Emath. These Henites, howsoever the Caphthorim expelled a good part of them (as in Deuteronomie the second is remembred) yet many of them remayned all the warre of 10/44, and afterward to the time of Salomon. For God was not pleased vererly to roote out these Nations, but they were sometimes made Tributaries to the Ifraelites, and at other times ferued (in their falling away from the true worship of God) to afflict them : for as it is written, Indges the third : They remayned to prove I SRAEL by them, whether they would obey the Commandements of God.

The seuenth sonne was Araccus or Harki, who betweene the soote of Libanus 20 and the Mediterran Sea, (ouer again & Tripola) built the Citie of Archas, Arce, or Arca, afterwards Arachis.

of SINI and ARVADI.

CINEVS the eighth sonne, Hierosolymitanus sets at Caparor sa, which Ptolemie findes D in Iudas, not farre from Iebus; to the South thereof, faith Iunius. But it is more probable, that Sineus founded Sin, which S. Hierome calls Sin, Ptolemie, Simyra: Me-40 la and Pline, Simyrus: Brochard, Sycon, (called Synochs) neere Arcs. Pererius thinkes that Sineus inhabited the Desarts of Sinai or thereabout; but hereof there is no other certaintie then the report of Brochard, who tooke view of all these places, affirming, that Sincus built Synochis, as Zidon built Zidon. There is also another Nation of Cini (written with the letter C. otherwise Kenai) who descended of Hobab the fonne of Raquel the Madianite, who affisted the I/raelites in their conduction through the Wildernesse of Pharan. But these Cinei were admitted among the Israelites, and had a portion of Land with the Nephtalims, belide their habitations with the Indg. 4. Amalekites: against these Cinei, Balaam prophecied, that they should be destroyed by 10sin 19.33.

The ninth sonne was Aradeus or Arnadeus, who in the He of Aradus built the Gulty. Viria. Citie Arados: opposite against which Iland on the Maine of Phanicia, they founded another Citie of that name, which for opposition was afterwards called Antaradus. To this Citie came S. Peter (faith Clement) and in this Ile preached the Gospell, and founded a Church in honor of our Lady: but we finde no such worke of his in the Alls of the Apostles. Both these two were very famous, and places of skilfull Sea-men: whom Ezechiel remembreth in his prophecies against the Tyrians. The Inhabitants of Zidon and Arnad were thy Mariners.

> †. VI. of ZEMARI.

OF Samareus, or Zemari, the tenth sonne, there are divers opinions. Some thinke that he first inhabited in Culespria at Edessa, and sounded Samaraim, so which in Iosua is placed in the Tribe of Beniamin. There is also Samaraijm (of the same Orthographic) vpon the Mountaynes of Ephraim (saith Beroaldus) mentioned in the second of Chronicles c. 13. v.4. which the Latine converteth amisse (saith he) by Semeron. The Hierosolymitan Paraphrast makes Samareus (of whom were the Perizzites) the parent of the Emissani, which Plime calls the Hemisseni, in Calesyria; and it may be that it was their first habitation, and that they afterwards inhabited those other places before remembred. But that they founded Samaria, both the Hebrew Orthographie, and this place in the first of Kings (speaking of Omri) dispro-1. Kings 16. 28. ueth: And he bought the Mountayne Samaria or Shemeron of one SHEMER, for two talents of filuer, and built in the Mountayne : and called the name of the Citie which he built, after 20 the name of SHEMER, Lord of the Mountayne Samaria. But of all these places I shall speake more at large in the conquest of the holy Land, by the children of Israel. Of whomsoeuer the Samaritanes were descended, sure I am, that they were euer a perfidious Nation, and base: for as long as the state of the Iewes stood vp, they alwayes called themselues terres: when it suffered or sanke, they then vtterly denyed to be of that Nation or Familie; for at such time as they were returned from their first captiuitie, they became a mixt Nation; partly of the Colonies of the Assyrians; and partly of the naturalls.

> t. VII. of HAMATHI.

The last of Canaans sonnes was Hamatheus, or (according to the Hebrew) Hamathi, of Hamath: (faith Beroaldus) of which (the aspiration taken away) the fame is pronounced Emath, whereof Hamatheus was parent. Iofephus and S. Hierome confound Emath with Antioch , not that Antioch which Randeth on the River Orontes, on the frontier of Comagena, betweene the Mountayne Cassus and the Prouince of Pieria, and Seleucis, of which S. Peter was Bilhop, and in which S. Luke and Ignatius were borne : but Antioch, surnamed Epiphania, as Beroaldus supposeth, 40 which standeth betweene Apamea and Emela in Casiotis. Yet, indeede, Emath cannot be taken for either: for both that Antioch vpon Orontes, and that which neighboureth Emesa, are farther off seared from Canaan, then euer any of those Nations straggled. And whereas S. Hierome setteth Emath, which he confoundeth with Epiphania, in the Tribe of Nephtali; it is manifest, that Epiphania, which standeth to the North of Emefa, hathall the Province of Laodicea, betweene it and any part of the Land divided. And if Libanon it selfe were not shared among the Tribes, then could not Epiphania belong vnto them: for both the Provinces Laodicea and Libanica, are between Epiphania and any part of the holy Land: and therefore Emath so taken could not be a part of Nephtali, as in the thirteenth of Iofua is directly proued. 50 For 10/us counting the lands that remayned vnpoffest, reckoneth all Mount Libanon towards the Sunne-rifing, from Baalgad vnder mount Hermon, vntill we come to Hamath. And this reason (among others) is vsed, that Emath was not in Nephtalim, or any way belonging to the children of Israel: because Danid accepted the presents of Tohu King of Emath, and (therewithall) conditions of peace: which he would not haue done, if that Territorie had euer belonged to the children of Israel, but would haue recouered it without composition, and by strong hand, as he did the rest. But this Argument (as I take it) hath no great waight. For if the promise which God made, be considered, as it is written in Deuteronomie, then might Emath be compre- cap. 11. 2.24. hended, though seared altogether without the bounds of the Land promised, according to the description of Moles and Iolua: for Emath is indeede situate on the other side of the Mountayne of Hermon, which ioyneth to Libanus : and is otherwise called Iturea. But whereas Hamath is named in Iosua the 19.2.35. and written in the 10 Latine conversion Emath, therein (saith Beroaldus) was S. Hierome mistaken. Emath or Iturea is that ouer the Mountaynes, and the Citie in Nephtalim should be written Hamath: and so the Septuagint (vinderstanding the difference) write it Amnath and not Emath, the same which indeede belonged to the Nephtalims, seated on the South fide of Libanus, to the East of Affedim : which Citie S. Hierome writes Emath ; 10fephus, Hamath; others, Emathin, or Amatheos, and the people Amathein; of which (as I takeit) Rablakeh vaunteth in the second of KINGS: Where is the god of Hamath? cap. 18. 6-19.

of the sonnes of CHUSH (excepting NIMROD) of whom hereafter.

Hauila. Sabta, The fonnes of Chush were, Raama, And the sonnes of Raama were, Nimrod.

That the most of the Sonnes of CHUSH were feated in Arabia the Happy: and of the Sabaans that robbed Ios: and of the Queene that came to SALOMON.

EBA or Saba was the eldest sonne of Chush, the eldest sonne of Ham. to make a difference betweene Him and his Nephew sheba, the sonne of his brother Raama, or Regma (or Ragma after Montanus) his name is written with a fingle (S) Samech, and Sheba the sonne of Regma with an (S) asperate, which is the Hebrew Schin. Seba the eldest sonne of Chush, Regma his brother, and Sheba the sonne of Regma possest both the shores of Arabia Fælix. Saba tooke that part toward the Red Sea, as necrest his Father Chush, and the Land of the Chustes: Regma and Sheba the East coast of the same Arabia, which looketh into the Gulfe of Persia; of which PLINIE: Sabai Arabum populi propter thura clarissimi ad virag, maria porrect is gentibus habitant; The Sabaans people of Arabia, famous for their Frankincense, extending their Nations, dwell along both the Seas, (to wit) the Persian, and the Arabian, or Red Sea. This Countrie was afterwards called Arabia, à populi mixtione, saith Postellius. To this agreeth Ptolemie, who setteth the Citie of Saba towards the Arabian or Red Sea, and the Citie Rhegama towards 50 the Persian, with whom also we may leave Sabta: for so much Montanus gathereth out of Ptolemie, because he remembreth a Nation (called Stabai) neere the Persian Sea; and Massabathe which descended of them. But Montanus hath sent Regma, or (as he calls him Rahma) into Carmania, for which I fee no reason. Iosephus, who only attended his owne fancies, hath banished Saba or Seba to the border of Athiopia.

But Beroaldus thinkes it strange, that the Sabai, which stole away Iobs Cattle, should runne through all Egypt, and all Arabia Petres, and finde out lob in Traconitis, betweene Palastina and Calesyria 1200. miles off. Now, as this coniecture was more then ridiculous, so doe I thinke, that neither the Sabai on the Red Sea, nor those toward the Persian Sea, could by any meanes execute the stealth vpon 106, which soener Beroaldus shall take for neerest. But these were the Sabai of Arabia the Desart, where Guilandinus Melchior affirmeth out of his owne experience, that the Cittie Saba is feated: the same which Ptolomie calls Saue, now Semiscalae: and from this Saba in Arabiathe Desart, came those Magi or Wisemen which worshipped Christ, saith Melchior, whose wordes are these: The Magi came neither out of Mesopotamia ( as 10 Chryfostome, Hierome, and Ambrofe supposed ) nor out of Arabia the Happie, as many wile men doe beleeue, but out of Sabain Arabia the Defart : which Citie when my felfe was there was (as I indgedit) called Semiscasac. And to approue this opinion of Guilandinus, it appeareth that these Shabai were neighbours to lob, and lay fit to invade and rob him. For both the other Nations ( alwell those on the Persian Sea, as those on the Red Sea) are so distoyned with large Desarts, as there is no possibilitie for strangers to passe them, especially with any numbers of Cattle, both in respect of the moun-taines, of the fands, and of the extreme want of water in those parts: Vbi nec homines, nec bestie videntur, nec aues, in o nec a bores, nec germen aliquod, sed non nisimontes saxosi, Beroaldus and Pererius conceiue, that the Queene of Saba which came to visite Salomon, was of the Sabai on the East fide of Arabia Fælix; but the contrarie seemeth more probable, and that shee was Queene of Saba towardes the Red Sea: for Salomon at that time commanding all that part of Arabia Petraa, twixt Idumas and the Red Sea, as farre downe as Midian or Madian, and Ezion Gaber: and this Queene of Saba which inhabited the West part of Arabia Falix, being his neighbour, might without

t. II.

IOSEPHUS his opinion of DEDAN, one of the iffue of CHUSH to have beene feated in the West Ethiopia, disproved out of Ezech: and Hieremie.

A Nd whereas losephus (whom in this S. Hierome followeth, as not curious herein) fent Dedan the sonne of Raamah into West Ethiopia, it is strange that Exethiel should couple Sheba, Rasmah, and Dedantogether; Dedan in the 15. Verse, and sheba, and Raamah in the 22. Verses to be the Merchants of Tyre, if Dedan had dwelt in West Ethiopia, which is distant from Raamah and Sheba (the habitation of his father and brother) aboue 4000. miles. Besides which the merchandise that the Dedanites brought to Tyre doth not make them naked Black-mores. For they of Dedan (faith Ezechiel) were thy Merchants in precious clothes for thy Charriots; and these Westerne Athiopians neuer saw cloth, till the Portugals seeking those Coaststraded with them: the merchandise of the Countrie being Hides, Elephants teeth, some 20 Gold and Amber, Ciuet Cats, and Rice, but nothing at all of any manufacture: and all these they exchanged for linnen, or yron chiefly.

But in those dayes the West part of Africa within the body of the land was known onely by imagination : and, being under the burnt Zone was held uninhabitable. And therefore that the Negros of the West Ethiopia, which inhabite about Serra Liona, or Niger, could either passe by Sea or Land to Tyre in the bottome of the Mediterran Sea, were a strange, or rather a foolish fancie. Now to put it out of dispute that Dedan also dwelt by the rest of the children of Chush, which seates they held by that name in the time of Hieremie the Prophet, let vs. heare Hieremie his owne words: Fly, yee Inhabitants of Dedan, for I have brought the destruction of Esav upon him. 30 Hereby it appeareth that Dedan was a Neighbour to the Idumeans: and Idumea is a Province of Arabia Petrea: and Dedan which dwelt on the North part of Arabia Falix, joyned in that part to Petres, the feat of his Grand-father Chaft; which neighbourhood and fellowship of Dedan and the Idumeans, is also confirmed by Ezechiel: Ezech.capas. I will fretch out mine hand upon Edom, and destroy Man and Beast out of it, and I will versas.

of the issue of MIZRAIM: and of the place of HIEREMIE, Chap. 9. Verf. 7.

Free chush it followeth to speake of Mizraims sonnes, whose names (faith Saint Angustine) were plurall, to fignifie the Nations, which Theterminacame of them. Ludim, the eldelt sonne of Mizraim, was the father of the Hebrer, is Lybians in Africa: and the rest of his brothers dispersed themselues into all Regions adioyning. Among the sonnes of shem there is also signe of the

Lud; but he is differenced from Lud the sonne of Mizrain by the singular number: bet, as aim of the sonne of Shem being written Lud, the sonne of Mizraim, Ludim: and yet these the dual. Names and Nations are often confounded, notwithstanding the apparent difference 50 both of Names and Nations. For that Ludim the sonne of Mizraim was the parent of the Lybians in Africa, and that he was scated not farre from Mizraim his father, appeareth by the Prophet Hieremie, who ioneth them in this fort together : Come up ye cap. 46. verf. 9. Horses, and rage ye Charriots, and let the valiant men come forth, the Black-moores, and the Lybians which beare the Bield: for those Nations affifted the Agyptians being of

with his Sonnes Sheba and Dedan, and Sabteca, were all the possessors of Arabia the Happie, and the Desart: onely Hauilah and Nimrod dwelt together on the East side Chall, who held Arabia Petraa. Now for Sabta, there is found of his name the Plin.1.12. c.14. Cittle of Sabbatha or Sabota in the same Arabia: of which both Plinie and Ptolomie; who withall nameth Sabstale, within the walls whereof there were fometimes found fixtie Temples. Ezechiel ioyneth the Father and the Sonne together, The Merchants of Sheba and Raama were thy Merchants. And that they were the Easterne Arabians their merchandise witnesserh, formerly repeated in the Chapter of Paradise. For 10/ephus his fancies, that Saba was the parent of the Athiopians about Meroc, and Sabta of the Æthiopians Alfabari, they bee not worthie any farther answere then 40 hath already beene giuen: especially seeing these Citties preserving the memorie of the names of Saba, and of Sabia in Arabia were yet remaining in Ptolomies time, though in some letters changed. As also in the coastes adioyning, the names of other of the brethren of the familie of Cush, with little alterations are preserved. In Arabia the Desart is found the Cittie Saba or Saue, (now Semiscasae) with the Cittie of Rhegana for Rhegma; and the Nation by Ptolomie himselfe called Raabeni of Raamah. In Arabia the Happie is found the Cittie of Rhegama, and Rabana; which also keepeth the found of Rhegma, the Cittie of Saptha or Saptah, not far from the East coast of Arabia: as also the Metropolis and chiefe Cittie in the body of the South part of Arabia, called without difference or alteration Sabatha; and to the West of Sabatha towards the 50 Red Seathe great Cittle of Saba; and the Nation adioyning, Sabai: & to the South thereof againe toward the streight entrance of the Red Sea, the Region of Sabe. To all these his Brothers and Nephewes which were seated on the East side of Arabia, one parent descended. And in Ezechiel, Phut and Lud are joyned together. Æthiopia (or Chush) saith Ezechiel c. 30. v.3. And PHVT and LVD, and all the common people, and the men of the Land that are in league shall fall with them by the sword : which is as much to say, as the sonnes of Chush; (which were the Chustes) the sonnes of Mizraim, which were the Agyptians) and the Lybians (descended of his sonne Lud) with other the inhabitants of Agypt and Africa shall fall together. Hierofelymitanus findes also in Africa a Nation of the Lydians. And I beleeue it : because Hieremie ioyneth the Lybians and Lydians together in the place before remembred. But Lybia in Africa is by the Hebrewes called Ludim (faith Arias Montanus) though 2. Chron. 12.3. they seeme to be called Lubim or Lubei, a name somewhat neerer the 10 word Lybies, and by which it may feeme that the truer writing is, not Libyes, but Lybies. Neither is it here to be omitted, that Pintus (vpon the thirtieth of Ezechiel) vnderstandeth that which is spoken in the third Verse of Lud, not to be meant of the Libyans at all: for he will have this threatning to be meant against the people of Lyd1, 2 Citie (faith he) betweene Egypt and Palestina, which opinion I could not mislike if the Citie of Lyda were so seated. But Lyda (which should be written Lydda with a double D, and is the same Citie which was afterward Diospolis, in which S. Peter cured Aness of the palfey) standeth neere the Torrent Gass, not farre from Joppe the Port of Hierusalem. Yet it is not impossible but that this Citie might have Lud for the Founder. For there are many Cities of one name founded in all the 20 Regions of the World, and farre afunder; as after the names of Alexander, Selenem, and Antiochiu, many Cities called Alexandria, Seleucia, and Antiochia, fo of diners others. S. Hierome maketh Lehabim to be the Father of Libya, who was the third fonne of Mizrain: and so doth Postellus; and either opinion may be true.

The rest of Mizraims sonnes have no proper Countries given them in the Scriptures, sauing Cassahim and Caphtorim, of whom came the Philistims, whom the Scrip-

from whence Pompey was buried.

Caphtorim scated neere Cossum in that Tract of Azypt called Sethroiti, not farre from Pelusium. Strabo calls it Sethroitis; Stephanus and Plinie, Sethroites, of the Citie Sethron : which Ortelius takes to be the same which Ptolemie calls Hercules parua. Of the Castubim and Caphtorim came the Philistims, which are called by the Septuagins Allophyli (which is) Alienigena, Strangers, or of a strange kindred. These Philistims inhabited the South part of the holy Land towards Agypt, of whom Palastina tooke name. For the Hebrewes (faith Isidore) doe not vie the letter (P) but in stead of it (ph.) Their principall Cities were Gaza, Ascalon, Azotus, Geth, and Accaron: and the people of them called Gafai, Afcalonita, Azoty, Gethai, and Accaronita. Ilidore affirmes, that Ascalon was first called Philistim : and of that Citie the Countrie 40 adioyning. But where Isidore had it, I know not.

The first knowne King of the Philistims was that Abimelech, who had a liking to Abrahams wife; with whom Abraham made a couenant and league. This Abimelech dwelt indeede at this time in Gerar; but it is written that he was also King of Bafil upon the the Philistims, in these wordes: Wherefore I SAAC went to ABIMELECH King of the Philistims unto Gerar. Now in regard that this or some ancienter abimelech gouerned the commonwealth greatly to his glorie, the rest of his successors called themselues by the same name. The Philistims commanded that Tract of land vpon the Mediterran Sea to the Northward, from the Castle of Pilgrims (otherwise Cafarea Palassina, or Stratons Towre) which was the South-border of Phanicia, to Gasa, or to the Ri- 50 uer of Azyps. The Anakims or strong Gyantswere of these Philissims: and Goliah was of Geth one of the five Cities above named. They had sometimes five Kings, faith Lyranus. They mastered the Ifraelites at seuerall times aboue 150. yeeres, and kept them Tributaries , till they were weakened by Sampson and Samuel , but in the end this yoke was taken off by David, and laid on themselves. It is objected, that because these Cities and the Countries adjoyning, were held by the sonnes of Mizraim, therefore did the ifractites dispossesses the sonnes of Mizraim, and not of Canaan, by forcing those places.

CHAP. 8. S. 15. † . I. of the Historie of the World.

To this faith Pererius, that although the Palastines or Philistims held it in the time of Iosua, yet at the time of the promise it was possest by the Canaanites; as in the second of Deuteronomie. The Heurtes dwelt in the Villages viito Gaza. And what maruaile, if (the Canaanites being the greater part) the denomination were from them ? For that the Philistims were of Caphtor, and so of Mizraim and not of Canaan, 10 besides Moses the Prophet Hieremie witnesseth : The Lord will destroy the Philistims, Hierem. 47.4. theremnant of the iffue of Caphtor : and in like manner in the ninth of Amos, the Philistims are said to bethe reliques of Caphtorim; Have not I brought up I SRAEL out Amosco, v. 7. of the Land of Agypt, and the Philistims from Caphtor, and ARAM from Kir ? 10 I reade this place with divers of the learned. For whereas the Vulgar hath, & Palastinos de Cappadocia, & Syros de Cyrene, this conversion Beroaldus condemneth; where Caphtor is taken for Cappadocia, and Cyrene for Kir. For Cyrene is a Citie direally West from Agypt, betweene Ptolemais or Barce and Apollonia: but Kir in Aha vnder the Allyrians: luneus hath it Kir, and not Cyrene: and so hath the Geneua. But Pererius cals Caphtorin Cappadocia, according to the Vulgar translation, to which 20 heis bound : and yet it is not altogether improbable if he meane Cappadotia in Palestina, and not that Cappadocia by the Sea Pontus in the North of Asia the leffe. For Of which fee whether they inhabited Sethreites, or Cappadocia of Palestina, it is not certainely in the second knowne. And sure in this manner he may expound Cappadocia to be ambiguous, $.3. 1.5. as well as he doth Cyrene: taking it here not for Cyrene in Africa, but for a place in Media. For it is written in the second of Kings, that Teglatphalasser King of the Af- cap. 16, 10,9. Syrians carryed away the Inhabitants of Damascus into Kir: and so Iosephus seemes to understand this Kir, for Cyrene in Media, calling this Cyrene, Media Superior : for it was the manner and policie of the Affirians to transplant the people conquered by them, as they did the Samarians or Ifraelites, and other Nations. And hereof

t. II. Of ARAM, and his Sonnes.

RAM the fift and last Sonne of Shem was the parent of the Syrians: of which A Dama/cus was head. Their name was changed from Aram or Aramites by Sy- Efery 7.2.8. rus (fayth Eusebius out of Iosephus) which Syrus lived before Moses was borne; the Eusebenoe. same which others call the sonne of Apollo. Mesopotamia also being but a Province of Syria had the name of Aram N sharaym, which is as much to say, as Syria duorum to sluviorum, Syria compassed with two Rivers: (to wit) Tigris and Euphrates. The Scriptures call it Mesopotamia, Syria, and Padan Aram: and the Greekes Mesopotamia fimply.

Arise and get thee to Padan Aram (sayth Isaac to Iacob) to the house of BETHVEL Gen. 28.2. See thy mothers father, and thence take thee a wife. Strabo also remembreth it by the ancient Gen. 25.10. Also name of Aram or Aramea, as these his owne words converted witnesse: Quos nos Sy- Deut. 23.4.

nience for vs to vnderstand the word (Aram) here, not for the Nation, but for the name of some one of note; the rather, because in the Historie of Abraham and

Isaac (which was in time long before Kemuels Posteritie could bee famous) wee find

Mesopotamia called Aram; and that with an addition: sometimes with Naharaijm, and sometimes of Padan, to distinguish it from another Aram, which (as it seemes)

then also was called Aram. For whereas Iunius thinkes in his note vpon Genel, 25.20.

that Padan Aram ought to bee restrained to some part of Mesopotamia, (to wit) to that part which Ptolomie cals Ancobarity (so called from the River Chaboras, which N charaim (which latter appellation qhestionlesse comprehends the whole Mesopotamia) may seeme to refute this opinion: especially seeing the signification of this appellation agreeth with the whole Region. For it signifieth as much as the yoke of Syria, which name agrees with this Region: because the two Rivers, (as it were) yoked together goe along it. The Reliques of the name Padan appeare in the name of two Cities in Ptolomie, called Aphadana: (as Iunius hath well noted) the one vpon Prol. A. i.e. tab. 5. cording to Ptolemie) in Daniel, Vlai: and seated in the border of Sussanz. Afbur (as most Historians beleeve) the second sonne of Sem, was Father of the Assyrians, who disdayning the pride of Nimrod, parted from Babel, and built Ninue, 20 of equall beautie and magnitude with Babylon, or exceeding it. But we shall in due place disproue that opinion. Euery mans hand hath beene in this Storie, and therefore I shall not neede herein to speake much: for the Affirians so often inuaded and spoyled the Israelites, destroyed their Cities, and led them Captines, as both in Divine and Humane letters there is large and often mention of this Nation.

But how soeuer Herodotus and D Siculus extend this Empire, and honor this Nation with ample Dominion; yet was not the state of the Assyrians of any such power, after such time as Sardanapalus lost the Empire. For Senacherib who was one of the powerfullest Princes among them, had yet the Mountayne Taurus for the vtmost of his Dominion toward the North-east, and Syria bounded him toward the West, 20 notwithstanding those vaunts of Senacherib in Esay the 37. Haue the gods of the Nations delivered them whom my Fathers have destroyed? as Gozan, and HARAN, and RESEPH, and the Children of EDEN which were at Telaffar. Where is the King of Hamath, and the King of Arphad, and the King of the Citie Sepharuaim, Hens and Inah? All these were indeede but pettie Kings of Cities, and small Countries; as Haran in Mesopotamia : Resephin Palmyrena : Hamath or Emath in Ituraa, vnder Libanus : the Ile of Eden: Sepher, and others of this fort. Yea, Nabuchodonofor, who was most powerfull, before the conquest of Agypt had but Chaldea, Mesopotamia, and Syria, with Palestina and Phanicia parts thereof. But in this question of Assur, I will speake my opinion freely when I come to Nimred, whose plantation I have omitted among 40 the rest of the Chusties, because he established the first Empire: from whom the most memorable storie of the World taketh beginning.

Of Arphaxad came the Chaldeans, faith S. Hierome, and Iosephus, but it must be those Chaldeans about Vr: for the sonnes of Cham possest the rest. It is true that he was the Father of the Hebrewes : for Arphaxad begat Shela; and Shela, Heber; of

And that Lud, the fourth Sonne of Shem, gaue name to the Lydians in Asia the whom hereafter. lesse, is the common opinion, taken from Iosephus and S. Hierome; but I see not by what reason he was moued to straggle thither from his friends. 50

-Vz or Hus. The Sonnes of Aram were, Sether, and Chaboras, the other vpon Euphrates.

Vz or Husinhabited about Damaseus, and built that Citie, saith Iosephus and Saint Hierome. But Toffatus mistaking this opinion, both in them and in Lyra, who also Hieron in Irad. followeth Iofephus, affirmeth that Abrahams Steward Eliezer was the Founder there- Hebraic, of; though it were likely that Hus the eldest sonne of Aram dwelt neere vnto his father, who inhabited the bodie of Syria. For Hus was a Region of the same, adioyning to Arabia the Defart, and to Batanea or Traconitis: whereof the Prophet Hieremie: 50 Reioyce and be glad O Daughter of Edom that dwellest in the Land of Hus. Hus therefore Hierem Lames, is seated beyond Iordan, in the East Region of Traconitis, adioyning to Basan, having cap A. ver. 11. Batanea Gaulonitis, and the Mountaine Seir to the East, Edrai to the South, Damascus North, and Iordan West: having in it many Cities and people, as may also bee gathered out of HIEREMY: And all forts of people: and all the Kings of the Land of Hus. c.25.0.20.

Vosf. II.

In this Region dwelt 10b, descended of Hus, the sonne of Nabor, the brother of Abraham (fayth Saint Hierome) and married Dina the Daughter of Iacob, fayth Philo.

Hul the second sonne of Aram, Saint Hierome makes the Father of the Armenians ! and Gether the third some, parent to the Arcananians or Carians: which opinion, (because I find not where to set him) I doe not disprooue, though I see no reason why Gether should leaue the fellowship of his owne brethren, and dwell among Strangers in Mathelesse. Innius gives Hul (whom hee writes Chul) the Desart of Palmyrena, as farre as Euphrates, where Ptolomie setteth the Citie of Cholle.

Gether (fayth lofephus) founded the Bactrians : but lofephus gaue all Noaks children feathers, to carrie them farre away in all hafte. For mine owne opinion I alwayes 10 keepe the rule of Neighbour-hood, and thinke with Innius: (to wit) That Gether feated himselse neere his brothers, in the bodie of Syria, and in the Province of Casfiotis, and Seleucis, where Ptolomie placeth Gindarus, and the Nation by Plinie called Iunius also giuethto Mes or Mesch the North part of Syria, betweene Cilicia and Mesopotamia, neere the Mountaine Masius. The certaintie of those Plantations can no otherwise be knowne then by this probabilitie, that Aram the father (of whom that great Region tooke name) planted his sonnes in the same Land about him : for hee wanted no scope of Territorie for himselse and them; neyther then when the World was newly planted, nor in many hundred yeeres after: and therefore there is 20 no reason to cast them in the Desart parts of the World, so farre asunder. And as necessitie and policie held them together for a while: so Ambition (which began together with Angels and Men) inhabiting the hearts of their children, (et them afunder. For although these sonnes of Aram, and the sonnes of the rest of Noshs children, kept them elues within the bounds of some one large Kingdome; yet therein euery one also sought a Prouince apart, and to themselues; giuing to the Cities therein built their owne names, thereby to leave their memorie to their Postericie: the vse of Letters being then rare, and knowne to few.

In this fort did the pride of the Spaniards in America cast them into so many Prouinces: euery one emulating and disdayning the greatnesse of other, as they are 30 thereby to this day subject to inuation, expulsion, and destruction : so as ( Nona Hifrania and Peru excepted, because those Countries are vnaccessable to Strangers) an easie force will cast them out of all the rest.

Mes the fourth sonne is made the parent of the Maconians : of whom something hath beene spoken alreadie. Arphaxad the third sonne of Shem, begat Shelah, and Heber. Heber hadtwo fonnes, Phaleg and IoHan: and in Phalegs time was the Earth divided.

t. III.

Of the division of the Earth in the time of PHALEG, one of the sonnes of HEBER, of the iffue of SEM.

THE many people which at the division (at Phaleghs birth) were then living, and the through Plantation of all the East part of the World (at his death) hath made a doubt, whether the Earth were divided at eyther. The Hebrewes (fayth Pererius out of Sedar Holam, one of their Chronicles) affirme that this partition happened at the death of Phaleg: and Phaleg was borne in the yeere after the Floud 101. and liued in all 239. yeeres, which numbers added makes 340. And therefore was it so many yeeres after the Floud, ere the children of Neah seuered themselues. But 50 to this opinion of the Hebrewes, and the doubt they make how in so few yeeres as 101. (the time of Phalegs birth) so many people could bee increased, Pererius gives this answere, that if 70 persons of the Family of Iacob increased to 600000. fighting men in 215. yeeres, (besides women, children, and impotent persons) how much more is it likely, that so soone after the Floud the children of Noah might in a shorter time bring forth many multitudes, having received the bleffing of God. Increase and multiply, and fill the Earth? What strength this answere hath, let others judge: for the children of Israel were 70. and had 215, yeeres time : and the sonnes of Noah were but three, and had but 101. yeeres of time, to the birth of Phalegh.

Others conceive that Phalegh tooke that name after the division, in memorie thereof: as Iosephus and Saint Augustine, who reason in this manner. If the division Iosephil. I. Ant. were at Phaleghs death (which happened in the yeere, which is commonly held to be Aug. de civit. the 48. of Abraham, but was by more likely computation 12. yeeres before his birth) Deilio. G.11. then was the division 38. yeeres after Ninus, who governed 52. yeeres: in the 43. yeere of whose raigne Abraham was borne. But when Ninus began to rule the Assyrians, 80 Perer in Gendi. veeres before this division (as this division is placed by the Hebrewes, Hierome and 15.6.10. Chry (ostome) then was the earth so peopled in all the East and Northerne parts, as greater numbers have not beene found at any time fince. For Ninus affociating to himselfe Ariaus King of Arabia, a people who at that time (sayth DIOD. SICVLVS) plurimum opibus atá, armis prastabant, Exceeded both in riches and bodies of men, subdued many Cities in Armenia; received Barzanis into grace; then invaded Media, and crucified Pharnus the King thereof, with his Wife and seuen Children; vanquished all those Regions betweene Nilus and Tanais, the Agyptians, Phanicians, the 20 Kingdomes of Syria, and all the Nations of Persia, to the Hyrcanian Sea. For the numbers which followed Ninus (alreadie remembred out of Ctesias ) against Zeroafter and others: and Zoroaster on the other side, who made resistance with source hundred thousand, prooue it sufficiently, that if the division had not happened before the death of Phaleg, there had needed no division at that time at all. For some of them were so ill satisfied with their partitions, as they sought to be Masters of all; and greater Armies were there nener gathered then by Ninus and Semiramis: wherefore in this opinion there is little appearance of the truth.

But for that conceit that if the division had beene made at the birth of Phaleg, there were not then sufficient numbers borne to fill the earth: It was neuer meant 20 that the earth could bee filled every where at the instant, but by times and degrees: And furely what soeuer mens opinions have beene herein, yet it is certaine, that the division of tongues and of men must goe neere together with the ceasing of the worke at Babel: and that the enterprize of Babel was left off instantly upon the confufion of Languages, where followed the execution of the division; and so neyther at the birth nor death of Phaleg: for Phaleg was borne in the yeere 101. after the Floud, which was the yeere that Nimrod came into Shinaar, or 10. yeeres after hee arrived,

Now if it bee objected that Phaleg (the Etymologie of whose name signifieth diuision) must have lived without a name, except the name had beene given him at the 40 time of this confusion and partition: to this objection it may be answered, That the change of names vpon diners accidents is not rare in the Scriptures: for Iaceb was called Ifrael after he had wreftled with the Angell; Abraham was first Abram; and Edom Efau; and that Phaleg being a principall man in this division had his first name vpon this accident changed, it is most probable.

And lastly, whereas the Hebrewes, Saint Hierome and Chrysostome account Heber a great Prophet, if that by giving his sonne the name of Phaleg, hee foretold the divifion which followed: to this I say, I doe not find that Heber deserued any such honour, if he had thereupon so called his sonne : for division and dispersion followeth increase of people of necessitie; and this Prophesie (if any such had beene) might ,50 also have reference to the division, which afterwards fell among the Hebrewes them-

But if we give a reasonable time to the building of the Towre and Citie of Babel, by which time many people (by reason and by demonstratiue proose) might bee increased : and that vpon the fall thereof the confusion and division followed (wherevpon Phaleg tooke name) then in this opinion there is nothing either curious or monftrous.

Of OPHIR one of IOCTANS sonnes, and of Peru, and of that voyage of SALOMON.

PHIR also was an Inhabitant of the East India, and (as S. Hierome vnderstands it) in one of the Ilands plentifull of gold, which are now knowne by the name of Molucca. Iosephus vnderstands Ophir to be one of those great head-lands in India. which by a generall name are called Cherfones, or Peninsule: of which there are two 10 very notorious; Callecut, and Malacea. Pererius takes it rightly for an Iland, as Saint Hierome doth, but he sets it at the head-land of Malacca. But Ophir is found among the Moluccas farther East.

Arias Montanus out of the second of Chronicles, the third Chapter and fixt Verse. gathers that Ophir was Peru in America, looking into the West Ocean, commonly cilled Mare del Sur, or the South Sea; by others Mare pacificum. The wordes in the fecond of the Chronicles are these: And be overlayed the house with precious stones for a care a conbeautie; and the gold was gold of Paruaim. IVNIVs takes this gold to be the gold of Hauilah, remembred by Moses in the description of Paradise: And the gold of that Gen 2.11.6 12 Land is good: finding a Towne in Characene a Province of Sustana called Barbatia; Plin. lib. 6. c.28. 20 fo called (as hethinkes) by corruption for Parnaim: from whence those Kings subiected by Dauid brought this gold, with which they presented him; and which Da-uid preserved for the enriching of the Temple.

But this fancie of Peru hath deceived many men, before Montanus, and Plesis, who alfo tooke Ophir for Peru. And that this question may be a subject of no farther difoute; it is very true, that there is no Region in the World of that name: fure I am that at least America hath none, no not any Citie, Village, or Mountayne so called. But when Francis Pilarro first discouered those Lands to the South of Panama, arriuing in that Region which Atabaliba commanded (a Prince of magnificence, Riches and Dominion inferior to none) some of the Spaniards veterly ignorant of that lan-30 guage, demanding by fignes (as they could) the name of the Countrie, and pointing with their hand athwart a River, or Torrent, or Brooke that ranne by, the Indians answered Peru, which was either the name of that Brooke, or of water in generall. The Spaniards thereupon conceiuing that the people had rightly understood them, set it downe in the Diurnall of their enterprise, and so in the first description made, and fent ouer to Charles the Emperor, all that West part of America to the South of Panama had the name of Peru, which hath continued ever fince as divers Spaniards in the Indies affured me; which also Acosta the Iesuite in his naturall and morall Historie of the Indies confirmeth. And whereas Montanus also findeth, that a part of the Indies (called Incat.in) tooke that name of loctan, who as he sup-40 poseth nauigated from the vtmost East of India to America: it is most true, that Iucatan is nothing else in the language of that Countrie, but [What is that] or [What say you?] For when the Spaniards asked the name of that place (no man conceiuing their meaning) one of the Saluages answered Iucatan (which is) What aske you, or what say you? The like hapned touching Paria, a mountaynous Countrie on the South fide of Trinidado and Margarita: for when the Spaniards inquiring (as all men doe) the names of those new Regions which they discouered, pointed to the Hills afarre off, one of the people answered, Paria, which is as much to say; as high Hills or Mountaynes. For at Paria begins that maruailous ledge of Mountaynes, which from thence are continued to the Strait of Magellan: from eight degrees of North lati-50 tude to 52. of South; and so hath that Countrie over fince retayned the name of

The same hapned among the English, which I sent under Sir Richard Greeneuile to inhabite Virginia. For when some of my people asked the name of that Countrie, one of the Saluages answered, Wing and acon, which is as much to say, as, You weare good clothes, or gay clothes. The same hapned to the Spaniard in asking the name of the Iland Trinidado: for a Spaniard demanding the name of that selfe place which the Seaincompassed, they answered, Caeri, which signifieth an Iland. And in this manner haue many places newly discouered beene intituled, of which Peru is one. And therefore we must leaue Ophir among the Moluccas, whereabout such an Iland

Now although there may be found gold in Arabia it selfe (towards Persia) in Hauilab, now Susana, and all alongst that East Indian shore; yet the greatest plentie is taken vp at the Philippines, certayne Ilands planted by the Spaniards, from the West India. And by the length of the passage which Salomons ships made from the Red 10 Sea, (which was three yeeres in going and comming) it seemeth they went to the vttermost East, as the Molucess or Philippines. Indeede these that now goe from Pertugal, or from hence, finish that nauigation in two yeere, and sometimes lesse: and Salomons ships went not aboue a tenth part of this our course from hence. But we must consider, that they euermore kept the coast, and crept by the shores, which made the way exceeding long. For before the vie of the Compasse was knowne, it was impossible to nauigate athwart the Ocean; and therefore Salomons ships could not finde Peru in America. Neither was it needfull for the Spaniards themselues (had it not beene for the plentie of gold in the East India Ilands, farre about the mines of any one place of America) to faile every yeere from the West part of America thi- 20 ther, and there to hauestrongly planted, and inhabited the richest of those Hands: wherein they have built a Citie called Manilia. Salomon therefore needed not to haue gone farther off then Ophir in the East, to haue sped worse: neither could he nauigate from the East to the West in those dayes, whereas he had no coast to have

Tostatus also gathereth a fantasticall opinion out of Rabanus, who makes Ophir to be a Countrie, whose Mountaynes of gold are kept by Griffins: which Mountaynes Solinus affirmeth to be in Scythia Asiatica, in these wordes : Mam cum auro & gemmu affluant, Griphes tenent universa, alites ferocissima, Arimaspi cum his dimicant, &c. For whereas thefe Countries abound in gold, and rich stone, the Griffins defend the one and the 30 other : a kinde of Fowle the siercest of all other ; with which Griffins a Nation of people called Arimaspi make warre. These Arimaspi are said to have been men with one eye only, like vnto the Cyclopes of Sicilia: of which Cyclopes , Herodosus and Ariftens make men-Flaceus, lib.6. tion: and so doth Lucan in his third Booke: and Valerius Flaceus: and D. Sieulus in the Diod.Sicul.1.16. ftorie of Alexander Macedon. But (for mine owne opinion) I beleeue none of them. And for these Arimashi, I take it that this name signifying One-eyed, was first given them by reason that they yied to weare a vizzard of desence, with one fight in the middle to serue both eyes; and not that they had by nature any such defect. But Solinus borroweth these things out of Plinie, who speakes of such a Nation in the extreme North, at a place called Gifolitren, or the Cauc of the Northeast winde. For 49 the rest, as all fables were commonly grounded vpon some true stories or other things done: so might these tales of the Griffins receive this Morall. That if those men which fight against so many dangerous passages for gold, or other riches of this World, had their perfect senses, and were not depriued of halfe their eye-sight (at least of the eye of right reason and vnderstanding) they would content themselues with a quiet and moderate estate; and not subject themselues to famine, corrupt aire, violent heate, and cold, and to all forts of miserable diseases. And though this fable be fayned in this place, yet if such a tale were told of some other places of the World, where wild Beafts or Serpents defend Mountaines of gold, it might be auowed. For there are in many places of the world, especially in America, many high and 50 impassable Mountaynes which are very rich and full of gold, inhabited only with Tygres, Lyons, and other rauenous and cruell beafts: into which if any man ascend (except his strength be very great) he shall be sure to finde the same warre, which the Arimaspi make against the Griffins: not that the one or other had any sense of gold, or feeke to defend that metall, but being disquieted, or made assaide of themfelues or their yong-ones, they grow inraged and aduenturous. In like fort it may be said that the Alegarios, (which the Agyptians call the Crocadyles) defend those Pearles which lye in the Lakes of the Inland: for many times the poore Indians are eaten vp by them, when they dive for the pearle. And though the elegartos know not the pearle, yet they finde sauour in the flesh and bloud of the Indians, whom they deuoure.

Of HAVILAH the sonne of IOCTAN, who also passed into the East Indies: and of MESHA and SEPHER named in the bordering of the Families of IOCTAN: with a Conclusion of this discourse touching the plantation of the World.

OF Havilah the some of 10Han, there is nothing else to be said, but that the general opinion is that he also inhalication that it is a limit of the said. nerall opinion is, that he also inhabited in the East India in the Continent, from which Ophir past into the Ilands adioyning. And whereas Ganges is said to water Hauilah, it is meant by Hauilah in the East India, which tooke name of Hauilah the 20 sonne of loctan: but Hauilab, which Pifon compasseth, was so called of Hauilab, the fonne of Chulb, as is formerly proued by this place of Scripture : SAVL smote the 1. Sam. 15.71 Amalekites from Hauilah, as thou commest to Shur, which is before Agopt. But that Saul euer made Warrein the East India, no man hath suspected. For an end we may conclude, that of the thirteene sonnes of lottan, these three, Saba, Hauilah, and Ophir; though at the first seated by their brethren about the hill Massus or Melh, GEN. 10.20 (to wit) betweene Cilicia and Melopotamia; yet at length either themselues or their issues removed into East India, leaving the other Families of Icotan, to fill the Countries of their first plantation, which the Scripture defines to have beene from Mes vnto Sephar. And although S. Hierome take Mest to be a Region of the East 30 India, and Sephar a Mountaine of the same (which Mountaine, Montanus would have to be the Andes in America) those fancies are farre beyond my vnderstanding. For the word (Esft) in the Scriptures, where it hath reference to Indea, is neuer farther extended then into Persia. But Mesch is that part of the Mountaynes of Masius in the North of Mesopotamia, out of which the River Chabor as springeth which runneth by Charran: and in the same Region we also finde for Sephar ( remembred by Moses) Sipphara by Psolemie, standing to the East of the Mountaynes Masins; from whence lottan having many sonnes, some of them might passe into India, hearing of the beautie and riches thereof. But this was in processe of time.

The other falhion of planting I vnderstand not, being grounded but vpon mens 40 imaginations, contrarieto reason and possibilitie. And that this Mountayne in the East was no farther off then in those Regions before remembred, it appeareth by many places of the Scripture where the same phrase is vsed : as in Numbers 23. BA- Vers. 7. LAC the King of Moab hath brought me from Aram, out of the Mountayne of the East; which was from the East part of Mejopotamia For Balac brought Balaam out of Me-Sopotamia, (witnesse this place of DEVTERONOMIE:) Because they byred BALAAM Capazz versal the some of BEOR, of Pethor in Aram Naharaijm, to curse thee: for Aram Naharaijm was Syria fluuiorum, which is Mesopotamia, as aforesaid.

This plantation of the World after the floud doth best agree (as to me it seemes) with all the places of Scripture compared together. And these be the reports of 50 Reason and probable coniecture; the Guides which I have followed herein, and which I have chosen to goe after, making no valuation of the opinions of men, conducted by their owne fancies, be they ancient or moderne. Neither have I any end herein, private, or publike, other then the discoverie of truth. For as the partialitie of man to himselfe hath disguised all things : so the factious and hireling Historians of all Ages (especially of these latter times) have by their many Volumes of vntrue reports left Honor without a Monument, and Vertue without Memorie: and (in stead thereof) have erected Statues and Trophies to those, whom the darkest forgetfulnesse ought to have buryed, and covered over for evermore. And although the length and diffoluing Nature of Time, hath worne out or changed the Names and memorie of the Worlds first planters after the floud (I meane the greatest number and most part of them ) yet all the foot-steps of Antiquitie (as appeares by that which hath beene spoken) are not quite worne out nor ouer-growne: for Babylon hath to this day the found of Babel; Phanicia hath Zidon, to which Citie the eldest Sonne of Canaan gaue name; fo hath Cilicia Tharsis; and the Armenians, Medes, 10 Hiberians, Cappadocians, Phrygians, the Syrians, Idumaans, Libyans, Moores, and other Nations, have preserved from the death of forgetfulnesse some signes of their first Founders and true Parents.

CHAP. IX.

Of the beginning and establishing of Gouernement.

Of the proceeding from the first Government under the eldest of Families to Regall, and from Regall absolute, to Regall tempered with Lawes.

T followeth now to entreate how the World beganne to receive Rule and Gouernement, which (while it had scarcitie of People) vnder-went no other Dominion then Paternitie and Eldership. For the Fathers of Nations were then as Kings, and the eldest of Families as Princes. Hereof it came, that the word(Elder) was alwayes vsed both for the Magistrate, & for those of Age and Gravitie: the same bearing one signification almost in all languages. For in the eleventh of Numbers God commanded Moles to gather together 40 70. of the Elders of the people, and Gouernors ouer them : the Hebrew bearing the same sense, which the Latine word Senes or Seniores doth. So it is written in Svs ANNA, Then the Affembly believed them as those that were the Elders and Judges of the People. And so in the words of those false Judges and witneffes to DANIEL, Shew it unto us, seeing God hath given thee the office of an Elder. De-MOSTHENES vseth the same word for the Magistrate among the Gracians. Cisero in Cato giueth two other reasons for this appellation : Apud Lacedamonios qui amplissmum Magistratum gerunt, vt (unt, sie etiam appellantur Senes; Among the Lacedamonians the chiefe Magistrates, as they are, fo are they called Eldermen : and againe , Ratio & prudentia nist essent in senibus, non summum Concilium Maiores nostri appellassent Sena- 50 tum: If reason and admisement were not in old men, our Ancesters had never called the highest Councell by the name of a Senate. But though these reasons may well be given, vet we doubt not but in this name of (Elders) for Gouernours or Counsailers of State, there is a figne that the first Gouernors were the Fathers of Families; and vnder them the eldest Sonnes. And from thence did the French, Italian, and Spaniard take the word (Signor) and out of it (Seignourie) for Lordship and Dominion: signifying (according to Loysean) puissance in proprietie, or proper power. The kinds of this Seignourie, Seneca makes two: the one, Potestas aut imperium; Power or command: the other, Proprietas aut dominium, Proprietie or Mastership: the correlatiue of the one is the subject, of the other the slaue. Ad Cafarem (saith he) potestia omnium pertinet, ad fingulos proprietas; Cefar hath power ouer all; and enery man proprietie in his owne: and againe, Cafar omnia imperio possidet, singula dominio; Casar holdeth all in his tower. and every man possesseth his owne. But as men and vice beganne abundantly to increase: 10 fo obedience, (the fruit of naturall reuerence, which but from excellent feede feldome ripeneth) being exceedingly ouershadowed with pride, and illexamples vtrerly withered and fell away. And the foft weapons of paternall perswalions (after mankinde beganne to neglect and forget the originall and first giver of life) became in all ouer-weake, either to relist the first inclination of enill, or after when it became habituall) to constraine it. So that now, when the hearts of men were onely guided and steered by their owne fancies, and tost to and fro on the tempestuous Seas of the world, while wisedome was seuered from power, and strength from charitie: Necessitie (which bindeth euery nature but the immortall) made both the Necessitases sir-Wife and Foolish understand at once, that the estate of reasonable men would be-20 come farre more miserable then that of beasts, and that a generall floud of confusion & immutabilis would a second time overflow them, did they not by a generall obedience to order tellas. and dominion preuent it. For the Mightie, who trufted in their owne friengths, found others againe (by interchange of times) more mightiethen themselues: the feeble fell vnderthe forcible; and the equall from equall received equall harmes. In 60 much that licentious disorder (which seemed to promise a libertie vpon the first acquaintance) proued vpon a better tryall, no lesse perilous then an vnindurable bondage.

i hefe Arguments by Necessitie propounded, and by Reason maintained and confirmed perswaded all Nations which the Heauens couer, to subject themselues 30to a Master, and to Magistracie in some degree. Vnder which Gouernment, as the change (which brought with it leffe euill, then the former mischiefes) was generally pleating: fo time (making all men wisethat observeit) found some imperfection and corrosiue in this cure. And therefore the same Necessitie which invented, and the same Reason which approved soueraigne power, bethought it selfe of certaine equal rules, in which Dominion (in the beginning boundlesse) might also discerne her owne limits. For before the invention of Lawes, private affections in supreme Rulers made their owne fancies both their Treasurers and Hangmen: measuring by this yard, and waighing in this ballance both good and euill.

For as wisedome in Eldership preceded the rule of Kings; so the will of Kings 40 fore went the inventions of Lawes. Populus nullu legibus tenebatur: arbitria principum pro legibus erant; The people were not gouerned by any other lawes then the willes of Princes: He ereof it followed, that when Kings left to bee good, neither did those mens vertues value them which were not, fancied by their Kings, northose mens vices deformethem that were. Amor interdum nimis videt, interdum nihil videt, Love fees one while too much, another while starke nothing. Hence it came to passe, that after a few yeeres (for direction and restraint of Royall power) Lawes were established: and that gouernment which had this mixture of equalitie (holding in an. euen ballance supreme power and common right) acquired the title of Regall: the other (which had it not) was knowne for Tyrannicall: the one God established in 50 fauour of his people: the other he permitted for their affliction.

In the infancie of this Regall authoritie, Princes as they were chosen for their vertues only so did they measure their powers by a great deale of moderation. And therefore (faith Fabius Pictor) Principes, quia infli erant, & religionibus dediti, iure habits De aures fainte Dy & dieti; Princes, because they were inst and religious, were rightly accounted and called part. 1.

And though (speaking humanely) the beginning of Empire may be ascribed to

mindes of men, whereby they faw that they could not line and be preserved with-against me, except it were given thee from aboue.

It was therefore by a threefold Iustice that the world hath beene gouerned from the beginning, (to wit) by a Justice naturall: by which the Parents and Elders of families gouerned their Children, and Nephewes, and Families, in which gouernment the Obedience was called naturall Pietie: Againe, by a Iustice divine, drawne from the Lawes and Ordinances of God: and the Obedience hereunto was called Conscience: And lastly, by a Justice civill, begotten by both the former: and the Obedience to this we call Dutie. That by these three those of the eldest times were commanded: and that the rule in generall was Paternall, it is most evident: for Adam 20 being Lord ouer his owne Children, instructed them in the service of God his Creator; as we reade, Cain and Abel brought Oblations before God, as they had beene taught by their Parent, the Father of mankinde.

δ. II.

Of the three commendable sorts of Gouernement with their opposites: and of the degrees of humane jocietie.

Hat other Policie was exercifed, or State founded after fuch time as 30 mankinde was greatly multiplyed before the floud, it cannot be certainly knowne, though it seeme by probable coniecture, that the same was not without Kings in that first age: it being possible that many Princes of the Egyptians (remembred among their antiquities) were before the generall floud; and very likely, that the cruell Oppressions in that Age proceeded from some tyrannie in Gouernement, or from some rougher forme of Rule, then the Paternall.

Berofus ascribeth the rule of the World in those dayes to the Gyants of Libanus, who mastred (saith he) all Nations from the Sunne-rising to the Sunne-set. But in the second Age of the World, and after such time as the rule of Eldership fayled, 40 three seuerall sorts of Gouernement were in seuerall times established among men, according to the divers natures of Places and People.

The first, the most ancient, most generall, and most approued, was the Gouernement of one, ruling by just Lawes, called Monarchie: to which Tyrannie is opposed, being also a sole and absolute Rule, exercised according to the will of the Commander, without respect or observation of the Lawes of God, or Men. For a lawfull Prince or Magistrate (saith Aristotle) is the Keeper of Right and Equitie: and of this condition ought enery Magistrate to be, according to the rule of Gods word: Iudges and Officers shalt thou make thee in thy Cities: And these shall indge the people with righteous indgement.

The second Gouernement is of divers principall Persons established by order, andruling by Lawes, called Aristocracie, or Optimatum potestas; to which Oligarchia (or the particular faction and vsurpation of a few great-ones) is opposed: as the Decemviri, or Triumviri, and the like.

The third is a State popular, (or Gouernment of the people) called Democratia, to which is opposed Ochlocratia, or the turbulent vniust ruling of the confused multitude, seditiously swaying the State, contrarie to their owne Lawes and Ordinances. These three kinds of Gouernment are briefly exprest by Tholosanus; Vnius, paucorum, or multorum, Of one, of few, of many.

Now as touching the beginning and order of policie since the second increase of Mankind, the same grew in this sort: First of all, every Father, or eldest of the Family, gaue Lawes to his owne issues, and to the people from him and them increased. These as they were multiplyed into many Housholds (man by nature louing socie-10 rie) iovned their Cottages together in one common Field or Village, which the Latines call Vicus; of the Greeke ones, which fignifieth a House, or of the word (Via) because it hath divers wayes and paths leading to it. And as the first House grew into a Village, so the Village into that which is called Pagus, (being a societie of divers Villages) so called of the Greeke m'y, which signifieth a Fountaine : because many people (having their habitations not farre afunder) dranke of one Spring or Streame of water. To this word the English Hundreds, or (as somethinke) Shires answereth not vnfitly.

But as men and impietie beganne to gather strength, and as emulation and pride hetweene the Races of the one and the other daily increased: so both to defend 20 themselves from outrage, and to preserve such goods as they had gathered, they beganne to loyne and set together divers of their Villages, invironing them first with bankes and ditches, and afterwards with wals: which being so compassed were then called Oppida; eyther ab opponendo se hostibus, Because wals were opposed against Enemies, or ab epibus, because thither they gathered their riches for safetie and defence; as also they were called Vrbes, ab orbe; because when they were to build a Citie, they made a Circle with a Plough (fayth Varro) therewith measuring and compassing the ground which they went to inclose or fortifie. And although Vrbs and Cinitas bee often confounded, yet the difference was anciently in this, that Vrbs fignified no other then the very wals and buildings, and Civitas was taken for the Citizens, inha-30 biting therein: so called of Ciuis; and that, ab eo quod multitudo coinit, of comming together. But all inhabitants within these wals are not properly Citizens, but only such as are called Free-men: who bearing proportionably the charge of the Citie may by turnes become Officers and Magistrates thereof: the rest goe vnder the name of Subjects, though Citizens by the same generall name of Subjects are also knownes For enery Citizen is also a subject, but not enery Subject a Citizen: perhaps also some Citizen (as the chiefe Magistrate, if hee bee to bee termed one of the Citizens) is no subject; but of this wee need not stand to inquire. The word (Magistrate) is taken à Magistro, from a Master, and the word (Master) from the Aduerbe Magis (as also Magisteria, Precepts of Art) or else from the Greeke word (Megistos:) and 40 so the Greekes call them Megistanes, whom the Latines call Magnates, or Magi-

The office and dutie of every Magistrate Aristotle hath written in few wordes. Ethic 50 A Magistrate or Prince (sayth hee) is the keeper of right and equitie; but the same is bestraught by Saint Paul, who expresseth both the cause efficient, and finall, (that is) by whom Magistrates and Princes are ordained, together with their duties and offices. A Magistrate is the Minister of God for thy wealth; but if thou doe enill, feare: for Rom.13.4. he beareth not the fword for nought. For hee is the Minister of God, to take vengeance on him that doth ewill. He also teacheth in the same place; That every soule ought to bee Subject to the higher powers, because they are by God ordained; and that who soever resisteth 50 that power, refifteth God, the giver and fountaine thereof: and shall not only be therefore subject to the judgement and condemnation of Man, but of God: For yee must 7bid, v. 5: be subject (saith he) not because of wrath only, but also for conscience sake.

The examples are not to be numbred of Gods punishments upon those that have refisted Authoritie, by God ordained and established. Neyther ought any subject therefore therefore to relift the power of Kings, because they may be taxed with iniustice or crueltie: for it pleaseth God sometimes to punish his people by a tyrannous hand : and the Commandement of obedience is without distinction. The Prophets and Christ himselfe subiected themselues to the power of Magistracie. Christ commanded that all due to Cafar should be given vnto him: and he payed Tribute for him-Hieremag.v.g. felfeand Peter. Hieremie commanded the Ifraelites (euen those that were Captiues vnder Heathen Kings) to pray for them, and for the peace of Babylon. So Abraham prayed for Abimelech; and Iacob bleffed the King of Agypt: And it is acceptable in the fight of our Sautour (fayth PAVL) that yee make Supplications and Prayers for Kings, and for all that are in authoritie: and if for fuch Kings as were Idolatrous, much more for to Christian Kings and Magistrates. And so much did Saint Chrysostome in his Homily to the people preferre Monarchicall Gouernment, as hee rather commended the rule of Kings (though Tyrants) then that they should be wanting: Prastat Regentyrannum habere, quam nullum; Better atyrannous King, then no King: to which also Tacitus Subscribeth: Prastat (fayth Tacitus in the first of his Historie) Jub malo Principe effe quam nullo; It is better to have a bad Prince then none at all. And bee they good Kings (which is generally presupposed) then is there no libertie more safe, then to serue them: Neg enim libertas tutior ulla est (fayth CLAVDIAN) quam Domino servire bono : No libertie (fayth hee) more safe for ws then to be seruants to the vertuous. And certainly how soeuer it may be disputed, yet is it safer to live vnder one Tyrant, then vn-20 der 100000. Tyrants: vnder a wise man that is cruell, then vnder the foolish and barbarous crueltie of the multitude. For as Agestlaus answered a Citizen of Sparts that defired an alteration of the Gouernment, That kind of rule which a man would disdaine in his owne house, were very vnfit to gouerne great Regions by.

Lastly, as many Fathers crected many Cottages for their many children: and as (for the reason before remembred) many Housholds iouned themselues together, and made Villages; many Villages made Cities: fo when these Cities and Citizens ioyned together, and established Lawes by consent, associating themselues under one Gouernour and Gouernment, they so ioyned were called a Commonwealth: the fame being sometimes gouerned by Kings; sometimes by Magistrates; sometimes 30 by the people themselues.

ð. III.

Of the good Government of the first Kings.

Ow this first Age after the Floud, and after such time as the people were increased, and the Families became strong and dispersed into senerall parts of the World, was by ancient Historians called Golden: Ambition and Couctous fulfe being as then but greene, and newly 40 growne vp, the seeds and effects wherof were as yet but potential, and in the blowth and bud. For while the Law of Nature was the rule of mans life, they then fought for no larger Territorie then themselves could compasse and manure: they erected no other magnificent buildings, then sufficient to desend them from cold and tempest: they cared for no other delicacie of fare, or curiositie of dyet, then to maintaine life: nor for any other apparell then to couer them from the cold, the

And fureif wee vnderstand by that Age (which was called Golden) the ancient fimplicitie of our Fore-fathers, this name may then truely be cast upon thoseelder times: but if it be taken otherwise, then, whether the same may bee attributed more 50 to any one time then to another, (I meane to one limited time and none else) it may bee doubted. For good and Golden Kings make good and Golden Ages: and all times haue brought forth of both forts. And as the infancie of Empirie, (when Princes played their Prizes, and did then only woo mento obedience) might bee called the Golden Age: so may the beginning of all Princes times bee truely called Golden. For be it that men affect honour, it is then best purchased; or if honour affest men, it is then that good deservings have commonly the least impediments: and if euer Liberalitie ouerflow her bankes and bounds, the same is then best warranted both by policie and example. But Age and Time doe not only harden and shrinke the openest and most louisl hearts, but the experience which it bringeth with it, layeth Princes torne estates before their eyes, and (withall) perswadeth them to compassionate themselues. And although there bee no Kings under the Sunne whose meanes are answerable vnto other mens desires; yet such as value all things by 10 their owne respects, doe no sooner find their appetites vnanswered, but they complaine of alteration, and account the times iniurious and yron. And as this falleth out in the Raigne of every King, so doth it in the life of every man, if his dayes be many: for our yonger yeeres are our Golden Age; which being eaten vp by time, we praise those scasons which our youth accompanied : and (indeed) the grieuous alterations in our selues, and the paines and diseases which never part from vs but at the grave, make the times seeme so differing and displeasing: especially the qualitie of mans nature being also such, as it adoreth and extolleth the passages of the former. and condemneth the present state how iust soeuer: Fit humane malignitatis vitio, vt Tacis. in Dial.de Semper veterain lande, presentiain fastidio sint; It comes to passe (sayth TACITVS) by the Orat. 20 vice of our malignitie, that we alwayes extoll the time past, and hold the present fastidious: For it is one of the errours of wayward Age : Quod fint landatores temporis acti; That they are prayfers of fore-paffed times, forgetting this aduice of SALOMON: Say not then, Eccles, Why is it that the former dayes were better then these? for thou dost not inquire wisely of this thing : to which purpose SENECA; Maiores nostri questi sunt, & nos querimur, posteri querentur, euersos esse mores, regnare nequitiam, in deterius res hominum & in omne nefas labi : Our Ancesters have complained, wee doe complaine, our children will complaine, that good manners are gone, that wickednesse dothraigne, and all things grow worse and worse, and fall into all euill. These are the viuall discourses of Age and missortune. But hereof what can we adde to this of ARNOBIVS? Nouares quandog, vetus fict, & vetus tem-30 poribus quibus capit noua fuit or repentina: What soener is new, in time shall be made old: and the ancientest things when they tooke beginning were also new and sodaine. Wherefore not to stand in much admiration of these first times, which the discontentments of prefent times have made Golden, this wee may fet downe for certaine, That as it was the vertue of the first Kings, which (after God) gave them Crownes: so the love of their people thereby purchased, held the same Crownes on their heads. And as God gauethe obedience of Subjects to Princes: fo (relatively) hee gaue the care and inflice of Kings to the Subjects; having respect, not only to the Kings themselves. but euen to the meanest of his Creatures: Nunquam particulari bono seruit omne bo-

d. IIII.

Of the beginning of Nobilitie: and of the vaine vaunt thereof without vertue.

No with this Supreme Rule and Kingly authoritie beganne also other degrees and differences among Subjects. For Princes made election of others by the same Rule, by which themselves were chosen; vnto whom they gaue place, trust, and power. From which imployments and Offices forung those Titles, and those degrees of Honour, which to

Verus nobilis no haue continued from Age to Age to these dayes. But this Nobilitie, or difference from the Vulgar, was not in the beginning given to the Succession of Bloud, but to Succession of Vertue, as hereafter may bee prooued. Though at length it was sufficient for those whose Parents were aduanced, to bee knowne for the Sonnes of such Fathers: and so there needed then no endeuour of well-doing at all, or any contenrion for them to excell, you whom glorie or worldly Nobilitie necessarily descended. Yet hereof had Nobilitie denomination in the beginning, That fuch as excelled others in vertue, were so called: Hinc dictus N obilis, quasi virtute pra alus notabilis. But after such time as the deserved Honour of the Father was given in reward to his Posteritie, Saint Hierome judged of the Succession in this manner : Wibil 4-20 lind video in N obilitate appetendum, nisi quod Nobiles quadam necessitate constringantur, ne ab antiquorum probitate degenerent; I fee no other thing to bee affected in N obilitie. then that Noblemen are by a kind of necessitie bound, not to degenerate from the vertue of their Ancesters. For if Nobilitie be Virtus & antique divitie; Vertue and ancient riches, then to exceed in all those things which are extra hominem, as riches, power, glorie, and the like, doe no otherwise define Nobilitie, then the word (animal) alone doth define a reasonable man. Or if honour (according to L. Viues) bee a witnesse of vertue and well-doing: and Nobilitie (after Plutarch) the continuance of vertue in a Race or Linage: then are those in whom Vertue is extinguished, but like vnto painted and printed Papers, which ignorant men worship in stead of Christ, our 20 Ladie, and other Saints: men, in whom there remaine but the dregges and vices of ancient Vertue: Flowers, and Herbes, which by change of soile and want of manuring are turned to Weeds. For what is found prayle-worthy in those waters, which had their beginning out of pure Fountaines, if in all the rest of their course they runne foule, filthie, and defiled? Ex terra fertili producitur aliquando Cicata venenosa, Gex terra sterili pretiosum aurum; Out of fruitfull ground ariseth sometimes poysoning Henbane: and out of barren soile precious Gold. For as all things consist of matter and forme, so doth Charron (in his Chapter of Nobilitie) call the Race and Linage but the matter of Nobilitie: the forme (which gives life and perfect being ) he maketh to be Vertue, and Qualitie, profitable to the Commonweale. For he is truly and entire-40 ly Noble, who maketh a fingular profession of publike Vertue, seruing his Prince and Countrie, and being descended of Parents and Ancesters that have done the like. And although that Nobilitie, which the same Authour calleth personall, (the same which our selues acquire by our Vertue and well deseruings) cannot bee ballanced with that which is both naturall by Descent, and also personall; yet if Vertue bee wanting to the naturall, then is the personall and acquired Nobilitie by many degrees to be preferred: For (fayth this Charron) this Honour (to wit) by Descent, may light yoon fuch a one, as in his owne nature is a true Villaine. There is also a third Nobilitie which hee calleth Nobilitie in Parchment, bought with Siluer or fauour: and these bee indeed but Honours of affection, which Kings with the change of 50 their fancies wish they knew well how to wipe off againe. But surely, if wee had as much sense of our degenerating in worthinesse, as we have of vanitie in deriving our felues of such and such Parents, wee should rather know such Nobilitie (without Vertue) to bee shame and dishonour, then Noblenesse, and glorie to vaunt thereof.

What calamitie is wanting (layth BBRNARD) to him that is borne in sinne, of a Potsbare Bernards, and bodie and barren minde? for (according to the same Father:) Dele fucum fugacis hone- consider ad Enris haises, @ male coronata nitorem glorea, &c. Wipe away the painting of this fleeting ho- gen. Pap. nour, and the glittering of the ill-crowned glorie, that then thou maielt consider thy felfe makedly: for then camest naked out of thy Mothers wombe. Camest thou thence with the Offer ractor glissening with Iewels, or garnished with Silkes, or adorned with Peathers, or sinssed with Golde If thou scatter and blow away all these by thy consideration as certaine morning cloudes, which doe or will soone passe ouer, thou shalt meet with a naked, and poore, and wretched, and miferable man, and blushing, because he is naked, and weeping because hee is borne.

and repining because he is borne to labour, and not to honour. For as touching the matter of all men, there is no difference betweene it and dust:

which if thou doest not beleene ( faith Saint CHRYSOSTOME ) looke into the Sepulchres Corysostomitas de incomposita and Monuments of thy Ancesters, and they shall easily personade thee by their owne example, Deinatura. that thou art dust and dirt: fo that if man seeme more Noble and beautifull then dust, this cons. proceedeth not from the diversitie of his Nature, but from the cunning of his Creatour.

For true Nobilitie standeth in the Trade Of vertuous life; not in the fleshly Line: For bloud is brute, but Gentrie is Dinine.

Phaer.

And how foeuer the custome of the World have made it good, that Honours be cast by birth voon vnworthy Issues : yet Salomon (as wife as any King) reprehendeth the same in his Fellow-Princes: There is an enill (sayth hee) that I have seene under the Sun, Eccleston as an errour that proceedeth from the face of him that ruleth. Folly is fet in great excellencie.

CHAP. X.

Of NIMROD, BELVS, and NINVS: and of memorable things about those times.

ð. Í.

That NIME OD was the first after the Floud that raignedlike Soueraigne Lord: and that his beginning feemeth to have beene of just authoritie.

H E first of all that raigned as Soueraigne Lord after the Floud was Nimred, the Sonne of Culb, distinguished by Moses from the rest (according to Saint Augustine) in one of these two respects: eyther for his eminencie, and because hee was the first of fame, and that tooke on him to command others: or else in that hee was begotten by Chush, after his other children were also become Fathers; and of a later time then some of his Grand-children and Nephewes. Howfoeuer, feeing Moles in expresse wordes calleth Nimrod the Sonne of Chush, other mens coniectures to the contrarie ought to have no respect. This Empirie of Nimrod, both the Fathers and many later Writers call tyrannicall: the same beginning in Babel, (which is) confusion.

of the Historie of the World.

But it seemeth to mee that Melanchton conceived not amisse hereof: the same expofition being also made by the Authour of that worke called Onomasticum Theologicum, who affirmes that Nimrod was therefore called Amarus Dominator, A bitter or seuere Gouernour, because his forme of rule seemed at first farre more terrible then Paternall authoritie. And therefore is he in this respect also called a mightie Hunter; because he tooke and destroyed both Beasts and Theenes. But Saint Augustine understands it otherwise, and converts the word (ante) by (contra) affirming therein, that Nimrod was a mightie Hunter against God : Sic ergo intelligendus est Gig as ille, Venator contra Dominum; So is that Giant to be understood, a Hunter against the Lord. But howfocuer this word (a mightie Hunter) bee vnderstood; yet it rather appeareth, that as 10 Wimred had the command of all those, which went with him from the East into Shimaar: fo, this charge was rather given him, then by him vsurped. For it is no where found, that Noah himselfe, or any of the Sonnes of his owne bodie came with this troupeinto Babylonia: no mention at all being made of Noah (the yeeres of his life excepted) in the succeeding Storie of the Hebrewes: nor that Sem was in this disobedient Troupe, or among the builders of Babel.

The same is also confirmed by divers ancient Historians, that Wimrod, Suphne, and Ioctan were the Captaines and Leaders of all those which came from the East. And though Sem came not himselse so farre West as Shinaar (his lot being cast on the East parts) yet from his Sonnes Nephew Heber, the name and Nation of the He-20 brewes (according to the generall opinion) tooke beginning, who inhabited the Southermost parts of Chalden about the Citie of Vr; from whence Abraham was by God called into Charran, and thence into Canaan.

And because those of the Race of Sem which came into Chaldes, were no partners in the vnbeleeuing worke of the Towre: therefore (as many of the Fathers coniecture) did they retaine the first and most ancient language, which the Fathers of the first Age had left to Noah; and Noah to Sem and his Islues: In familia HEBER remanfit bac lingua; In the Family of HEBER this Language remained (faith Saint Augustine out of Epiphanius; ) and this Language Abraham vsed: yea it was anciently and before the Floud the generall speech: and therefore first called (saith Calestinus) lingua 30 humana: the humane tongue.

We know that Geropius Becanus following Theodoret, Rabbi Mofes, Aryptiu, Vergara, and others, is of another opinion; but how socuer we determine of this point, we may with good probablitie resolue, that none of the godly seed of Sem were the chiefe Leaders of this presumptuous multitude. And seeing it is not likely but that fome one was by order appointed for this charge, we may imagine that Nimrod 13ther had it by iust authoritie, then by violence of vsurpation.

Q. II.

That NIMROD, BELVS, and NINVS were three distinct persons.

De Cinit.Dei.

BENZO, and out of him Nauclerus with others make many Nimeds. Eusebius confounds him with Belus; and so doth Saint Hierome vpon Ofe: and these wordes of S. Augustine seeme to make him of the same of his Father Belvs, who first governed in Babilan fixtic five yeers. But it could not bee vnknowne to Saint Jugustine, that Nimvod was the Etablisher of that Empire: Moses being plaine and direct therain. For the beginning of NIMEODS 50 Kingdome (faith he) was Babel, Erec, Accad, and Chalne, in the Land of Shinar Wherefore Nimrod was the first King of Babel. And certainly it best agreeth with reason, that Ninus was the third, and not one with Nimrod, as Mercator (led by Clement) Suppor fed : for in Names time the World was maruailoufly replenished. And if S. Augustine had undoubtedly taken Belus for Nimred, he would have given him the name which the Scriptures give him, rather then have borrowed any thing out of prophane Authors. And for those wordes of S. Avgvstine (qui primes illicregnanerat; who was the first that reigned there) supposed to be meant by Belus : those wordes doe not disprove that Nimrod was the Founder of the Babylonian Empire. For although Inlius Cafar overthrew the libertie of the Romane Commonwealth, making himselfe a perpetuall Dictator, yet Augustus was the first established Emperor: and the first that reigned absolutely by soueraignefauthoritie ouer the Romanes, as an Emperor. The like may be faid of Nimrod, that he first brake the rule of Eldership and Paternitie, 10 Jaying the foundation of foueraigne Rule, as Cafar did; and yet Belia was the first, who peaceably, and with a generall allowance exercifed fuch a power. Percriss is of opinion, that Belus and Ninsrod were the same, because many things are said of them both agreeing in time: for it was about 200. yeeres after the floud (as they account) that Belis reigned: but such agreement of times proues it not. For so Edward the Third, and his grand-child Richard the Second, were Kings both in one yeere : the onedyed; the other in the fame yeere was crowned King.

And yet the opinion (that Numrod and Belus were one) is farremore probable then that of Mercator, who makes Winus and Nimrod to be the same. For it is plaine that the beginning of Nimrods Kingdome was Babel, and the Townesadioyning:

20 but the first and most famous worke of Ninus was the Citico ! Niniu ...

Now whereas D. Siculus affirmeth, that Ninus overcame and suppress the Babylonians, the fame rather proueth the contrarie, then that Nimis and Nimrod were one person. For Ninus established the seate of his Empire at Ainine in Affiria, whence the Babylonians might (perchance) in disdayne thereof fall from his obedience, whom he recouered againe by strong hand; which was easie: Babylon being not walled till Semiramis time.

> -Dicitur altam Coctilibus muris cinxiffe S EMIRAMIS Vrbems.

SEMIRAMIS with walls of bricke the Citie did inclose.

Further, where it is alleaged, that as the Scriptures call Nimrod mightie: fo Instine hath the same of Ninus, which is one of Mercators arguments; It may be answered, that fuch an addition might have been given to many other Kings aswell. For if we may beleeve Instine; then were Vexoris King of Agypt, and Tanais of Soythia mightie Kings before Ninus was borne. And if we may compare the wordes of Mofes (touching Nimrod) with the vndertakings of Nims, there will be found great difference betweene them. For whereas Mercator conceineth, that it was too early 40 for any that lived about the time of the confusion of languages, to have inuaded and mattered those Cities so farre removed from Babel, namely, Erec, Accad, and Chaine: which worke he therefore ascribeth to 2Vinus, as a man of the greatest undertaking; and consequently would have Nimrod to have beene long after the time, in which we suppose he flourished; and both those names of Nimred and Ninus to belong to one person, to wit, to Winus: to these things to make some answere. First, I doe not finde that supposition true, That euer Nimrod inuaded any of these Cities; but that hee founded them and built them from the ground, being the first after the floud, that conducted the children of Noah into those parts : and therefore had nothing built or erected to his hands.

50 Besides, whereas these Cities in many mens opinions are found to stand farre away from Babylon, I finde no reason to bring me to that beliefe. The Citie of Accad which the Septuagint calls Archard, and Epiphanius, Arphal, Innius takes to be Nifibis in Mesopotamia for the Region thereabour the Cosmographers (saith he) call Accabene for Accadene, Others understand Wisibis and Niniue to be one Citie : fo doe Strabe and Stephanus confound it with Charran; but all mistaken. For Nishia Accad, and Charran are diftinct places. Though I cannot denie Accedene to bea Region of Melopetamia, the same which Arias Montanus out of S. Hierome cals Achad: and so doe the Hebrewes also call Nisibia, which seemeth to be the cause of this mistaking. As for the Citie of Erec, which the Septuagint call Orech; S. Augustine, Oreg; and Pagninus, Erec; this place Junius vnderstands for Aracca in Susiana: but there is also a Citie in Comagena called Arace: and indeede likelihood of name is no certaine proofe, without the affiftance of other circumstances.

Concerning the third Citie (called Chalneh) some take it for Calinisis: of which Am. Marcellinus. S. Hierome takes it for Seleucia; Hieroselymitanus for Ctesiphon: others 10 doe thinke it to be the Agrani vpon Euphrates, destroyed and razed by the Persians. But let Moles be the Moderator and Iudge of this dispute, who teacheth vs directly, that these Cities are not seated in so divers and distant Regions; for these be his wordes: And the beginning of his Kingdome (speaking of NIMROD) was Babel, Erech, Accad, and Chalneh, in the land of Shinaar : fo as in this Valley of Shinaar, or Babylonia, or Chaldea (being all one) we must finde them. And therefore I could (rather of the two) thinke with Viter biensis, that these foure made but one Babylon, then that they were Cities farre remoued, and in seuerall Provinces, did not the Prophet Amos precisely distinguish Chalne from Babylon. Goe you (saith Amos) to Chalne, and from thence goe you to Hamath, and then to Gath of the Philistims. The Geneua translation fa- 20 nouring the former opinion, to set these Cities out of Shinaar, hath a marginall note expressing that Shinaar was here named: not that all these Cities were therein seated. butto distinguish Babylon of Chaldea, from Babylon in Agypt; but I finde little substance in that conceit. For sure I am, that in the beginning of Nimrods Empire there was no such Babylon, nor any Citie at all to be found in Agypt : Babylon of Agypt being all one with the great Citie of Cairo, which was built long after, not farre from the place where stood Memphis the ancient Citie, but not so ancient as Babylon vpon Euphrates. Now that Chalne is situate in the Valley of Shinaar, it hath beene formerly proued in the Chapter of Paradife. So as for any argument that may be brought to the contrarie, from the remote situation of these three Cities from Babylon, we may 30 continue in our opinion, That Nimrod, Belus, and Nimus, were distinct and succesfine Kings.

d. III.

That NIMROD, not Assur, built Ninine: and that it is probable out of EsAY 23. 13. that Assva built Vr of the Chaldees.

Ow as of Nimrod: so are the opinions of Writers different touching Affur, and touching the beginning of that great state of Babylon and 40 Assiria: a controuersie wearisomely disputed without any direct proofe, conclusion, or certaintie. But to me (of whom, where the Scriptures are filent, the voyce of Reason hath the best hearing) the interpretation of Innius is most agreeable; who besides all necessarie consequence doth not distoyne the sense of the Scriptures therein, nor confuse the vnderstanding thereof. For in this fort he converteth the Hebrew Text : Erat enim principium regni eius Babel, & Erech, & Accad, & Chalneh, in terra Shinaaris ; è terra hac procesit in Assyriam vbi adificauit Niniuen; (which is) For the beginning of this Kingdome was Babel, and Erech, and Accad, and Chalneb, in the land of Shinaar : and he went forth of this land into Assyria, and built Niniue. So as Junius takes Assur in this place, not for any 50 person, but for the Region of Assyria: the land being so called in Moses time, and before it. For certainely, the other construction, (where the word (Assur) is taken for Assur the sonne of Sem) doth not answer the order which Moses observeth through all the Bookes of Genesis, but is quite contrarie vnto it. For in the beginning of the tenth Chapter he setteth downe the sonnes of Noah, in these wordes : Now these are the Generations of the Sonnes of No AH : SEM, HAM, and IAPHETH. Onto whom Connes were borne after the floud : then it followeth immediately : The Connes of I A-PHETH were Gomer, &c. fo asstapheth is last named among Noahs sonnes, be he eldest or yongest: because he was first to be spoken of : with whom (hauing last named him) he proceedes and fets downe his iffue, and then the iffue of his fonnes: first, theissue of Gomer, Japheths eldest sonne; and then speakes of Janan and his sonnes: for of the rest of that Familie hee is silent. Anon after hee numbreth the fonnes of Ham, of which Culb was the eldest: and then the sonnes of Culb and Miz-10 raim; and afterward of Canaan; leaving Shem for the last, because he would not disiovne the Storie of the Hebrewes. But after he beginneth with Sem, he continueth from thence by Arphaxad, Shela, and Heber, vnto Abraham, and so to Iacob, and the Fathers of that Nation. But to have brought in one of the sonnes of shem in the middle of the generations of Ham, had beene against order; neither would Moses have past over so slightly the erection of the Asyrian Empire, in one of the sonnes of Shem, if he had had any fuch meaning: it being the storic of Shems sonnes which he most attended. For he nameth Nimrod apart, after the rest of the sonnes of Cush. because he founded the Babylonian and Assyrian Empire: and in the eleventh Chapter he returnes to speake of the building of Babel in particular, having formerly named 20 it in the tenth Chapter, with those other Cities which Nimrod founded in Shinaar. And as he did in the tenth Chapter, so also in the eleuenth he maketh no report of Shem, till such time as he had finished so much of Nemrod as he meant to touch: and then he beginneth with the issue of Shem, which he continueth to Abraham and Ifrael. And of Iunius opinion touching Assur, was Caluin: to which I conceine that P.Comestor, in historia Scholastica, gaue an entrance, who after he had deliuered this place in some other sense, he vseth these wordes: Vel intelligendum non est de AssvR filio S EM, &c. sed Assva (id est) Regnum Assyriorum inde egressum est, quod tempore SARVG proaus ABRAHAMI factumell, (which is) Or elfe it is not to be understood of Assyr the Conne of SEM, &c. but Assyr (that is, the Kingdome of the Affyrians) 30 came from thence (videlicet, from Babylon) or was made out of it : which happened in the time of SARVG the great grand-father of ABRAHAM. After which he reconcileth the differences in this fort: If you take the ancient Belus (meaning Nimrod) to be the first Erecter of the Assirian Empire, or the first Founder thereof, it is true, Quantum ad initium; Respecting the beginning; but others conceive that it had beginning from Ninus, which is also true, Quantum adregni ampliationem; Regarding the enlargement of the Empire. To this I may adde the opinion of Epiphanius, confirmed by Cedrenus, who takes Affur to be the sonne of Nimrod : and so doth Methodius , and Viterbiensis, S. Hierome, and Cyrillus, and now lastly Torniellus: who saith he tooke Torniell. Annal. vpon him that name of Affur after he had beaten the Affyrians, as Scipio did of A- facr in Gen. 10. 40 fricanus, after his conquest in Africa: and that Assur was a common name to the Kings of Affyria, as it appeareth by many Scriptures, as Pfalme 81. E/ay 10. Ofe 5. &c. but to helpe the matter, he makes Wimrod of the race of Shem, and the sonne of Irari.

But Rabanus Maurus, who was Arch-Bishop of Mentz in the yeere of Christ 854. an ancient and learned Writer, vnderstands this place with Commestor, or Commestor with him, agreeing in substance with that translation of Iunius: to which wordes of Moses he giueth this sense: De hacterra Assyriorum pullulauit imperium, qui ex nomine NINI, BELI silij, Ninum condiderunt, whem magnam, &c. Out of this land grew the Empire of the Affrians, who built Ninus the great Citic, so named of NINVS the sonne

then which there is no one place in the Scriptures, that hath a greater diversitie in

ther then Nimrod established the Assyrian Empire, and built Niniue : contrarie to the former translation of Junius, and to his owne opinion. Now out of the Vulgar (called Hieromes translation) it may be gathered that Affur both founded and ruined this Estate or Citie of the Chaldeans, by Esay remembred : vnto which Citie, People. or State, he plainely telleth the Tyrians that they cannot trust, or hope for reliefe thence. Or rather it may be taken, that the Prophet maketh this Citie of Chaldea. and that Estate, an example vnto those Phanicians, whom in this place he fore-telleth of their ruine: which Citie of Chaldea being of strength, and carefully defended, was (notwithstanding) by the Affyrians vtterly wasted and destroyed: whereby he giveth them knowledge, and foretelleth them, that their owne Citie of Tyre, 10 (inuincible, as themselves thought) should also soone after be over-turned by the fame Affyrians : as (indeede) it was by Nabuchodonofor. And these be the wordes after HIEROME: Ecce terra Chaldworum, talis populus non fuit, Assva fundauit eam, in captinitatem traduxerunt robustos eius, suffoderunt domos eius, posuerunt eam in ruinam. (which is) Behold the Land of the Chaldeans, such a people there were not (or, this was no people, after the Geneua) Assur (or the Affyrians) founded it, they carried away their frong men captine, they under mined their houles, and ruined their Citie. The Septuagint expresse it but in a part of another Verse, in these wordes: Et in terra Chaldaorum, er has desolate est ab Astrius, quoniam murus eius corruit, making the sense perfect by the preceding Verse, which all together may be thus vnderstood: If thou goe over to Chit-20 tim (which is Macedon or Greece) yet thou shalt have no rest (speaking to the Tyrians) neither in the Land of the Chaldeans, for this is made defolate by the Affyrians, because their malls fell together to the ground. PAGNINVS and VATABLVS convertit thus : Ecc terra Chaldim, iste populus non erat illic olim; nam Assva sundauit eam nauibus, erexerunt arces illius; contriuerunt ades eius, posuit eam in ruinam: which may be thus Englished: Behold the Land of the Chaldeans, this people was not once therein inhabiting: for Assur built it a harbour for ships, they erected the Towers thereof, and againe brake downe the houses thereof, and rumated it. IVNIVS in the place of thips fets the word (pro Barbaris) that is, for the Barbarians: and the Geneua, by the Barbarians. But this is vindoubted that the Prophet Efay (as may be gathered by all the fense of the Chap- 10 ter) did therein affure the Tyrians of their future destruction, which (accordingly) fell on them: wherein (for the more terror) he maketh choice to note the calamities of those Places, Cities, and Regions, by whose Trade the state and greatnesse of the Tyrians was maintayned; as by the Cilicians from Tharsis; from the Macedonians, and other Gracians under the name of Cittim; also by the £gyptians, the Chaldeans, and the rest. For Tyre was then the Mart Towne of the World most renowned. And (as it appeares in our discourse of Paradise) not the least part of her chiefe merchandize came in by the Citie Fr or Vrchoz in Chaldes, where the body or chiefe fireame of Euphrates (even that fireame which runneth through Babylon and Otris, which now falleth into Tigris) had his passage into the Persian Gulfo: though now 40 it be stopped vp. For (as we have heretofore noted) the Arabians (that descended from Sheba and Raamah) dwelling on the East bankes of the Persian Gulfe, trading with the Tyrians (as those of Eden, Charran, and Chalne did) transported their merchandise by the mouth of Tigris, that is, from Teredon, and of Euphrates, that is, from Vr or Vrehoa: and then by Babylon, and thence by River and over Land they conveyedit into Syria, and so to Tyre: as they doe this day to Aleppo. So then Vr of the Chaldees was a Port Towne, and one of those Cities which had Intelligence, Trade, and Exchange with the Tyrians: for it flood by the great Lakes of Chaldea, through which that part of Euphrates ranne, which passage is now stopt vp. Eins cur/um vetuflas aboleuit (faith Niger.) And PLINIE Locus vbi Euphratis oftium fuit, flumen fallum; 50 Time hath worne away the channell of Euphrates : and the place where the mouth thereof was, is a Bay of falt water. These things being thus, certainely ( not without good probabilitie) we may expound the Citie of the Chaldees, whose calamities Esay here noteth for terror of the Tyrians, to be the Citie anciently called Pr; and (by Hecataus)

Camerina; by Ptolemie, Vrchoa: and by the Greekes, Chaldaopolis, The Citie of Chaldaa: which the formes of Shem, untill Abrahams time, inhabited. And whereas in all the Translations it is said, that Assur both founded it and ruined it : it may be vnderstood, that Assur the Founder was the sonne of Shem; and Assur the destroyers were the Affyrians, by whom those that inhabited Vr of Chalden, were at length oppressed and brought to ruine: which thing God fore-seeing commanded Abraham thence to Charran, and so into Canaan. And if the Hebrew word by Vatablus and Pagninus converted (by ships) doe beare that sense, the same may be the better approued; because it was a Port Towne : and the River so farre vp as this Citie of We was in ancient time nauigable, as both by Plinie and Niger appeareth. And if the word (for the Barbarians) or (by the Barbarians) be also in the Hebrew Text, it is no leffe manifest, that the most barbarous Arabians of the Desart were and are the confronting, and next people of all other vnto it. For Chalden is now called Arachaldar, which signifieth desart Lands, because it ionneth to that part of Arabia so called : and Cicero (calling those Arabians by the name of Ituraans) addeth, that they are of all other people the most saluage; calling them, Homines omnium maxime barbaros.

So as this place of Efer, which breedeth some doubt in Calain, proueth in nothing the contrarie opinion, nor in any part weakeneth the former translation of In-20 nius, northeinterpretation of Comestor and Rabanus. Forthough other men haue not conceived (for any thing that I have read) that Afar is in this place diverfly taken (as for the some of Sem, when he is spoken of as a Builder of Vr; and when as a Destroyer thereof, then for the Asyrian Nation) yet certainely the enidence of the truth, and agreement of circumstances seeme to enforce it. And so this Founding of the Citie of the Chaldees by Affur (into which the most of the posteritie of Sem that came into Shinaar, and were separate for the Idolatrie of the Chusites and Nimrodians, retyred themselves) hath nothing in it to prove that the same Asiar built Ninine or that the fame Affar was all one with Wintes; except wee will make Affar, who wasthe sonne of Shem, both an Idolater, and the sonne of Belus. For (out of doubt) 20 Ninus was the first notorious Sacrificer to Idols; and the first that set vp a Statue to be honored as god. Now if Affar must be of that Race, and not of the Familie of sem, as he must be if he founded Ninine, then all those which seeke to give him the honor thereof, doe him by a thou and parts more injurie, by taking from him his true Parent and Religion.

Besides, if this supposed Assur whom they make the Founder of Niniue (and so the sonne of Belus) were any other, and not the same with Ninus; then what became of him? Certainely he was very vnworthy and obscure, and not like to be the Founder of fuch an Empire and fuch a Citie, if no man have vouchfafed to leave to pofleritie his expulsion thence, and how he lost that Empire againe or quitted it to Ni-40 nus: whose acts and conquests are so largely written, and (according to my apprehension) farre differing from truth. It will therefore be found best agreeing to Scripture and to Reason, and best agreeing with the storie of that age written by prophane Authors, that Nimrod founded Babel, Erech, and Accad, and Chalne, the first workes and beginnings of his Empire, according to Moles, and that these workes being sinished within the Valley of Shinaar, helooked farther abroad, and set in hand the worke of Ninus, lying neere vnto the same streame that Babel and Chalne did: which worke his grand-child Ninus afterward amplified and finished, as Semiramis (this Ninus his wife) did Babylon. Hence it came to passe, that as Semiramis was counted the Foundresse of the Citie which shee only finished : so also Ninus of Ninine: Quam 50 quidem Babylonem potuit instaurare; She might repaire or renew Babylon, faith S. Augu-

Itine. For so did Nabuchodonofor vaunt himselfe to be the Founder of Babylon also, because he built vp againe some part of the wall, ouer-borne by the surie of the Riuer: which worke of his flood till Alexanders time, whereupon he vaunted thus: Is Dan. 4. 27. not this great Babel which I have built? 3. Of the acts of NIMROD and BELVS, as farre as now they

W Vt to returne to the Storie, it is plaine in Moses, that Wimred ( whom Philo interpreteth transfugium; and Iulius Africanus furnamed Saturnel was the establisher of the Babylonian Monarchie, of whom there is no other thing written, then that his Empire in the beginning confifted of those foure Cities before remembred, Babel, Erec, Accad, and 10

Chalne: and that from hence he propagated his Empire into Affyria; and in Affyria built foure more Cities (to wit) Niniue, Rehoboth, Celah, and Refen. And feeing that he spent much time in building Babel it selfe and those adioyning, and that his trauailes were many ere he came into Shinaar: that worke of Babel (fuch as it was) with the other three Cities, and the large foundation of Niniue, and the other Cities of Assyria which he builded (considered with the want of materials, and with other impediments) were of greater difficultie then any thing performed by his Successors in many yeeres after: to whose vndertakings time had given so great an increase of people; and the examples and patternes of his beginning so great an aduancement and encouragement: in whose time (saith Glycas) all these Nations 20 were called Meropes, à sermonis linguarum terrag, divisione; By reason that the earth and the speech were then divided.

Belus, or Bel, or Iupiter Belus, succeeded Nimrod, after he had reigned 114. yeeres; of whose acts and undertakings there is little written. For it is thought that he spent much of his time in disburdening the low Lands of Babylon, and drying and making firme ground of all those great Fennes and over-flowne Marishes which adioyned vntoit. For any of his Warres or Conquests there is no report, other then of his begun enterprise against Sabatius King of Armenia, and those parts of Scythia which Berofus calls Scythia Saga, whose sonne and successor Barzanes became subject and Tributarie to Ninus, that followed the warre to effect, which was by his Father 30 Belus begunne.

the World so some after Nimrod, (as by the storie of Nimus is made 40 manifest) the causes were threefold, (namely) Oportunitie, Example, and Necessitie. For Oportunitie being a Princesse liberall and power-full, bestoweth on her sirst Entertayners many times more benefits, then either Fortune can, or Wisedome ought; by whose presence alone the vnderstanding mindes of men receive all those helps and supplyes, which they either want or with for: so as every Leader of a troupe (after the division of tongues and dispersion of People) finding these faire offers made vnto them, held the power which they possest, and governed by discretion all those people, whom they conducted to their destined places. For it cannot be conceived, that when the Earth was first divided, mankinde straggled abroade like beasts in a Defart; but that by a-50 greement they disposed themselves, and vnder-tooke to inhabite all the knowne parts of the World, and by distinct Families and Nations: otherwise, those remote Regions from Babylon and Shinaar, which had Kings, and were peopled in Ninus time, would not have beene possest in many hundreds of yeeres after, as then they were; neyther did those that were sent, and trauailed farre off (order being the true parent of prosperous successe) undertake so difficultienterprizes without a Conduther or Commander. Secondly, the Example of Nimrod with whom it succeeded well, strengthened every humour that aspired. Thirdly, Necessitie resoluted all men by the arguments of common miseries, that without a Commander and Magifirate, theither could those that were laborious, and of honest dispositions, enjoy the haruest of their owne Trauailes: nor those which were of little strength, secure themselves against forcible violence: nor those which sought after any proportion of greatnesse, eyther possesse the same in quiet, or rule and order their owne Ministers o and Attendants.

That these causes had wrought these effects, the vidertakings and Conquests of Winus (the sonne of Belus ) made it apparent: for hee found every where Kings and Monarches, what way foeuer his Ambition led him in the Warres.

But Nimrod (his Grand-father) had no companion King, to vs knowne, when he first tooke on him Soueraignetie and sole commandement of all those the children of Noah, which came from the East into Babylonia: though in his life time others also rayled themselves to the same estate; of which hereafter. Belus (his sonne and Successour) found Sabatius King of Armenia and Scythia, infficiently powerfull to relist his attempts: which Sabatius I take to bee the same, which Iustine cals Tanais; 20 and should coniecture, that Mizraim had beene his Vexoria, were it not that I vehemently suspect some errour, (as Iustine placeth him) in the time of that Vexoris, who See more of by many circumstances seemes to me rightly accounted by the Iudicious and Lear-this, I.a. of this and Reinsecting all one with the great Saladies, that lived contains Accounting the first Parties. ned Reineccius all one with the great Sefostris, that lived certaine Ages after Winus. 1,5,6 This Belus, the second King of Babylon, raigned 65. yeeres, according to the common

Hence this second King and Successour of Nimred had the name of Bel, or Belus, question hath beene made: for it seemeth rather a name imposed, or (of addition) given by Ninus, then assumed by Belas him-

Cyrillus against Iulian cals the Father of Ninus Arbelus, affirming that hee was the first of all men that caused himselfe to be called a God: which were it so, then might the name of Belus beethence deriued. But Bel, as many Learned Writers have observed, signifieth the Sunne in the Chaldean Tongue, and therefore did Ninus and Semiramis give that name to their Father, that hee might bee honoured as 40 the Sunne, which the Babylonians worshipped as a God. And as this Title was assumed in after-times by divers others of the Chaldean Princes, and Babylonian Satrapa: so was it vsed (in imitation) by the chiefe of the Carthaginians and other Nations, as fome Historians have concerned.

To this Bel, or Belus, pertaine (as in affinitie) those voyces of Baal, Baalins, Belphegor, Beelphagor, Belsebub, and Beelsephon. Those that are learned in the Hebrew and Chaldean convert the word Baal by the Latine, Princeps militia, Chiefe in the Warre; though Daniel was so called (sayth Svidas) Ob honorem explications arcanarum rerum; In bonour of his expounding secrets. Saint Hierome makes Bel, Beel, and Baal, to have the Hier. in Ofic. 1. fame fignification: and fayth, that the Idoll of Babylon was so called, which Ninus in 50 memory of his father fet vp to be worshipped: to which that he might adde the more honour and reuerence, he made it a Sanctuarie and refuge for all offendors. Hence (Sayth Lyranus) came Idolatrie, and the first vse of Images into the World. Isidor Lyrin Sapien. (layth Lyranus) came Idolatrie, and the nrit vie or images into the vvolid. If salome, it doth interprete Bel by Vetus, old or ancient; adding, that as among the Affricans it is Islahse at. taken for Saturne and the Sunne: so in the Punicke or Carthaginian Language it signifi-

eth God. Glycus makes itan Affyrian name properly ; and Iosephus a Tyrian. Hecal-Gaffirmeththat the Idoll which the Moabites worshipped (by them erected on the Mountaine Abegor, or Pear, and called Baal) is the fame which the Latines call Pria-Hieron.in Ofe.c. pus, the God of Gardens; which was also the opinion of Saint Hierome. But that the word Bel, or Beel, was as much to say as God, appeareth by the word Beelzebub, the Idoll of Acceson. For Bel, or Beel foundeth (God) and Sebub (Flies or Hornets, ) by which name (notwithstanding) the Iemes expresserbe Prince of Denilso But the Prophet Ofe teacheth vs the proper fignification of this word from the voice of God himselfe; And at that day (farth the Lord) thou shalt call mee Is HI , and shalt call mee no more BAALIM: for I will take away the name of BAALIM out of their mouthes. For al- 10 though the name of Bad, or Babal, be infly to bee vied towards God; yetin respect that the same was given to Idols, God both hated it and forbadit. And the ving of the word Belamong the Chaldeans for the Sunne, was not because it properly fignifieth the Sunne, but because the Sunne there was worshipped as a God: as also the Fire was, tanquam Selis particula. As for the wordes compounded (before remembred (as Belpheger, and Belsephon; Belsephon is expounded out of FACIVS; Dominus Specula vel castodie, The Lord of the Watch-towre, or of the Guard: the other word noteth the Idoll, and the place wherein it was worshipped. It is also written Belpeor, or Baalpeor : and Peor (they say) is as much as Denudauit ; and therefore the word loyned expresseth a naked Image. Somethere are that call this Belus, the some of Se-20 turne: for it was vied among the Ancients to name the Father Saturne, the Sonne Austor de equi. Iupiter, and the Grand-child Hercules. SATVENI dicuntur familiarum Nobilium, Regum qui vibes condiderunt senisimi; primogeniti corum Ioves & Ivnones; Her-CVLES vero nepotes corum fortifimt; The ancientest of Noble Families, and Kings which founded Cities, are called SATVRNES; their first-borne IVPITERS and IVNOES; their valient Nephewes Hercules. Butthis Belus (fayth L. Viues) was famous by reason of his warlike sonne Ninus, who caused his Father to bee worshipped as a God by the name of Iupiter Babylonius, whom the Egyptians (transported by the Dreames of their Antiquitie) make one of theirs. For Neptune (fay they) vpon Libya the Daughter of Epaphus begat this Iupiter Belus , who was Father to Agyptus. They 30 adde, that this Belus carrying a Colonie to the River of Euphrates there built a Citie, in which he ordained Priests after the Agyptian manner. But were there any Belia the sonne of Epaphus and Isis, or of Neptune and Libya, or (with Eusebrus ) of Telegonus, who after the death of Apis married Iss, (Ceerops then raigning in Athens) the same was not this Babylonian Belus of whom wee speake, but rather some other Belus, of whom the Egyptians so much vaunted.

S for the Babylonian Belus, hee was the most ancient Belus, and the Inuentour of Aftronomie, if Plinie fay true: from whence the Agyptians might borrow both the name and the Doctrine. Some part of the Temple, in which his Statue or Image was honoured as a God, the same Authour affirmeth that it remained in his time,

Of the Sepulchre of Belus, Strabo writeth thus. Ouer the River (fayth hee) there are Gardens, where they say the ruines of BELVS bis Tombe, which XERXES brake up, are yetremaining. It was a square Pyramis made of Bricke, a furlong high, and on 50 LA continuian. every side it had a furlong in breadth. It appeares by Cyril against Julian, that hee obtained divine worthip yet living: for to hee writes of him (calling him ARBELVS.) ARBELVS, vir superbus & arrogans, primus hominum dicitur à subditis Deitais nomen accepisse : perseuer arunt igitur Assyry , & sinitime illis gentes sacrificantes ei.

CHAP.10. S.7. of the History of the World. ARBELVS, aman very proud and arrogant, is accounted to be the first of all menthat was ever honoured by their subjects with title of Deitie; (or with the name of God.) The Allyrians therefore and the bordering N ations have perseuered, sacrificing to him. Even Arius also, whom Suidas cals Thuras, who succeeded next after Ningas, was made an Idoll-god among them, if we credit Suidas.

After Ninus (that is, after Ninyas) Thuras raigned (faith Suidas) whom they called after the name of the Planet Mars; a man of sharpe and fierce disposition, who bidding battaile to Cauca (us of the Stocke of Japheth flue him. The Assyrians worthipped him for their God, and called him Baal (that is) Mars; thus farre Suidas. Neither is it vnlikely but that many among Idolatrous Nations were Deified in their life-times, or soone after: though I denie not but that the most of their Images and Statue were first erected without divine worship, only in memorie of the glorious acts of Benefactors, as Glycas rightly conceineth; and so afterward the Denill crept into those woodden and brazen carcasses, when Posteritie had lost the memorie of their first invention. Hereof Isidore speaketh in this manner: Quos autem Pagani Deos afferunt homines fuerunt, & pro uniufcuiufá, vita meritis vel magnificentia, coirapud fuos post mortem caperunt: sed ( Damonibus persuadentibus ) quos illi pro sua memoria benerauerunt, minores Deos existimarunt: ad istavero magis excolenda accesserunt Poetarum figmenta; They were men (fayth he) whom the Pagans affirmed to be Gods: and energy 20 one for his merits or magnificence beganne after his death to bee honoured of his owne. But at length (the Deuil's perswading) they accounted them lesser Gods, whose memories, they honoured: and the Fictions of the Poets made the opinions (concerning the honours of the dead) much more Superstitious.

And that the worshipping of Images was brought in by the Pagans, and Heather Nations, it is not Isidore alone that witnesseth; but Gregorie: Gentilitas (fayth hee) Greg. Neocestar. inuentrix & caput est imaginum; Gentilisme is the inuentresse and ground of Images; and Ambrose: Gentes lignum adorant, tanguam imaginem Det: The Gentiles adore wood as it Ambros in Plat. were the Image of God. Eufebius also affirmeth as much, and calleth the worshipping 108. of Images a custome borrowed of the Heathen. The like hath Saint Augustine August 11. 20 against Adimantus. Et verentur (fayth Lactantius) nereligio vana sit, sinibil Latiliba.c.26 videant quod adorent; They feare their Religion would bee vaine, should they not fee that which they worthip.

And (out of doubt) the Schoolemen shift this fearefull custome very strangely. For feeing the very workemanship is forbidden, how can the heart of a wife Christian fatisfie it felfe with the distinction of Doulia and Hyperdoulia, which can imply nothing but some difference of worshipping of those Images after they are made? And it is of all things the most strange, why religious and learned men should straine their wits to defend the vie of those things, which the Scriptures have not only no where warranted, but expresly in many places forbidden, and cursed the Practifers thereof. 40 Yetthis doctrine of the Deuill was so strongly and subtilly rooted, as neither the expresse Commandement of God himselfe, Thou shalt not make any graven Image, nor all the threatnings of Moses and the Prophets after him could remooue, weed it, or by feare, or by any persuasions lead the hearts of men from it. For where shall we find words of greater weight, or of plainer infraction then these? Take therefore good heed to your selves ( for yee saw no image in the day that the Lord spake unto you in Horebout of the midst of the fire ) that yee corrupt not your selves; and make you a graven Image, or representation of any Figure, whether it bee the likenesse of Male or

And besides the expresse Commandement, Thou shalt make thee no grauen Image, 50 and the prohibition in many Scriptures, so it is written in the Booke of wisedome, That the invention of Idols was the beginning of Whoredome: and the finding of them the corruption of life: for they were not from the beginning, neyther shall they continue for shipping of the Heathen Idols, it is manifest that Mojes spake of Images of the liuing God, and not of Bad and the rest of that nature, for you faw no Image (sayth Mo-SES) that day that the Lord fake unto you in Horeb. Surely it was excellently favd of BASIL; Noli aliquam in illo formam imaginari, ne circumscribas cum mente tua: Doe not imagine any forme to be in God, lest thou limit or circumscribe him in thy minde too. Now. if the great Bafil thought it a prefumption valawfull to represent a patterne of the infinite God to our owne thoughts and mindes, how farre doe those men presume that put him under the greazie Penfill of a Painter, or the rustie Axe or other Instrument of a Carpenter or Caruer.

For as this dishonour to the infinite and incomprehensible God beganne in Babel: 10 fo did the Deuill transport and speed this invention into all the Regions adioyning, and into Agypt and Greece.

The Romanes for a while resisted the erection of these Idols and Images, resuling to set them in their Temples for 170. yeeres, observing therein the Law of Numa: who thought it impietie to resemble things most beautifull, by things most base. But Tarquinius Priscus afterwards prevailing, and following the vanitie of the Gracians (a Nation of all others under the Sunne most deluded by Satan) setup the Images De ciuit Dei, li, of their Gods; which (as Saint Augustine witnesseth) that Learned Varro both bewailed, and vtterly condemned : and which Seneca thus derideth; Simulachradeorum venerantur, illis supplicant, genu posito illa adorant, & cum hac suspiciant, fabros 20 qui illa fecere contemmunt; The Images of the Gods are worshipped, those they pray unto with bended knees; those they adore, and while they so greatly admire them, they contemne the Handi-craftsmen that made them : which also Sedulius the Poet in this sort scoffethat:

> Heumiseri qui vana colunt, qui corde sinistro Religiofa fibi fculpunt simulachra, suumg, Factorem fugiunt, & que fecere verentur. Quis furor est? que tanta animos dementia ludit? Vt volucrem, turpemg, bouem, toruumg, Draconem, Semi-hominemý, canem supplex homo pronus adoret.

Ah wretched they that worship vanities, And consecrate dumbe Idols in their heart. Who their owne Maker (God on high) despise, And feare the worke of their owne hands and art. What furie? what great madnesse doth beguile Mens minds? that man should vgly shapes adore, Of Birds, or Buls, or Dragons, or the vile Halfe-dogge-halfe-man on knees for aide implore.

And though this deuice was barbarous, and first, and many yeeres practifed by Heathen Nations onely, till the lewes were corrupted in Agypt, yet it is not Seneca alone that laugheth to scorne the ignorant stupiditie of his Nation: but Iustin Martyr remembreth how the Sibyls inneighed against Images: and Hospinian, how Sophoeles taught, that it was pernicious to the soules of men to erect and adore those Babels. Strabe and Herodotus witnesse, that the Persians did not erect or set up any Statue of their Gods. Lycurgus never taught it the Lacedamonians, but thought it impietie to represent immortall natures by mortall Figures. Eusebius also witnesseth in his sixt Booke de praparatione Euangelica, that it was forbidden by a Law in Serica, 50 or among the Brachmans in India, that Images should be worshipped. The same doe Tacitus and Crinitus report of the ancient Germans. Many other Authours might bee remembred that witnesse the disdaine which the Heathen themselves had of this childish Idolatrie: of which Hospinian hath written at large in his Tract, de origin imacinum. Andit was truly said, Omnia mala exempla bonis initijs orta sunt, Allillexamples have forung from good beginnings. The Heathen at first made these Statue and Images, but in memorie of fuch remarkable men, as had descrued best of their Countries and Common-wealths: Effigies hominum (fayth PLINIE) non (olchant exprimi, nisaliqua illustri causa perpetuitatem merentium: Men were not wont to make Pictures, but of men which merited for some notable cause to be perpetually remembred. And though of the more ancient Papists, some have borrowed of the Gentiles (as appeareth in Lactantius) that defence for Images: That Simulachra are pro climentis literarum, ot per es discerent homines Deum inuisibilem cognoscere: Images (say they, and so before them to the Heathen Said) are in flead of Letters, whereby men might learne to know the inuifible God: in which viderstanding (perhaps they no otherwise esteemed them then Pi-Aures indeed; yet as that of Baal or Bel fet up in memorie of Belue the Babylanian, became afterwards the most reucrenced Idoll of the World, by which so many Nations (and they which were appropriate to God himselfe) were missed and cast away: so those very stockes and stones, and painted Canuales (called the pictures of christ, our Ladie, and others) were by thousands of ignorant people, not onely adored, but esteemed to have life, motion, and understanding. On these slockes wee call (layth the Booke of Wisedome) when we passe through the raging waves, on these slockes more rotten then the Ship that carieth ws.

CHAP.10.S.7. of the History of the World.

This Heathen invention of Images became so fruitfull in after-times, breeding an infinite multitude of gods, that they were forced to diffinguish them into degrees and orders; as Dy Confentes, seu maiorum gentium; selecti, Patrity, in seniores, dy medii: Counselling Gods, or Gods of the mightiest Nobilitie, scleet Gods, Patrian, Gods of marke, and common Gods (which the Romanes called Medioxumi) dij infimi, and terrestriall Heroes, and multitudes of other Gods: of which Saint Jugustine hath made largemention in his Booke de Ciuitate Dei. But (faith Lactantius) among all those Lib.14, milerable foules and rotten bodies, worshipped by men more like to their Idols, did Epimenides Cretensis (by what good Angell mooned I know not) erect in the Athenian Fields, Altars to the vnknowne God, which stood with the same title and dedi-20 cation even to the times of Saint Paul: who made them first know to whom those Altars belonged, and opened their eyes which were capable of grace, that they might discerne the difference betwixt that light which lighteneth enery man, and the obscure and stinking mist wherin the Deuil had so many yeeres led and misled them. And it sufficed not that the multitude of these Gods was so great in generall, or that euerie Nation had some one which tooke particular and singular care of them; as Iupiter in Creete, Ilis in Agypt, in Athens Minerua, in Samos Juno, in Paplios Venus, and fo of all other parts; but every Citie, and almost every Family had a God a-part. For as it is written in the second of Kings: the men of Babel, made Succoth Benoth, and the Capaty, 20,18-21 men of Cuth made Nergal, and the men of Hamath made Ashima, and the Aums made 40 Nibhaz and Tarrak, and the Sephernaims burnt their children in the fire to Adramelech. All which how plainly hath the Prophet Elay derided? Men cut clowne Trees, rinde them, burne a part of them, make readie their meate, and warme themselves by the fire thereof, and of the residue he maketha God; an Idoll, and prayeth unto it : but God hath shut their eyes from sight, and their hearts from understanding. It is therefore safest for a Christian to beleeue the Commandements of God so direct against Idolatrie, to beleeue the Prophets, and to believe Saint Paul: who speaketh thus plainely and feelingly, cap. 44.

But as of Belus there is no certaine memorie (as touching particulars:) fo of this Winus (whole Storie is gathered out of Pro. 10 phane Authours) I find nothing so warrantable, but that the same may bee disputed, and in the greatest part doubted. For although that piece of Berofus set out and commented vpon by Annius, hath many good things in it, and giveth great light (as Chytraus noteth) to the vinderstanding of Diodorus Siculus, Dion, Halycarnassaus, and others: yet Lodouicus Viues, B. Rhenanus, and others after them have layed open the imperfection and defects of the Fragment; proouing directly that it cannot bee the fame Berofus which lived in Alexanders time, cited by Athenaus and lofephus: and whose Statue the Athenians erected, sayth Plinie. Yet it is from him chiefely, that many haue gathered the succession of the Babylonian and Assyrian Princes, euen from Wimrod to the eighteenth King Afcatades, and to the times of Iofua. For of Metafibe- 20 nes an Historian, of the Race of the Persian Priests, there are found but certaine Papers, or some few lines of the Chaldean and Assyrian Monarchies : but hee afterwards in the collection of the Persian Kings is not without his errours.

Ctesias of Cnidus (a Citie adioyning to Halicarnassu) who lived together with Cyrus the yonger, and with Artaxerxes Mnemon, gathered his Historie out of the Perfiam Records, and reacheth as farre vpwards as Ninus and Semiramis: and though in the Storie of Cyrus the yonger, Xenophon approoueth him in some things, and Athenaus, Pansanias and Tertullian cite him; yet so base and apparent are his flatteries of the times and Princes with whom he lived, and so incredible are the numbers which he finds in the Armies of Ninus, and especially of Semiramis; as what soeuer his re- 30 ports were, times haue confumed his workes, fauing some very few excerptions lately published. And therefore in things vncertaine, seeing a long discourse cannot bee pleasing to men of judgement, I will passe ouer the Acts of this third Assyrian, in as few words as I can expresse them. Saint Angustine affirmes that Ninus mastered all Asia, India excepted. Others say that he wanne it all, saue India, Bactria, and Arabia. For he made Aricus of Arabia the Companion of his Conquests, with whom hee entred into a straight league of amitie, because he commanded many people and was his Kinsman, and a Chuste, and the neerest Prince confronting Babylonia. His first enterprize was vpon Syria, which he might easily subdue, both because he inuaded it on the sodaine, 40 and because it lay next him: and also because the Arabians and their King Aricus (which bordered Syria) affisted him in the Conquest thereof.

The King of Armenia, Barzanes, he forced to acknowledge him, and to aide him in his Warre against Zoroaster : for from Armenia hee bent himselse that way toward the East; but that euer he commanded the lesser Asia, I doe not beleeue, for none of his Successours had any possession therein.

His third Warre was against Pharnus, King of the Medes, whom it is fayd that hee ouerthrew, and cruelly murthered with his feuen children, though others affirme that they all dyed in one battaile against him. Whether hee invaded Zoroaster beforethe building or amplifying of Niniue, or after, it is uncertaine. It is faid that 50 he made two expeditions into Bactria: and that finding little or ill successe in the first, he returned, and set the worke of Niniue forward: and then a second time entred Bactria with 1700000. Foot, and 200000. Horse, and 10000. sixe hundred Chariots: being encountred by Zoroaster with 400000. But Ninus preuayling, and Aug.de Cinic. Zoroafter flaine, he entred farther into the Countrie, and belieged the chiefe Citie Dei. thereof, called Bactra or Bactrion (faith Stephanus:) which by a passage found, and steph.devrb. an assault given by Semiramis (the wife of Menon) he entred and possest. Voon this occasion Winus both admiring her judgement and valour, together with her person and externall beautie, fancied her so strongly, as (neglecting all Princely respects) he tooke her from her husband, whose eyes he threatned to thrust out if he refused to consent. He therefore yeelding to the passion of loue in Ninus , and to the passion of sorrow in himselfe, by the strong perswasions of shame and dishonor, cast himselfe head-long into the water and dved.

CHAP. XI.

Of ZOROASTER, supposed to have beene the chiefe Author of Magick arts: and of the divers kindes of Magicke.

That ZOROASTER was not CHAM, nor the first Inventer of Astrologie, or of Magicke : and that there were divers great Magicians of this name.

OROASTER King of the Bactrians, Vincentius Supposeth to be Cham, the sonne of Noah : A fancie of little probabilitie. For Cham was the Paternall Ancester of Ninus, the Father of Chus, the Grand-father of Nimrod, whose sonne was Belus, the Father of Ninus. It may be that Vincentius had heard of that booke which was called Scriptura Cham, deuised by some wicked Knaue, and so intituled: of which Sixtus Senensis hath made the due mention.

It is reported by Cassianus, that Serenus Abbas gaue cassian. in Ocia.

so did Comestor in his Scholasticall Historie: which Arte (saith he) with the seven liberall Sciences he writ in fourteene Pillers: seuen of which were made of brasse, to resist the defacing by the waters of the Floud; and seuen of brick against the iniurie of fire. There was also another deuised discourse, which went vnder the title of Prophetia Cham. Casianus out of Serenus hath somewhat like vnto this of Comester. These be Cassianus wordes: CHAM (filius NOAH) qui superstitionibus istis & sacrilegis fuit artibus infectus, sciens nullum se posse super hijs memorialem librum in Arcam prossusinferre, in quaerat cum patreiusto, &c. CHAM (the sonne of NOAH) who was infected with these superstitions, and sacrilegious Arts, knowing that he could not bring any 50 booke or memoriall of that nature into the Arke, wherein he was to remayne with his godly Father, caused the Precepts and Rules thereof to be grauen in metall and hard stone.

S. Augustine noteth that Zoroaster was said to have laught at his birth, when all other children weepe; which presaged the great knowledge which afterward he attayned vnto: being taken for the Inuenter of naturall Maguek and other Arts; for the Corrupter, saith Plinie and lustine. But I doe not thinke that Zoroaster invented the doctrine of the Horoscopes or Natimities ; or first found out the nature of herbs, stones, and mineralls, or their Sympatheticall or Antipatheticall workings; of which, I know not what King of Chaldea is also made the Inuenter. I rather thinke that these knowledges were farre more ancient, and left by Noah to his sonnes. For Ibraham who had not any acquaintance with Zoroaster, (as Iosephus reporteth) was no lesse learned herein then any other in that age, if he exceeded not all menthen liuing: differing from the wisedome of after-times in this, that he knew and acknowledged the true cause, and giver of life and vertue to nature and all naturall things; whereas others (forgetting Gods infinite, dispersed; and yniuer all power) admired to the instruments, and attributed proper strength to the things themselues, (from which the effects were fensible) which belonged to that wisedome, which being one, and remagning in it selfe, can doe all things and reneweth all.

Now whether this Zoroaster (ouer-throwne by Ninus) were the same which was so excellent a Naturalist, it is doubted. For Zoroaster the Magician, Ctessas calls Oxyartes, whom Plinie findes of a later time. And if Zoroaster were taken away by a Spirit (being in the midst of his Disciples) as some Authors report, then Zoroalter, flaine by Ninus, was not the Magician: which is also the opinion of Scaliger.

Againe, lofephus and Cedrenus affirme, that Seth firft found out the Planets, or wandring Starres, and other Motions of the Heanens: for if this arte had been in- 20 uented by Zoroaster, he could not have attayned to any such excellencie therein, in his owne life time; but being a man (as it seemeth) of singular judgement, he might adde somewhat to this kinde of knowledge, and leaue it by writing to posteritie.

But of this Zoroaster there is much dispute : and no lesse iangling about the word and arte of Magick. Arnobius remembreth foure, to whom the name of Zoroafter, or Zoroastres was given : which by Hermodorus and Dinon seemeth to be but a rognomen, or name of arte, and was as much to fay, as aftrorum cultor. The first, Arnobius calleth the Bactrian, which may be the same that Ninus ouerthrew: the second, a Chaldesn, and the Astronomer of Ninus: the third was Zoroaster Pamphylius, who liued in the time of Cyrus, and his familiar: the fourth, Zoroaster Armenius, the Ne-30 phew of Hostianes, which followed Xerxes into Greece: betweene whom and Cyrus there past threescore and eighteene yeeres. Suidas remembreth a fift, called Persone. dus sapiens : and Plate speaketh of Zoroaster the sonne of Oromas des ; which Picus Mirandula confirmeth.

Now of what Nation the first and chiefe Zoroaster was, it is doubted. Plinie and Laertius make hima Persian. Gemisshius or Pletho, Ficinus and Steuchius, make hima Chaldean. But by those bookes of one Zoroaster, found by Picus Mirandula, it appeareth plainely, that the Author of them was a Chaldean by Nation, though the word (Chaldean) was as often given to the learned Priests peculiarly, as for any distinguishment of Nations. Porphyrius makes the Chaldai and Magi diners; Picus the same. 40 But that this Zoroaster was a Chaldean both by Nation and Profession, it appeareth by his Bookes, which (faith Piens) were written in the Chaldean tongue; and the Comment in the same language. Now that the Magi and they were not differing, it may be judged by the name of those bookes of Zoroaster, which in an Epistle of Mirandula to Ficinus, he saith, to be intituled, Patris EZRE ZOROASTRIS, & MELCHIOR magorum oracula.

è. II.

Of the name of Magia : and that it was anciently farre divers from Conjuring, and Witcheraft.

Ow for Magicke it felfe; which Arte (faith MIRANDVLA) pauci intelli- Picamir fol.81. gunt; multi reprehendunt; Few understand, and many reprehend. Et sicut Canes ignotos semper allatrant; As Dogs barke at those they know not: so they condemne and hate the things they understand not: I thinke it bis hos horamiffe (leaning Ninus for awhile) to speake somewhat thereof.

10: It is true that many men abhorre the very name and word (Magus) because of Simon Magus: who being indeede, not Magus, but Goes, (that is) familiar with cuill foirits, viurped thattitle. For Magicke, Conjuring, and Witcherie, are farre differing Arts, whereof Plinie being ignorant (coffeth thereat. For Nero (laith Plinie) who Plin 1.30 hif. had the most excellent Magicians of the East sent him by Tyridates King of Arme- Nat. nia, who held that Kingdome by his grace, found the arte after long fludie and labour arte of worthipping God, To which effect Apollonius in his Epiftles expounding the 20 word (udges) faith, that the Persians called their gods udges: whence he addeth that Mague is either & xt ovor seds or seggraving sear (that is) that Mague is a name sometime of him that is a God by nature; sometimes of him that is in the service of God: in which latter sense it is taken, Matth. 2. v.I. And this is the first and highest kinde: which Piccolominie calleth divine Magicke: and these did the Latines newly Piccol, d. Defin. intitle Sapientes or Wisemen: For the feare & worship of God is the beginning of knowledge. Proneth. 1.7. These Wisemen the Greekes call Philosophers : the Indians, Brachmans : which name they 10bn HIIZ. fomewhat neerely retayne to this day, calling their Priests Bramines; among the Lington. exptians they were termed Priests; with the Hebrewes they were called Cabalistes, Prophets. Scribes, and Pharifees: amongst the Babylonians they were differenced by 30 the name of Chaldeans: and among the Persians, Magicians: of whom Arnobius (speaking of Hostanes, one of the ancient Magicians) vieth these wordes: Et verum Deum In offanio Mimerita maiestate profequitur, & Angelos ministros Dei, fed veri, eius venerationi nouit af- mun Faminiscum sistere, Idem damonas prodit terrenos, vagos, humanitatis inimicos; Sosthenes (for so M.Fælix calleth him, not HosTANES) eftribeth the due maieflie to the true God, and acknowledgeth that his Angels are ministers and messengers which attend the worship of the true God. He also hash delivered that there are Devills earthly and wandering, and enemies to mankinde.

HIS MAIESTIE also in his first Booke of Damonologie c. 2. acknowledgeth, that in the Persian tongue the word (Magus) imports as much as a contemplator of di-40 uine & heavenly sciences; but vniustly so called, because the Chaldeans were ignorant of the true divinitie. And it is also right which HIS MALESTLE auoweth, that vnder the name of Magick al other vulawfull arts are comprehended, and yet doth His MAJESTIE distinguish it from Necromancie, Witcher aft, and the rest : of all which he hath written largely and most learnedly. For the Magicke which HIS MAIESTIE Damonolog, 1.2. condemneth, is of that kinde whereof the Deuil is a partie. Daniel in his second chap- cap. 1. ter nameth foure kindes of those Wisemen: Arioli, Magi, Malesici, and Chaldai. Arioli the old Latine translation calleth Sophistes: Vatablus and Pagninus, Genethliacos, or Physues, or Philosophers, or (according to the note of Vatablus) Naturalists: Nempe sunt Magiapud Barbares, quod Philosophi apud Gracos (scilicet) dininarum humanarumg, verum 50 Scientiam profitentes: For the Magi are the same with the Barbarians, as the Philosophers are with the Gracians (that is) men that professe the knowledge of things both dinine and humane. The Greeke and the English call them Inchanters; Junius, Magicians; Castalion, Coniecturers: in the Syrian they are all foure by one name called Sapientes Babylonis; The Wisemen of Babel.

The second sort Vatablus, Pagnin, Iunius, and our English, call Astrologers; Hierome and the Septuagint, Magisians.

The third kinde are Malefici, or Venefici; in Hierome, Pagnin, and the Septuagint. Witches, or Poyloners . in Iunius, Prastigiatores, or Sorcerers, as in English.

That Witches are also rightly so called Venefici, or Poyloners; and that indeede there is a kinde of Malefici, which without any arte of Magicke or Mecromancie vse the helpe of the Deuill to doe mischiese, H is MAIESTIE confirmeth in the first Chapter of his second Booke: speaking also in the fifth Chapter of their practice to mixe the powder of dead bodies with other things by the Deuill prepared; and at other times to make pictures of Waxe, or Clay, or otherwise (asit were Suoramentali- 10 ter) to effect those things, which the Deuill by other meanes bringeth to passe.

The fourth, all Translators call Chaldeans: who tooke vpon them to foretell all things to come, as well naturall as humane, and their events: and this they vaunted to performe by the influences of the Starres by them observed, and vinderstood.

Such were, and to this day partly (if not altogether) are the corruptions, which have made odious the very name of Magicke, having chiefly fought (as is the manner of all impostures) to counterfait the highest and most noble part of it, yet so as they have also crept into the inferior degrees.

A second kinde of Magicke was that part of Astrologie, which had respect to sowing and planting, and all kindes of agriculture and hulbandrie: which was a know 20 ledge of the motions and influences of the Starres into those lower Elements.

Philo Indans goeth farther, affirming, that by this part of Magicke or Aftrologie, together with the motions of the Starres and other heavenly bodies, Abraham found out the knowledge of the true God, while he lived in Chaldaa : Qui contemplatione creaturarum cognouit Creatorem, (faith Io. DAMASCEN.) Who knew the Creator by the contemplation of the creature. Iosephus reporteth of Abraham, that he instructed the Agyptians in Arithmeticke and Astronomie, who before ABRAHAMS comming unto them knew none of thefe friences.

And so doth Archangelus de Burgo, in defence of Murandula against Garsias: ALEX-ANDER & EVPOLEMON dicant, quod ABRAHAM fanctitate & sapientia omniam 30 prastantisimus Chaldaos primum, deinde Phanices, demum Agyptios sacerdotes Astrolegiam & diuina docuerit; ALEXANDER (faith he, meaning ALEXANDER POLYHI-STOR) and EVPOLEMON affirme, that ABRAHAM the holyest and wifest of men, did first teach the Chaldeans, then the Phanicians, lastly, the Ægyptian Priests, Astrologic

De vit, fanet.

The third kinde of Magicke contayneth the whole Philosophie of nature; not the brabblings of the Ariltotelians, but that which bringeth to light the inmost vertues, and draweth them out of natures hidden bosome to humane vse, Virtutes in centro centri latentes; Vertues hidden in the center of the center, according to the Chymifi. Of this fort were Albertus, Arnoldus de villanoua, Raymond, Bacon, and many others: 40 and before these, in elder times, and who better understood the power of nature, and how to apply things that worke to things that fuffer, were Zeroaster before spoken of: Apollonius Tyanaus remembred by S. Hierome to Paulinus; in some mens opinion Numa Pompilius among the Romanes: among the Indians, The/pian: among the Egyptians, Hermes: among the Babylonians, Budda: the Thracians had Zamolxu: the Hyperborians (as is supposed) Abbaru : and the Italians, Petrus Aponensis. The Magicke which these men profest is thus defined : Magia est connexio à viro sapiente agentium per naturam cum patientibus, sibi congruenter respondentibus, vt inde opera prodeant non fine corum admiratione qui causamignorant; Magicke is the connexion of natural agents * Totoin mun- and patients, answerable each to other, wrought by a wise man to the bringing forth of such 50 effects, as are wonderfull to those that know not their causes. In all these three kindes do lucet Trias, cuius Monas est princeps, cuntia which other men divide into foure, it seemeth that Zoroaster was exceedingly learnamque perfecit ned especially in the sirst and highest. For in his Oracles he confesset God to be tradidit feeude. the Creator of the Vniuersall: he beleeueth of the * Trinitie, which he could not in-nestigate by any naturall knowledge: he speaketh of Angels, and of Paradise: anproueth the immortalitie of the foule: teacheth Truth, Faith, Hope, and Loue.difcourfing of the Abstinence and Charitie of the Magi: which Oracles of his, Pfelliss, Pfell & Ficin. Ficinus, Patritius, and others have gathered and translated.

Of this Zoroaster, Eufebius in the Theologie of the Phanicians, vling Zoroasters owne wordes : Hac ad verbum scribit (faith Evsebivs) Deus primus incorruptibi- De prep. Euane. lium, sempiternus, ingenitus, expers partium, sibijpsi simillimus, benorum omnium auriga, munera non expectans, optimus, prudentissmus, pater iuris, sine doctrina iustitiam perdo-Eus natura perfectus, sapiens, sacrenature vnicus inventor, &c. Thus writeth ZOROA-STER word for word. God the first incorruptible, everlasting, unbegotten, without parts. most like himselfe, the guide of all good, expecting no reward, the best, the wifest, the father of right, having learn'd suffice without teaching, perfect wife by nature, the onely inventer thereof.

Sixtus Senensis speaking of the wisedome of the Chaldeans, doth distinguish those Lib. 2. fol. 45, wise men into fine orders, (to wit) Chascedim, or Chaldeans: Asaphim, or Magicians: Chartumim; (which he translates Arioli, or Sophists) Mecasphim, or Malefici, or Venefici ; Witches, or Poyloners; and Gazarim Augures, or Aruspices, or Dininers.

Chalcodim were those which had the name of Chaldeans, which were Astronomers: Hij colorum motus diligentissime spectarunt; These did most diligently contemplate the moto tions of the heavens: whom Philo in the life of Abraham describeth.

Alaphim were in the old Latine translation called Philosophers: of the Septuagint and of Hierome, Magicians: Qui de omnium tam diumarum quam humanarum rerum causis Philosophati funt; Who discoursed of the causes of all things, as well divine as humane: of whom Origen makes Balaam (the sonne of Beer) to be the first : but Lacrtius ascri- Lacrting beth the invention of this arte to Zoroastres the Persian.

Chartumim, or Inchanters, the Disciples (faith Saint Augustine, Plinie, and Iustine) of another Zoroaftres: who corrupted the admirable wifedome of the Magi, which he received from his Ancesters.

Mecasphim, or Venefics, or Witches, are those of which we have spoken alreadie out 20 of H 18 MAIESTIES booke of Damonologia.

Gazarim, or Arufpices (after S. Hierome) which divine from the entrailes of beafts flaine for facrifices: or by Gazarim others understand Augures, who divine by the flying, finging, or feeding of birds.

By this distinction we may perceive the difference betweene those wise men which the Kings of Babylon entertayned; and that the name and profession of the Magi among the ancient Persians was most honest. For as Peucer truely obserueth, Praerant religioni Persica, ut in populo Dei Leuita, studysą, vera Philosophia dediti erant: Peucer de Dininec quifquam Rex Perfarum poterat effe, qui non antea Magorum disciplinam scientiamg, natimode mag. percepifet; The Magi (faith he) were the chiefe Ministers of the Persian Religion, as the 40 Leuites among Gods people, and they were given to the studies of true Philosophie : neyther could any be King of the Persians, who had not first beene exercised in the mysterics and knowledge of the Magi. SIXTVS SENENSIS in defence of Origen against Polychronius and Theophilus, hath two kindes of Magicke, his owne wordes are these: Et ne quem Bibl. 6. fol. 42.4; moucant pramissa Polychronis & Theophili testimonia, sciendum est duplicem effe Magiam; alteram vbig, ab ORIGINE damnatam, que per fudera cum damonibus inita aut verè aut apparenter operatur; alteram ab ORIGINE laudatam, qua ad practicen naturalis philosophia pertinet, docens admirabiles res operari ex applicatione mutua naturalium virtutum ad inuicem agentium ac patientium; That the testimonies of THEO-PHILVS and POLYCHRONIVS (faith he) may not mooue any man, it is to be under-50 Stood that Magicke is of two forts, the one enerywhere condemned by ORIGEN; which worketh (whether truely or feemingly) by covenants made with Devills; the other commended by ORIGEN; which appertayneth to the practick part of naturall Philosophie, teaching to worke admirable things by the mutuall application of naturall vertues, agent and suffering reciprocally. This partition Hierome doth embrace in the first of his Commentaries vpon Daniel: where considering of the difference which Daniel makes betweene these foure kindes of wise Men formerly remembred, he vseth this distin-Rion : Quos nos hariolos ; ceteri emaises (id est) incantatores interpretati funt , videntur mihi esse qui verbis rem peragunt; Magi, qui de singulis philosophantur; malestei, qui sanguine viuntur & victimis, & sape contingunt corpora mortuorum : porro in Chaldeis Genethliacos fignificari puto, quos vulgo Mathematicos vocant. Confuetudo autem communis Ma. gos pro maleficis accipit, qui aliter habentur apud gentem suam, eo quod sint Philosophi Chaldaorum : & ad artis huius (cientiam Reges quoq, & Principes ein dem gentis omnia faciant : vade & in natiuitate Domini Saluatoris ipsi primum ortum eius intellexerunt, & venientes in fanct am Bethlehem adorauerunt puerum, stella desuper ostendente; They whom we call 10 Sorcerers, and others interpret Inchanters, seeme to me such as performe things by wordes: Maricians, fuch as handle every thing philosophically , Witches, that we bloud and facrifices. and often lay hands on the body of the dead: further, among the Chaldaans I take them to be signified by the name of Coniccturers upon nativities, whom the vulgar call Mathematicians. But common custome takes Magicians for Witches, who are otherwise reputed in their owne Nation: for they are the Philosophers of the Chaldaans: yea Kings and Princes of that Nation doe all that they doe according to the knowledge of this arte: whence at the nativitie of the Lord our Sautour they first of all understood his birth , and comming unto holy Bethlehem did worship the Child: the starre from about shewing him unto them. By this therefore it appeareth that there is great difference betweene the doctrine of a Mazician, and 20 the abuse of the word. For though some Writers affirme, that Magus hodie dictur, qui ex fædere facto vittur diaboli opera adrem quamcung,; That he is called a Magician now adayes, who having entred league with the Devill, vfeth his helpe to any matter : yet (as our Saujour faid of Dinorce) it was not so from the beginning. For the Arte of Magicke is of the wisedome of Nature; other Artes which vnder-goe that title, were inuented by the fallhood, subtletie, and enuie of the Deuill. In the latter there is no other doctrine, then the vie of certayne ceremonies, Per malam fidem, By an euil faith: in the former no other ill, then the inuestigation of those vertues and hidden properties. which God hath given to his Creatures, and how fitly to apply things that worketo things that fuffer. And though by the lewes, those excellent Magicians, Philosophers, 30 and Dinines, which came to worship our Saujour Christ, were termed Mechaschephim, or Mecasphim; yet had they no other reason, then common custome therein. Consuctudo autem communis Magos pro maleficis accipit; Common custome (saith S.H I ER OME) Hieron in Da-Pet, Mart, Loci. call very improperly Necromancie. Mirandula in his Apologie goeth further: For by understanding (faith he) the vt- 50 termost activitie of naturali agents we are assisted to know the Divinitie of Christ : for otherwife (to vie his owne wordes) ignoratis terminis potentia & virtuits rerum naturalium stat nos dubitare illa eadem opera, qua fecit Christus, posse fieri per media naturalia; The termes or limits of naturall power and vertue not understood, we must needes doubt whether those verie workes which Christ did may not bee done by natural meanes: after which he goeth on in this fort: Ideo non harctice, non superstitiose dixi, sed verisime & Catholice per talem Magiam adiunari nos in cognoscenda diunitate Christi: Therefore I (aid not heretically, not Superstitiously, but most truly and Catholikely, that by Such Magicke wee are furthered in knowing the Divinitie of Christ. And seeing the lewes and others the enemies of Christian Religion, doe impudently and impiously object, that those Miracles which Christ wrought were not aboue Nature, but by the exquisite knowledge thereof performed: Mirandula a man for his yeeres fuller of knowledge then any that this latter Age hath brought forth, might with good reason auow, that the vttermost of 10 Natures workes being knowne, the workes which Christ did, and which (as himselfe witneffeth) no man could doe, doe manifestly testifie of themselues, that they were performed by that hand which held Nature therein but as a Pencill, and by a power infinitely supreme and divine; and thereby those that were faithlesse, were eyther converted or put to filence.

d. III.

That the good knowledge in the ancient Mugicke is not to bee condemned: though the Deuill here as in other kinds hath fought to obtrude euill things, under the name and colour of good things.

Reing therefore it is confessed by all of understanding, that a Magician (according to the Persian word) is no other then, Dimnorum cultor of interpres: A studious observer and expounder of divine things : and the Art it selfe (I meane the Art of naturall Magicke) no other, Quam naturalis

Philosophia absoluta consummatio; Then the absolute perfection of naturall Philosophie: Certainely then it proceedeth from common ignorance, and no way forteth with wife and learned men promitene and without difference and distinction. to confound lawfull and praise-worthy knowledge with that impious, and (to vse 30 Saint Pauls words) with those beggerly rudiments, which the Deuill hath shuffled in, and by them bewitcheth and befooleth gracelesse men. For if we condemne naturall Magicke, or the wifedome of Nature, because the Deuill (who knoweth more then any man) doth also teach Witches and Poysoners the harmefull parts of Herbes, Drugges, Minerals, and Excrements: then may wee by the fame rule condemne the Physician, and the Art of healing. For the Deuill also in the Oracles of Amphiaraus, Amphilochus, Trophonius, and the like, taught men in Dreames what Herbes and Drugges were proper for such and such diseases. Now no man of sudgement is ignorant, that the Deuill from the beginning hath fought to thrust himselfe into the same imployment among the Ministers and Seruants of God, changing him-🖰 selse for that purpose into an Angell of Light. Hee hath led men to Idolatrie as a doctrine of Religion; he hath thrust in his Prophets among those of the true God; hee hath corrupted the Art of Astrologie, by giving a divine power to the Starres, teaching men to esteeme them as Gods, and not as instruments. And (as Bunting obser- Bunting chron, ueth) it is true, that indicial! Astrologic is corrupted with many superstitions: but theabuse of the thing takes not away the Art; considering that heavenly bodies (as even general experience shewerh) have and exercise their operation vpon the inferiour. For the Sunne, and the Starre of Marse doe drie; the Moone doth moisten, and governe the Tides of the Sea. Againe, the Planets, as they have severall and proper names, so have they severall and proper vertues: the Starres doe also 50 differ in beautie and in magnitude; and to all the Starres hath God given also their proper names, which (had they not influences and vertues different) needed not: He counteth the number of the Starres, and calleth them by their names. But into the good Pfal. 147. and profitable knowledge of the celeftiall influences, the Deuill ceafeth not to shuffle in his Superstitions; and so to the knowledge of the secret vertues of Nature hath he fastened his doctrine of Characters, Numbers, and Incantations; and taught mento beleeue in the strength of Words and Letters: (which without Faith in God are but Inke or common breath) thereby eyther to equall his owne with the All-powerfull Word of God, or to diminish the glorie of Gods creating Word, by whom are all things. Moreouer, hee was neuer ignorant, that both the wife and the simple observe when the Sea-birds for sake the shores and five into the Land, that commonly some great storme followeth; that the high slying of the Kite and the Swallow betoken faire weather; that the crying of Crowes and bathing of Duckes foreshew raine: for they feele the Ayre moistened in their Quils. And it is written in Hieremie the 10 Prophet, Euen the Storkein the ayre knoweth her appointed times, and the Turtle, and the Crane, and the Swallow. Hereupon, this enemie of Mankind working upon these as voon the rest of Gods creatures, long time abused the Heathen by teaching them to observe the flying of Fowles, and thereby to judge of good or ill successe in the Warre: and (withall) to looke into their entrailes for the same, as if God had written the secrets of vnsearchable prouidence in the liners and bowels of birds and beasts. Againe, because it pleased God sometimes by Dreames, not only to warne and teach his Prophets and Apostles, but Heathen Princes also; as Abimelech to restore Sarato ABRAHAM; because he admonished Ioseph, and by Dreame informed Incob, Laban, Pharao, Salomon, Paul, Ananias, the Magi of the East, and others. For as it is remem- 20 bred in IoB: In Dreames and Visions of the night when sleepe falleth upon men, Go. distinitatis imitationes, bis mocke-distinitie. This in the end grew fo common, as ARI-STIDES compiled an Ephemerides of his owne Dreames: Mithridates of those of his Coneubines. Yea the Romanes finding the inconvenience hereof, because all Dreames (without distinction of causes) were drawneto Dinination, forbad the same by a Law, as by the words of prohibition (aut narrandis somny's occultam aliquam artem disimandi) it may appeare. Likewise by the Law of God in Deuteronomie cap. 13. seducing Dreamers were ordered to be flaine. Yet it is to be contemned, not that Marcus An. 30 tonius was told a remedie in his Dreame for two grieuous diseases that oppress him; Aug de cura pro nor that of Alexander Macedon for the cure of Ptolomies poyfoned wound; nor that mortuin agenda. which Saint Augustine reporteth of a Millanoile; whose some (the Father dead) being demanded a debt alreadie payed, was told by his Father in a Dreame where the Acquittancelay to discharge it: nor that of Astyages of his Daughter, and many others of like nature. Of the reason of all which, for as much as the cause is not in our selues, this place denieth dispute.

That DANIELS misliking NABVCHODONOSORS condemning of the Magicians doth not instific all their practices.

VT it may be objected, that if fuch Divination as the Heathens commonly vied were to be condemned in them, who tooke on them verie many and ftrange Reguelations: how came it to passe that Daniel both condemned the hastir sentence of Transition of the passe that Daniel both cians of Chaldea, and in a fort forbad it ? especially considering that fuch kind of people God himselfe commanded to be slaine. To this divers answeres 50 may be giuen. First, it seemeth that Daniel had respect to those Chaldeans, because they acknowledged that the Dreame of the King, which himselfe had forgotten, could not be knowne to any man by any Art eyther Naturallor Diabolicall: For there is none other (layd the Chaldeans) that can declare it before the King, except the Gods,

whose dwelling is not with flesh: and herein they consessed the power of the Euer-liuing

Secondly, it may be coniectured (and that with good reason) that among so many learned men, some of them did not exercise themselves in any enill or vulawfull Artes, but were meerely Magicians and Naturalists: and therefore when the King commanded to kill all, Daniel perswaded the contrarie, and called it a hastic judgement, which proceeded with furie without examination. And that some of those mens studies and professions were lawfull, it may be gathered by Daniels instruction: for himselfe had beene taught by them, and was called chiefe of the Inchanters; of 10 which some were termed Sooth fayers, others Astrologians, others Chaldeans, others Magior Wifemen: and therefore of diftin to professions.

Thirdly, Daniel misliked and forbad the execution of that judgement, because it was vniust. For how soeuer those men might descrue punishment for the practice of vnlawfull Arts (though not vnlawfull according to the Law of that State) yet herein they were altogether guiltlesse. For it exceeded humane power to pierce the Kings thought, which the Deuill himselfe could not know. So then in Daniels dislike, and hindering of the execution of fentence of death pronounced against the Magicians. there is no absolute instifying of their practice and profession.

Otwithstanding this mixture euery where of good with euill, of falsehood with truth of corruption with cleannesse and purity: The good, The truth, The puritie in enery kind may well be embraced: As in the ancient worshipping of God by Sacrifice; there was no man knowing God among the Elders, that therefore forbare to offer Sacrifice to the 30 God of all power, because the Deuill in the Image of Baal, Astaroth, Chemoth, Iupiter, Avollo, and the like was so adored.

Neyther did the abuse of Astrologie terrifie Abraham (if we may beleeve the most ancient and religious Historians) from observing the motions and natures of hea- Euseb ex Artauenly bodies; neyther can it dehort wife and learned men in these dayes from attri- p.m. & Polphile. buting those vertues, influences, and inclinations to the Starres and other lights of Heauen, which God hath given to those his glorious creatures.

The Sympatheticall and Antipatheticall working of Herbes, Plants, Stones, Minerals, with their other vtmost vertues, sometimes taught by the Deuill, and applyed by his Ministers to harmefull and vncharitable ends, can neuer terrifie the honest 40 and learned Phylician or Magician from the vling of them to the helpe and comfort of Mankind: neyther can the illusions, whereby the Deuill betrayeth such men as are fallen from God, make other men reject the observations of Dreames; so farre as with a good Faith and a Religious caution they may make vse of them.

Lastly, the prohibition to marke flying of Fowles (as signes of good or enill suc- Deut. 18,20). cesse) hath no reference at all to the crying of Crowes against Raine, or to any observation not superstitious, and whereof a reason or cause may be given. For if we confound Arts with the abuse of them, wee Thall not only condemne all honest Trades and enterchange among men (for there are that deceive in all professions) 50 but wee shall in a short time burie in forgetfulnesse all excellent knowledge and all learning, or obscure and couer it ouer with a most scornefull and beggerly ignorance : and (as Plinie teacheth) wee should shew our selues ingratos erga eos, quilabore curag lucem nobis aperuerunt in hac luce : Vnthankefull we should shew our selucs towards those, who with paines and care have discovered unto us light in this light. Indeed Indeed not only these naturall knowledges are condemned by those that areignorant; but the Mathematickes also and Professors thereof: though those that are excellently learned judge of it in this fort: In speculo Mathematico verum illud, qued in omni scibili quaritur, relucet; non modo remota similitudine, sed fulgida quadam propinanitate : In the Glaffe of the Mathematickes that Truth doth fhine, which is lought in enery kind of knowledge; not in an obscure image, but in a neere and manifest representation.

Q. VI.

Of the divers kindes of unlawfull Magicke.

Specie T is true that there are many Artes, if wee may so call them, which are couered with the name of Magicke: and esteemed abusinely to beeas branches of that Tree, on whose root they neuer grew. The first of these hath the name of Necromancie or Goetia: and of this againe there are divers kinds. The one is an Invocation at the Graves of the dead to whom the Deuill himselfe giues answere in stead of those that seeme to appeare. For certaine it is, that the immortall soules of men doe not inhabit the dust and dead bodies, but they give motion and vnderstanding to the living death being nothing else but a separation of the bodie and soule: and therefore the soule is not to be found in

A second practice of those men, who pay Tribute or are in league with Satan, is that of conjuring or of rayling vp Deuils, of whom they hope to learne what they lift. These men are so distract, as they beleeve that by terrible words they make the Denill to tremble; that being once impaled in a Circle (a Circle which cannot keepe out a Mouse) they therein (as they suppose) insconce themselves against that great Monster. Doubtlesse, they forget that the Deuill is not terrified from doing ill and all that is contrarie to God and goodnesse, no, not by the searefull Word of the Almightie: and that he feared not to offer to fit in Gods feat, that hee made no scruple to tempt our Sauiour Christ, whom himselfe called the Sonne of God. So, forgetting these proud parts of his, an vinworthy wretch will yet resolue himselfe, that hee 20 can drawthe Deuill out of Hell, and terrifie him with a Phrase: whereas in verie truth, the obedience which Deuils seeme to vse, is but thereby to possesse themselves of the bodies and soules of those which rayle them vp; as His Maiestie in his Booke aforenamed hath excellently taught: That the Deuils obedience is only, fecundum quid, (cilices ex pacto; respective, that is, upon bargaine.

I cannot tell what they can doe vpon those simple and ignorant Deuils, which inhabite Jamblicas imagination; but fure I am the restare apt enough to come vicalled: and alwayes attending the cogitations of their feruants and vasfals, doe no way need any fuch inforcement.

Origmay be that these Conjurers deale altogether with Cardans mortall Deuils, 40 following the opinion of Rabbi Auernathan and of Porphyrius, who taught that these kind of Deuils lived not aboue a thousand yeares: which Plutarch in his Treatise de Oraculorum defectu confirmeth, making example of the great God Pan. For were it true that the Deuils were in awe of wicked men, or could bee compelled by them, then would they alwaies feare those wordes and threats, by which at other times they are willingly mastered. But the Familiar of Simon Magus when hee had lifted him up in the Ayre, cast him hadlong out of his clawes, when he was sure hee should perish with the fall. If this perhaps were done by S. Peters Prayers (of which Eufeb. hist. Eccl. S. Peter no where vaunteth) yet the same pranck at other times vpon his own accord the Deuill played with Theodorus: who transported (as Simon Magus was supposed so to have beene) had the same mortall fall that he had. The like successe had Budas, a principall pillar of the Manich an Herefie, as Socrates in his Ecclefiasticall Historie witnesserh: and for a manifest proofe hereof wee see it euery day, that the Deuill leaues all Witches and Sorcerers at the Gallowes, for whom at other times hee ma-keth himselfe a Pegasus, to conneigh them in haste to places farre distant, or at least makes them fo thinke: For to those that received not the truth ( fayth Saint PAYL) God Corint. 5.5. Shall send them strong illusions. Of these their supposed transportations (yet agreeing with their confessions) His Maiestie in the second Booke and the fourth Chapter of the Demonologie, hath confirmed by vnanswerable reasons, that they are meerely illufine. Another fort there are who take on them to include Spirits in Glasses and Cristals: of whom Cvs Anvs: Fatui funt incantores, qui in unque & vitro volunt spiritum Exercitat. 1.2. includere : quia Spiritus non clauditur corpore : They are foolish Inchanters which will shut up their spirits within their nailes or in Glasse: for a Spirit cannot beinclosed by a body.

There is also another Art besides the afore mentioned, which they call Theurgia, or white Magicke; a pretended conference with good Spirits or Angels, whom by Sacrifice and Innocation they draw out of Heauen, and Communicate withall. But the administring Spirits of God, as they require not any kind of adoration due vnto their Creatour: fo feeing they are most free Spirits; there is no man fo abfurd to thinke (except the Deuill have corrupted his viderstanding) that they can bee constrained or commanded out of Heauen by threats. Wherefore let the professiours thereof couer themselves how they please by a professed puritie of life, by the miniflerie of Infants, by falling and abilinence in generall; yet all those that tamper with immaterial substances and abstract natures, either by Sacrifice, Vow, or inforcement, 20 are men of euill faith and in the power of Satan. For good Spirits or Angels cannot be constrained; and the rest are Deuils which willingly obey. Other forts there are of wicked Dininations: as by fire, called Pyromantia: by water, called Hydromantia: by the ayre, called Mataotechnia, and the like.

The last, and (indeed) the worst of all other is Fascination or Witchcraft: the Practifers whereof are no leffe enuious and cruell, reuengefull and bloudie, then the Deuill himselfe. And these accursed creatures having sold their soules to the Deuil, worke two wayes; either by the Deuillimmediately, or by the art of poyloning. The difference betweene Necromanciers and Witches, His Maieflie hath excellently taught in a word: that the one (in a fort) command; the other obey the Deuill.

There is another kind of pettie Witcherie (if it be not altogether deceit) which they call charming of Beafts and Birds, of which Pythagor as was accused, because an Eagle lighted on his shoulder in the Olympian fields. But if the same exceeded the bissor. Art of Falconrie, yet was it no more to be admired then Mahomets Doue, which he had vsed to feed with Wheate out of his eare: which Doue, when it was hungrie, lighted on Mahomets shoulder, and thrust his Bill therein to find his breake-fast: Mahomet perswading the rude and simple Arabians, that it was the Holy Ghost that gaue him aduice. And certainely if Bankes had lived in elder times hee would have shamed all the Inchanters of the World: for wholoeuer was most famous among them, could neuer master or instruct any Beast as he did his Horse.

For the drawing of Serpents out of their Dens, or killing of them in the holes by Inchantments (which the Marsians a people of Italie practifed : Colubros disrumpit Marsia cantu: Inchanting Marsia makes the Snakes to burst.) That it hath beene vsed it appeares, P/al. 58.6. though I doubt not, but that many Impostures may bee in this kind; and even by naturall causes it may be done. For there are many Fumes that will either draw them out or destroy them; as womens haire burnt, and the like. So many things may be laied in the entrance of their holes that will allure them: and therein I find no other Magicke or Inchantment, then to draw out a Mouse with a

Of diverswayes by which the Deuill (cemeth to worke his wonders.

VT to the end that we may not dote with the Manichees, who make two powers of gods: that we doe not give to the Deuil any other dominion then he hath (not to speake of his abilitie, when hee is the Minister of Gods vengeance, as when Ægypt, according to Dauid, was destroyed by euill Angels) he otherwise worketh but three wayes. The first is by 10 mouing the cogitations and affections of men: The second by the exquisite knowledge of Nature: and the third by deceit, illusion, and false semblance. And that they cannot worke what they would, G. Partsiens giveth three causes: the first, a naturall impotencie: the second, their owne reason disswading them from daring overmuch, or indeed (and that which is the only certaine cause) the great mercie of the Sint. parifide v- Creatour, Tenens eas ligat as (fayth the fame Authour) velut immanisimas belluas. Saint ninerfor. 3.2.70. Augustine was of opinion that the Frogges which Pharaes Sorcerers produced were not naturall, but that the Deuill (by betraying of their senses that looked on) made them appeare to be such. For as Vairus observeth, those Frogges of the Inchanters were not found corrupted as those of Moses were, which might argue that they were 20 not creatures indeed. Hereof fayth Saint Augustine: Nec fane Damones natural creant, sed que à Deocresta sunt commutant, ve videantur esse quod non sunt : The Deuils create not any natures, but so change those that are created by God, as they seeme to beethat which they be not : of which in the 83. Question he giveth the reason. Demon auibuldem

the beame of the mind is wont to open the light of reason. And as Tertullian in his Booke de anima rightly conceineth, if the Deuill can posfesse himselfe of the eyes of our mindes, and blind them, it is not hard for him to dazell those of the body. For (out of doubt) by the same way that God passeth out, 30 the Deuill entreth in, beginning with the fantasie, by which he doth more easily be-Maxima vii el tray the other faculties of the foule: for the fantalie is most apt to bee abused by Agums on the contrarie held that those Frogges were not imaginarie, but such indeed as they seemed : not made Magica artis ludibrio, which indeed agreeth not with the Art, but (according to THOMAS) Per aptam & idoneam agentium & patientium applicationem: By an apt and fit applying of agents and patients. And this I take to be more probable. For Moses could not bee deceiued by that sleight of false semblance; and Saint Augustine in another caselike vnto this, (to wit) of the turning of Diomedes his Companions into Birds, per actina cum passinis, inclineth rather to this o- 40 pinion: though I am not perswaded that Saint Augustine beleeued that of Diomedes. And this opinion of Thomas, G. Parisiensis a man very learned also confirmeth. For speaking of naturall Mazicke hee vseth these words: De huinsmodi autem operibus est Subita generatio ranarum, & pediculorum, & vermium, alierumg, animalium quorundam: in quibus omnibus sola natura operatur, verum adhibitis adiutorijs, qua ipsa semina natura confortant & acuunt, ita vt opus generationis tantum accelerent, vt eis qui koc nesciunt non opus natura videatur (qua tardius talia efficere consucuit) sed potentia Damonum, &c.to which he addeth : Qui autem in hijs docti (unt talia non mirantur, fed folum Creatorem in hijs glorificant: In such workes (fayth he) the sodaine generation of Frogges, and Lice, and Wormes, and Some other creatures is : in all which Nature alone worketh; but by meanes 50 strengthning the Seeds of Nature, and quickning them; in such wife that they so hasten the worke of generation, that it seemeth to the ignorant not to bee the worke of Nature, which V sually worketh more lessurely, but they thinke it is done by the power of Deuils. these two wayes the Deuills doe most frequently worke, (to wit) by knowing the vttermost of nature; and by illusion: for there is no incomprehensible or vnsearchable power, but of God only.

For shall we say, he causeth sometimes thunders, lightnings, and tempests; and can infect the ayre, as well as moue it or compresse it; who knowes not that these things are also naturall? Or may it be objected that he fore-telleth things before they happen, which exceedeth nature, and is no illusion? it is true, that he sometimes doth it; but how? In elder ages he stole his knowledge out of the predictions of the Prophets: and he fore-told the death of Saul, at such time as he was in his 10 owne possession and power to dispose of. And he that hath lived from the infancie of the world to this day, and observed the successe of every counsaile: he that by reason of his swift motions can informe himselfe of all places, and preparations : he that is of counsaile with al those that studie and practise subversion and destruction: Ephes. 2.2. & 6. hethatis Prince of the ayre, and can thence better judge, then those that inhabite 12.

And thus farre we grant the Deuill may proceed in predictions, which (otherwise) belong to God only; as it is in EsAy: Shew the 20 things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that yee are Gods: shew us at all times and certaynely what is to come. O conclude, it may be objected that the Deuill hath rayled from the dead: and that others by his power haue done the like, as in the example giuen of Samuel rayled by the Witch of Endor: which were it true, then might it indeed be affirmed, that some of the Deuils acts exceed all the powers of nature, false semblance, and other illusions. dies of the inst rise to eternal life, and of the wicked to an eternal and second death. And (besides S. Augustine) Instine Martyr, Hilarius, Tertullian, Athanasius, Chrvfostome, and others, beleeued firmely, and taught it: that the foules of men being once separate from their bodies, did not wander on the earth at all : Credere debemus (faith CYRIL) quum à corporibus [anctorum anime abierint, tanquam in manus charisimi batrie bonitati divine commendari . We must beleeve when the foules of holy men are departed from their bodies, that they be commended to the divine Goodnesse, as into the hands of a most deare Father. If then they be in Heauen, the power of the Deuill cannot stretch so high : if in Hell, Ab inferno nulla est redemptio; From hell there is no redemption. For there are but two habitations after death : Vnum (faith AVGVSTINE) in igne a- 10 terno; alterum in regno aterno; The one in eternall fire; the other in Gods eternall Kingdome. And though it be written in Iure Pontificio, that many there are who beleeue that the dead have againe appeared to the living; yet the Glosse vpon the same Text 26.9.5. For whereas any such voice hath beene heard, saying, I am the Soule of such a one: Hac oratio à fraude atq, deceptione diabolica est; That speech is framed by the fraud and deception of the Deuill, faith Chryfostome. Likewise of the same, faith TERTULLIAN : Absit vt animam cuiullibet fancti, nedum Prophete, à damonio credamus extractam; God forbidthat we hould thinke that the Soule of any holy man, much lesse of a Prophet, should be drawne up 20

It is true that the Scriptures call that apparition Samuel; so doe they the woodden images Cherubins: and false brazen gods are called gods, and the like. And whereas these of the contrarie opinion build vpon that place of the 26. of Ecclesiasticus (2 booke not numbred among the Canonicall Scriptures, as S. Augustine himselfe in his Treatise, if it be his, De cura pro mortuis agenda, confesseth) yet Siracides following the literall sense and phrase of the Scriptures, proueth nothing at all : For though the Deuill would willingly perswade, that the soules (yea cuen of iust men) werein his power, yet so farre is it from the promises of the Scriptures, and from Gods inst and mercifull nature, and so contrarie to all divine reason, as Saint Augustine (or 30 who soener wrote that booke before cited) might rightly terme it a detestable opinion lo to thinke. For if God had so absolutely for saken Saul, that he refused to anfwere him either by dreames, by Vrim, or by his Prophets: it were fortish to conceiue, that he would permit the Deuil, or a wicked Witch, to raise a Prophet from the dead 1. Kings 17.22. in Sauls respect: it being also contrarie to his owne divine Law to aske counsaile of the dead; as in Deuteronomic 18. and elsewhere. Therefore it was the Deuill, and not the soule of a dead body, that gaue answere and aduice.

But because Helias and Helizeus had raised some from the dead by the power of God; those Deuils which S. Augustine calleth ludificatores animantium sibi subiectorum; Mockers of their owne vaffals, casting before their eyes a semblance of humane bodies, 40 and framing founds to their eares like the voyces of men, doe also perswade their gracelesse and accursed attendants, that themselves both possesse, and have power ouer the soules of men. Eludit Diabolus aciem tum spectantium, tum etiam cogitantium, faith L. VIVES; The Deuill bequileth the fense both of the beholders, and of those that so imagine. These then are the bounds of the Deuils power, whom if we will not feare, we must feare to sinne. For when he is not the instrument of Gods vengeance, he can touch no man that makes not himselfe his voluntarie vallall: Potest ad malum inuitare, non potest trahere, saith S. Avgvstine, he can allure, but he cannot inforce to euill. Such as thinke otherwife, may goe into the number remembred by

CHAP. XII.

Of the memorable buildings of NINVs, and of his wife SEMIRAMIS: and of other of ber acts.

Of the magnificent building of Niniue by NINVS: and of Babylon by SEMIRAMIS.

Vt to come backe to Ninus the amplifier and finisher of Niniue: whether he performed it before or after the ouerthrow of Zorositer, it is vncertayne. As for the Citie it selfe, it is agreed by all prophane Writers, and confirmed by the Scriptures, that it exceeded all other in circuit, and answerable magnificence. For it Inflin.1.12. had in compasse 440. stadia, or furlongs; the walls Diod.l.2. whereof were an hundred foot vpright, and had such Sabelilien z a bredth as three Charriots might passe on the Rampire in front: these walls were garnished with 1500. Towres which gaue exceeding beautie to the rest, and a strength no lesse admirable for the nature of those times. But this Citie (built in the Plaines of Asserting, and on the bankes of Tigris, and in the Region of Eden) was founded long before Ninus time; and (as ancient Historians report, and more lately Nauclerus) had the name of Campfor, at such time as Ninus amplified the same, and gaue it a wall, and called it after his owne name. For these workes of Babylon and Niniue begun by Nimrod in Chalden, and in Allyria, Ninus and Semiramis made perfect. Ninus finished Niniue, Semiramis Babylon: Heod. Li. wherein thee fought to exceede her husband by farre. Indeed in the first Age when Iustin.l.i. Princes were moderate, they neither thought how to inuade others, nor feared to be Died, 1.2. 43. inuaded: labouring to build Townes and Villages for the vse of themselves and their people, without either Walls or Towres; and how they might discharge the earth of Woods, Bryars, Bushments, and Waters, to make it the more habitable and fertile. But Semiramis living in that Age, when Ambition was instrong youth : and purposing to follow the conquest which her husband had vnder-taken, gaue that beautie and strength to Babylon which it had.

Nam

Of the end of NINVS: and beginning of SEMIRAMIS reigne.

His shee did after the death of her husband Ninu : who after he had mastred Bactria, and subiected vnto his Empire all those Regions betweene it and the Mediterran Sea and Hellespont ( Asia the lesse excepted) and finished the worke of Ninine, heleft the World in the yeere thereof 2019. after he had reigned 52. yeeres. Plutarch reporteth that Semiramis desired her husband Ninus, that he would grant vnto her the absolute 10 foueraigne power for one day. Diod. Siculus out of Athenaus, and others, speakes of fiue dayes. In which time (moued either with desire of rule, or licentious libertie, or with the memorie of her husband Menon, who perished for her) shee caused Ninus her husband to be slaine. But this seemeth rather a scandall cast on her by the Greekes, then that it had any truth.

Howsoeuer Ninus came to his end, Semiramis tooke on her after his death the fole rule of the Affirian Empire: of which, Ninus was faid to be the first Monarch. because he changed his seat from Babylonia in Chaldaa to Winiue in Assyria. Instinceports, that Semiramis (the better to invest herselfe, and in her beginning without murmure or offence to take on her so great a charge) presented herselfe to the people 20 in the person of her sonne Ninias or Zameis, who bare her externall forme and proportion without any sensible difference.

This report I take also to be fayned, for which many arguments might be made. But as she ruled long, so she performed all those memorable acts which are written of her by the name of Semiramis, and subscribed that letter which shee sent to the King of India (her last challenge and vndertaken conquest) by her owne name. And were it true that her sonne Ninias had such a stature at his Fathers death, as that Semiramis (who was very personable) could be taken for him; yet it is very vnlikely that she could have held the Empire from him 42. yeeres after by any such subtiltie: (for so long sheereigned after the death of her husband:) but it may be true 20 that Ninias or Zameis (being wholly given to his pleasures, as it is written of him) was well pleased with his Mothers prosperous gouernement and under-takings.

Of SEMIRAMIS parentage and education, and Metamorpholis of her Mother.

Ome Writers (of which Plutarch is one) make this famous woman to haue beene of base parentage, calling her after the name of her Coun-40 trey, a Syrian. Berofus calls her after the name of her Citie wherein thee was borne, Semiramis Ascalonitis; of Ascalon, the ancient Citie and Metropolis of the Philistims. Others report her to be the daughter of Derceta, a Curtizan of Ascalon, exceeding beautifull. Others say that this Derceta or Dercetis, the Mother of Semiramis, was sometimes a Recluse, and had profest a holy and a religious life, to whom there was a Temple dedicated, feated on the banke of a Lake adioyning to Ascalon; and afterward falling in loue with a goodly yong man, the was by him made with child, which (for feare of extreme punishment) she conuayed away, and caused the same to be hidden among the high reedes which grew on the bankes of the Lake : in which ( while the child was left to the mercy of wild 50 beasts) the same was fed by certayne birds, which vsed to feede voon or neere those waters. But I take this tale to be like that of Lupathe Harlot that fostered Romulus. For some one or other adioyning to this Lake, had the charge and fosteridge of this child, who being perchance but some base and obscure creature, the mother might thereby hope the better to couer her dishonor and breach of vow; notwithstanding which she was cast from the top of her Temple into the Lake adioyning, and (as the Poets have fayned) changed by Venus into a Fish, all but her face, which still held the same beautie and humane shape. It is thought that from this Derceta the invention of that Idoll of the Philistims (called Dagon) was taken: for it is true, that Daren had a mans face, and a fishes body: into whose Temple when the Arke of God was brought, the Idoll fell twice to the ground: and at the second fall there remayned only the Trunke of Dagon, the head being broken off: For so S. Hierome hath converted that place. Vatables, Pagninus, and Iunius, write it by Dagon onely, 10 which signifieth a fish, and so it only appeared: the head thereof by the second fall being fundred from the body.

Formy selfe I rather thinke, that this Dagon of the Philistims was an Idoll reprefenting Triton, one of those imaginarie Sea-gods under Neptune. For this Citie being maritimate (as all those of the Philistims were, and so were the best of Phanicia) vied all their denotions to Neptune, and the rest of the pettie gods which atten-

Of her Expedition into India, and death after discomfiture : with a note of the improbabilitie of her vices.

Vt for her Pedigree, I leave it to the Affyrian Heralds: and for her vicious life, I ascribe the report thereof to the envious and lying Grecians. For delicacie and ease doe more often accompanie licentiousnesse in men and women, then labour and hazzard doc. And if the one halfe be true which is reported of this Lady, then there never lived any Prince or Princesse more worthy of same then Semiramis was, both for the workes she did at Babylon and elsewhere, and for the warres she made with glorious successe: 30 all but her last enterprise of India; from whence both Strabo and Arianus report that the neuer returned; and that of all her most powerfull Armie there survived but only twentie persons: the rest being either drowned in the River of Indus, dead of the famine, or flaine by the sword of Staurobates. But as the multitude which went out are more then reason hath numbred: so were those that returned lesse then could haueescaped of such an Armie, as consisted of four millions & vpwards. For these suid, f. 845. numbers which she leuied by her Lieutenant Derceteus (saith Suidas) did consist of lie. s. Foot-men three millions; of Horse-men one million; of Charriots armed with hookes on each fide one hundred thousand; of those which fought vpon Camels as many; of Camels for burden two hundred thousand; of raw Hides for all vses 40 three hundred thousand; of Galleyes with brazen heads three thousand, by which shee might transport ouer Indus at once three hundred thousand Souldiers: which Gallies were furnished with Syrians, Phanicians, Cilicians, and men of Cyprus. These incredible and impossible numbers, which no one place of the earth was able to nourish (had every man and beast but fed vpon grasse) are taken from the authority of Ctessas whom Diederus followeth. But as the one may be taxed with many friuolous reports: so Diodorus himselse hath nothing of certaynetie, but from Xerxes expedition into Greece and afterwards: whose Armie (though the same was farre inferior to that of Semiramis) yet had it weight enough to overlode the beliefe of any reasonable man. For all Authors consent, that Xerxes transported into Greece an Arso mie of 1700000. and gathered together (therein to passe the Hellespont) three thoufand Gallies, as Herodolus out of the seuerall Provinces whence those Galleyes were taken hath collected the number. But of what multitude soeuer the Armie of Semiramis consisted: the same being broken and ouerthrown by Staurobates upon the banks of Indus, canticum cantauit ex-

Of the Temple of BELVS built by SEMIRAMIS: and of the Pyramides of Egypt.

Mong all her other memorable and more then magnificent workes (besides the wall of the Citie of Babylon) was the Tomal and the Citie of Babylon was the C Red in the middle of this Citie, inuironed with a wall carryed fouresquare of great heighth and beautie, hauing on each square certayne brazen gates curiously engrauen. In the Core of the square she raised a Towre of a furlong high, which is halfe a quarter of a mile; and vpon it againe (taking a Basis of a lesse circuit) she set a second Towre; and so eight in all, one aboue another: vpon the top whereof the Chaldeans Priests made the observation of the starres, because this Towre ouer-topped the ordinarie cloudes. By beholding the ruines of this Towre haue many Trauailers beene deceiued; 20 who suppose that they have seene a part of Nimrods Towre, when it was but the foundation of this Temple of Bel: (except this of Bel were founded on that of Nimrod.) There were burnt in this Temple one hundred thousand talents of frankincense cuery yeere (saith Herodotus.) This Temple did Nabuchodonosor adornewith the spoiles of Hierasalem, and of the Temple of Salomon: all which vessels and ornaments Cyrus redeliuered. This temple Xerxes euened with the foile; which Alexander is said to have repaired by the perswassons of the Chaldeans. I denie not that it might haue been in his desire so to doe; but he ensoyed but a few yeeres after Babylon taken, Proclin Times, and therefore could not performe any such worke. The Egyptians (faith Proclin) inhabiting a low and leuell ground, and given to the fame superfition of the startes 30 that the Chaldaans were, erected in imitation, and for the same service and vse, the Pyramides by Memphis, which were conspicus undig, nauigantibus, saith Plinie. Of these Pyramides, Bellomus a carefull observer of rarities (who being in Agypt mounted by steps to the top of the highest) maketh this report : Le meilleur archer qui seroit a sa Sommite, tirant une fleche en l'air, a peine pouroit l'enuoyer hors de sabase qu'elle ne

Снар. 1.

Of the time of the birth of ABRAHAM: and of the vse of this question, for the ordering of the Sto-rie of the Assyrian Empire.

Of some of the successours of SEMIRAMIS: with a briefe transition to the question. about the time of the birth of ABRAHAM.

CHAP.I. S.I.

FTER the death of Semiramis, Ninias or Zameis succeeded her in the Empire, on whom Berofus Annianus bestowes the conquest of Ba-Etria, and the ouerthrow of Zoroafter; contrary to Diedorus, Instine, Oresius, and all other approued writers. For Ninias being esteemed no man of warre at all, but altogether feminine, and subjected to ease and delicacie, there is no probabilitie in that opinion. Now because there was nothing performed by this Ninias of any moment, other then that out of icalousie he euery yeere changed his Prouinciall Gouernors, and built Colledges for the Chaldean

Priests, his Astronomers: nor by Arius his successor, whom Suidas calleth Thuras; but that he reduced agains the Bactrians and Caspians, revolted as it seemeth in Nini-50 as his time: nor of Aralius, the successor of Arius; but that he added sumptuosity, inuented iewels of gold and stone, and some engins for the warre: I will for this present passe them ouer, and a while follow Abraham, whose wayes are warrantable, (till wee meet these Assyrians againe in this story) by whom and by whose issues we shall best give date to the Kings of Babylon: Abraham living at once with Ninus, Ninias, Semiramis, Arius, Aralius, and Xerxes or Balanius. For otherwise if we leeke to proue things certaine by the vncertaine, and judge of those times, which the Scriptures set vs down without error, by the raignes of the Assprian Princes: we shall but patch vp the story at adventure, and leave it in the same confusion; in which to this day it hath remained. For where the Scriptures doe not helpe vs, Mirum non est in rebus antiquis Historiam non constare, No miruaile if then in things very ancient, History want assurance.

The better therefore to finde out, in what age of the World, and how long these Assigned, as also for other good causes, we must first affure the time of Abrahams birth, and in what yeere the same hapned after the floud. Now since all 10 agree, that the fortieth three yeere of Ninus was the birth-yeere of Abraham; by prouing directly out of the Scriptures, in what yeere after the floud the birth of Abraham hapned, we shall thereby set all the rest in square and order. But of this time there is much langling betweene those Chronologers, which follow the Hebrew account, and others: the most part making 292. or 293. yeeres; others 352. yeeres between Abrahams birth and the floud: a matter often disputed, but neuer concluded.

Archilochus de temporibus ( as we finde him in Annus) makes but 250. yeeres from the floud to Ninus: then feeing that Abraham was borne in the fortieth three yeere of Ninus, according to Eulebius, and S. Augustine, it followeth by the addition of those two numbers, that the yeere of Abrahams birth was in the yeere after the 20 floud 293. or as the most part of all Chronologers gather, the yeere 292.

Now, fince I doe here enter into that neuer-resoluted question, and Labyrinth of times, it behoueth me to giue reason for my owne opinion: and with so much the greater care and circumípection, because I walke aside, and in a way apart from the multitude; yet not alone, and without companions, though the fewer in number: with whom I rather choose to endure the wounds of those dartes, which Enuie casteth at nouelty, than to goe on safely and sleepily in the easie waies of ancient mistakings: seeing to be learned in many errors, or to be ignorant in all things, hath little diuerlity.

A proposall of reasons or arguments, that are brought to proue ABRAHAM was borne in the yeere 292. after the Floud, and not in the yeere 352.

Hose which seeke to proue this account of 292. yeeres, betweene the generall floud and Abrahams birth, ground themselues, first on these words of the Scripture: So TER AH lined 70. yeeres, and begot ABRA-HAM, NAHOR, and HARAN : secondly, vpon the opinion of losephus, 40 S. Augustine, Beda, Isidore, and many of the ancient Hebrewes before them : authorities (while they are flightly lookt ouer) feeming of great weight.

From the place of Scripture last remembred, the latter Chronologers gather these arguments. First out of the wordes as they lie; that TERAH at 70. yeeres begot A-BRAHAM, NAHOR and HARAN: and that Abraham being the first named, Abraham being the worthiest, Abraham being the sonne of the promise, ought in this respect to be accounted the eldest sonne of Terah, and so necessarily borne in the seventieth yeere of his life. Secondly, it was of Abraham that Mofes had respect, in whom the Church of God was continued, who was heire of the bleffing; and not of Nahor and Haran: for the scope of this Chapter was to set downe the Genealogy of Christ, 50 from Adam to Abraham, without all regard of Naher, and Haran.

It is thirdly objected, that if Abraham were not the eldest sonne, then there can bee no certainty of his age, and so are all future times made doubtfull. For it cannot then be proued, that Abraham was borne more affuredly in the 130. yeere of Terab his age, then in the 131. 132, &c. Moles having no where fet downe precifely that Abraham went into Canaan that very yeere, in which his Father died.

Fourthly, it is thought improbable, that Terah begat Abraham at 130. yeere: seeing Abraham himselfe thought it a wonder to be made a Father at 100. yeeres.

d. III.

The answere to one of the objections proposed, shewing that ABRAHAM made but one sourney out of Mesopotamia into Canaan : and it, after his Fathers death.

O answere all which objections it is very easie, the way being preparedthereto by divers learned Divines long fince, and to which I will adde somewhat of mine owne, according to the small talent which God hath given me. Now for a fmuch as the state of the question cannot well bescanned, vnlesse the time of Abrahams iourney into Cana-an be first considered of; before I descend vnto the particular examination of these arguments, I will make bold with order and method fo farre, as to fearch into a firange tradition concerning his trauailes, that ferueth as a ground for this opinion, 20 and a bulwarke against all that can be said to the contrary.

But it is conceined that Abraham made two journies into Canaan: the latter after his Fathers death, the former prefently vpon his calling, which he performed without all delay, not staying for his fathers death at Haran: a coniecture, drawn from a place in the Epifle to the Hebrewes, where it is written, By faith ABRAHAM ( when hee was Heb.11.8. called) obeyed God, to goe out into a place, which he should afterward receive for inheritance: and he went out, not knowing whither hee went. This supposition (if it bee granted) ferues very well to vphold the opinion, that can ill stand without it. Let vs therefore see whether we may give credit to the supposition it selfe.

Surely, that Abraham first departed Charran or Haran after the death of Terah his 20 Father, the same is proued, without the admission of any distinction, by these words of S. Stephen: And after his Father was dead, God brought him into this Land, where AS.7.4. ve now dwell, that was, out of Haran into Canaan. Against which place so direct, and plaine, what force hath any mans fancie or supposition, perswading, that Abraham made two journeys into Canaan; one before Terah's death, and another after: n fuch thing being found in the Scriptures, nor any circumstance, probability, or reafon to induce it? For if any man out of this place before alleadged can picke any argument, prouing, or affording any strong presumption, that Abraham past into Ca- Heb. 11.8.

naan, and then returned vnto Haran, from whence he departed a second time: then Ithinke it reason, that he be beleeved in the rest. But that hee performed the com-40 mandement of God after his Fathers death, leaving Vr and Haran for Canaan, it is as true as the Scriptures themselues are true. For after bis Father was dead, (saith the Martyr Stephen) God brought him into this Land. And, as Beza noreth, if Abraham made a double journey into Canaan, then must it be inferred, that Moles omitted the one, and Stephen afterwards remembred the other: and whence had Stephen, faith Beza, the knowledge of Abrahams comming into Canaan, but out of Moles? For if Stephen had spoken any thing of those times, differing from Moles, he had offered the lewes his adversaries too great an occasion both of scandalizing himselfe, and the Gospell of Christ. Indeed we shall finde small reason to make vs thinke that Abraham passed and repassed those wayes, more often than he was enforced so to doe, if we consider, that 50 hehad no other guide or comforter in this long and wearisome journey, than the strength of his faith in Gods promise: in which if any thing would have brought him to despaire, he had more cause then ever man had to fall into it. For hee came

Idolaters. He was belieged with famine at his first arrivall, and driven to flie into

Ægypt for reliefe. His wife was olde, and he had no sonne to inherit the promise. And when God had given him 1/440, he commaunded him to offer him vp to himfelse for Sacrifice: all which discomforts hee patiently and constantly under-

Secondly, let vs confider the wayes themselves, which Abraham had to passe over. the length whereof was 300. English miles: and through Countries of which he had no manner of experience. He was to transport himselfe ouer the great river of Euphrates, to trauailethrough the dangerous and barren Desarts of Palmyrena, and to climbe over the great and high mountaines of Libanus, Hermon or Gilead : and whether these were easie walkes for Abraham to march twice ouer, containing, as afore- to faid, 300. miles in length, let euery reasonable man indge. For if hee trauailed it twice; then was his journey in all 1800. miles from : Haran: and from Haran twice into Canaan. But were there no other argum. disproue this fancie; the manner of Abrahams departing from Haran hath more proofe, that hee had not animum revertendi, not any thought of looking backward, than any mans bare coniecture, be he of what antiquity or authority soener. For thus it is written of him, Then ABRA-HAM tooke SARA his wife, and LOT his brothers sonne, and all their substance that they posses, and the soules that they had gotten in Haran : and they departed to go to the land of Cansan and to the Land of Canaan they came. Now if Abraham brought all with him that was deare vnto him; his wife, and kinfmen, and his, and their goods: it is not proba- 29 ble that he meant to walke it backe againe for his pleasure, in so warme, dangerous, and barren a Country as that was : or if hee could have beene thereto mooned, it is more likely that he would have then returned, when he was yet vnsettled, and prest with extreme famine at his first arrivall. For had his Father beene then alive. hee might have hoped from him to receive more assured comfort and reliefe, then among the Egyptians, to whom hee was a meere stranger both in Religion and Nation.

What the cause might bee of Abrahams returne to Haran, as I will not enquire of them, that without warrant from the Scriptures have fent him backe thither, about the time of his fathers death: so they perhaps, if they were viged, could say 30 little else, than that without such a second voyage their opinion were not maintainable. One thing in good reason they should doe well to make plaine, if it be notouer-troublesome. They say that Abraham was in Haran at his Fathers death, or some time after, being then by their account 135. yeeres old, or a little more. How then did it happen, that he left quite vndone the businesse, which as wee reade, was within foure or fine yeeres after that time his greatest, or (as may seeme) his onely care? Did not he binde with a very solemne oath his principall seruant, in whom hee reposed most considence, to trauaile into those parts, and seeke out a wife for 1/446 his sonne? and doth it not appeare by all circumstances, that neither he nor his seruant were so well acquainted in Mesopotamia, that they could particularly designe 40 any one woman, as a fit match for I (asc? Surely if Abraham had beene there in perfon fo lately as within foure or fine yeeres before, hee would not have forgotten a matter of fuch importance; but would have trusted his owne judgement, in choofing a woman, fit for her piety, vertue, and other desireable qualities, to be linked in marriage with his onely sonne, who was then 35. yeeres old; before which age most of the Patriarches after the floud had begotten children, rather than haue left all at randome to the confideration of a servant, that neither knew any, nor was knowne of any in that Country. But let it be supposed (if it may be beleeved) that either Abraham forgot this businesse when he was there, or that somewhat hapned which no man can deuise. What might be the reason, that Abrahams man, in doing his ma- 50 sters errand, was faine to lay open the whole story of his masters prosperity, telling it as newes, that Sarah had borne to him a sonne in her old age? If Abraham himfelfe, a more certaine Author, had so lately been eamong them, would not all this haue beenean idle tale? It were needlesse to stand long vpon a thing so euident

Whether it were lawful for Abraham to have returned back to Haran, would perhaps be a question hardly answerable: considering how averse hee was from permitting his some to bee curried thisher; quen though a wife of his owne kindred could not Genaus. have beene obtained without his personall presence. Incobindeed was sent thither &8. by his parents, to take a wife of his ownedinage; not without Gods especial appro- Gen. 18. bation, by whose bleffing he prospered in that journey: yet hee lived there as a seruant; fuffered many injuries; and finally was driven to convey himselfe away from thence by flight. For although it bee not a fentence written, yet out of all written examples is may be observed, that God alloweth not in his servants any desire of re-10 turning to the place, from whence hee harbitaken, and transplanted them. That briefe faying, Remember Lors wife, containes much matter. Let vis but confider Melopotamia from whence Abraham was taken, and Agypt, out of which the whole nation of the Ifraelites was delinered : wee shall finde, that no bleffing iffued from either of them, to the posterity of the Hebrewes. When Ezechias was visited with an honourable Embassie from Babel, it seemes that hee conceived great pleasure in his minde, and thought it a piece of his prosperity; but the prophecy which thereupon he heard by E/si, made him to know, that the counsaile of God was not agreeable to such thoughts: which more plainely appeared in a following generation, when by the waters of Babylon they fate downe and wept. Concerning Agypt we Pfaling. 20 reade, that Selacand Nece Kings of Egypt brought calamitie upon Ifrael: also that 2.Kin.23.v.29. their confidence in the Agyptian succours was the cause of their destruction. Where they were forbidden to return into Agypt I doe not remember, nor can readily find; but it is found in Deuteronomie, that God had faid, They should no more returne that way; Deut. 17. v. 161 which is giuen, as the reason, why their King might not cause the people to returne to Egypt, for the muliplying of his Horses. Whether the Lord had laied any such iniunction vpon Abraham of not returning to Melopotamia, I cannot fay; many things doargue it probably: that hee neuer did returne, all circumstances do (to my vnder-standing) both strongly and necessarily conclude. But because this double passage of Abrahams is but an imagination: and that ima-30 ginations of men are rather valuable among children, than that they can perswade those of judgement or understanding : I take it sufficient, that S. Stephen hath directly taught vs, that Abraham left Haran, his Father being dead. And for the rest, when they shew any one Scripture to proue it, I will beleeue as they doe. For all the trauailes of Abraham are precisely set downe in the Scriptures: as first from Pr or Camerina in Chaldea to Haran or Charran: and then from Haran (after his Fathers death) to Sichem; from Sichem he remooued to a mountaine betweene Bethel and Haie: thence into £gypt: from £gypt hee returned thither againe, where Lot and he parted, because their flockes and heards of Cattle were more, then could bee fed in that part : from thence the second time hee remooued to Mamre, neere Hebron: 40 and thence having pursued Amraphel, and rescued Lot, hee after inhabited at Gerar, in the border of Idumaa, vnder Abimelee : and after neere vnto it at Berfabe, at which time hee was ready to offer vp his sonne Isaac on the mountaine Meriah. But this fiction of his retrait to Haran or Charran, appeareth not in any one story either divine or humane. Now if it may bee supposed, that Abraham had made any former iourney into Canaan, as Leurtain his Cabala hath fained, it should in reason beetherewithall beleeved, that he would in those his first travailes have provided himselse of some certaine seat, or place of abiding : and not have come a second time, with his wife, kinfmen, familie, goods and Cattle, not knowing whereon to rest himselfe. But Abraham, when he came from Charran, past through the North part of Ca-50 naan, thence to Sichem, and the Plaine of Moriab: where finding no place to inhabite, Gm. 13.0.6. he departed thence to Bethel and Haie: and so from Nation to Nation, to discouer and finde out some fit habitation: from whence againe, as it is written in Genesis the eleuenth, He went foorth, going and iournging towards the South: and alwayes vnfattled. By occasion of which wandring to and fro, some say, the Egyptians gave him and

Mont.in Caleb. his the name of Hebrai. Further, to proue that hee had not formerly beene in the Countrie, we may note, that ere he came to Bethel and Haie, and at his first entrance into Canaan, God appeared vnto him, faying, Vnto thy feed will I gine this Land, thewing it him as vnto a stranger therein, and as a land to him vnknowner For Abraham without any other provident care for himselfe, beleeved in the word of the living God: neither sending before, nor comming first to discover it; but being arrived, he received a second promise from God, that hee would give those Countries vnto him and his feede to inhabit and inherit.

Lastly, what should moone any man to thinke, that Moses would have omitted any fuch double journey of Abrahams, seeing hee setteth downe all his passages elf-19 where long and short? as when he moued from Sichem, and seated betweene Haie and Bethel; the distance being but twenty miles: and when he moved thence to the valley of Mamre, being but twentie foure miles: and when hee left Mamre, and fate downe at Gerar, being lesse then sixe miles 3 no, Moses past ouer all the times of the first age with the greater breuity, to hasten him to the story of Abraham : shutting vp all betweene the Creation and the Floud in fix chapters; which age lasted 1656. yeeres: but hee bestoweth on the story of Abraham fourteene chapters, beginning with his birth in the eleuenth, and ending with his death in the fine and twentiether and this time endured but 175. yeere. It hath therefore no face of trueth, that Mo-Jes forgot or neglected any thing concerning Abrahams transiles, or other actions: 20 or that hee would let downethole small remooues of fine miles, and omit those of three hundred. For such a journey in going and comming would have ministred some varietie of matter, or accident, worthiethe inserting and adding to Abrahams

The answere to another of the objections proposed, shewing that it was not unlikely, that TERAH Should beget ABRAHAM in bis bundred and thirty yeere.

Ow touching the objection, where it is faid, that it was very vnlikely that Terab should beget Abraham in his 130, years, recing the similar himselfe thought it a wonder to have a sonne at an hundred: this is hardly worth the answering. This wonder is indeed miscast, and mishardly worth the answering. This wonder is indeed miscass, and mistaken: Abraham having respect only to Sarah his wife, when he spake of their many yeeres. For when the Angell saide vnto Abraham in his Tent doore at Mamre; Loe, SARAH thy wife shall have a Sonne, it followeth in the next verse, Now ABRAHAM and SARAH were olde and fricken in age, and it ceafed to be with SARAH after 40 the manner of women: therefore SARAH laughed. erc.

So then, in that it is faid, it ceased to be with SARAH after the manner of women, it appeareth that the wonder was wrought on her, & not on Abraham. For Abraham by his fecod wife Keturah had many fonsafter Sarah's death, as Zimron, Jockshan, Medan, Midian, Ilhbak, and Shuah: and the eldest of these was borne 37. yeeres after Isaac: and the yongest 40. yeeres after. What strangenesse then, that Terab being 130. yeeres old should beget Abraham, will they say, may be gathered from this supposed despaire of Abraham at one hundred yeeres? For Sarah died in the yeere of the world 2145. and Isaac was borne in the yeere 2109; and Abraham did not marry Keturah till Sarah was buried. So if wee deduct the number of 2109. out of 2145, there remai- 50 constanting. neth 36. And therefore if Abraham begat five sonnes 36. yeeres after this supposed wonder, and when Abraham was 137. yeeres old: it is not strange that his Father Terah should beget Abraham at 130. And if Booz, Obed, and Iesse, who lived so many yeeres and ages after Abraham, begat sons at 100. yeeres, or neere it, it cannot be meruailed at, that Terab begat Abraham at 130; and Abraham others at the same age and feuen yeeres after.

The answere to two more of the objections: Shewing that wee may bane certaintie of ABRA-HAM'S age from the Scripture, though we make not ABRAHAM the eldest Sonne: and that there was great cause, why in the story of ABRAHAM his two brethren should be respected.

🛽 T followeth now to speake something to the objection, which brings Abrahams agealtogether in doubt, except we allow him to be the eldest some of Terah, and borne when Terah was 70. yeeres old. For A-brahms age being made vncertaine, all succeeding times are thereby without any period rule or knowledge.

Butthis proposition, That wee cannot be certaine of Abrahams age, vnlesse we make him the eldest sonne, is false. For it is plaine in the Scriptures, that when Terah was 205, which was the yeere of his death, then was Abraham 75. And if you aske how I can judge of times, either preceding or fucceeding, by knowing that A-20 braham departed Haran at that age: I answere, that S. Stephen hath told vs, that Abrahams departure followed the death of his Father Terah: and Terah died at 205; so as the 75. yeere of Abraham was the 205. yeere of Terah: which knowne, there can be no error in the account of times succeeding. Now to come to the objection. whereit is faid, That Moses had no respect vnto Nachor and Haran, because they were out of the Church, but to Abraham onely, with whom God established the Couenant, and of whom Christ descended according to the flesh, &c. I answere, that Moles for many great and necessary causes had respect of Nachor and Haran. For the succession of Gods Churchisnot witnessed by Abraham alone, but by the issues of Nahor and Haran, were they Idolaters or otherwife. For Nahor was the Father of Be-20 thuel, & Bethuel of Rebecca, the mother of Ifrael: & Haran was the parent of Lot, Sarab, and Mileah: and Sarah was mother to Ifaac, and grandmother to Iacob: Mileah also the wife of Nahor, and mother of Bethuel, was Iacobs great grandmother: and the age of Sarab the daughter of Haran is especially noted, in that it pleased God to give her a sonne at 90 yeeres, and when by nature she could not have conceived. And therefore, though it were not in regard of themselves, yet because both Nahor and Abraham married the daughters of their brother Haran; and because Isaac married Rebecca the grand-childe of Nahor; and Iacob, Lea, and Rachel, the daughters of Laban, the grand-childealso of Nahor: It was not superfluous in Moses to give light of these mens times and ages. And though sometime they worshipped strange Gods, as it is 40 10/.24.2. yet I see no cause to thinke, that they still continued Idolaters. For they beleeved and obeyed the calling of Abraham, leaving their natural Countrey, and Citie of Vr in Chaldea, as Abraham did, and remooued thence all, except Haran, who died before his Father Terah, ere they left Chalden; but Lot, his fonne, followed Abrahaminto Canaan; and Sarah, the lifter of Lot, abraham married. Wabor alfo, who remained at Charran, gaue his fonnes daughters to I/aze, and Iacob, his own kinsemen: he himselfe having also married in his owne family; not thinking it pleasing vnto God to mixe themselues with strangers and Idolators. And that these men at length beleeved in the God of Abraham, it can no way be doubted. For when Laban had feene the feruant of Abraham standing at the Well beside Charran, hee invited 50 him to his Fathers house in this manner: Come in, thou bleffed of IFHOVAH, &c. And Gen.24, v.31. when this feruant of Abrahams demanded an answere as touching Rebecca, then anfwered Laban and Bethnel, and faid, This thing is proceeded of IEHOVAH: meaning that Gen.24. v.50. it was the will of the true God it should be so; wherein he acknowledged Gods pronidence. Likewise in the following verse it is written; Take, take, goe that shee may bee thy Masters sounes wife, even as IEMOVAH hath faid. This their often ving of the name of IEHOVAH, which is the proper Name of the true God, is a figure that they had the knoledge of him.

Now although it be the opinion of Saint Chryloftome, and some later writers. as Caietan, Oleaster, Musculus, Caluin, Mercer, and others, that Laban was an Idolater, because he retained certaine Idols, or houshold Gods, which Rachel stole from him: ver that he beleeued in the true God it cannot bee denied. For hee acknowledgeth the God of Abraham and of Nahor, and he called Abrahams servant, blessed of IEHOVAH. as aforesaid. So as for my selse I dare not anow, that these men were out of the Church, who fure I am were not out of the faith.

That the naming of ABRAHAM first of the three brethren, Gen. 11. V. 26. doth not prove that hee was the eldeft : together with divers reasons proouing that ABRAHAM was not the eldest sonne of TERAH.

O the maine objection which I answere last, because it seemeth of most strength, by which, those that striue to shorten the times, endeuour to proue that Abraham was the eldest sonne of Terah, and borne 20 in the 70. yeere of Terahs life: grounding themselves first and chiefly on this place of the Scripture, And TERAH lived 70. yeeres and begat

ABRAHAM, NAHOR, and HARAN: To this I fay, that although Abraham in this verse be first named, yet the same is no proofe at all that he was the eldest & first born sonne of Terah. For it is no necessary consequence, that the first named in Scriptures was therefore eldest in bloud and birth, neither doth it appeare, that it pleafed God to make especial choice of the first sonnes in nature and time: for seth was not the first borne of Adam; nor Isaac of Abraham; nor Isaac of Isaac; nor Iuda and loseph of Iacob: nor David the eldest of lesse; nor Salemon of David: as is formerly re-

But it is written of No AH; No AH was 500 yeres old, and No AH begat SHEM, HAM, and IAPHET : shewing that at the 500, yeere of his age he began to beget the first of Aug quaft, super those three sonnes. For according to S. Augustine, speaking generally, Nec attendendus est in bis ordonativitatis, sed significatio future dignitatis: in qua excelluit ABRAHAM. The order of nativitie is not here to be respected, but the signification of the future dignitie: in which ABRAHAM was preferred. And therefore, as in the order of the sonnes of Noab: fo is ithere; where it is faid, that TERAH lined 70. yeeres, and begat ABRAHAM, NAHOR, and HARAN: For it was late ere Terah began to beget Sonnes, himselse being begorten by his Father Nachor at 29. as other his Ancestors were at The like also happened to Noah: for whereas Adam begat Seth at 130; Enosh 40 Kenan at 90; Kenan Mahalaleel at 70; Mahalaleel Iered at 60: Noah was yet 500. yeeres old when he began to beget the first of his three sonnes, as aforesaid. And S. Augufline in the place before cited, rather inclineth to the opinion that Abraham was the yongest of Terahs sonnes, then otherwise though for his excellencie he was worthily named first. His owne words are thefe: Fiers enim potuit ve pofterior fit generatus Abraham : sed merito excellentie, quain Scripturu valde commendatur, prior fuerit nominatus. It might be, faith he, that ABR AH AM was begotten later: but was first namediuregard of his excellencie, for which in Scripture he is much commended. So as the naming first or last proueth nothing who was first or last borne: either in those iffues of Noah, or in these of Terah: Neither hath God any respect of the eldest in na- 50 ture, as touching his election or spirituall bleffing, for Mofes nameth first the children of the promise, and the cidest and first in Gods fauour. Pietas ergò vel ipsa potrus electio diuina, que comitene secum trahit pietatem, & Dei timorem, primas partes dat Semo in liberis No A, & ABRAHAMO in liberis Thare. Pietie, (aith he, or rather divine election, which doth enermore draw with it or after it pictic and the feare of God, gane place and precedencie to SEM among the children of NOAH, and to AERAHAM among those of Thare.

For the rest it is manifest, that Abraham entred Canaan in the 75. yeere of his age. And it was in Canaan that Hagar bare him I/mael, when Abraham had lived 86. veeres. Gen. 12.4. It was at Gerar (the South border of Canaan) that Sarah bare Ilaac, when Abraham Gen. 16.16. had confumed 100. yeeres. It was from the valley of Mamre in Gangan that Abraham role out, when he rescued Lot and overthrew Amraphel: and he had then but the age of 82. yeeres : and it is as manifest that he parted from Haran after his Father AB.7.4.6 10 Terah was dead. But if Terah begat Abrahamat 70. yeere old, then must Abraham Gen. 14. have beene 135. yeeres when hee first set his foote in Canaan: seeing Terah must bee dead ere he parted, and so 70. added to 135. made 205, the true age of Terab, which is contrary to all those places of Scripture before remembred. For hee entred at 75: heerescued Lot at 83: hee had I mach at 86: hee had I face at 100 proued by the Moreouer, if Abraham were the eldest sonne of Terah, and borne in the 70. yeere of his age: then had Terak lived till Isaac had beene 35. yeeres old, and Ismael, 49. both which must then have been borne in Mesopotamia, and therein fostered to that age: vnleffe we should either denie credit to S. Stephen, who saith that Abraham 20 departed from Mesopotamia after his Fathers death: or else give credit to the interpretation of Daniel Angelocrator, who in his Chronologia antoptica, faith it was about his Fathers death: because the Greeke word, w, may bee, transported by the Latine fub, aswell as by post: which though elsewhere it may bee, yet cannot it be so in this place. For it were most improperly spoken, to say that those things were done about Terabs death, which were 60. yeeres before. Wherefore supposing Abraham to have beene borne in the 70. yeere of Terah; we must give those times and places of birth to Abrahams children, which no authoritie will warrant; For Abraham had no children in Vr of Chaldea, nor in Haran: nor in 10. yeeres after his arrivall into Canaan. For the yeere of Terabs death, in which Abraham left Haran, was the yeere of 20 the World 2082, and the yeere of Ismaels birth was the Worlds yeere 2094: which maketh 10. yeeres difference. And that Isaac was borne in Canean, and was to bee offered vpon the mountaine Moriah therein, 39 miles from Berjabe, where Abraham then inhabited: and that three Angels first of all appeared to Abraham in the valley of Mamre, no man doubteth.

And therefore it cannot be that any of Abrahams sonnes were borne in Mesopotamia: nor while Terah lived; nor in lessethen 10. yeeres after Terahs death: and then consequently was not Abraham the eldest sonne of Terah, nor borne in the 70, verte

Thirdly, whereas Abraham came into Canaan at 75: if Terah had begotter in ac 40 70, then had Terah lived but 145. for 70 and 75. make 145. which muttate have Gen. 121. 16. been the full age of Terah: but Terah lived 205. yeere: and therefore was not Abraham borne in the 70. yeere of Terah.

Fourthly, the ages of Lot and Sarah make it manifest, that Haran was the elder if not the eldest brother of Abraham; for Sarah or Iscah wanted but 10, yeeres of Abrahams age: Isaac beeing borne when Abraham was 100. and Sarah 90. yeeres

It followeth then, that if Abraham had beene the elder brother of Haran, Haz ran must have begotten Sarah at 9. yeeres old: for granting that Haran was borne but one yeere after Abraham, and Sarah within 10. yeres as old as Abraham, then of 10 necessitie must Haran beget her, when hee had lived but 9. yeeres; which were too ridiculous to imagine.

And that Iseah was Sarah, Rab. Solomon affirmeth; both names, faith he, bearing the same signification; and names of principalitie. Againe, to what end was the word Isah or lifecah inserted in this place, if Sarah were not meant thereby Afor to Thirdly, whereas Abraham came into Canaan at 75: if Terah had begotter that 40 70, then had Terab lived but 145. for 70 and 75. make 145. which muttand Gen. 122. been the full age of Terah: but Terah lived 205. yeere: and therefore was not Abraham borne in the 70. yeere of Terah.

Fourthly, the ages of Lot and Sarah make it manifest, that Haran was the elder, if not the eldest brother of Abraham; for Sarah or Iscah wanted but 10. yeeres of Abrabams age: Isaac beeing borne when Abrabam was 100. and Sarah 90. yeeres

speake of any thing superfluousitis not vsed in Gods Bookes: and if Iseah had not belonged to the story, it had been but an idle name to no purpose remembred.

Now if it had been true (asthole of the contrary opinion affirme) that Moses had no respect of Nachor and Haran, who were not with standing the parents of Bethuel and Rebecca, the mother of Ifrael, and of Christ: what regard then had Moles of Iseah in this place, were she not Sarah, but otherwise an idle name of whom there is nothing

The age also of Lot disproueth the eldership of Abraham: for Lot was called an old man when Abraham was but 83. yeeres: And if Lot were of a greater age than Abraham, and Haran were Father to Lot, Sarah, and Milcah, Abraham marrying one 10 of Harans daughters, and Nahor the other, Sarah also being within ten yeeres as old as Abraham: it may appeare to every reasonable man (not obstinate and prejudicate) that Haran was the eldest sonne of Terah, and not Abraham: who also died first and before his Father left Vr in Chaldes. Also Lyra reasoneth against the opinion of Abrahams eldership, vpon the same place of Genesis: drawing argument from the age of Sarah, who was but 10. yeeres yonger than Abraham himselfe. Lyra his wordes are thele: Stigitur HARAN fuit iunior ipfo ABRAHAM, sequitur quod non habebat decem annos quando genuit SARAM : imo necocto, &c. and afterward, & ideo melius videtur dicendum, quod ABRAHAM fuit vltimo natus de tribus filijs THARE, tamen nominatur primo , propter eius dignitatem : & quia ponendus erat caput stirpis & generatio- 20 nis sequentis : & quia primo facta est es repromisso expressa de CHRISTO, sicut supra dictum eft de SEM, &c. If therefore (faith Lyra) HAR AN was yonger then ABRAHAM himselfe, it followeth that he was not ten yeeres old when he begat SARAH: And therefore it Ceemeth better to he faid, that ABRAHAM was the last borne of the three sonnes of THARE, neuerthelesse he is named first for his dignitie, both because he was to be ordained head of the focke and generation following, and because the promise of CHRIST was first made unta bim, as before it is faid of SEM.

d. VII.

A conclusion of this dispute noting the Authors on both sides: with an admonition that they which shorten the times, make all ancient stories the more unprobable.

T therefore agreeth with the Scriptures, with Nature, Time, and T therefore agreeth with the Scriptures, with Nature, I me, and Reason, that Haran was the eldest sonne of Terah, and not Abraham: and that Abraham was borne in the 130, yeere of Terah life, and not in the 70, yeere. For Abraham departing Charran after Terah died, and the property of the sonne of the so cording to S. Stephen, and that iourney by Abraham performed when 40

hee was 75. yeeres old, these two numbers added make 205. yeeres, the full age of Terah: seeing that when Terah died, then Abraham entred Canuan. For my selfe, I haue no other end herein then to manifest the truth of the Worlds Story: I reuerence the judgements of the Fathers: but I know they were mistaken in particulars Saint Augustine was doubtfull, and could not determine this controuersie. For whatsoeuer is borrowed from him out of his 16. Booke de Ciuitate Dei,ca. 15. the same may be answered out of himselfe in his fine and twentierh question vpon Gen. Bur S. Augustine herein followed Insephus, and Isidor: and Beda followed S. Augustine. And it was out of a foolish pride and vanitie, that the Hebrews and lofe. phus fought to make Abraham the first borne: as if God had had respect to the eldest so in nature. So did Iolephus together with Nicholas Damascenus (thinking thereby to glorifie the Iemish Nation) make Abraham a king, entitling Sarah by the name of Queene Sarab: and said that Abraham was followed with 3 18. Captaines, of which euery one had an infinite multitude vnder him; trecentos & octodecem prefectos

This account of times, allowing no more than 292 yeeres from the Floud to Abrabem, is vpheld by many of the Hebrews. But how should wee value the opinion of fuch Chronologers, as take amraphel for Nimrod? Surely, if their iudgement in fuch matters were worthy to be regarded, it would have appeared in fetting downe the fuccession of the Persian Kings, vnder whom they lived, whose Historie was not so farre remote in time, as these antiquities, nor wanting the light of many good writo ters. Yet groffely have they erred therein, and so familiar are their millakings in all things of like nature, that we feldome finde their opinion rehearled without the confutation treading on the heeles of it. They of the Romane religion are also generally on the same side: it being a thing vsuall among them, to maintaine what soener they have beene formerly knowne to holde and beleene. Contrariwife, of the more ancient, Theodoret, and some following him: of later times Beroalius, Codoman, Peucer, Caluin, Innius, Beza, Broughton, Doct. Gibbons, and Moore, with divers of the Protestants, hold Abraham to haue been borne in the 130. yeere of his Father Terah. From these, (as in a case not concerning any point in Religion) divers of the same Religion, and those neuerthelesse good Authours, as Bucholcerus, Chur aus, Functius 20 and others, are very anerse herein, especially sosephus Scaliger with his Sethus Calne. fins, proclaiming Beroaldus an Arch-heretike in Chronologie, and condemning this opinion of his as poylonous. Contrariwife, Augustinus Torniellus a Priest of the Congregation of S. Paul, a indicious, diligent and free writer, whose Annales are newly fer forth, very earnestly defends the opinion, which I have already delivered; not alleadging Beroaldus, nor any Protestant writer, as beeing perhaps vnwilling to owe thankes to heretikes. For my selfe I doe neither millike the contrary opinion, becaule commonly those of the Romifb Religion labour to vphold it, Nor fauour this larger account of times, because many notable men of the Protestant writers have approued it; but for the trueth it felfe. To strengthen which, after all these former reasons, and testimonies of Scripture, I will adde thus much more to the rest. First, it is apparant to all men of judgement, that the best approoued Historians, Divine and prophane, labour to inucitigate the trueth of times, thereby to approue the stories, and forepast actions of the world: and not the trueth of histories to approue the times by. Let vs then make judgement to our selues, which of these two accounts give the best reputation to the storie of the Scriptures; teaching the Worlds new plantation, and the continuancie of Gods Church: either that of Iosephus, and those which follow him; who makes but 292. yeeres, or thereabouts, betweene the floud and birth of Abraham: or this other account, which makes 352. yeeres betweenethe one and the other: the one taking Abrabam to be the first borne of Thare, 40 in the 70 yeere of his life: the other a yonger sonne of Thare, and borne when hee had lived 130 yeeres. And if we looke over all, and doe not hastily satisfie our understanding with the first things offered, and thereby being satiated doe slothfully and drowfily fit downe; wee shall finde it more agreeable rather to allow the reckoning of the Septuagint, who, according to some editions make it about 1072. yeeres betweene the Floud and Abrahams birth: then to take away any part of those 352. yeeres given. For if we aduisedly consider the state and countenance of the world, such as it was in Abrahams time, yea, before Abraham was borne, wee shall finde that it were very ill done of vs by following opinion without the guide of reason, to pare the times ouer-deepely betweene Abraham and the Floud: because 50 in cutting them too neere the quicke, the reputation of the whole storie might perchance bleede thereby, were not the testimonie of the Scriptures supreme, so as no objection can approchit: and that wee did not follow withall this precept of S. Augustine, That wheresoeuer any one place in the Scriptures may bee conceined disagreeing to the whole, the same is by ignorance of interpretation misunderstood.

CHAP.1. S.9. of the Historie of the World.

For in Abrahams time all the then known parts of the World were peopled; all Regions and Countries had their Kings. Agypt had many magnificent Cities: and fo had Palastina, and all the bordering Countries: yea, all that part of the World besides, as far as India: and those not built with stickes, but of hewne stones, and defended with walles and rampiers: which magnificence needed a parent of more antiquitie, then those other men haue supposed. And therefore, where the Scriptures are plaineft, and best agreeing with reason and nature, to what end should we labour to beget doubts and scruples, or drawe all things into wonders and marnailes? giving also strength thereby to common cauellers, and to those mens apilh braines, who onely bend their wits to finde impossibilities, and monsters in the storie is of the World and Mankinde.

. Ø. VIII.

A computation of the times of the Assyrians and others, grounded upon the times noted in the florie of ABRAHAM.

An mundi 2008 dil.352. natus Abraham, Euf. Aug.de Ciuit.

N this fort therefore for the reasons before alleadged, I conclude, that from the generall Floud, to the birth of Abraham, 352. yeeres were consumed: and taking the Afgrian History with vs, the same number to of yeeres were spent from the Floud to the 43. veere of Ninus abraham was borne. which 43. yeere of Ninus Abraham was borne: which happened in the yeere of the World,2009.

Now of this time of 352, yeeres, wee must give one part as well to the increase of those people which came into Shinar, as to those that stayed in the East, to wit, 20. vecre to Chas, ere he begat Seba: of which, though the Scriptures are filent, yet because those of the same time had that age when they begat their first sonnes, we may the more fafely give the like allowance to these. For Eber begat Peleg at 24. Peleg Requat 30. Regu Serng at 32. Now after Seba, Chus begat Hauila, Sabta, Raama and Sabtecha: and Raama begat Sheba and Dedan, before Wimrod was borne, as it appea 30 reth Gen. 1c. which S. Augustine approueth. Giving then 30. yeeres more to Raama ere hee begat Sheba, and five yeeres to the five elder brothers of Nimrod, it may bee gathered that 65. yeeres were confumed ere Nimrod himselfe was borne: and that Raamab had that age ere any of his sonnes were begotten, it may be gathered, by example and comparison: for Peleg the fourth from Noah, as Raamah was, begat Regu in the same yeere of his life.

Gen. 11.18.

Let vs then allow 60. yeeres more after the birth of Wimrod, for two other generations to be brought forth, or else we shall hardly find people to build Babel: for sure wee are that it was done by hands, and not by miracle: because it displeased God. These two numbers of 65, and 60, make 125. The rest of the time of 131. (in which 40 yeere they arrived in Shinar, whereof there are 6. yeeres remaining) wee may give them for their travels from the East: because they were pestered with women, children and Cattell: and as some ancient writers have conceived, and Becanus of later times, they kept alwaies the mountaines fides, for feare of a fecond Floud. Now, if we take this number of 131. out of 352 there remaines 221. of which number Berofus bestoweth 65. on Belus, and 42. on Ninus, before Abraham borne: both which S. Augustine approueth: which two numbers taken againe out of 221.there remaineth 114. yeeres of the 352. from the Floud to Abrahams birth: which number of 114. necessitie bestoweth on Nimrod.

An. a Calute bumani generis ab aquis centesimo primo capit regnum Babylonicum (ub nostro Saturno patre Ionis Beli,qui imperauit annis 65. Berofus.

And if it be objected that this time given to Nimrod, is over-long: fure if we com- 50 pare the age of Nimrod with the rest of the same descent from Noah, it will rather appeare ouer-short. For Nimred, by this accompt, lived in all but one hundred feuenty nine yeeres: whereof hee reigned one hundred and twelue: whereas Sale who was the some of Arphaxad the some of Sem, lived source hundred thirty three veeres: and of the same age of the World was Nimred, the some of Chus, the some

Ninus reigned 9. yeers: which added to 43. make Ninus dieth and leaueth Semiramis his successor.

Semiramis gouerned the Empire of Babylonia and Affyria 42. yeeres, and died in the Of the World 52. yeere compleat of Abrahams life.

Ninia or Zameis succeeded Semiramis, and ruled 38. yeeres, in the second yeere of whose reigne Abraham left Mesopotamia

When Abraham was 85 yeeres old, he rescued his nephew Lot, and ouerthrew by Surprise Amraphel king of Shinar, or Babylonia. Ninias reigned 38. yeeres, and Abraham came into Canaan but 23. yeeres after Semiramis died: which was the 75. yeere of his age : fo that Amraphel may feeme to have beene this Winias the sonne of Winus, and Semiramis, whose 23. yeere, as aforesaid, being the 75. yeere of Abraham, he and his fellow-kings might have received this overthrow in the 85. yeere of Abraham, and the 33. yeere of his own reigne: after which he reigned fine yeeres: which make in all 38. But the trueth is, that the reasons to the contrary, vrging that this Amraphel could not be Ninias, are not easily answered. Howbeit for the times of the Allyrian kings, that they are to bee ordered as wee haue fer them downe, accor-20 ding to the times noted by Moles, in the storie of Abraham, it is most certaine: vniesse we will either derogate from the trueth of Moses his computation, which were impietie: or account the whole Historie of Ninus and Semiramis to bee a fiction; which were to condemne all ancient Historians for fablers.

Nd now touching this Amraphel, whom Mofes makes king of Shinar or Babylonia, in the 85. yeere of Abrahams life, that is, in the 33. yeere of the reigne of Ninias Zameis the king of the Assyrians, the sonne of N inus and Semiramis, it is hard to affirme what he was, and how hee could be at this time king of Babylonia: Ninias Zameis then reigning there. To this doubt the answere which first offerethit selfe as most probable, is that which hath beene alreadie noted, that this Nineas or Zameis, was no other then our Amraphel: who inuaded Traconitis or Basan, and ouerthrew those fine kings of Pentapolis, or the valley of Siddim. For the Scriptures tell vs, that Amraphel was king 40 of Shinar, which is Babylonia: and the times before accounted make him to be the succession of Ninus and Semiramis: and it falleth out with the 85. yeere of Abrahams life: wherein he rescued Lot, slew Chedorlaomer, and ouerthrew the rest. True it is, that this Amraphel was not at this time the greatest Monarke: for Chedorlasmer commanded in chiefe, though Amraphel bee first named by Moses in the first verse of the 14. Chapter of Genesis. For the Kings of the valley of Siddim, or of Pentapolis, or of the fine Cities, were the vassals of Chedorl. and not of Amraphel: as it is Written. Twelve yeeres were they Subiect to CHEDORLAOMER, but in the 13. yeere Gen. 14.4. they rebelled, and in the 14. yeere came CHEDORLAOMER and the kings that were with him: and therefore was Chedorl. the principall in this enterprise, who was then king 50 of Elam, which is Persia: Now Persia being seated ouer Tigris, and to the East of Amraphels Countrie; and the other two kings, which were companions with Amraphel, being seated to the West of Shinar or Babylonia: Amraphel, who held Babylonia it selfe, seemethat this time to have had no great scope or large dominion. For had Amraphel beene so great a Prince as prophane Historians make Ninus or Semiramis whom hee succeeded, he should not have needed the affistance of three other kings for this expedition. But though Checorlaomer were the first and greatest of those foure Kings, (as it is manifest that hee was: For these little kings of Sodome, Gomora. e'c, were his vassals, and not Amraphels) yet this makes not the coniecture lesse probable, but that this Amraphel might be Ninias. For it may be, that the great and potent Empire of Affyria, had now (as we shall shew more plainely in that which followeth) received a downe-right fall, at the time of this warre: though not long beforeit commanded all the kingdomes betweene India and the Phanician Sea: to wit, in the times of Ninus and Semiramis.

of ARIOCH another of the four Kings, and that ELLAS, whereof he is said te hane beene King, lies betweene Coelesyria and Ara-

Ow the two other kings io yned with Amraphel, and Chedorl. were Arioch and Tidal; the one king of Ellassar, the other of the Nations. For Ellasar, Aquila and Hicrome write Pontus: so Tostatus thinketh that it should bee Hellespont: which opinion Pererius fauoureth. But this is 20 🤏 onely to defend the Latine translation. For as Pontus, so is Hellespont farre distant, and out of the way to fend any armies into Arabia Petrea, or into Idumea: which Countries these foure Kings chiefly inuaded: Besides that, it is certaine, that the Assignians (when they were greatest) had neuer any dominion in Asia the leffe. For at such time as the Afgrians feared the inuation of the Medes and Persians, they sent not into Asia the lesses commaunders : but vsed all the Arte they hadto invite Crafus to their affiltance: perswading him that nothing could bee more dangerous for himselfe, and the other Kings of those parts, than the successe of the Aledes against the Affyrians. But examine the enterprise what it was. These Kings (faith the Text) made warre with BERA, king of Sodome, BIRSHA king of Gomor-30 ha, SHINAB king of Admath, and SHEMEBAR king of Zeboim, and the king of BELA which is Zoar. All which fine kings had not fo much ground as Middlefex: being such a kind of Reguli, as Iosua found in the land long after: namely, Lords of Cities and small territorries adio yning; of which Canaan had 33. all slaine or hanged by Iofus. Neither can the other Countries, which in the Text they are saide also to have inuaded, bee imagined to have beene at that time of any great power: and therefore to call in Kings from Pontus or Hellespont, had manifested a great impotencie and weakenessein the kings of Babylon and Persia.

And though it bee alleadged for an example, that divers kings farre off, came to affift Pompey against Cofar: yet these samples without like occasions and cir-40 cumstances, do neither lead nor teach. For there was no cause to seare the greatnesse of these pettie kings, or of the other Countries: But the eyes of the world were fixed on C.esar; and his undertakings and intents were to all other Princes, no lesse doubtfull then fearefull: But the whole Countrie by these foure kings mastered in their passage, was afterward given to the halfe tribe of Manasse, Gad, and Reuben: a narrow valley of ground lying betweene lordan and the mountaines of Seir: inclofed by the river of Arnen on the South fide, and by Lybanus on the North, confiffing of the two small Provinces of Traconitis or Basan, and the Region of the Mosbites: a conquest farre vnualuable, and little answering the power of the Assyrian Empire, if the same had remained in any comparable estate with the times of Ninus and St-50 miramis, who subjected all the great kings of that part of the World, without the affiltance of any of the Kings of Hellespont, or any other part of Asia the leff. But as the Vulgar and Aquila connert Ellassar by Pontus : so Symmachus makes Ariotha King of the Scythians, a King indeed, as farre fetched to ioyne with the Affricans

inthis warre, as the World had any at that time. The Septuagint doe not change the word of Ellassar at all, but as they keep the word drarat, on the mountaines wherof the Arke didreft, so doethey in this place retains the Hebren word Ellaffar, being doubtfull to give it a wrong interpretation. And Pererius himselfe remembreth other opinions farre more probable then this of Pontus or Helle (pont : yet he dares not anow his liking of them, because the Latine Translation bath it otherwise. For Stephania de Vrbibus a Gracian Cofmographer, findeth the Citie of Ellas in the border of Calefyria: and S. Hierome calleth Ellas the Citie of Arisch, as in truth it was. Now although the same be seated by Stephanse in Calefyria, yet it standeth on the border 10 of Arabia, of which Arioch was king: who formerly joyned with Ninus in all his conquests, being of the same familie, and descended from Cham and Chus: after whom the name of Arise was by the Hebrews written Arisch: and afterward againe Arctas: as in the Machabees: the kings of Arabia holding that name even to the time of S. Paul, who was fought to be betrayed by the Lieutenant of Aretas commanding in Cornali. Damascus. They were Princes for the most part confederate and depending vpon the Assirtan Empire. It is true that wee finde in Daniel, that in the time of Nabucho- Dan 2. donolor, one Arioch was Generali of his armie, and the principall Commander under him, who was a king of kings: which makes it plaine, that Artoch heere spoken of, the fonne of that Arioch Confederate of Ninus, was no king of Pontus, nor of Scythia regi-20 ons farreremooned from the Affyrians and Babylonians. The name also of Arioch who commanded under Nabucho.lonofor is mentioned in Indith, by the name of king of the Elymeans: who are a Nation of Persians bordering Assyria, according to Stephanus: though Plinie lets it betweene the Sea-coast, and Media: and if any brother of the Arabian Kings or other of that house (knowne by the name of Arius, Arioch, Areta or Aretas) had the government of that Persian Province called Elymais (as it seemeththey had by the places of Daniel and Iudith) yet the same was in Nabuchodonoforstime. But this Arioch heere spoken of may with more reason bee taken for the king of Arabia, the sonne of Arius, the Consederate of Ninus : whose sonnes held league, as their Fathers did, being the next bordering Prince of all on that side to-20 wards the West to Babylonia, and Chaldea: and in amicie with them from the beginning, and of their owne house, and bloud: which D. Sieulus also confirmeth.

Diod.Sic.1.2.c.1

d. X1. Of TIDAL another of the foure Kings.

He fourth King by Abraham ouerthrowne was Tidal, king of the Nations. The Hebrew writes it Goigm, which Vatablus takes to be a proper name: Lyra of mixt people: Calain of runnagates without habitation:

Pererius out of Strabo, findes that Galikea was inhabited by divers Nations, which were a mixt people: namely of Agyptians, Arabians, and strabiline, followed by the strategies of the strategies o

Phanicians. Nam tales funt qui Galileam habitant; Such are the inhabitants of Galilee, faith 523. Strabo: and therefore was Tidal called king of these Nations, as they suppose. And it may be so: but the authoritie of Strabo is nothing in this question. For Galilea was not peopled at this time, as it was in the time of Strabo. For when Abraham came into Canaan, the Cananite was then in the Land, how soener they might be afterwards mixt; which I know not. But there are many pettie kingdomes adioyning to Phanicia, and Palæstina; as Palmyrena, Batanea, Laodicene, Apamena, Chalcidice, Cassotis, Chalibenius, and all these doe also ioyne themselves to Melopotamia, on the North, and to 50 Arabia on the East. And that these Nations gathered themselves together under Tidal, I take to be the probablest coniecture.

CHAP. 1. S.12.

D. XII.
That CHEDORLAOMER the chiefe of the 4. Kings was not of Affyria, but of Persia: and that the Allyrian Empire at this time was much impaired.

Aftly, wheras it is conceived that Chedorlaomer was the Asyrian Emperor, and that Amraphel was but a Satrape, Viceroy, or Prominciall gouernour of Bibylonia, and that the other kings named were such also, I cannot agree with Pereriss in this. For Mofes too well acquainted with the names of Affur, and Shinar, to call the Affyrian a king of Elam: those 10 kings being in the Scriptures euermore called by the name of Chaldaa, Shinar, Babylonia, or Affria: but neuer by Elam; and Chedorlaomer or Kedarlaomer was so called of Kidor, from Cidarim which in the Hebrew fignifieth Regale: for fo Q. Curtius calleth the garment which the Persian kings ware on their heads.

Neither doe I beleeue that the Assyrian or Babylonian Empire stood in any greatnesse at the time of this inualion, and my reasons are these: First, example and experience teach vs, that those things which are set vp hastily, or forced violently, doe not long last: Alexander became Lord of all Asia, on this side of Indus, in a time of so short a life, as it lasted not to ouer-looke what it selfe had brought forth. His fortunes were violent, but not perpetuall. For his Empire died at once with himselse: all 20 whose chiefe Commanders became kings after him. Tamberlain conquered Asia and India with a storme-like and terrible successe: but to prevalent surie God hath adioined a short life: and what soeuer things Nature herselse worketh in haste, she taketh the least care of their continuance. The fruit of his victories perished with him, if not

Winus beeing the first whom the madnesse of boundlesse dominion transported, inuaded his neighbour Princes, and became victorious ouer them: a man violent, infolent, and cruell. Semiramis taking the opportunitie, and being more proud, aduenturous, and ambitious, then her Paramor: enlarged the Babylonian Empire, and beautified many places therein with buildings vnexampled. But her sonne hauing chan-30 ged Nature and Condition with his Mother, proued no leffe feminine then shee was masculine. And as wounds and wrongs, by their continuals smart, put the Patient in minde how to cure the one, and revenge the other: so those kings adioyning ( whose subjection, and calamities incident were but new, and therefore the more grieuous) could not sleepe, when the aduantage was offered by such a successour. For in regno Babylonico hic parum resplenduit, this King shined little (faith Nauclerus of Ninias) in the Babylonian kingdome. And likely it is that the neckes of mortall men hauing beene neuer before galled with the yoke of forraine dominion, Nor hauing euer had experience of that most miserable and detested condition of living in slavery:no long descent having as yet invested the Affyrian with a right: nor any other 40 tirle being for him to bee pretended than a strong hand; the soolish and esseminate sonne of atyrannous and hated Father, could very ill hold so many great Princes and Nations his vassals, with a powerlesse mastering, and a mind lesse industrious than his Father and Mother had vsed before him. And hee that was so much given ouer to licentious idlenesse, as to suffer his Mother to raigne 42. yeeres, and thereof the greatest part after he came to mans estate: witnessed thereby to the World, that he so much preserred ease before honour, and bodily pleasures before greatnesse, as he neither indenoured to gaine what he could not gouerne, nor to keepe what he could not without contentious perill enioy.

These Considerations being joyned to the storie of Amraphel, delivered by Alo- 50 fes, by which wee finde that Amraphel king of Shinar was rather an inferiour to the king of Persia, than either his superiour, or equall, make it seeme probable, that the Empire of Ninus and Semiramis was at that time broken a funder, and restrained again to Babylonia.

For conclusion I will adde these two arguments confirming the sormer: First, that at such time as it pleased God to impose that great trauaile vpon Abraham, from Vrin Chaldaa to Charran, and then to Canaan, a passage of 700. miles, or little lesse, with women, children, and carriages: the Countries through which hee wandred were then settled, and in peace. For it was in the 23. yeere of Ninias, when Abraham obeying the voice of God, tooke this great journey in hand: in which time of 23. veeres after the death of Semiramis, the neighbour Princes had recoursed their libertie and former estates. For Semiramu armie of foure millions, with herselfe veterly strab, 154 consumed in India, and all her armes and engins of war, at the same time lost, gaue an occasion and opportunitie euen to the poorest soules and weakest hearted creatures

Secondly, it is affirmed by the best and ancientest Historians, that Arius the fonne of Ninias, or Amraphel, invaded the Bactrians and Calpians, and againe subjected them: which needed not if they had not beene revolted from Ninia, after N inus death. And as Arioch recovered one part, fo did Baleus or Balaneus, otherwise Xerxes, reduce the rest revolted to their former obedience. Of whom it is said that hee conquered from Æeypt to India: and therefore was called Xerxes, id eft, Victor & triumphator, a conquereur and triumpher, which undertakings had beene no other then the efects of madnesse, had not those Countries freed themselves, from the Babylonian sub-20 iestion. Now if we shall make any doubt heereof, that is, of the reconquest of Arius and Xerxes, both which lived after Ninus and Ninius wee may as well thinke the rest of Ninus and Semiramis to be but fained: but if wee graunt this reconquest, then is ittrue that while Ninias or Amraphel ruled, the Affyrian Empire was torne afunder. according to that which hath beene gathered out of Moses as before remembred.

that they had else-where with their colonies planted them selves: and so retained the names of the Countries whence they came : which if it be fo, we neede not fay that A MR APHEL was NINIAS, nor crouble our selues with many other difficulties.

He consent of all writers, whose workes have come to my perusall, agreeing as they doe, that thefe 4 kings, Amraphel of Shinar, Chedorlaomer of Elam, and their fellowes were Lords of those Regions, whereunto they are or feeme intituled: doth almost inforce vs to thinke that the Historie must so be understood, as I have delivered. But if in this place, as often elsewhere in the Scriptures, the names of Countries may be set for people of those lands, or if (as Hierome hath it) Chedorlaomer was king of the Elamites, as Tidal was faid to be of the Nations, that is, of people either wanting a fixed habitati-40 on, or gathered out of fundrie regions: then may we otherwise conceive of this Historie: remouing thereby some difficulties which men perhaps have beene vnwilling to find because they could not find how to resolue them. For as it had been a strange coniecture to thinke that Arioch was drawn to affift the Persian, against the Sodomite; as far as from Pontus, where it is very vnlikely that Chedorlaomer was knowne, and almost impossible that the vale of Siedim should have been once named: so in true estimation it is a thing of great improbabilitie, that Chedorlaomer, if he were king of Persin alone, should passe through so great a part of the World, as the Countries of Alliria, Chaldea, Mesopotamia, Syria, and part of Arabia, and Canaun, to subdue those fine Townes, whose very names how they should come to his eare, being distoined by so so many great Nations of different languages, a wife man could hardly coniecture. And if all the Countries bordering Persia together with the Babylonian himselfe, yea the kingdom of Ellafar, & that of Tidal, so far off removed, were become his dependants. what reason can we finde that might have induced him to hearken after Sodome and Gomerah? & when he should have fought the establishment of his new gotten Empire, by rooting out the posteritie of Ninus (as Ninus had dealt by Pharnus of Media. and Zoroaster of Bactria) then to imploy the forces of Amraphel, and those other kings, against fine pettie townes, leaving Tyru, and Sidon, and the great Citie of Damaso, with many other places of much importance, and farre neerer vnto him, vnfubdued? Now as these doubts which may bee alleadged against the first conquest of the vale of Siddim, are exceeding vehement: so are the objections to be made against his reconquest of these sine Cities, when they had revolted, as forcible; yea and more, as being grounded partly vpon the text it selfe. For first, what madnesse had it beene in that small Prouince to rebell against so powerfull a Monarch? Or if it were so that they dwelling farre from him, hoped rather to bee forgotten, then that 19 hee should come or send to reclaime them: was it not more then madnesse in them, when his terrible armie approached, still to entertaine hope of enasion: yea to make refishance (being themselves a dissolute and therefore vnwarlike people) against the power of all the Nations betweene Euphrates, yea betweene themselues and the riuer of Indus? Likewise on the part of Chedorlaomer we should finde no greater wise dome, if he knowing the weakenesse of this people, had raised such a world of men against them: whom by any Lieutenant, with small forces hee might have subdued. For the perpetuall inheritance of that little Countrie, was not sufficient to counteruaile one moneths charges of so huge an armie. How small then must his valour haue beene, who with fo mightie preparations effected no more then the wasting of 20 that Valley, wherein he left the Cities standing, taking no one of them; but returned well contented with a few prisoners, and the pillage of the Countrie, although hee had broken their armie in the field? Now the Scriptures doe not of this inualion ( supposed so great ) make any fearefull matter : but compose the two armies, asequally matcht, saying they were foure kings against fine: yea, if the place be literally expounded, we shall finde that Abraham slew all these kings, of which great slaughter no Historie makes mention : Neither will the raigne of Ninias, who lived foure or flue yeeres longer, permit that he should have died so soone neither would Hi-Rories have forgotten the manner of his death, if hee had so strangely perished in Syria. Whereby it appeares, that these foure kings were not the same that they are 30 commonly thought: nor their forces fo great as opinion hath made them. It may therefore well bectrue, that these kings were such as many others, who in that age carried the same title: Lords and Commanders energione of his owne companie, which he carried foorth as a Colonie, feeking place where to fettle himfelfe and them, as was the viuall manner of those times.

Neither is it vnprobable, that Chedorlaomer leading a troupe of Persians, Amraphel some people out of Shinar, and Tidal others gathered out of sundry places, might confort together, and make the weakest of the Countrie which lay about them, to pay them tribute. Whosoeuer will consider the beginning of the first booke of Thueydides, with the manner of discoueries, conquests and plantations, in the infan- 40 cie of Greece, or the manner of the Saracens inuading Affrica, and Spaine, with almost as many kings as seuerall Armies: or the proceedings of the Spaniards in their new discoueries, passages, and conquests in the West-Indies: may easily perceiue, that it was neither vnu(uall, for the leaders of Colonies to receive title from the people whom they conducted: nor to make alliances together, and breake them againe, diflurbing sometimes one the other, sometimes helping in pursuit of a conquest. That Amraphel and his affociates were such manner of Commaunders, it may seeme the more likely, by the flothfull qualitie of Ninias then raigning in Affria: whose vnmanlike temper was such, as might well giue occasion to such vndertaking spirits, as wanted the imploiments whereunto they were accustomed, in the raigne of Semi- 50 ramis, rather to seeke aduentures abroad, than to remain at home vnregarded: whils others more vnworthie than themselues, were advanced. If the consent of the whole streame of writers vpon this place make this coniecture disagreeable to the Text, to the authoritie whereof all humane reason must subscribe, then wee may hold our selues to the former coniecture, that Amraphel was Ninias: and that the power of his Ancestours being by his sloth decayed, hee might well be inferiour to the Persian Chedorlaomer: or if this doe not satisfie, wee may say that Amraphel was an Vnder-king or Satrapa of Shinar, under Ninias; who may be supposed to have had his Imperial feat in his Fathers Citie Niniue: and to have preferred it before Shiner and Babylon the Citie of his Mother, whom hee hated as an viurper of his right. But if it were possible that in a case not concerning any mans Saluation, and wherein therefore none bath cared to take great paines, all might erre : then can I thinke that the opinion, That these four kings were leaders of Colonies, sent out of the Countries named in the Text, and not kings of the Countries themselves, is most confonant both to the condition of those times, and to the Scripture. And heereto adde that Chedorlaomer feemes rather called a Persian king, then king of Persia: and that Arioch (whole kingdome vindoubtedly was betweene Syria and Arabia) having beene a man of action, or being a worthy mans sonne, was very well pleased, to giue passage and assistance, to these Captaines or pettie kings. These and such like things heere to vrge, were but with circumstances to adorne a supposition, which either may fland without them, or if it must fall, is vnworthie to have cost bestowed vpon it: especially considering, that it is not my intent to imploy any more time in making it good, but to leaue it wholly to the Readers pleasure, to follow any of these 20 opinions, or any other, if he finde any that shall seeme better than these. But of what Countries or people foeuer these four ewere kings, this expedition is the onely publique action that we know of performed by Abraham. And as for other things belonging to his Storie, and of his sonnes, and of his Nephews Esawand Jacob, as they are registred by Moles, because it is not our purpose, neither to stand upon things generally knowne to all Christians, nor to repeate what hath beene elsewhere alreadie fooken, nor to preuent our selves in things that may hereafter in due place be remembred, wee passethem heere in silence. And because in this Storie of Abraham and his posteritie, there is much mention of Agypt: by which it appeares that euen in the time of Abraham, it was a settled and flourishing king> dome, it will not bee amisse in the next place to speake somewhat of the antiquities, and first kings thereof.

Of the Kings of Ægypt from the first peopling of it after the Floud, to the time of the deliuerie of the Israe-lites from thence.

è. I.

A briefe of the names and times of the first Kings of Agypt: with a note of the causes of difficulty in resoluting of the tructhin these points.

One after the confusion at Babel (as it seems) Chamwith many of his issue and followers (hauing doubt-lesse knowne the sertilitie of Agypt before the Floud) came thither and tooke possession of the Countrie: in which they built many Cities: and beganne the kingdome one hundred ninesie one yeeres after the 20 deluge. The ancient Gouernours of this Kingdome till such time as Israel departed Agypt, are shewnein the Table following.

The Table and especially the Chronologie, is to be confirmed by probabilities and coniectures, because in such obscurity manifest and restlesse truth cannot be found. For S. Augustine, a man of exceeding great iudgement, and incomparable diligence, who had sought into all antiquities, and had read the bookes of Varro, which now are lost, yet omitted the succession of the Agyptian Kings: which he would not have done, if they had not been more uncertaine then the Suganians, whom he remembreth, then whom doubtlesse they were more glorious. One great occasion of this obscurity in the Agyptian Storie, was the ambition of the Priess: who to magnific their Antiquities, filled the Records (which were in their hands) with many leafings, and recounted unto strangers, the names of many Kings that neuer reigned. 50 What ground they had for these reports of supposed Kings, it shall appear a anon. Sure it is that the magnificent workes and royall buildings in Agypt, such as a reneuer sound but in States that have greatly slourished, witnesse that their Princes were of marueilous greatnesse: and that the reports of the Priess were not altogether falle. A second cause of our ignorance in the Egyptian History, was the too much credulitie of some good Authors, who beleeuing the manifold and contrary reports of sindry Egyptians, & publishing in their own name, such as pleased them best; have confirmed them, and as it were inforced them upon us, by their authoritie. A third and generall sause of more than Egyptian darkenesse in the anticular third stries, is the edition of many Authors by sohn Annius, of whom (if to the censures of sundry very learned I may adde mine) I shinke thus; That Annius having seen some fragments of those writers, and added unto them what he would, may be credited, as an auoucher of true Histories, where approved writers confirme him: but so therwise is to be deemed fabulous. Hercupon it commets to passe that the account of Authours, either in the Chronologie or Genealogie of the Egyptian Kings, runs three altogether different wayes. The Christian writers, such as are ancient, for the most part follow Ensembles: Many late writers follow the edition of Annius his Authors: The prophane Histories sollow Herodotus, Diodorus, and such others.

That by the account of the Ægyptian Dynassies, and otherwise, it appeares that

CHAMS reigne in Ægypt began in the yeere after the Floud, 191.

O reconcile these, or gather out of them the times of the ancient Kings, about whom is most controuersie, the best meane is by helpe of the Dynasties: of whose continuance there is little or no disagreement. The account of the Dynasties (besides the authoritie of approved Authors) hath this good ground, that it agreeth for the most part, if not altogether with the Histories of the Affyrians, Troians, Italians, and others, &c. The beginning of the 16.Dyn. is iouned by generall consent, with the 43. yeere of 30 Ninus: in which Abraham was borne. The twelve first Dynasties lasted each of them seuen veeres, under the twelue, which were called the greater Gods : so that all the yeeres of their continuance were 84. The thirteenth Dynast indured foureteene yeeres: the fourteenth 26: the fifteenth 37. These three last, are sayd to haue beenevnder the three yonger Gods. So the fifteene first Dynasties lasted one hundred fixty one yeeres. As I doe not therfore believe that the continuance of these Dyn. was such as bath been mentioned, because Amius in such-wise limits out their time : so I cannot reject the account vpon this onely reason, that Annius hath it so: considering that both hitherto it hath passed as currant, and is greatly strengthened by many good reasons. For, whereas Eulebius placeth the beginning of the sixteenth 40 Dynastie, in the yeere of Abrahams birth, as aforefayd: the reckoning is easily cast; by which the summe of 161. yeeres, which according to our account were spent in the fifteene former, being subducted out of the summe of 352 yeeres, which were betweene the Floud and Abrahams birth, shew that the beginning of the first Dynastie, which was the beginning of Chames reigne in Acopt, was in the yeere 191. As also by other probabilities the same may appeare. For it is generally agreed, that the multitude of mankinde which came into Shinar, arrived at Babel, Anno à dilusio 131. In building the Tower were confumed fourtie yeeres, as Glicus recordeth: whosereport I haue elsewhere confirmed with divers probabilities. That Cham was long in paffing with his company, their Wines Children, Cattell, and Substance, 50 through all Syriathen desolate, and full of Bogges, Forrests, and Bryers (which the Deluge and want of culture in one hundred seuentie one yeeres had brought vpon it) no reasonable man will doubt. To this his passage therefore, and the seating of himselse in Agypt, wee allow twenty yeere: and these summes being added together, to wir, one hundred thirtic one yeeres after the Floud, before they arrived at

CHAP.2. S.4.

Babel, 40. yeeres for their flaythere, and 201 for Chamipallage into Agypt, and fertling there, make vo the fumme of 191, yeeres: at which time we faid that Oham began his reigne in Levpt, in the beginning of the first Dynastie. And to this summe of 191 yeeres if we adde the Tot veeres of the 15. first wynasties, as they are numbred in common account, we stiall fall right with the yeere of A brahams birth, which was An.Dil. 352. And hereto omitting many other reasons, which might be brought to prooue that these first Dynasties must needes have beenevery short, and not contain ring in the whole fumme of their feneral times about 161. yeeres : Let it suffice that had they lasted longer, then either must Agypt have been peopled as soone as Babel after the Floud : or the Dynasties (as Mercator thinkes) must have beene before the 10 Floud. That the arrival at Babel was many yeeres before the plantation of Agypt, after the Floud enough hath been said to prooue; and that the Dynasties were not before the Floud the number of the long-liu'd generations betweene Adam and the Floud, which was leffe than the number of the Dinafties, may fufficiently witnesse. Or if we will thinke, that one life might (perhaps) bee divided into many Equafties, then may this have beene as well after the Floud, as before: confidering that the fonnes of No. b did not in every Countrie erect such forme of Policie, as had beene vsed in the same ere the Deluge: but such as the disposition of the people, the authoritie and power of the Conducter, together with many other circumstances, did in-

He short continuance of the Dynasties, doth shew that they were not feuerall races of Kings, as the vaunting Agyptians were wont to file them. What they were it cannot certainly bee warranted. For inrestitutions of decayed antiquities, it is more easie to denie than to af- 30 firme. But this may be faid partly vpon good circumstance, partly voon the surest proofe, That it was the manner of the Agyptian Kings, to put the government of the Countrie into the hands of some trustie Counsellor, onely referning the Soueraignty to themselues, as the old Kings of France were wont to the Masters of the Palace, and as the Turke doth to the chiefe Visier. This is confirmed, first, by the number of the Dynasties, whereof many are under Cham, and more then one vnder Ofris or Mizrain; and must therefore have beene successions, not of Kings, but rather of Counsailors and Regents. Secondly, by custome of such Princes borderers to Agypt, as are mentioned in the Scriptures: of whom Abimelech the Philistim in his dealing with Abraham and Isaac about confederation, did no- 40 thing without Phicol Captaine of his Hofte; though in taking Abrahams wife, and in his private carriage, hee followed his owne pleasure. Likewise of Abimelech the fonne of Gideon it was faid: Is not hee the fonne of IER VBBAAL? and ZEBVL is his Officer? Also Ibbosheth the sonne of Saul, feared Abner the Captaine of the Hofte. Yea, Danie himselfe hating Isab for his crueltie did not punish him, in regard of his greatnesse, which was such, as was feared even of Hadad the Edomite living then in Ægypt. Thirdly, this is confirmed by the temper and disposition of Cham, who was lewd, as appeares by the Scriptures: therefore likely both for his owne idlenesse and pleasure, to have layd the burden of gouernement vpon others; and vpon iealousie, the companion of vnworthinesse, to have changed his Lieute 50 nants often. Aboue all other proofes is the advancement of tofeph by Pharaoh. William. Ty. de For Pharaoh said to Ioseph; Onely in the Kings throne will I be about thee: befold, I bell sacroling. have fet thee over all the Land of Agypt. William, Archbifhop of Tyre, who flourithed about the yeere of our Lord, one thousand one hundred eightie, affirmes that the like or very same forme of gouernement by Viceroys, was in his time practised in Acopt, having there beene in vie (as he believed) ever fince the time of lofeph. He plainely shewes, that the Soldans of Egypt were not Lords of the Countrie, how eper they have beene so deemed; but that they acknowledged and humbly performed the duetie of subjects vnto the Caliphe: who residing in a most magnificent Palace in Cairo, did commit the charge, not onely of civill government, but the power of making warre and peace, with the whole office and authority royall into the Soldans hands. He that shal reade in William of Tyre, the state of the Caliphe, or Mulene El- Lib. 19.2.20. hadeh with the forme of his Court, shall plainely behold the image of the ancient 10 Pharaoh, ruling by a Licutenant, as great in authoritic as Iofeph was, though farre inferiour in wisedome.

To thinke that many names of such Regents or Lieutenants as Ioseph was, haue crept into the List of the Egyptian Kings, were no strange imagination. For Iolephs brethren called him, The man that is Lord of the Land, and the Lord of the Countrie: Gen. 42.30.60 Resides, it is not vnlikely that the vaineglorious Agyptian Priests would as easily re- 33. port him a King to posterity, as ignorant men and strangers deeme him such, under whose hand all dispatches of importance, and royall managing of the State had pasfed, whileft that the King himfelfe intending his quiet, had given his office to another. How strangers have mistaken in this kinde, the example already cited of Io-20 lephs brethren, doth sufficiently witnesse. The reports of Priests doe appeare in Diodorus, and Herodotus: each of whom, citing their relations, as good authoritie, fay; Diodorus, that Sefostris was the nineteenth King after Men. ; Herodotis, that hee was the 222. after Menas: which could not have been, if Menas had been Adam. Therfore we may well conclude, That the Dynasties were not so many races of Kings, but succeffions of Regents, appointed by the kings of so many fundry linages or forts of men. Now by whatfoeuer meanes a Dynastie or Regencie continued: whether in one familie, as being made an hereditary office: or in one order of men, as held by faction: fure itisthatit was the Kings gift and free choyce, that gaue the office. But the Crowne royal alwaics passed by descent, & not by election: which (beside consent of Authors) 30 the Scriptures also proue. For whereas Infeph bought all the land of Agypt for Pharaob, if the Crowne had paffed by election, then should Pharaob's children hereby either have been inthralled amongst the rest of the people, to the next successour: or inioving their Fathers land, though not his estate, have been more mighty then the King: as Land-lords of all Ægypt, and the King himfel'e their Tenant. Likewise we find in Exed. 12. that God fmote the first borne of PH AR AOH, that was to set on his Throne. And in Efay it is faid of PHARAOH : I am the sonne of the ancient King.

Of CHAM, and his some MIZRAIM, or Osiris.

Hat the succession of Kings began, and continued in such wise as the Table hath shewed from Cham to Chencres, now it followeth to shew. Ægypt is called in the Scripture, the land of HAM. That this name is not Pfal.78.51. giuen to it, because the posterity of Cham did reigne there, but for that himselfe did first plantit, we may gather by many circumstances. For

I thinke it is no where found, that the Countries of Culb, Put, or Canaan, as well as ·Agret, were called the Land of Ham. Furtherit is found in Diodorus Siculus, that O- piod Siculus friscalleth himselfethe eldest sonne of Cham, saying, Mihi pater Saturnus deorum om-50 nium iumor: also, Sum Saturni filius antiquior, germen ex pulchro & generoso ortum: which must needs be understood of Cham: for this Saturnus Agyptius was Cham: as it is said, that on the monument of Ninus was an inscription, wherein Cham was called Saturnus Agyptius. Likewise the Temple of Hammon, not sarre from Agypt, doth testifie, that Ham resided in those parts: And S. Hierome in questionibus Hebrai-

eis faith, that the Egyptians themselves did in his dayes call their Countrie Ham: as in foure seuerall places in the Psalmes this Countrie is called the land of Cham. And Ortelius, noting out of Plutarch in Ofiride, that in the facrifices of the Egyptians this Countrie of Agypt was called Chemia, expounds it for Chamia: vt puto (faith he) à Chame No Es filio, to which also he addeth out of Isidore, Ezyptum Va, hodie E. exptiorum lingua K A M vocari: that Agypt unto this day in the tongue of the Agyptians is called K A M. For the beginning and continuance of Chams reigne, the same reasons may suffice to be alleadged, which I have already given in proofe of the time spent in the 15. first Dynasties : Neither is it strange that thereigne of Cham should laft folong as 161. yeeres: confidering that Sem lived 600. Arpach/had and Shelah 10 each about 400. But strange it had beene, if one Saltis created by Manetho, had in those long-lived generations reigned there 19. yeeres, and with Baon, Apachnas. Apochis, and others of the same broad, obscured the same and glory of Osiris, Orus. and Sefostris. Remeccius in histor. Iulia, placeth Mizraim next, otherwise called Osiris according to Diedorus: who faith hee was the sonne of Hammon: Krentzhemius saith that Mizraim and Ofiris are words of neere affinitie and found in the Hebrew tongue. Howsoeuer it bee, wee know that Mizraim the sonne of Cham, was Lord of L. eypt, and Reineceius citing good authoritie in this case, affirmeth that Agypt is now called by the naturalls in their owne language, Mezre. Neither doe I see cause of doubt whether Ofiris were the same with Mizraim. It is more necessarie, and hard 20 to shew manifestly, how long Mizraim or Ofiris reigned. For whereas the yeere of his death is no where precisely set downe, we must be faine to follow probabilities. That he is not vainely faide by Annius his Berofus, to have begun his reigne at the birth of Abraham, when the Dynastie of the Thebai began, it appeareth, first, by the authoritie of Eulebius: who auoucheth as much; next by Diedorus, who faith that he inhabited Thebes: which habitation of Ofris there, that it might be cause of that Dynaft. I can well beleeve: affenting fo farre to Reincecius, who thinkes the Dynafties were named only, according to the feuerall feates of the kings.

Of the time when Osia is reigne ended: and that IACOB came into Egypt in the time of ORVs the sonne of Os IRIS.

He death of Ofris, when it was, none can certainely affirme. The onely coniecture that I know is made thus: Lehabim the sonne of Mizraim called Hercule: Lybius, made warre in Italy, to revenge his Fathers death, on the affociats of Typhon, in the 41. yeere of Balem King of Af-fyria: before which yeere he had made many great warres in Ægypi, Phanicia, Phrygia, Crete, Lybia, and Spaine: and having ended his Egyptian warres, 40 left the Kingdome to Orus. Thus farre Berofus, or authors following Berofus. That Died. Sic. 1.2.e. 1 Orm laft of all the Gods (as they were filled) held the Kingdome of I/is, Diederm Siculus plainely faith: and Plutarch as much; to which all old Histories agree. Krentzhemius hereupon inferres, that fixe yeeres may bee allowed to the warres, which Hereules made in so many Countries, after the Agyptian warres were ended: so should the death of Osiri, have beene the 34. of Baleus, when himselfe had reigned 297. veeres. I thinke that Krentzhemins was a greater Scholler than Souldier. For furely in those dayes when commerce was not such as now, but all Nauigation made by coasting, a farre longer time would have been required, to the subduing of so many Countries. An allowance of more time though it would alter his computation, yet 50 would it well agree with his intent: which was (doubtleffe) to finde the trueth. If according to his account the death of Ofiris had beene the 24. of Baleus, then must Ifrael haue come into Egypt but seuen yeeres before the death of Osiris: and haue lived there in the reigne of Typhon. A thing not easily beleeved. For it was the same king who advanced loseph, bad him fend for his Father; and gaue him leave to goe into Canaan, to the performance of his Fathers funerall: as may easily bee gathered out of the booke of Genesis. Whereas therefore the raigne of Osiris cannot be extended by any possible allowance in account of times, beyond the seuenth yeere of 1/raels comming into Agypt: wee must needes cut off 23. yeeres from that number, which Krentzhemius coniectures his raigne to have continued: namely feuen which hee should have lived after Iscobs comming into Agypt : nine in which Ioseph had there flourished, ere his fathers comming: and other seuen in which Typhon and Heroules had reigned after the death of Ofris, yet before lofephs advancement.

10 Neither will this disagree with the time of Hercules Lybius his wars. For the warre which Hercules made in Italie, is faid to have indured 10. yeeres: After which proportion we may well give not only fixe yeeres, as Krentzhemius doth, but 23. more to fo many wars in so many and so far-distant Countries, as are named before: yea, by this proportion we may attribute vnto Orus the 13. yeeres, which passed betweene the time of lofephs being fold into Agypt, vnto his advancement : confidering that Putichar who bought him, and whose daughter he may seeme to haue married, continued all that while chiefe Steward vnto Pharaoh: a thing not likely to have been, if so violent alterations had hapned the whilest in Agypt, as the tyrannous vsurpation of Typhon must needs have brought in. If citing some fragment of a lost old author, I should 20 confidently say, that Putiphar for his faithfulnesse to Orus, the sonne of Osiris, was by him in the beginning of his raigne made his chiefe Steward: at which time buying Isleph and finding him a just man, and one under whose hand all things did prosper, herather committed his estate into losephs hands, than vnto any of his Egyptian followers (many of whom he had found either false-hearted, or weake and vulucky in thetroublesom daies of Typhon) I know not what could be objected against this. Perhaps I might proceed further & fay, That when the faying of 10/epb pleased Pharaoh, and all his servants: then Putiphar Priest of On, being chiefe Officer to Pharaoh, did acknowledge in Ioleph, the ancient graces of God & his injurious imprisonment: wherupon he gaue him his daughter to wife: and being old, refigned his office of chiefe 30 Steward vnto him: who afterward in regard of Puliphar, did iauour the Priests, when hee bought the lands of all other Agyptians. This might appeare to some a tale nor vnlike to the frierly booke of Afenath, Putiphars daughter: but vnto such as consider that God workes viually by means: and that Puliphar was the Steward of that king, vnder whom lacob died: it would sceme a matter not vnprobable, had it an Author of sufficient credit to auouch it. Concerning the warres of Hercules, in which by this reckoning hee should have spent 42. yeeres after he left Agypt, ere he began in Italie, it is a circumstance which (the length of his Italian wars considered, and his formerenterprises & atchieuements proportioned to them) doth not make against vs. but for vs: or if it were against vs, yet could it not so weaken our supposition, as these o probabilities collected out of the vndisputable trueth of Scripture doe confirme it. Neuerthelesse I freely grant that all these proofes are no other, than such as may be gathered out of Authors, not well agreeing, nor to be reconciled in such obscuritie, otherwise than by likelihoods, answerable to the holy Text.

Of Typhon, Herevles Egyptvs, Orvs, and the two Sesostres, fuccessively reigning after MIZRAIM: and of diverserrors about the former SESOSTRES.

Oncerning the reigne of Typhon, and of Hercules, I finde none that precisely doth define how long either of them continued. Daniel Angelocrator giveth three yeeres to Typhon, omitting Hercules. But he is so peremptorie without proofe, as if his owne word were sufficient authoritie, in many points very questionable; alleadging no witnesse.

but as it were faying, Teste me ipso: yet herein we may thinke him to speake probably, forasmuch as the learned Krentzhemius affirmeth, that Herenles did very soone of Berosus, that Hervules reigned after Typhon: yet seeing Auentinus a follower of Berosus hath it so, I will also beleeue it. That in the reigne of Typhon and Hervules, which summe divers other wayes may be collected. Since therefore to the departure out of Egypt, there doe remaine (as is aforesaid) onely 122. yeeres from the death of Orus: wee are now to confider how many of them are to bee allowed vnto 20 Sefost is or Sesonchosis: who is placed next vnto Orus, by authoritie of the Scholisses Apollonig: not without good probabilitie. For this great king or conquerour, is by many Histories recorded to have ouer-run a great part of Asia: to have built a fleete of shippes on the red Sea : and so to have entred into India: likewise with another fleete on the middle-earth Seas, to have passed into Europe, and subdued many Nations. This is hee (as Reinecerus judgeth) whom Iustine erring in account of histime calleth Vexoris: For Iustine placeth Vexoris in ages before Ninus: whereby it would follow that Selostris, if hee were Vexoris, was more ancient then was Ofiris (otherwise Mizraim) a thing altogether vnlikely. Certaine it is that after the departure of Ifrael out of Egypt, no one Pharaob came into the land of Canaan (which lieth in the 30 way from Agypt into Asia) till the Fatherin law of Salomon, Pharach Vaphres, tooke Gerar, and gaue it to his daughter: after which time Sefac oppressed Rehoboam, and gaue it to his daughter: after which time Sesac oppressed Rehoboam, & Necho Sought passage through the land of Israel, when he made his expedition against the Chaldesns. Of King Vaphres and Necho it is out of question, that neither of them was the great King Sefostrus. Of Sefacit is doubted by some, forasmuch as he came into Iudea with a great armie. Reineccius propounding the doubt, leaueth it vndecided; vnlesseit be sufficient proofe of his owne opinion, that he himselfe placeth Se/ostris next to Orus : following the Scholiastes Apollonij. But further answere may bee made to the wither they were not one. For, as Instine witnesseth, Sesostria, otherwise Vexoria, 40 made warre on people farre remoued, abstaining from his neighbours. Sefac came vp purposely against Hierusalem. Sesofris, as Diodorus witnesseth, had but 24000. horse: Sefue had 60000: Sefostris had 8020. Chariots, Sefue but 1200: Sefostris made his expedition for no private purpose, but to get a great name : Sefae, as most agree, had no other purpose then to succour leroboam, and give him countenancein his new reigne; whom he had fauoured euen against Salomon: therefore Sefostris must needes haue reigned whilest I/rael abode in £gypt.

Whereas Krentzhemius collecteth out of Herodotus, and Dioderus, that one Menas, or Menus, was next to Orus: because those Historians affirme that heereigned next after the Gods; it moueth mee nothing. For Osiru did succeed those 15. Gods, 59 namely the twelve greater, and three lesser: himselfe also (as the learned Reinicus noteth) being called Menas. Which name, as also Menasus, and Menis, were the of dignitie: though mistaken by some as proper names. Krentzhemius doth verie probably gather, that Menas was Mercurius Termaximus: the Hebrew word

Ment signifying an Arithmetician: which name Ter-maximus might well be attributed to Oliris: who was a great Conquerour, Philosopher, and benefactor to mankind, by giving good Lawes, and teaching profitable Artes. In proweffe and great vndertakings Sefostris was no whit inferiour to Osiris. For he sought victorie not for gaine, but for honour onely : and being well contented, that many Nations had acknowledged his power, and submitted themselves to his will and royall disposition. leaving them in a manner to their libertie, returned into Agypt. Soone voon his returne he was endangered by a great Treason, the house in which he was, being by his owne brother purposely fired which neuerthelesse hee is saide to have escaped. and to have reigned in all thirtie three yeeres: after which time hee chose rather to diethen to live : because he fell blinde. Both Herodotus, and Diedorus, affirme that Sesostria left a sonne, whose name was Pheron or Pherones: who afterwards tooke the name of Selostris: but was nothing like to his Father in glorie: for hee shortly fell blinde. The cause of his blindnesse Herodotus attributes to his assaulting the river Nilus with a iaueline: which tale Diodorus having likewise heard, yet reports as a fable, saying that perhaps he tooke the disease naturally from his Father: How long this man reigned it is no where expressed: yet for a smuch as Orus the second. (otherwife Busiris) who succeeded him, began 14. yeeres after that this Sesostris had beene king, it must needes bee that this reigned 14. yeeres at least. That Busiris began not 20 vntill these 14. yeeres at least were expired, the very account of time from the first of Buliris, to the departure of Ifrael out of Egypt plainely shewes, being almost generally agreed upon, to have beene 75. yeeres. That none came betweene Selostris the second and Busiris or Orus the second, it stands only upon probabilities; which are these. After Selostris had reigned somewhile, hee fell blinde: after certaine veeres heerecouered his fight, as is saide: which may have beene true, but is more like to have beene a fable: furely the manner of his recoverie as it is fet downe, is very fabulous: namely that by looking vpon a woman, or washing his eyes with her water, who had onely knowne her owne husband, hee got his fight againe. As the time of hisreigne, before his blindnesse, and when hee was well againe (if euer hee were) 20 may have taken vp a good part of 14. yeeres: fo his workes which were great.doe much more strongly argue, that his reigne was not very short. His words are largely set downe by Herodotus, and Diodorus: a part of which may seeme to have beene the finishing of that which his Father had begun, about the channels and fluces of Nilus: whom I thinke he rather frighted, (as his Father had done) with spades and shouels. then with darts, and iauelins: and by his diligent overfight of that worke, was like enough to lofe both his eye-fight and his peoples love: whom his Father had very bufily employed in excessive labour about it.

Nd heerein (if I may presume to coniecture) Busiris, who was afterwards king, is like to have dealt with him, as seroboam did with the sonne of Salomon. For that Busiris himselfe was much addicted to magnificent workes, it well appeared, by the drudgerie where with he wearied the children of Israel in his buildings: If therefore he were employed by the great Sefoftris, as teroboam was by Salomon, in the ouerlight of those to buincifies, he had good opportunitie to worke his greatnesse with the king by industrie: and afterward with the people by incensing them against their new king: as Ieroboam did. For what the multitude will endure at one Princes hands, they will not at anothers: vnlesse haue either an equall spirit, or a surer foundation. If moreouer he sought to derive all the paine and labour of publique workes from the Y 2

£ expliants; to the Israelites: hee surely did that which to his owne people was very plaufible; who (as appeares in Exedus) were nothing flack in fulfilling the kings crueltie. Now that Orus the 2 or Bustrie was the king that first oppressed Israel, and made the Edict of drowning the Hebrew children, which (faith Cedrenus) lasted tenne monethssicis a common opinion of many great & most learned writers; who also thinke that hereupon grew the fable of Busiris facrificing strangers, It is also a common interpretation of that place, Ex. 1. that the King who knew not Iofeph, was a king of a new family. That Busiris was of a new familie, Reineccius doth shew: who also thinks him Author of the bloudie edich. Neuerthelesse, true it is, that Busiris, according to all mens computation, began his reigne 7. yeeresafter the birth of Moses; before whose 10 birth it is most manifest, that the Law was made, and much more that the persecution began: which Bunting thinkes to have lasted 87. yeeres, ere the departure out of Agypt. Let vs therefore consider, besides the blindnesse of Sesostrus the second, how great the power of the Regents or Viceroyes in Agypt was: and how great confidence the kings did put in them: feeing Iofeph ruled with fuch full power, that he bought all Agypt, & all the Agyptians for bread; giving at the same time the best of the land to his owne father & brethren, for nothing : feeing also that when the Agyptians cried out vpo Pharaoh, for bread : Pharaoh faid to all the Egyptians, Go to Tofeph: what he faith to you, do ye. If to a stranger borne larely setcht out of prison, a king well able to have gouerned himfelfe, would give fuch truft, and foueraigne authoritie it is not vnlikely 20 that a blind Prince should do it to a man of especial reputation. For God often profpers, not only the good ( fuch as Io/eph was ) but wicked men also, as his instruments against the day of wrath. Therfore perhaps the king did(as many haue done) religne his kingdom to him, though his reign was not accounted to have begun, till the death of Sefultis. But whether Busines did vsurpe the kingdom, or protection of the land by violence: or whether the blind king religned it, keeping the title: or whether Bujrin were onely Regent, whilst the king lived, and atterwards (as is acknowledged by all) king himselse: it might well be said that Pharaobs daughter tooke vp Moses, and that Pharaoh vexed Ifrael: seeing he both at that time was king in effect, and shortly after king in deed and title both. It were not abfurd for vs to say that the blind king Se-30 Costres the second oppressed Israel: but forasmuch as it may seeme that the wicked Tyrani shewed his euill nature even when he first arose: I thinke it more likely, that Business did it, vsing at first the power of a king, and shortly after the stile. Thus of the 122, yeeres which passed betweene the beginning of Selostris his reigne, and the departure of Ifrael out of Egypt, 47. being spent : the 75. which remaine, are to bee accounted to Busiris or Orus the second, and his children. Busiris himselfe reigned 30. veeres, according to Eufebius: whom very many indicious authors heerein approoue. After him his daughter, who tooke Moses out of the water, is saide by all that I haueread, to hauereigned 12. yeeres: Her name was Thermutis Phareis, or Muthis according to Cedrenus: Eufeb. cals her Aceneris: and out of Artabanus his Historie Me. 40 ris : Iosephus cals her both Acenchere, & Thermutis Epiphanius in Panario saith that she was honoured afterward of the Egyptians, by the name of Thermutis the daughter of Amenoph, the fon of Pharach. Of this last title question might be made & much spoken: for the Scriptures call her not Pharaohs sonnes daughter, but Pharaohs daughter. Amenophis indeed is placed next before Busiris or Orus the second by Eusebia and others : but whether hee were a king or onely a Regent I cannot contecture. For Herodotus, Deodorus, and the ancient Historians name the sonne of Sejostris, Pheron. Perhaps his name was Pharaoh Amenophis: and his daughter by the Agyptians called rather the neece or grandchilde, then the daughter of Pharaoh, because of the glory of Sefostris, and the disreputation of his sonne. If so, and if that Business or Orus the se- 50 cond marrying her pretended any title by her, then is our coniecture strengthened, and then was the both daughter, grandchild, and wife vnto Pharaoh: and furuining him, Queene of the land, 12. yeeres. But if the were the daughter of orus the 2. & sister of Athoris, or Rathoris, as many thinke, to whose coniecture I will not oppose mine,

of the two brethren of Queene THERMVTIS: and what king it was, under whom Moses was borne: and who it was that perilled in the red Sea.

CHAP.2. $.8.

Mee had two brethren: the one was Rathoris or Athoris, who succeeded her; the other Telegonus, who is onely named by Eulebius: but his linage and off-spring described by Reinecolus. Rathoris after his sisters linage and off-spring described by Reineccius. Rathoris after his sisters death reigned 9, years after whom Chemers, thought to be his sonne, reigned 10. and then perished in the red Sea. During the reign of Chen-eres, Eulebius faith, that Telegonus begat Epaphus vpon 10: of which Historie elsewhere he reporteth otherwise. After the death of Chencres ( whom some call Acencheres: but all or most do stile source a fighter against God) Acherres reigned 8. yeeres: and then Cherres 15. This descent seemes from Father to sonne. In the 11. yeere of Cherres it is said by Euseb. that Epaphus reigning in the lower part of Egypt, built Memphis. This is an argument of that which otherwise was not vnlikely; viz. That Ægypt was greatly brought out of order by the plagues which God had laide vpon it, and the destruction of her king and armic in the red Sea : else could it not have had two reigning in it at once; the later of whom, or his posteritie seemes to have taken all from Cherres the grand-child of Chencres. For whereas Armais is faid to have reigned 4. yeeres after Cherres: and Armesis one after Armais: these two kings are by Eusebius and others accounted as one; and his reigne said to have beene 5. yeeres. His name is called Armeus, otherwise Danaus: and his pedigree thus described by Reineceius in Historia Iulia, Danaus or Armeus expelled by his brother . A. gyptus, after hee had reigned fine veeres.became king of Argos in Greece: was Father to Hypermnestra.

How it might come to passe that the Nephews sons of Epaphus should have occupied the kingdome after Cherres, it is hard to fay : confidering that Epaphus himselfe is reported by Eusebius to have been borne in the time of Chencres. But for a fmuch as the Historie of Epaphus his birth, is diversly related by Eusebius, it may suffice, that Belus the father of Danaus & Egyptus, otherwise called Armeus and Ramesses, was equal-50 ly distant from Busiris or Orus the second, with Cherres the grand-child of Cheneres. And that the posteritie of Telegonus did marrie very yong, it appeares by the Historie of these two brethren, Danaus & Agyptus: of whom the former had 50. daughters, the later 50. sons:perhaps, or rather questionlesse by divers women: yet surely they began to beget children in their first youth: Howsoeuer it were, the generall conExed.4.19.

fent of writers is, that Armem or Danam did succeede Cherres: and (according to Eulebius and good Authors approuing him ) reigned fine yeeres. Ramesses followed, who reigned 68. yeeres. This Ramefles or Agyptus is that Armefelmiamum or Arme-(esmiamus, under whom, in the opinion of Mercator, and of Bunting that followes Mercator Moles was borne: and the cruell Edict made of drowning the Hebrew children. The length of his reigne seemes to me the chiefe, if not the onely ground of Mercators opinion. For whereas the Lord faid to Moles, Goe, returne to Agypt, for they are all dead which went about to kill thee: Mercator heereupon conceines, that it was one and the same king under whom Moses was borne, and under whom he slew the Agyptian at the 40. yeere of his age: and fled into the wildernesse, and there abode for feare: 10 all which Circumstances could agree with none, but this Ramesses, who reigned so long: wherefore desirous rather to hold a true Paradox, then a common errour, hee placeth one Aliffragmuthofis (whole name is found in the lift of Egyptian kings, but the time vncertaine wherein he reigned) in an age 112. or 113. yeeres more ancient than others left him in: and so continuing the Catalogue of his successours from Themosis (whom Eus. cals Amasis) downwards with no other variation of the length of each mans reigne, than is the difference betweene Manetho and Eufeb. hee findes Moses borne under Armesesmiamum: and Israel deliuered in the dayes of his sonne Amenophis. The very name of Aliffragmuthofis feemes to him with little alteration 20 to found like Pharatates, of which name one was thought to have flourished either as a king, or a wife man about the time of I/aac. For (faith he) from Aliffragmuthofis to Phragmuthosis, Pharmuthosis, Pharetasis, or Pharatates, the change is not great. Mercater was a man of excellent learning and industrie: and one to whom the World is bound for his many notable workes: yet my affent heerein is with held from him, by these reasons. First, I see all other writers agree, that Chencres was the king who was drowned in the red Sea: Secondly, the place Exod. 4. all are dead, &c. may better be vnderstood of Busines and all his children, then of one king alone: Thirdly, St. Cyrill in his first booke against Iulian the Apostata, saith that Dardanus built Dardania, when Moses was 120. yeeresold: Ramesses, which was this Armelesmiamum, being 30 then king of Agypt. After Ramesses, Amenophis reigned 19. yeeres: who is thought by Mercater, and peremptorily by Bunting pronounced, to be the King that perished in the red Sea : of which our opinion being alreadie laied open, I thinke it most expedient to referre the kings ensuing to their owne times (which a Chronolegicall Table shall lay open) and heere to speake of that great deliuerance of Israel out of Egypt: which for many great confiderations depending thereupon, wee may not lightly ouer-

Of the delinery of Hrael out of Ægypt.

Of the time of Moses birth, and how long the I/raelites were oppressed in Agypt.

CHAP. 3. S. I.

Rue it is that the Historic it selfe is generally and well knowne: yet concerning the time of Moles his birth. who was the excellent and famous instrument of this and other great workes of the Highest, the different opinions are very neere as many, as the men that have written of that Argunient.

L. Viues in his annotations upon S. Augustine citeth many of their coniectures: as that of Porphyric out of Sanchoniato, that Moses lived in the time of Semiramis: but if hee meant the first Semiramis, it was but a fond conceit: for belides that the same is contrarie to all Stories Divine and humane; while that Semiramic lived, shee commanded Syria, and all the parts thereofablolutely: neither were the Ammonites, or Moabites, or Edomites. while she ruled, in rerum natura.

A second opinion he remembreth of Appion, taken from Ptolomie a Priest of Mendes, who faith that Mofes was borne while Inachus ruled the Argines, and Amelis in 30 The third opinion is taken out of Polemon, in his Greeke Historie the first booke: that Moles was borne while Apis the third King ruled Argos.

A fourth is borrowed from Tatianus Asyrius, who though hee cite some authorities, that Moles lived after the Troian warre, is himselfe of opinion, that Moles was farre more ancient, prouing it by many arguments. Fiftly, he setteth downe the testimonie of Numenius the Philosopher, who tooke Mulaus and Moles to be one: confirming the same out of Artapanus, who confesfeth that Mofes was called Museus, by the Grecians: and who farther delivereth that he was adopted by Chenephis, or Thermutis, the daughter of Agypt: the same which Eupolemus calleth Meris; others (as Rabanus Maurus) Thermothes. Eusebius also affir- Euseb.de prepar. meth, that by Eupolemus in his first booke de bono, Moses vir Deo coniunetismus is called Muleus Indeorum. Eulebius in his Chronologie, finds that Moles was borne while Amenophis ruled Agypt. The ancient Manethon cals that Pharao, which lived at Moles birth, Thumosis or Thmosis: the same perchance which Appion the Grammarian will haue to be Amoss, and elsewhere Amenophis the Father of Sethosis: to whome Lysimachus and Cornelius Tacitus give the name of Bocchoris. To mee it seemeth most probable that while Saphrus, called also Spherus or Iphereus, gouerned Asyria; Orthopolis Sieyonia; and Criasus the Argines; that then (Sesostrus the second ruling in Egypt Moses was borne. For if wee beleeue S Augustine, it was about the end of Cecrops time, that Moses led Ifrael out of Agypt. Eduxit Moses ex Agypto popu- Auglisait. Jolum Dei noussimo tempore CECROFIS Atheniensium regis: MosEs (faith he) led the people of God out of Egypt, about the end of CECROPS time King of the Athenians. In this fort therefore is the time of Mofes birth, and of his departure out of Agypt best proued. S. August. affirmes (as before remembred) that Moses was borne: Sephrus gouerning Afgria; and that hee left Agypt about the end of Cecrops time.

Now Saphrus ruled 20. yeeres; his successor Mamelus 20 yeeres; Sparetus after him 40 yeeres : in whose fourth yeere Cecrops began to gouerne in Attica : Ascatades followed Sparetus, and held the Empire 41: So as Moles being borne while Saphrus ruled Afgria, Orthopolis Sicyonia, and Criafus Argos (for these three kines lived at once at his birth, faith S. Augustine, as Cecrops did when he departed £27pt) it will follow that the birth of Moles was in the nineteenth yeere of the Algrian Saphrus : for take one yeere remaining of 20. (for so long Saphrus reigned) to which adde the thirtie veres of Mamelus, and the 40. yeres of Sparetus, these make 71. with which there were wasted three yeeres of Georops his 50 yeeres: then take nine yeeres out of the reigne of Ascatades, who was Sparetus successour, those nine yeeres added to 71. make 80, 10 at which age Moles left Agypt: and addethele nine yeeres to the three yeeres of Cecrops formerly spent, there will remaine but soure yeeres of Cecrops his 50: and so it falleth right with S. Augustines words, affirming that towards the end of Cecross his time, Moles led the people of Ifrael out of Agypt.

Now the time in which the Hebre wes were opprest in Agypt, seemeth to have had beginning some eight or nine yeeres before the birth of Moses, and 54. yeere, or rather more, after loseph: betweene whose death and the birth of Moses, there were confumed 64. yeeres: fome of which time, and 80. yeeres after, they lived in great feruitude and miserie. For asit is written in Exodus: They fet taske-masters over them. 20 to keepe them under with burdens: and they built the Cities Pithom and Ramases, &c. And by crueltie they caused the children of Israel to serue; and made them weary of their lines, by fore labour in clay and bricke, and in all worke of the field, with all manner of bondage. All which laid vponthem by a mastering power and strong hand, they endured to the time by the wisedome of God appointed: euen from 54. yeeres, or not much more after the death of 10feph, who left the World when it had lasted 2370. yeeres, to the eightieth yeere of Moses, and vntill hee wrought his miracles in the field of Zoan, which he performed in the Worlds age 2514, towards the end thereof, according to Codoman, or after our account, 2513. And because those things which we deliuer of Egypt, may the better bee vnderstood, I thinke it necessary to speake a few 30 words of the principall places therein named, in this discourse.

His Citie which the Hebrewes call Zoan, was built seuen veeres after Hebron. Ezekiel calleth it Taphnes; and so doth Hieremie; the Septus-gint, Tanis; 10sephus, Protaidis; after the name of an Ægyptian Queene; Antonius giues it the name of Thanis; Hegessippus, Thamna; and William Tyrius, Tapius. It adiouneth to the land of Gosen, and is the same, wherein Hieremie the Prophet was stoned to death, for preaching against the Egyptian their Pharaohs then commonly refided; and not vnlikely to be the same Citie, where Abraham in his time found him. But Eusebius out of Artapanus affirmeth, that Abraham read Astronomie in Heliopolis, or On, to Pharetates King of Egypt. Alex. Polybiftor. out of Eupolemus hath it otherwise, saying, that Abraham instructed the Agyptian Priests, and not the King; both which authorities Eusebius citeth. The Sep- 50 tuagint, and the Vulgar edition, for Zoan write Heliopolis. Pagnin, Vatablus, Iunius, and our English call it on; and Ptolomie, Onium. There are two Cities of that name; the one on the frontier of the lower Lgypt, towards the South; the other somewhat lower on the Easter-most branch of Nilus falling into the Sea at Peleusium. And it

Zoan or Tahnes was in Mofes time the Metropolis of the lower Leppt, in which it may be that Heliopolis to the South of the river Trasan, was the fame which Vatablus and our English call Auen. Of the latter it is, that the Scriptures take certaine Exech.3.17. knowledge: the same, which Pomp, Mela, and Plinie, call Solis oppidum; Tyrius in the Holy Warre, Malbec; the Arabians, Bahalbeth; and Simcon Sethi, Fons Solis. Of this Heliepolis, or On, was Putiphar Prieft, or Prince, whole daughter lofeph married. In the lofeo t. 1. bell. Territory adioyning Iacob inhabited, while he lived in Egypt. In the confines of this Indaice. 1. Citie, Onicas, the high Priest of the Jewes, built a Temple, dedicated to the eternall God; not much inferiour to that of Hiernfalem (Ptolomie Philopater then governing in Egypt) which flood to the time of Velpalian, 333, yeeres after the foundation by to Oniss, whom losephus fallly reporteth, herein to have fulfilled a prophecie of Esa.c. 19. In dieilla erit Altare Domini in medio terra Agypti; In that day fall the Altar of the Lord bee in the middest of the Land of Legypt. Cintiochus Epiphanes at that time of the building tyrannizing ouer the Iewes, gaue the occasion for the erecting of this Temple in Legypt. Lastly, there it was that out Saujour Christ Iesus remained. while toleph and the Virgin Mary feared the violence of Herod: neere which (fayth Brochard) the fountaine is still found, called teliss well, whose streames doe afterward Brochser, fands water the Gardens of Ballamam, no where else found in Agypt. And hereof see more in Brochard, in his description of Egypt.

Brownera, in its description of Egypt.

There is also the Citie of Noph, remembred by Esai and Ezekiel; the same which Esach..... 20 Hosea the Prophet calleth Moph: which latter name it tooke from a Mountaine adjoyning, so called, which Mountaine Herodotus remembreth. And this is that great lib.2. Citie, which was called Memphis; and so the Septuagint write it. It is knowne to the strabians by the name of Mazar. The Chaldeans name it Alchabyr; and Tudalen-

Pelulum, which Vatablus, Pagnin, Iunius, and our English write, Sin; the Septangint G.Tyr. Lao.s. 17 call Sais; and Montanus, Lebna; is not the same with Damiata, as Gul Tyrius witnest- lib.2.65. feth. In the time of Baldwin the third , Pelusium was called Belbeis. Belbeis (faith Tyrius) que olim dicta est Pelusium; Belbeis, that in times past was called Pelusium.

The Citie of No, the Septuagint call Diospolis. Of which name there are two or Exch. 30.15,16 30 three in Egypt. Hierome converts it Alexandria, by anticipation, because it was so called in the future. Bubastus, for fo Hierome and Zeigler write it, is the same which the Hebrewes call Exch.30.17. Pibeleth.

To make the storie the more perceinable, I have added a description of the land of Gofen, in which the Ifraelites inhabited; with those Cities and places so often remembred in the Scripture: as of Taphnes or Zoan, Heliopolis or Bethfemes, Balfephon, Succeth, and the reft; together with Mofes passage through the Desarts of Arabia the Stonie. For all storic without the knowledge of the places, wherein the actions were performed, as it wanteth a great part of the pleasure; so it no way enricheth the 40 knowledge and vnderstanding of the Reader; neither doth any thing serue to retain, what wereade, in our memories, fo well as these pictures and descriptions doe. In which respect I am driven to digresse in many places, and to interpose some such discou se, other wise seeming impertinent: taking for my authority, after many others more ancient, that great learned man, Arias Montanus; who in his Preface to the Storie of the Holy Land, hath these words: Si enim abs q locorum observatione res gesta narrentur, aut line Topographia cognitione historia legantur, ades confusa atg. perturbata erunt omna, vt ex üs nibil non obscurum, nibil non difficile elici possit; If narration (faith he) be made of those things which are performed, without the observation of the places, wherein they were done : or if Histories be read without Topographicall knowledge; all things will 50 appeare to intricate and confused, as wee shall thereby under standnothing but obscurely, nor draw thence any knowledge, but with the greatest difficultie.

Of the cruelty again ft the Israelites your children in Agypt: and of Moses his preservation, and education.

Vt to returne to the story it selfe. It appeareth that notwithstanding the labour and flauery, which the Ifraelites endured, yet they decreased not in numbers: infomuch as Pharaob confidering the danger of difcontented pouertie, and the able bodies of an oppressed multitude. how perillous they might bee to his estate, by suggestion of the Deuill 10

resolved to slaughter all the male children of the Hebrews, as soone as they should be borne. To which end he fent for Sephora and Thua, women the most famous and expert amongst them, que praerant (saith Commestor) multitudini obstetricum, who bad command given them over all mid-wines; by whom (as it seemeth) he gave order to all the rest for the execution of his Edict. For to have called all the mid-wives of Agypt together, had been a strange Parliament. Now whether these two, before named, were of the Hebrews, or of the Lepptians, it is diverly disputed. S. Augustine calls them Hebrews, because it is written Exodus the first, The King of Egypt commanded the midwines of the Hebrew women, Gr. But Iosephus, Abulensis, and Pererus beleeue them to be Egyptians. Whosoeuer they were, when it pleased God to frustrate the 20 execution of that fecret murder, to the end the world might witnesse both the wickednesse of the Agyptians, and the just cause, thereby made manifest, of his future indignation and reuenge: Pharaoh finding those women filled with pietie, and the feare of God, commanded others of his people to execute his former intent; and publikely, or howfoeuer, to destroy all the male Hebrew children borne within his

Now besides the doubts, which Pharaoh had of the multitudes of the Hebrewes. the greatest part of whom hee might have assured, by affoording them the instice, which every King oweth to his valfals, and the rest he might have imployed or sent 10fepant.lize.s away at his pleasure; 10fephus giveth another cause of his rage against them, name- 30 ly. That it was prophetically deliuered him by an Egyptian Prieft, that among the Hebrewes there should bee borne a childe; who growing to mans estate, should become a plague and terrour to his whole Nation. To preuent which, (and prefuming that he could refift the ordinance of God, by a meane, contrarie to the lawes of Heauen and of nature) hee stretched out his bloudie and mercilesse hand to the exccution of his former intent. The same preuention Herod long after practised, when fearing the spirituall kingdome of Christ, as if it should have beene temporall, he caused all the male children at that time borne to bee slaughtered. And that Pharaoh had some kinde of foreknowledge of the future successe, it may be gathered by these his owne words, in the tenth verse of the fift of Exodus. Come, let vs worke wifely with 40 them, lest they multiplie; and it come to passe, that if there bee warre, they towne themselves allo vnto our enemies, and fight against vs, and get them out of the Land. But wee see, and time hath told it vs from the beginning, how God derideth the wifedome of the worldly men, when forgetting the Lord of all power, they relie on the inventions of their owne most feeble, and altogether darkened understanding. For even by the hands of the dearely beloued daughter of this tyrant, was that great Prophet and minister of Gods meruailous workes taken out of Nilus, being thereinto turned off, in an Arke of reedes, a fucking and powerleffe infant. And this Princeffe hauing beheld the child his forme and beautie, though but yet in the blouth, so pierced her compathon, as she did not onely preserue it, and cause it to be fostered; but 50 commanded that it should be esteemed as her owne, and with equal care to the sonne of a King nourished. And for memory that it was her deede, shee called the childe Moses, as it were, extractus, or ereptus, taken out, to wit, out of the water : or, after Iosephus and Glicas, Moy, a voice expressing water, and hises, as much to say, as that which is drawne out of water, or thence taken. Clemens Alexandrinus was of Strom, Li. opinion, that Moses was circumcised, before he was put into the Arke of Reedes. and that Amram his father had named him Joachim. In his youth hee was carefully bred, by the care, and at the charge of Pharaobs Daughter, and by men of the most vnderstanding, taught and instructed : quem regio more educanit, prafectu et sapientibus A- phil de vits apptiorum Magistris, à quibus erudiretur, faith BASIL; Vnto whom shee gaue princely e- Moss. ducation, appointing over him wife Masters of the Egyptians for his instructers. Thereby (say lofephus and Philo) hee became excellently learned in all the doctrine of the Agyptians; which also the Martyr Stephen, in the feuenth of the Attes confirmeth; 10 And Moses was learned in all the wifedome of the Agyptians. Which wifedome or fapience, such as it was, or at least so much thereof as Six. Senensis hath gathered, wee have added, betweene the death of Moses, and the reigne of losus.

Hen Moses was growne to mans estate, losephus and Eusebius, out of Artapanus, tell vs of ten yeeres warre that hee made against the Athiopians: of the belieging of Saba, afterward by Cambyfes, called Meroe; and how he recouered that Citie by the fauour of Tharbis, a Daughter of Athiopia, whom he tooke to wife. So hath Commestor a prettie tale of Moles, How after the end of that warre, Tharbis relifting his returne into Egypt, Moles most skilfull in Astronomie, caused two Images to bee ingrauen in two precious stones, whereof the one increased memorie; the other caused forgetfulnesse. These he set in two rings; whereof he gaue the one, to wit, that of obliuion, 30 to his wife Tharbis, reserving the other of memorie for himselfe: which ring of forgetfulnesse, after shee had a while worne, shee beganne to neglect the love shee bare her husband : and fo Moles without danger returned into Egypt. But leauing these fancies to the Authors of them: It is true, that about the 40. yeere of Moles age, when hee beheld an Egyptian offering violence to one of the oppressed Hebrewes. moued by compassion, in respect of his brother, and stirred up by disdaine against the other, in the contention he flew the Egyptian. Soone after which act, finding a disposition in some of his owne Nation to accuse him, for whose desence hee had thus greatly endangered his owne life: by the ordinance and aduice of God, whose chosen seruant he was, hee fled into Arabia Petraa, the next bordering Countrie to 40 Egypt; where wandring all alone, as a man left and for faken, in a place vnknowne vnto him, as among a Nation of barbarous strangers; and who in suture times were the irreconciliable enemies of the Hebrewes: it pleased God (working the greatest things by the weakest worldly meanes) to make the watering of a sew sheepe, and the affilting of the Daughters of Raquel the Midianite, an occasion whereby to prouide him a wife of one of those, and a father in law, that fed him, and sustained him ina Countrie neerest Egypt, fittest to returne from: necessarie to bee knowne, because interiacent betweene Egipt and Indea, through which he was to leade the Ifraelites; and wherein God held him, till the occasion which God presented, best served. That Moses, in this time of his abode at Madian, wrote the Booke of lob, as Pererius supposeth, I cannot judge of it, because it is thought, that Iob was at that time living. Neither dare I subscribe to Pererim opinion, That Moles, while heeliued in that part of Arabia, wrote the bookes of Genesis; although I cannot denie the reason of Pererius conjecture, That by the example of Iobs patience hee might strengthen the oppressed Hebrewes: and by the promises of God to Abraham, Mass, and lacob, put them in affurance of their deliverie from the Leyptian flavery, and of the Land of rest, and plentie promised.

Of his calling backe into Agypt by the Angel of God, and the maruailes and wonders which hee performed, thereby to perswade Pharaoh, that he was the mef- 30 senger of the most High, the particulars are written in the first fourteene Chapters of Exedus; and therefore to treate of all the particulars therein contained, it were needlesse. But for the first, it is to be noted, that when Moses desired to be taught by God, by wat name hee should make him knowne, and by whom hee was sent; he received from God so much, as man could comprehend of his infinite and everbeing nature. Out of which he deliuered him in the first part of his answere, a name to be considered of by the wisest: and in his second, to bee understood by all. For there is nothing that is, or hath being of it selfe, but the eternall: which truely is; which is about all; which is immutable. The bodies of men are changed every moment: their substance wasteth, and is repaired by nutriment; neuer continuing 40 at one stay, nor being the same so long, as while one may say, Now. Likewise, whatsoeuer is consumed in the longest continuance of time, the same in enery shortest wieron ad Dam. piece of time suffereth decay; neither doth any thing abide in one state. Other things that are created, although they seeme to be , yet they are not; for sometimes they were not : and that which hath not beene, may againe want being. And with this, in respect of the Divine nature, the saying of Zeno Eleates excellently agreeth: Tota rerum natura vmbra est, aut inanis, 50 aut fallax; The whole nature of things is but a shadow, either emptie or deceitfull: in comparison of whom (saith E(ay) all Nations are as nothing, lesse then nothing, and

The rest of the Plagues by Frogges, Lice, Flyes, or slinging Waspes; by the death of their Cattaile; by leprous Scabbes, by Haile and Fire; by Grashoppers; by darknesse; after which Pharaoh forbad Moses his presence: moued the hardned to heart of the vnbeleening King no longer, then the paine and perill lafted, till fuch time as his owne first-borne, and the first-borne of all his Nation perished. He then, while he feared his owne life, (a time wherein wee remember God perforce) stood voon no condition: whereas before, hee first yeelded but to the departure of the men; then of the men, women and children, referuing their bestiall; but hee was now content for the present, that the Isrelites should not only depart with all their owne, but with a part of the Siluer, Gold, and Iewels of his owne people: of which (the feare being past) hee suddainly repented him, as his pursuit after them proued. For when every one of the Hebrewes had (according to direction from Moles receiued) flaine a Lambe, without spot or blemish, for the Passeouer, a Sacrament of the 20 most cleaneand vnspotted Saujour) and with the bloud thereof coloured the poste and linterne of the doores; the Angell of God in the dead of the night smote every first-borne of Agypt, from the sonne of the King, to that of the Begger and Slaue: the children of the Ifraelites excepted. At which terrible judgement of God, Pharach being more then euer amazed, yeelded, as before is fayd, to their departure. The Lepptians (faith Epiphanius) did in after-times imitate this colouring with Epiphan.l.t. bloud, which the Israelites vsed after the Passeouer; ascribing an exceeding vertue to cont. Eleros. the Red Colour: and therefore they did not only marke their Sheepe and Cattell, but their Trees bearing Fruit, to preserue them from lightning and other harmes.

O w, when the people were remooned, and on their way, (his heart being hardened by God) hee bethought him aswell of the Honour being hardened by God) nee petnongar man account of lost, as of the shame remaining after so many Calamities and Plagues, in Suffering them to depart with the spoiles of his people, and in account of the state of spight of himselfe. And having before this time great Companies of Souldiers in readinesse, hee consulted with himselfe, what way the Ifraelites were like to take. Hee knew that the shortest and fairest passage was through the Countrey of the Philistims. But because these people were very strong, and a warlike Nation, and in all probabilitie of his Allies, hee suspected that Moses meant to find some other outlet, to wit, through the Desart of Etham; and there, because the Countrey was exceeding Mountainous, and of hard accesse, and that Moses was pestered with multitudes of Women, Children, and Cattell, hee thought it impossible for the Israelites to escape him that way. In the meane-while having gathered together all the Chariots of Agypt, and 600. of his owne, and Captaines ouer Exed. 14.0.7. them; hee determined to set vpon them in the Plaines of Gosen, which way soeuer 50 they turned themselues. For it was the ancient manner to fight in those Chariots, armed with broad and sharpe Hookes on both sides, in fashion like the Mowers Sythe. Which kind of fight in Chariots, but not hooked, the Brittaines vsed against the Romanes, while they made the Warre for the Conquest of this Land. Of this Armie of PHARAOH, IOSEPHVS affirmeth, that it consisted of 50000. Iofant.l.v.c.6. Horse,

Horse, and 20000. foot; which, were it true, then it cannot be doubted, but that

them in Gofen; and refused them passage, till such time as hee had prepared an Armie.

to set on them. For, as it is written in the first of Exodus, hee doubted two things, eyther that the Hebrewes might joyne themselves to his enemies within the Land, or being so multiplied, as they were, might leave his service, and get themselves thence at their pleasure. But the plagues which God grieued him withall, enforst him at this time to give an affent to their departure: perchance fore-running his intent. But were it otherwise, and Iosephus partiall in this affaire, yet by the wordes of the Text it appeareth, that he gathered all the Chariots of Egypt: which could not bee done to in hafte. For Moles made but three dayes march, ere Pharaoh was at his heeles; and yet the last day he went on sixteene miles: which, in so hot a Countrey, and to drive their Cattell and Sheep with them, pestered with a world of Women and Children.

was a march witnessing the dread of a powerfull Enemie at hand. Now, as Moles well knew, that hee went out with a mightie hand, and that God guided his vnder-standing in all his Enterprizes: so he lay not still in the ditch crying for helpe, but vfing the vinderstanding which God had given him, hee left nothing vinperformed becomming a naturall wise man, a valiant and a skilfull Conducter; as by all his actions

him not to dare to come thenceforth into his presence: after hee had warned I/rael time forward they were commanded to account, as the first Moneth of the yeere.

Whether in former times they had beene accustomed to begin their yeere in some other Moneth, following the manner of the Egyptians, and were now recalled by Moses to the rule of their Forefathers, it is vncertaine. Certaine it is, that they had.

and retained, another beginning of their politike yeere, which was not now abrogated, but rather by some solemnities thereunto annexed, was confirmed, and still continued in vse. Wherefore in referring things done, or happening among them, vnto the beginning, middest, or ending of the yeere; that distinction of the Sacred, and ry Moneth, and the whole forme of their yeere, like enough it is that Moles himselfe in fortie yeeres space, did sufficiently instruct the Priests, to whose care the ordering thereof (as common opinion holds) was given in trust: but that any rule of framing their Kalendar, was made publike, before the captiuitie of Babylon, I doe not find.

Now because time and motion beginne together, it will not, I thinke, bee any great breach of order, to shew here at their first setting forth, what was the forme of the Hebrew yeere: with the difference betweene them and other Nations, in ordering the Politike yeere is not to bee neglected. Concerning the number of dayes in eue- 40

Of the Solarie and Lunarie yeeres: and how they are reconciled: with the forme of the Hebrew yeere, and their manner of intercalation.

I. March. The first Moneth, Nilan, or Abib. The second, Iar, or Tiar, Zio, or Zin. 2. April. Thethird, Sinan, or Sinan, or Siban. 2. Maie. 4. Iune. The fourth, Tamuz. 5. Inlie. The fifth, Ab. The fixth, Elul. 6. August. The seventh, Tyfri, or Ethauin, or Ethanim. 7. September. The eighth, Marchefuan, or Mechafuan, or Bul, or with Iofephus, Marfonane. 8. October. 1. Ant.c.a. 9. Nouember. The ninth, Chiflen, or Callen. The tenth, Tebeth, or Thobeth. 10.December II. lanuarie. The eleventh, Sebeth, or Sabath. The twelfth, Adar, and Ve Adar. 12. February.

E Adar was an intercalarie Moneth, added, some yeeres, vnto the other twelue, to make the Solarie and Lunarie yeere agree; which (be sides the generall inconvenience that would otherwise have risen, by cafing the Moneths of Summer into the Winter season, to the great confusion of all account) was more necessarily to bee regarded of the Hebremes, because of the divine Precept. For God appointed especiall Feasts to be cele- Deut. 16. brated precisely in such a Moneth of the yeere, and withall on a set day, both of the Moone and of the Moneth; as the Feast of the first fruits; the new Moones, and the like: which could not have so beene kept, if eyther the day of the Moone had 30 fallen in some other part of the Moneth, or the Moneth it selfe beene found farre distant from his place in the season of the yeere.

Other Nations, the better to observe their Solemnities in the due time, and to ascertaine all reckonings and remembrances, (which is the principall commoditie of time, that is the measure of endurance) were driven in like manner to make their yeeres vnequall, by adding sometimes, and sometimes abating one or more dayes, as theerrour committed in foregoing yeeres required. The errour grew at first, by notknowing what number of dayes made up a complear yeere. For though by the continuall course of the Sunne, causing Summer and Winter duly to succeed each other, it is plaine enough even to the most sauage of all people, when a yeere hath 40 passed ouer them; yet the necessitie of ordinarie occurrences, that are to bee numbred by a shorter Tally, makes this long measure of whole yeeres insufficient for the smaller sort of more daily affaires. Therefore men obserued the Monethly conspicuous revolution of the Moone, by which they divided the yeere into twelve parts, Subdividing the Moneth into 29 dayes and nights, and those againe into their quarters and houres. But as the markes of time are sensible and easily discerned: so the exact calculation of it is very intricate, and worketh much perplexitie in the vnderstanding. Twelue revolutions of the Moone, containing lesse time by eleven dayes or thereabout, than the yeerely course of the Sunne, through the Zodiacke, in the space of sixteene yeeres, euery Moneth was found in the quite contrarie part of the 50 yeere, to that wherein it was placed at the first. This caused them to adde some daies to the yeere, making it to confift of twelue Moneths, and as many daies more, as they thought would make the courses of the Sunne and Moone to agree. But herein were committed many new errours. For neither did the Sunne determine his yeerely revolution by any fet number of whole dayes; neyther did the Moone changealwayes at one houre; but the verie minutes and lesser fractions were to bee observed by him, that would seeke to reduce their motions ( which motions also were not still alike) into any certaine rule. Here lay much wisedome and deepe art. which could not soone bee brought to perfection. Yet as making an estimate at randome, the Athenians held the yeere to containe 360. dayes, wherein most of the Greekes concurred with them. That 360. dayes filled vp the Gracian yeere (besides many collaterall proofes) it is manifest by that which Plinie directly affirmeth, telling of the Statues, erected in honour of Demetrius Phalereus, which were (fayth he) 360. whilest as yet the yeere exceeded not that number of dayes. By this account neyther did any certaine age of the Moone beginne or end their Moneths; neyther 10 could their Moneths continue many yeeres, in their owne places: but must needes bee shifted by little and little, from Winter to Summer, and from Summer to Winter, as the dayes forgotten to be inserted into the Almanacke by men, but not forgotten by the superiour bodies in their courses, should occupie their owne roomes in their due turnes. Now, because the solemnitie of the Olympian Games was to be held at the full Moone, and withall on the 15. day of the Moneth Hecatembaon (which answerethin a manner to our lune) they were carefull to take order, that this Moneth might euer beginne with the new Moone; which they effected by adding some two daies to the last Moneth of every yeere: those Games being held once in foure yeeres. This intercalation sufficed not to make the matter euen; which 20 caused them sometimes to omit one day in the sourth yeere, which was the second of the Moneth Badromian; (agreeing neerely with our August) sometimes not to omitit, or (which is all one) to insert another for it into the fourth Lunarie yeere, accounting by the Moone, after a manner that was not vulgar. All this notwithstanding, their Moneth of Iune would energy yeere have growne colder and colder, had they not fought to keepe all vpright, by intercalating in each other Olympiad, that is, each eighth yeere one whole Moneth, which they called the second Polideon or December; which was the device of Harpalus, who also taught them to make one Moneth of 29. dayes, another of 30. and so successively through the whole yeere. Thus with much labour they kept their yeere as neere as they could, vnto the high 30 way of the Planets; but these markes which they observed, were found at length to bee deceitfull Guides. For it was not possible so to fashion this eighth yeeres intercalation, that it should not deceive them in 11. hours and 18. minutes at the least, or some wayes in 34. houres and 10. minutes, or 36. and 41. minutes; which differences would, in few Ages, have bred much confusion. The first that introduced a good methode, likely to continue, was Meton the Athenian, who not regarding the Olympiads, and the eighth yeeres intercalation, deuised a Cycle of 19. yeeres, wherein the Moone having 235. times runne her circuit, met with the Sunne in the same place, and on the same day of the yeere, as in the 19. yeere before past shee had done. This invention of Meton was entertained with great applause, and paffing 40 from Greece to Rome, was there inserted into the Kalendar in Golden Letters, being called the Golden Number, which name it retaineth vnto this day. Hereby were auoyded the great and vncertaine intercalations that formerly had beene vsed; for by the intercalation of 7. Moneths in the 19. yeeres, all was so even, that no sensible difference could bee found. Yet that errour which in one yeere could not be perceiued, was very apparent in a few of those Cycles; the new Moones anticipating in one Cycle 7. houres, and some minutes of the precise rule. Therefore Calippus denised a new Cycle containing foure of Metons, that is to fay, 76. yeeres; and afterwards Hipparchus, a Noble Astrologer, framed another, containing foure of Calippus his Periods, each of them finding some errour in the former observations, which they diligently 50 corrected. The last reformation of the Kalendar was that which Iulius Cafar made, who by aduice of the best Mathematicians, then to be found, examining the courses of those heavenly bodies, reduced the yeere vnto the forme which is now in vse with vs, containing 365. dayes and fixe houres, which houres in foure yeeres make yp one whole day, that is intercalated enery fourth yeere, the 24. of Februarie. The correction of the Iulian yeere by Pope Gregorie the 13. Anno Domini 1582. is not as yet entertained by generall consent; it was indeed, but as a note added vnto the worke of Cefar: yet a note of great importance. For whereas it was observed, that the Sunne, which at the time of the Nicene Councell, Anno Dom. 224 entred the Aguinoctiall on the 21. day of March, was in the yeere 1582, ten dayes sooner found in that time, Pope Gregery strooke out of the Kalendar ten dayes, following the fourth of october, so that in stead of the fifth day was written the fifteenth; by which meanes the moueable Feafts depending on the Sunnes entrance into Aries, were aso gaine celebrated in such time, as at the Nicene Councell they had beene. And the better to preuent the like alterations, it was by the Councell of Trent ordained, that from thence forward in enery hundreth yeere, the Leape day should be omitted, excepting still the fourth hundred : because the Sunne doth not in his yeerely course take vp full fixe houres aboue the 365. dayes; but faileth so many minutes, as in 400. yeeres make about three whole dayes.

Butthe Cycle of 19. yeeres, which the Hebrewes vied, was fuch as neyther did need any nice curiofitie of houres, minutes, and other leffer Fractions to helpe it; neyther did in summing up the dayes of the whole yeere, neglect the dayes of the Moone, confounding one Moneth with another. For with them it fell out fo, that 20 alwayes the Kalends or first day of the Moneth was at the new Moone, and because that day was festivall, they were very carefull aswell to observe the short yeere of the Moone, passing through all the 12. Signes in one Moneth, as that longer of the Sunne, which is needfully regarded in greater accounts. First, therefore they gaue to Nifan their first Moneth, which is about our March or April, 30. dayes; to lar their second Moneth 29. dayes; and so successively 30. to one, 29. to another. Hereby it came to passe, that every two Moneths of theirs contained somewhat euenly two revolutions of the Moone, allowing 29. dayes, 12. houres, and odde minutes, from change to change. The spare minutes were bestowed among the superfluous or Epact dayes; which made up 7. Moneths in 19. yeeres; to 6. of which 7. 20 were commonly given 30.dayes; to one of them 29.dayes, or otherwise as was found requisite. Their common yeere (as appeareth by the seuerall dayes of each Moneth) contained 354. dayes, which faile of the yeere, wherein the Sunne finisheth his course, 11. whole dayes, with some fractions of time. But these dayes, and other broken pieces, howfoeuer they were neglected in one yeere, yet in the Cycle of 19. yeeres were so disposed of by convenient Intercalations, that still at the end of that Cycle, both the Sunne and Moone were found on the same day of the yeere, Moneth and weeke, yea commonly on the same houre of the day, where they had beene at the beginning of it 19. yeeres before.

Divers have diverfly fet downe the forme of the Hebrew yeere, with the manner 40 of their Intercalations. SIGONIVS tells vs, that enery fecond yeere they did adde sig deren Hebr. a Moneth of 22. dayes; enerie fourth yeerea Moneth of 23. in the regard of 11. 110.3.6.1. dayes and a halfe wanting in 12. Moones to fulfill a yeere of the Sunne. But herein Sigonivs was very much deceived. For the Moone doth never finish her course in 22. or 23. dayes: and therefore to have added so many dayes to the end of the yeere, had been the way to change the fashion of all the Moneths in the yeeres following, which could not have begunne as they ought, with the new Moone. Genebrard faith, Geneb. Chron. La that enery third yeere, or second yeere, as need required, they did intercalate one Moneth, adding it at the yeeres end vnto the other 12. This I beleeue to have beene true; but in which of the yeeres the intercalation was (if it bee worthy of confideraunto the next account. The like, say they, was done at the end of the fixt yeere; at which time, besides the Intercalarie Moneth, remained sixe daies, namely, three surmounting that Moneth, and the Epact of three yeeres, besides the three formerly reserved. Thus they goe on to the 18. yeere; at which time they have 18. daies in hand : all which with the Epact of the 19. yeere make vp a Moneth of 29. daies, that being intercalated at the end of the Cycle makes all euen.

50 tion) me thinkes they doe not probably deliuer, who keepe all farre from enennesse untill the very last of the 19. yeeres. For (to omit such as erre grossely) somethere are who fay, that after three yeeres, when besides the dayes spent in 36. courses of the Moone, 33. dayes are left remaining, that is, 11. dayes of each yeere; then did the Hebrewes addea Moneth of 30. dayes; keeping three dayes, as it were in plussage

Whether this were the practice, I can neither affirme nor denie; yet furely it must needes have bred a great confusion, if in the 18. yeere every Moneth were removed from his owne place by the distance of 48. daies, that is, halfe a quarter of the yeere and more; which inconvenience by fuch a reckoning was vnauoydable. Wherefore, to I preferre the common opinion, which preventeth such dislocation of the Moneths. by ferting downe a more convenient way of Intercalation in the 8. yeere. For the 6. daies remaining after the two former Intercalations made in the third and fixth veeres, added vnto the 22. daies, arising out of the Epacts of the seventh and eighth veeres, doe fitly ferue to make up a Moneth, with the borrowing of one day or two from the yeere following; and this borrowing of two daies is so farre from causing any disorder, that indeed it helpes to make the yeeres ensuing vary the lesse from the proper season of every Moneth. This may suffice to bee spoken of the Hebrem Moneths and Yeeres, by which they guided their accounts.

Of the passage of Israel from Succoth towards the Red Sea : and of the divers wayes leading out of Ægypt.

Rom Succetb in the morning following, Moses led the Israelites towards the Defart of Etham, to recouer the Mountaine 1001, by the edge of that Wilderneffe, though hee intended nothing leffe then to goe out that way, of all other the neerest. But being assured of the multitude of Horiemen and armed Chariots, that followed him, hee kept himselfe 30 from being incompassed, by keeping the rough and Mountainous ground on his lest hand. At Etham hee rested but one night, and then hee restected backe from the entrancethereof, and marched away directly towardes the South; the distance betweene it and Succoth being about eight mile. That hee forbare to enter Arabia being then in light thereof, it feemeth to proceed from three respects; the first two naturall; the third divine. For Pharaoh being then at hand, and having received intelligence of the way which Moles tooke, perswaded himselfe, that the numbers It is probable which Moles led, confifting of aboue a Million, if not two Millions of foules, (for as it is written Exod. the 12. Great multitudes of fundry forts of people went out with them) others brought could not possibly passe ouer those Desart and high Mountaines with so great multi-40 by the Bebrevs tudes of Women, Children, and Cattell, but that at the very entrance of that fastnesse he should have ouer-taken them, and destroyed the greatest numbers of them. For these his owne wordes: They are tangled in the Land, the Wildernesse hath shut them lowed Moses at in, doe shew his hopes and intents; which Moses by turning another way did frustrate. Secondly, Moses by offering to enter Arabia that way, drew Pharach towardes the East-side of the Land of Gosen, or Rameses: from whence (missing Moses there) his pursuit after him with his Chariots was more difficult, by reason of the roughnesse of the way; and howsoeuer, yet while the Hebrewes kept the Mountaine foot on the left hand, they were better fecured from the ouer-bearing violence both of the Horse and Chariers. Thirdly, Moles confidence in the Al-powerfull God was 50 fuch, by whose spirit, only wife, he was directed, as hee rather made choice to leave the glory of his deliuerance and victorie to Almightie God, than eyther by an escape the next way, or by the strength of his multitude, consisting of 600000, men, to cast the successe upon his owne understanding, wife conduction, or valour. For the Agyptians had gods for all turnes. 10 . Leypty dis facundi; The Egyptians were fruitfull in gods, faith Saint Hierome. But Moles, who incamped at the foot of this Mountayne with a million of foules, or as other conceive, with two millions, found this Lord of the watch-towre afleene . or out of countenance.

After whom Pharach made fo great speede with his Horse-men and Chariots, as he gave the He-20 brewes no time at all to reft them after fo long a march; but gate fight of them, and they of him, euen at the very brinke and wash of the Sea: insomuch as the Hebremes being terrified with Pharaohs Sudden approch, beganne to despaire, and to mutine, at that time when it behoued them most to have taken courage for their owne defence; laying it to Moles charge, that themselves foresaw those perills in which they were wrapped. And feare, Which, faith the booke of WISEDOME, it the Cap. 17.11. betraying of those succours which reason offereth, made them both despaire in Gods former promises, and to be forgetfull of their owne strength and multitudes.

Vt Moles who feared nothing but God himselfe, perswaded them to be confident in his goodnesse, who hath neuer abandoned those, that affuredly trust in him; vsing this comfortable and resoluted speech: Feare not, &c. for the Ægyptians whom yee have seene this day, yee shall Exed.14. v.13. neuer see them againe. The Lord shall fight for you. After which Moles calling on God for succour, receiued encouragement, and commandement to goe on, in these wordes : Wherefore cryeft thou vnto me? (peake vnto the children of If- Exed.14. v.16. 40 rael that they goe forward; and lift thou up thy rod, and stretch out thy hand upon the Sea, and divide is, and les the children of Israel goe on drie ground through the middest of the Sea. Moses obeying the voice of God, in the darke of the night finding the lands vncouered, past on towards the other side and coast of Arabia: two parts of the night being spent ere he entred the Foord, which it pleased God by a forcible Eafterne winde, and by Moles rod to prepare.

Pharach followed him even at the heeles, finding the same drie ground which Moles trod on. Therefore, as it is written: The Angell of God which went before the Holt of Ifrael removed and went behinde them: also the piller of the cloud went from before them, and flood behinde them; which is, that it pleased God therein either by his im-50 mediate power, or by the ministerie of his Angell, to interpose his desence betweene the Hebrewes and their Enemies; to the end that the Agyptians might hereby be 10/11 24. v.7. blinded, in such fort, as they could not pursue Ifrael with any harmefull speede. But in the morning watch Moses seized the other banke of Arabia side and Pharaoh (as the dawne of day beganne to illighten the obscure ayre) finding a beginning of the Seas returne, hasted himselfe towards his owne Coast: But, Moses, stretched forth his hand, and the Sea returned to his force, that is, the Sea moued by the power of God, ranne backe towards the land with vnresistable surie and swistnesses, and overwhelmed the whole Armie of Pharach, so as not one escaped. For it is written, that God tooke off their Chariet wheeles, that is, when the waters began to coner the lands, the Egyptians being strucken with seare of death, ranne one athwart another, and missing the path by which they had past on after the Hebrewes, their wheeles stucke salt in the mudde and quick sands, and could not be drawne out: the Sea comming against them with supernaturall violence.

Lyranus vpon Exod. 14. and others, following the opinions or old. Traditions of to the Hebrewes, conceined, that after Moses had by the power of God divided the Red Sea, and that the children of Israel were searchill to enter it, Aminadab Prince or Leader of the Tribe of Inda sirst made the adventure, and that therefore was that Tribe ever after honored above the rest, according to the prophecie of I A c o s, Gen. 49.8. Thy fathers somes shall how downe unto thee. But Hierome vpon the 11. of Hose condemnes this opinion. And though it be true, that Inda had the first place in all their marches in the Desart, and, as we now call it, led the Vangard; (wherevpon it may be inferred, that he also led the way through the Red Sea), yet that Moses himselfe was the Conducter of Israel at that time, it is generally received. For, as it is written in the 77. P SALME: Thou didst leade thy people like sheepe by the band of 20 Moses and Arron.

The Hebrewes have also another fancie, that the Red Sea was divided into twelve parts, and that every Tribe past over in a path apart, because it is written in the 135. Psalme, according to the yulgar: Divisit mare rubrum in divisiones; He divided the Red Sea in divisions. Also that the bottome of the Sea became as a greene Field or Pasture. But Origen, Epiphaniu, Abulensis, and Genebrard, savouring this conceit, had forgotten to consider, that there were not twelve Pillers, nortwelve Armies of the Exprisans. It is written in the 77. Psalme, v.16. Thy way is in the Sea; not thy wayes; and in the last of the booke of Wisedome, vers. In the Red Sea there was a way.

Now this Sea, through which Moses past, and in which Pharab, otherwise cal- 30 led Chenchres, perished in the 16. yeere of his reigne, is commonly knowne by the name of the Red Sea, though the same differ nothing at all in natural colour from other waters. But as Philostratus in his third booke noteth, and our selues know by experience, it is of a bluish colour, as other Seas are. It entreth at a narrow strait betweene Arabia the Happy and Ethiopia, or the land of the Abysius: the mouth of the indraught from the Cape, which Ptolemie calleth Pollodium, to the other Land of Ethiopia, hath not aboue fixe leagues in breadth, and the same also filled enerywhere with Ilands, but afterwards it extendeth it selfe 58. Leagues from Coast to Coast, and it runneth vp betweene Arabia the Happy, and Arabia Petras, on one side, and Ethiopia and Egypt on the other, as farre as Sues, the vttermost end and in- 40 draught of that Sea: where the Turke now keepeth his fleet of Gallies. The Cosmographers commonly give it the name of the Arabian Gulfe : but the North part towards Sues, and where Moses past, is called Heropolites of the Citie Hero, sometime Troy, and of later times Sues. Plinie calls it Cambifu, by which name it was knowne, faith he, before it was called Hero many yeeres. The Arabians call this Sea towards the North Apocopa, Eccant, and Eant. Artemidorus writes it Alemiticum: King Juba Laniticum, others more properly Elaniticum, of the Port and Citie Elana: which the Septuagint call Elath : Ptolemie, Elana : Plinie, Lana : Iofephus, Ilana, and Marius Niger, Aila: there is also Ilalah in Affyria, to which Salmanaffar carryed the Ifraclites captive, Kings 2.68. v.11. which Malah in Affyria, the Septuagint call Elaa: and in the first of 50 Chron, the 5. Ala. But as for this Red Sea or the parts thereof, thus diverfly named, the Moores and Arabians (Vassals to the Turke) know it by no other appellation, then the Gulfe of Meca, after the name of Mahomets Towne Mecca. The Greekes write it the Sea Erythraum, of a King called Erythras, or Erythraus: and because Ery-thros in the Greeke fignifieth Red: hence it is, that, being denominated of this Errthraws, the sonne of Perseus and Indromeds, yet it tooke the name of the Red Sea, as Onin. Curtius coniectureth: which Arianus and Strabo confirme. But it feemeth to Arian. de geft. me by the view of a discouerie of that Sea in the yeere 1544. performed by Stenen Alex. Mag. 18.

Strabes, 16. Gama, Viceroy of the East India for the King of Portugall, that this Sea was so called from a reflection of rednesse, both from the bankes, clifts, and sands of many Ilands. and part of the Continent bordering it. For I finde by the report of Caltro, a principall Commander vnder Gama (which discourse I gaue Master Richard Hacluit to publilh) that there is an Iland called Dalaqua, sometime Leques, contayning in length 25 Leagues, and 12. in breadth, the earth, fands, and clifts, of which Iland, being of a reddish colour, serue for a foile to the waters about it : and make it seeme altogether of the same colour. Secondly, the same Castro reporteth, that from 24. degrees of Septentrionall Latitude, to 27. (which make in length of Coast 180, mile, lying as it doth Northerly and Southerly) all the clifts and bankes are of red earth, or stone. which by reflection of the Sunne-beames, give a kinde of reddilh lufter to the waters. Thirdly, those Portugals report, and we know it by many testimonies, that there are found in the bottome of this Sea towards the shore, great abundance of red stones, on which the greatest store of Corrall growes, which is carryed into most parts of Europe, and elsewhere. There are also on the Ilands of this Sea many red Trees, faith Strabo, and those growing under water, may also be a cause of such a colour. Of these appearances of rednesse by the shaddowes of these stones, sands, earth, and clifts, I suppose that it first tooke the name of the Red Sea, because in so many places it feemeth to be fuch: which Iohannes Barros in his fecond Decade, eight Booke and first Chapter, confirmeth.

The breadth of this Sea from Elana, or Ezion Gaber adjoyning, now Toro, called by the ancient Cosmographers Sinus Elaniticus, which washeth the banks of Madian or Midian, is for 16. or 17. Leagues together, along Northward towards Sues. fome three Leagues or nine English mile over, and from this Port of Toro to Sues, and the end of this Sea it is in length about 28. Leagues, of which the first 26. haue 20 nine miles breadth, as aforesaid, and afterward the lands both from £gypt and Arabia, thrust themselves into the Sea, and straighten it so fast, as for sixe miles together, it is not about three mile over; from thence vpward the land on Egypt fide. falleth away and makes a kinde of Bay or Coue for some ten miles together, after which the land growes vpon the Sea againc, and so bindes it into the very end thereof, at foure miles breadth or thereabout, in which tract it was that Moses past it ouer, though others would have it to be over-against Elana or Toro; but without iudgement: for from Ramases to Pihacheroth and Baalzephon, there is not about 20. miles interjacent, or 35. miles at most, which Moses past ouer in three dayes: and between the land of Aeypt opposite to Elana or Toro, the distance is aboue 80. o miles. For Ramases, to which Citie Moses came (being the Metropolis of Gosen) when he left Pharao at Zoan, and tooke his last leave, standeth in 30. degrees five minutes of Septentrionall Latitude: and Migdol, or the Valley of Pihacheroth, at the foot of the Mountayne Climax, or Baalfephon, in nine and twentie and a halfe. which made a difference of fine and thirtie English mile, the way lying in effect

CHAP.3. S.8.

d. IX.

That the passage through the Red Sea was miraculous, and not at a low Ebbe.

He Ægyptians, and of them the Memphites, and other Heathen Writers, who in hatred of the Hebrewes have objected that Mofes pastouer the Red Sea at a low ebbe, vpon a great spring-tyde, and that Pharan conducted more by furie then discretion, pursued him so far, as before he could recouer the coast of Egypt, he was ouer-taken by the is floud and therein perished, did not well consider the nature of this place with other circumstances. For not to borrow strength from that part of the Scriptures, which makes it plaine, that the Waters were divided, and that God wrought this miracle by an Easterly winde, and by the hand and rod of Moses (which authoritie to men that beleeve not therein perswadeth nothing) I say, that by the same naturall reason vnto which they fasten themselues, it is made manifest, that had there beene no other working power from aboue, or affistance given from God himselfe to Moles. and the children of Ifrael than ordinarie and casuall, then could not Pharao and all his Armie haue perished in that pursuit.

For wherefoeuer there is any ebbing of the Sea in any gulfe, or indraught. there 20 doethe waters fall away from the Land, and runne downeward towards the Ocean. leauing all that part towards the Land as farre as the Sea can ebbe, or fall off, to be drie Land. Now Moses entring the Sea at Migdel under Baalzephon (if he had taken the aduantage and opportunitie of the tyde) must have left all that end of the Red Sea towards Sues, on his left hand drie and vncouered. For if a paffage were made by falling away of the water, ten or twelue mile farther into the Sea then Sues. much more was it made at Sues, and betweene it and where Moses past: who entred the same so farre below it, and towards the body of the same Sea. It followeth then, that if all that part of the Sleeue or Strait, had beene by the ebbe of a spring tyde discouered, when Pharae found the floud increasing, he needed not to have returned 30 by the same way toward Agypt side, but might have gone on in his returne before the tyde, on his right hand: and so taken ground againe at the end of that Sea, at Sues it selfe, or elsewhere. But the Scriptures doe truely witnesse the contrarie, that is, That the Sea did not fall away from the Land, as naturally it doth; but that Mofes past on betweene two Seas, and that the waters were divided. Otherwise, Pharao by any returne of waters could not have perished, as he did: and therefore the effects of that great Armies destruction, proue the cause to haue beene a power about nature, and the miraculous worke of God himselfe. Againe, those wordes of the Scriptures, that God caused the Sea to runne backe by a strong East-winde, doe rather prouc the miracle, than that thereby was caused an ebbe more then ordinarie: for that Sea 40 doth not lye East and West, but, in effect North and South, And it must have beene a West and North-west winde, that must have driven those waters away through their proper Channels, and to the South-east into the Sea. But the East-winde blue athwart the Sea, and cut it afunder: so as one part fell backetowards the South, and mayne body thereof: the other part remayned towards Sues, and the North. Which being vnknowne to Pharao: while he was checkt by that Sea, which vled in all times before to ebbe away, the floud prest him and ouer-whelmed him. Thirdly, seeing Infephus augweth, that Moses was not only of excellent judgement generally, but alfo, fo great a Captayne, as he ouer-threw the £thiopians in many battels, being imployed by Pharao, and wan divers Cities seeming impregnable: it were barbarous to 50 condemne him of this groffenesse, and distraction : that rather then he would have endured the hardnesse of a Mountaynous passage at hand (had not God commanded him to take that way, and foretold him of the honor which he would there winne vpon Pharao) he would have trusted to the advantage of an ebbing water.

For he knew not the contrarie, but that Pharao might have found him, and prest him, as well when it flowed as when it ebbed, as it seemeth he did. For the people, beholding Pharaos approch, cryed out against Moses, and despaired altogether of their safetie: and when Moses prayed vnto God for helpe, he was answered by God: wherefore cryest thou unto me? speake unto the children of Israel that they goe forward, and lift thou vo thy rod, and Aretch out thy hand upon the Sea, and divide it : which proves that there was not at the time of Pharaos approchany ebbe at all; but that God did disperse and cut through the weight of waters, by a strong East-winde, whereby the Sands discouered themselves betweene the Sea on the left hand toward Sues. to from whence the waters moued not, and the Sea which was towards the South on the right hand, So that the waters were a wall unto them on the right hand, and on the capita. v.a. left hand, that is, the waters so defended them on both sides, as the Egyptians could onely follow them in the same path; not that the waters stood vpright as walls doe, as some of the Schoole-men have fancied. For had Pharaoh and the Agyptians perceined any fuch buildings in the Sea, they would foone have quitted the chace and pursuit of Israel. Furthermore, there is no man of judgement, that can thinke, that Pharaok and the Azyptians, who then excelled all Nations in the observations of heauenly Motions, could be ignorant of the fluxes, and refluxes of the Sea, in his owne Countrie, on his owne Coast, and in his owne most traded and frequented 20 Ports and Hauens, and wherein, his people hauing had so many hundreds of yeeres experience of the tydes, he could not be caught, as he was, through ignorance, nor by any foreknowne or naturall accident, but by Gods powerfull hand only; which then falleth most heavily on all men, when looking through no other spectacle but their owne prosperitie, they least discerne it comming, and least feare it. Lastly, if the Armie of the Egyptians had been ouer-taken by the ordinarie returne of the floud, before they could recover their owne Coast; their bodies drowned would have beene carryed with the floud which runneth vp to Sues, and to the end of that Sea, and not have beene cast ashore on that coast of Arabia where Moles landed, to wit, vpon the Sea-banke ouer against Baalzephon, on Arabia side: where it was that 20 the Ifraelites faw their dead bodies; and not at the end of the Red Sea, to which place the ordinarie floud would have carryed them: Which floud doth not any where crossethe Channell, and runne athwart it, as it must have done from Agypt side to Arabia, to have cast the Egyptians bodies there; but it keepes the natural course towards the end of that Searand to which their carkaffes should have beene carried, if the worke had not beene supernaturall and miraculous. Apollonius in the lives of the Fathers affirmeth, that those of the Egyptians which stayed in the Countrie, and did not follow Pharaoh in the pursuit of Israel, did euer after honor those Beasts, Birds, Plants, or other Creatures, about which they were busied at the time of Pharabbs destruction: as he that was then labouring in his Garden, made a God of that 40 Plant or Roote, about which he was occupyed; and so of the rest. But how those multitudes of gods were erected among them, a more probable reason shall be giuen elsewhere. Orosius in his first Booke and tenth Chapter against the Pagans, tells vs, that in his time, who lived some 400. yeeres after Christ, the prints of Pharaphs Chariot wheeles were to be seene at a low water on the Egyptian fands: and though they were sometime defaced by winde and weather, yet soone after they appeared againe. But hereof I leaue euery man to his owne

Of the iournying of the Hraelites from the Red Sea, to the place where the Law was given them: with a difcourse of Lawes.

A transition, by way of recapitulation of some things touching Chronologie: with a continuance of the storie, untill the Amalekites met with the Ifraelites.

VT to goe on with the storie of Israel, in this fort I collect the times. Moses was borne in the yeere of the World 2434. Saphrus then gouerning Assyria; Orthopolis Sycionia, or Peloponne fus ; Criafus the Argines; 20 Orus Egypt, and Deucalion Theffalie. He fled into Midian when he had lived 40. yeeres, in the yeere of the World 2474. and two yeeres after was Caleb borne. He returned by the commandement and ordinance of God into Egypt, and wrought his miracles in the fields of Zoan, in the yeere 2514, in the last Moneth of that yeere. On the 14. day of the first

Hebrew moneth Abib, or the 15. of that moneth, beginning the day (as they) at Sunne setting, in the yeere of the World 2514. was the celebration of the Passeoner: and in the dead of the night of the same day were all the first-borne saine through 30 Agypt, or in all those parts where the Hebrewes inhabited. The 15. day of the first moneth of the Hebrewes called Abib, being about the beginning of the yeere of the World 2514. Moses with the children of Israel removed from the generall affembly at Ramases, and marched to Succoth.

And departing thence they made their third Station at Etham: and iournying from Etham, they incamped in the Valley of Pihacheroth, or Migdol, under the Mountayne Baalzephon; and in the same night after mid-night, they past the Red Sea: Pharaoh and his Armie perishing in their returne, about the first dawne of the day. Moses having recovered the bankes of Arabia, gave thankes vnto God, for the deliverie of Israel; and making no stay on that coast, entred the Desarts of Arabia Petrea, called 40 Sur. But finding no water in that passage, he incamped at Marah, in the Desart of Etham, which in Exod. 15. v.22. is also called Sur, 25. miles from the Sea: where the children of Israel prest with extreme thirst, murmured against Moses the second time; first at Pharaohs approch in Pihacheroth, and now in Arabia. But Moles taking the branches of a tree, growing neere a Lake of bitter water, and casting the same thereinto, made the same sweet: a playne type and figure of our Saniour; who vpon the tree of the Crosse changed the bitternesse of euerlasting death into the sweetnesse of eternall life. Plinie remembers these bitter Fountaynes in his fixth Booke and 29. Chapter. From whence to Delta in Egypt, Sefostris first, Darius after him, and lattly Psolemie the second, began to cut an artificial River, thereby by Boats and 50 fmall Shipping to trade and nauigate the Red Sea, from the great Cities vpon Nilus. From Marah he removed to Elim, the fixth Mansion, a march of eight miles: where finding twelve Fountaynes of sweet water, and three-score and ten Palme trees, he rested diuers dayes. Whether

Whether this Helim were the name of a Towne or Citie in Moles time, I cannot affirme. And yet the scarcitie of waters in that Region was such, as Helim, which had twelve Fountaines, could hardly bee left unpeopled. William, Arch-Belhop of Tyre, in his Historie of the Holse Warre, found at Helim the ruines of a great and ancient Citie. And at such time as Baldwine the first past that way into Laypt, Ingress w (laith he) Helim, Civitatem antiquisimam populo Israelitico aliquado Will Irr.l. 116 familiarem; ad quam cum peruenisset, loci illius incola, Regis aduentu pracognito, naui- capity. sulam ingredientes in mare vicinum (e contulerunt; Entring Helim a very ancient Citie. no well knowne sometime to the people of Israel, whither, when he came, the inhabitants, forewarned of the Kings approch, tooke Boate, and shifted themselves into the Sea, lying neere them. From Elim hee returned againe towards the South, and fate downe by the banks of the Red Sea: the feuenth Mansion. For it seemeth that he had knowledge of Amalech, who prepared to refift his passage through that part of Arabia. And Moles who had not as yet trained those of the Hebrewes, appointed to beare armes: nor affured the minds of the rest, who encountring with the least miserie, were more apt to returne to their quiet flauerie, than either to endure the wants and perils which every where accompanied them in that passage, or at this time to vndertake or sustaine so dangerous an enemie; he therefore made stay at this Mansion, untill the fifteenth of the second Moneth called Zim, or Iiar: and made Exodate. 20 the eight Mansion in the Defart of Zin; where the children of Israel mutinied against Moses the third time, having want of foode. In the sixteenth Chapter of Exodus, Moses omitteth this retrait from Elim to the red Sea, but in the collection of enery severall incamping in the 22. of Numbers, it is set downe.

Here it pleased God to send so many flights of Quailes, as all the Countrie about their incamping was couered with them. The morning following it also rained Mauna, being the fixteenth of their Moneth, which served them in stead of bread. Exod. 16. For now was the store consumed which the people carried with them out of Agypt. And though they had great numbers of Cattel, and Sheepe among them, yet it seemeth that they durst not feede themselves with many of those : but referued them both for the milke to release the children withall : and for breede to store themselves when they came to the Land promised.

From hence towards Raphidim they made two removes of twentie mile: the one to Daphea, the other to Alus, distant from Raphidim fixe miles. Here being againe prest with want of water, they murmured the fourth time, and repented them of their departure from Leppt, where they rather contented themselves to be fed and beaten after the manner of beafts, than to suffer a casuall and sometime necessarie want, and to vndergoe the hazzards and travailes which energy manly minde seeketh after, for the love of God and their owne freedomes. But Moles with the same rod which hee divided the Sea withall, in the fight of the Elders of Ifrael, brought waters out of the Rocke, wherewith the whole multitude were satis-

Exed.17.

Nd while Moles incamped in this place, the Amalekites who had knowledge of his approch, and gheffed that he meant to leade the children of Ifrael through their Countrie (which being barren of it felfe, would bee veterly wasted by so great a multitude of People and Cattel) thought it most for their advantage to set vpon themat to Raphidim: where the want of water, and all other things needful for the life of man interbled them. On the other fide Mofes perceiving their resolutions, gave charge to losus, to draw out a sufficient number of the ablest Hebrewes, to incounter d. malrch. Betweene whom and Israel, the victorie remained doubtfull, for the most part of the day: the Hebrewes and Amalekites contending with equall hopes and repulses for many houres. And had not the strength of Moses praiers to God been of farre greater force, and more prevalent, than all reliftance and attempt made by the bodies of men; that valiant and warlike Nation had greatly indangered the whole enterprise. For those bodies which are vnacquainted with scarcitic of food. and those minds whom a servile education hath dulled, being beaten, & despaired 20 in their first attempts, wil hardly, or neuer be brought again to hazard themselves.

After this victorie Iethro repaired to Moses, bringing with him Moses his wife, and his two Sonnes, which either lethro forbare to conduct, or Moses to receive, till he had by this overthrow of Amalech the better affured himselfe of that part of Arabia. For it is written in the 18. of Exed. v. I. When I ETHR o the Priest of Midian, Mos Es Father in law, heard all that God had done for Mos Es, &c. of which, the last deed to wit, the overthrow of Amalech, gave lethre courage and affurance, be then repaired to his sonne in law Moses, at Sinai; where among it other things, he aduised Moses to appoint Judges, and other Officers, ouer Israel; being himselfe vnable to give order in all causes and controversies, among so many thousands of 30

This Iethro, although he dwelt among the Midianites, yet he was by Nation a Kenite, as in the fourth of Indges v. II. 6 17. it is made manifest; where it is written; Now HEBER the Kenite, which was of the children of HOBAB, to wit, the sonne of IETHRO, the father in law of MosEs, was departed from the Kenites, and pitched his Tents untill the Plaine of Zaanaim, which is by Kedesh. Likewise in the first of Samuel, Saul commanded the Kenites to depart from among the Amalekites, lest hee should destroy the with the Amalekites. For the Kenites inhabited the mountaines of Sin Kadelh: and the Amalekites dwelt in the Plaines, according to the faying of Num. 24.72.21: Balaam, speaking of the Kenites; Strong is thy dwelling place, and thou hast put thy nest 40 in the Rocke. And that Saul spared this Nation, he giveth for cause, that they shewed mercie to all the children of Ifrael, when they came up from Agypt. For these Kenites were a Nation of the Madianites, and the Madianites were of the issues of Madian, one of the fixe fonnes which Abraham begat on Kethura: and might also take that name of Kenites from Kethura, of whom they descended by the Mother, who as it seemeth kept the knowledge of the true God among them, which they received from their parent Abraham. For Moses, when he fled out of Egypt into Midian, and married the daughter of Iethro, would not (had he found them Idolaters) have made Iethroes Daughter the Mother of his children. And although the Kenites are named amongst those Nations, which God promised, that the seede 50 of Abraham should roote out, and inherite their lands; yet it cannot bee meant by these; who are descended from Abraham himselfe: but by some other Nation, bearing the same name; and in all likelihood of the race of Chus. For in the fifteenth of Genef. vers. nineteenth these Kenetes or Chustes are listed with the the Hittites and Perizites, with the Amorites, Canamites, Gergelites, and lebulites, which were indeede afterwards rooted out. But these Kenites, descended from A- Gen. 3. braham, had separated themselves from among the rest, which were altogether idolatrous. For, as is before remembred, Heber the Kenite, which was of the chil- 111dg.4. dren of Hobab, was departed from the Kenites, that is to fay, from those Kenites of Canaan, and inhabited in Zaanaim, which is by Kedesh or Kadesh. Againe, Moses nameth that Nation of the Kenites, before Midian, or any of Abrahams other fonnes were borne: which he did(referring my felfe to better iudgement)rather, because they were more ancient, than by anticipation.

And as of the Kenites, fo we may confider of the Madianites, parted by Moles in- Gen. 15.4. to fine Tribes. For some of them were corrupted, and Heathens; as those of Madian by the River Zared, afterwards destroice by Moses. But the Madianites necre the bankes of the Red Sea, where Moses married his wife Zipora, and with whom he left her and his children, til after the ouerthrow of Amalech, seeme like wise not to have beene corrupted. For these Madianites with the Kenites affisted Israel, and guided them in the Defarts. But the Madianites in Moab, and to the North of the Metropolis of Arabia, called Petraa, were by I/rael rooted out, when those adioyning to the Red Sea were not touched.

And though it may be doubted, whether those of Madian, of whom Iethro was 20 Priest, and the other Cities in Moab were the same, yet the contrarie is more probable. For Moles would not have fent 12000. If raclites, as farre backe as the Red Sea from the Plaines of Moab to have deftroired that Madian, where his wives kindred inhabited: feeing himfelfe comming with 600000.able men, was encountred by Amalech, in that passage. Neither could Moses forget the length of the way through those discomfortable Defarts, wherein himselfe and Israel had wandered 40. veare.

That Iethro, or Iothor, Raguel, or Reuel, and Hobab, were but one person, the Scriptures teach vs. For the Pulgar and Septuagint, which call him Raquel; and our English Renel: Exod.2.18.calls him lethro, or lother, Exod.2. & v.1.c.4.v.18. & 20 6.18.1. 6 6. 9. 10. 6 12. and in Numbers c. 10. v. 29. Hobab. Others take Iethro and Hobab to be the fame, but not Raquel.

ð. III.

Of the time when the Law was given: with divers commendations of the innention of Lawes.

He rest of the moneths of this yeare 2515. were spent in the Desart of Sinai, neere the mountaine of Sinai or Horen, the twents and the Eusebium thought that Sinai or Horeb were distinct mountaines: Hierome, to be but one, of a double name. And so it appeareth by many Scriptures. For in Exod. 3.v. 1. it is called Horeb: and in Exod. 24.v.

16. it is written Sinai. In the 100. Pfalme v. 19: Horeb: in Exod. 19.11. Sinai. And foit is called, Galatians 4.24 and againe, Dent. 4. 10. 6 15. 6 Deut. 5.2. Horeb. And so is it in the first of Kings 8.6 and the 2. of Chron. 5. 10. and in Malachie 4.4. Finally, in Ecclesiasticus the 48 7. they are named as onc. Which heardest (saith Ecclesiasticus) the rebuke of the Lord in Sinai, and in Horeb the indgement of the vengeance. Somewhat they are distoyned at the top by the report of Peter Belonius: who in the yeare 50 1588, past out of Ægypt into Arabia, with Monsieur de Fumet of France, and trauailed to the top both of Sinai and Horeb: Sinai being by farre the higher hill. From the fide of Horeb (faith he) there falleth a very faire spring of water into the Valley adioyning: where he found two Monasteries of Christian Marronites, containing some 100. Religious persons of diners Nations, who had pleasant gardens, delicate

all strangers, which passe that way.

Now, that there was some such Torrent of water necre Sinai in Moses time, it is very probable: First, because he incamped thereabout almost a yeare, and drew no water, as in other places, by miracle: secondly, because it is written Exed. 32.20. that when Moles had broken the golden Calfe to powder, which Aaron fet vp in his absence, he cast the powder thereof into the water, and made the children of Ifrael to drinke thereof.

On this mountaine, the Law by the Angell of God was given to Moles, where he staied a whole yeare, wanting some ten or twelue daies: for he remoued not 10 till the 20. day of the second moneth of the second yeare; and he arrived about the 45. day after the egression: the Law being given the 50. day.

At this Mansion all was done, which is written from the beginning of the 29. Chapter of Exodus, to the end of that booke; all in Leuiticus; and all in Numbers. to the 10. Chapter. Whereof (because there is no storie nor other passage) I will omit the repetition, and in place thereof speake somewhat of the Law, and the kinds and vie thereof: whereby, if the Reader finde the storie any way distoyned, he may turne ouer a few leaves, and, omitting this, finde the continuation thereof. We must first consider, that as there can be neither foundation, building, nor continuance of any Common-wealth, without the rule, leuell, and square of Lawes: 20 fo it pleased God to give thereby vnto Moses the powerfullest meane (his miraculous grace excepted) to gouerne that multitude which he conducted; to make them victorious in their passage, and to establish them assuredly in their conquest. For as the North starre is the most fixed directour of the Sea-man to his desired Port: so is the Law of God the guide & conducter of all in generall, to the hauen of eternall life: the Law of nature, from God his eternall law deduced, the rule of all his Creatures: the Law humane, depending on both these, the guard of Kings, Magistrates, and vertuous men; yea, the very spirit, and the very sinewes of energy estate in the world, by which they live and move: the Law, to wit, a just law, being resembled to an Heart without affection, to an Eie without lust, and to a Mind 30 without passion; a Treasurer, which keepeth for euery man what he hath, and distributeth to euery man what he ought to haue.

This benefit the Ancient, though barbarous, esteemed so highly, that among them, those which were taken for the first makers of Lawes, were honoured as Gods, or as the sonnes of Gods: and the rest, that made either additions or corrections, were commended to all posteritie for men of no lesse vertue, and no lesse liberally beneficiall to their Countries, than the greatest & most prosperous Conquerours that ever governed them. The Israelites, the Lacedamonians, and the Athenians, received their Lawes from one : as the Israelites from Moses ; the Lacedemonians from Lycurgus : the Athenians from Solon ; the Romanes sometime from 40 their first Kings, from their Decemviri, from their Senatours, from their Lawyers, and from the people themselues: others from the Prince, Nobilitie, and People;

as in England, France, and in other Christian Monarchies and Estates.

d. IIII.

Of the name and meaning of the words, Law, and Right.

He word Lex, or Law, is not alwaies taken alike, but is diuerfly, and 50 in an indifferent sense vsed. For if we consider it at large, it may be understood for any rule prescribing a necessarie meane, order, and methode, for the attaining of an end. And so the rules of Grammar, or other Arts, are called Lawes. Or it is taken for any private ordinance of Superiours to Inferiours; for the commandements of Tyrants, which they cause to be observed by force, for their decrees doe also vsurpe that title, according to the generall acceptation of the word Law: of which Esay, Wee unto Esay to. them that decree wicked decrees, and write gricuous things. Likewise, the word is vied for the tumultuarie resolutions of the people. For such constitutions doth Ari-Rotle also call lawes, though cuill and vnsufficient. Mala lex est quatumultuarie post- Estic. 1.4.c.1. ta est; It is an ill law that is made tumultuously. So as all ordinances, good or euill, are called by the name of lawes.

The word Law is also taken for the morall habit of our minde, which doth (as ig it were) command our thoughts, words, and actions: framing and fashioning them according to it selfe, as to their patterne and platforme. And thus the law of the flesh which the Divines call legem fomitis, is to be vnderstood. For every law is a kind of patterne of that which is done according vnto it: in which sense as * elsewhere, this morall habit or disposition of the heart is called the frame or figmentum of the heart : so in St. Paul to the Romanes it is called a Law. But I fee another law in my members, rebelling against the law of my minde, and leading me captive unto the law of sinne. Againe, the nature and inclinations of all creatures are sometime called a lawes, fo farre as they agree with the reason of the law eternall; as the law of a So Vivil, a Lyon to be fierce or valiant. Also private contracts among Merchants and other Tradesmen, doe often put dera certis imon the name of lawes. But law commonly and properly is taken, for a right rule, pofuit naturaloprescribing a necessarie meane, for the good of a Common-wealth, or Civill communitie. The rest, to wit, the commandements of Tyrants, &c. which have not noted that hee the common good for their end, but being leges inique, are by Thomas called viojoynes leges & fadea togelentia magis quam leges; rather compulsions then lawes: And what socuer is not iust, there is in the St. Augustine doth not allow for lawes, how socuer chablished: for he calls them law is often iniqua hominum constituta, qua nec iura dicenda, nec putanda sunt; The vnius constitue called the cotions of men which are neither to be termed nor thought lawes. For faith ARISTOTLE, uenant. Legaliaiusta sunt factiua, & conservatua falicitatis; Iust lawes are the workers and pre- Arist. Elbic.5. 30 feruers of happineffe: because by them we are directed ad vitam quietam, to a quiet life, according to Cieero. Yea, to life enerlasting, according to the Scriptures. For the end of the law, faith Plato, is God and his worthip. Finis legis Deus & cultus eius. Plato in Diali. Lex, or the Law is so called by the Latines à legendo, or à ligando, of reading or de Leg. binding: Leges quia letta er ad populum lata, faith Farro; For after Lawes were written and published, all men might reade them, and behold in them whereto they were bound. The other Etymologie, à ligando, is no lesse agreeable with the nature ofa Law: whence in the Scripture it is called also a yoke, and a band: as confregerunt ingum, diruperunt vincula: they have broken the yoke, they have broken the bands. Hierem, 5.5. And in the second Pfalme, Dirumpamus vincula corum, & projiciamus à nobis funes Pfalma. 40 ipforum; Let ws breake their bands in funder, and cast away their cords from vs.

The Couenant it is called, because of the conditionall promises of God: and because of Gods peoples voluntarie submission of themselves vnto it: for which word the Septuagint, and the Epifle to the Hebrewes, vie the word Audonan, a Testament or last will: which name it hath, because it is not otherwise effectuall for our faluation, but in respect of the death of the Testator, for without the death of the Testator, the Testament is of no force: as Hebr. 9. 17. it is said, Testamentum in mortuis ratum est.

The Hebrewes call the law Thorab of teaching, because enery man is thereby taught his dutie, both to God and Men. The Greekes call it Nomos of distributing, To because it distributesh to every man his ownedue; the power of the law is the power of God: Iustice being an attribute proper vnto God himselfe. Imperium legis imperium Dei eft; The raigne of the law, is the raigne of God.

Law in generall is thus defined by the Philosophers: Lex est vitaregula, pracipiens qua sunt sequenda, & qua fugienda; Law is the rule of life, commanding what to follow, Aa 3

CHAP.3. $ .5.

270 and what to shanne, or Lex est omnium divinarum & humanarum resum Regina: Law is the Queene or Princesse of things both humane and dinine. But this description is grounded vpon the opinion of ineuitable fate. Law is the very wifedome of Nature: the reason and understanding of the prudent: and the rule of right and wrong. For as a right line is called Index (ui & curui, the demonstrance of it selfe. and of the crooked: fo is the law, the Indge and measure of right and wrong.

Mr. Hooker calls the Law a directive rule to goodnesse of operation; and though law as touching the substance and effence, consist in vnderstanding: Consludit 14men actum voluntatis; Yet it comprehends the act of our will. The word Ius is also dinersly taken, as sometime for the matter of the law and for common right: some- 19 time for the law it selfe; as Ius Civile, or Ius gentium. Isidore distinguisheth the two generall words Iss and Fas: whereof Iss, faith he, hath reference to men. Fas to God. Fas lex divina, Ius lex humana. To goe over another mans field, is permitted, by Gods law, not by mans; and therefore in a thing out of controuersie, Vireil vsed both those words : as Fas & iura sinunt, God and men permit.

The word Iss or Right, is derived or taken from the old substantive Nowne iussum, a bidding or commandement: or perhaps from the Greeke (w)e, which is the name of Iupiter, or of the Latine genitiue case Iouis, because as the Scripture speaks, the judgement is Gods. For as it is certaine that ius-iurandum came of Ionis-iurandum, (for fo we finde it written in Nonius out of the ancient, in which sense the Scrip- 20 ture calls it iuramentum Iehoua) fo also we may say, that Ites came of Iouis, quia Iouis est: because as God is the Author, and Patterne, and Maintainer of right, so also in his Vicegerents the Magistrates, he is the pronouncer and exequutor of right. Of this Ius the iust are denominated, influs à iure, and iustitia à iusto; The right gives name to the righteous : and instice takes ber name from the inst.

The law eternall is thus defined by T HOMAS. Lex eternaest eternus divine fa- P. 29. 2011. pientia conceptuis, fecundum quod ordinatur ad gubernationem rerum ab ipfo pracognitarum : The eternall law is the eternall conceipt of Gods wifedome, as it is referred to the couernement of things foreknowne by himfelfe. Or Lex aterna ell summa atque aterna Th.q.93.art.s. ratio dinine (apientia: quaternes res omnes ad destinatos fines ita dirigit, ut illis iuxta conditionem if farum modum aliquem necessitates adjerat; It is the high and eternall reason of civing sapience : as it directeth all things in such fort to their proper ends. imposing a kinde of necessitie according to their severall natures, or conditions. Now the difference lieth in this: That as the same divine understanding directeth all to thefe to their proper ends; foit is called providence; but as it imposeth a necessitic according to the natures of all things which it directeth, so it is called a law.

Of this eternal law Cicero tooke knowledge, when in his booke of Lawes, hee wrote in this manner. Exat ratio perfects serum natura, er ad recte faciendum impellens of a delicto auocans: que non tum incipit lex effe cum foripta est: sed tum cum ortaest. Orta autem simul est cum mente dinina : quamobrem lex vera atque princeps, apta ad inbendum & ad vetandum ratio est recta summi louis; That perfect reason and nature of things incouraging or impelling to rightfull actions, and calling ws backe from enill, did not (faith he) then begin to be a law when it was written : but when it had being. Being and beginning it had together with divine understanding, and therefore a true law and a fit 20 Princeffe to command and forbid, is the right reason of the most high God. This eternall law, (if we consider it in God, or as God,) is alwaies one and the same; the nature of God being most simple: but as it is referred to divers objects, so the reason of man finds it divers and manifold. It also feemeth one law in respect of things necessarie, as the motions of the heavens; stabilitie of the earth, &c. but it appeareth otherwise to things contingent: another law to men: another to other creatures, having life, and to all those that be inanimate.

By this eternall law all things are directed, as by the counsaile and providence of God: from this law all lawes are derined, as from the rule vniuerfall; and thereto referred, as the operation of the second to the first.

30 The eternall, and the dinine Law, differ only in confideration; the eternall di- Tho, & Aug. recting more largely, aswell every creature, to their proper and naturall ends, as it doth man to his supernaturall: but the divine law to a supernaturall end only: the Naturall law is thence derined, but an effect of the eternall: as it were a streame from this fountaine.

The Law humane or temporall is also thence drawne : in that it hath the forme ofright reason: from which if it differ, it is then impositio iniqua, a wicked imposition: and only borroweth the name of a law.

To this eternall law all things are subjected, as well Angels and Men, as all other creatures, or things created; whether necessarie or contingent, naturall, or morall, 40 and humane. For the law eternall runneth through all the vniuerfall, and therefore it is the law also of things which are simple, naturall, and inanimate.

Hence it is that all things created are commanded to praise God their Creatour and Directour: as Praile him all yee his Angels: praile yee him Sunne and Moone, all Palm.148. bright Starres: heavens of heavens, for he hath established them for ever and ever. He hath made an ordinance which shall not passe: Praise yee the Lord from the earth yee Dragons and all depths: Fire, and baile, (now, and vapours, flormie winds, which exequate his Word: mountaines, and bils: fruitfull trees and all Cedars: Beafts, and all Cattell, &c. Now as the reasonable Creatures are by this eternall law bound, by the glorie and selicitie proposed vnto them (beatitude being both the attractine, and the end) so all other 50 naturall things and creatures, have in themselves, and in their owne natures, an obedience formall to it, without any proper intention, knowne cause, or end proposed. For beasts are led by sense, and naturall instinct: things without life by their created forme, or formall appetites, as that which is heavie to fall downeward:

things light to mount vpward, &c. and fire to heate what soeuer is apposed. This

kinde of working the Aristotelians ascribe to common nature : others to fate; a difference vsed in termes onely; it being no other then Gods generall prouidence: for as it is truly said of God, that he is omnia super omnia: so are all things which appeare in themselues thence derived: there-vnder subjected: thence-from by his eternall law and prouidence directed, euen from the greatest to the least of his creatures, in heaven and in earth.

The Schoolemen are very curious and ample in the confideration of these lawes: and in discourse of the profit, and of the matter, and object of the eternal law, Bur as the profit is manifest in the good of all creatures, who have thence-from, either reason, sense, vegetation, or appetition, to conduct them: so is the object and matter of the law, the whole creature. For according to Saint Avgvstine, Lex aterna est qua instum est vt omnia sint ordinatissima; The law eternall is that, whereby it is inst, that all things should be disposed in the best and goodliest order.

Lastly, it is disputed, whether the eternal law be immutable, yea or no? But the resolution is, that it changeth not; for which St. Augustine vseth a sufficient areument in his first Booke of Free-will the fixth Chapter. For the law of Moles which had a time prefixed, was eternally by God ordained to last vntill the time of the Padagogia of Gods people, or introduction to Christ should be expired; which time of expiration some thinke our Sauiour noted to be come, when on the Crosse he faid, Consummatum est. But I rather thinke these words of our Saujour to have no 20 other signification, then that now the prophecie of their giving him Vineger to drinke was fulfilled. For fo S. Iohn expounds it, when he faith v. 28. That Christ feeing all (other) things to be fulfilled, Vt consummaretur Scriptura, That the Scripture in this also might be fulfilled, said, I thir st. though I denie not, but at the same time also the date of the Law was expired, to wit, of the law ceremoniall, and of so much of the iudicial, as appertained peculiarly to the Iewes, and agreeth not with the law of the new Testament and Gospell of Christ. For the immutable law of God, though prescribing things mutable, is not therefore changed in it selfe; but the things prescribed change according to this eternall ordinance, of which the Wisedome of S A-LOMON, And being one she can doc allthings, and remaining in her selfereneweth all. 20 of the Law of Nature.

Aug.in Epift. ad Hil.89. & in E-uang, lob.tract.

F the law of Nature as it is taken in generall, I finde no definition among the Schoolemen: only as it is considered in man, it is called the impression of dinine light, and a participation of the eternal law in the rea-Conable creature. Lex naturalis est impressio diuini luminis in nobis, & parschool ticipatiolegis aterna in rationali creatura. VLPIAN defines the natu- 40

& lure.l.t.it.1 rall law to be the same which nature bath taught all living creatures; Ius naturale est quod Natura omnia animalia docuit: and he afterward addeth, Ius istud non humani generis proprium, sed omnium animalium que terra mariá, na scuntur, auium quoque commune eft; The law of nature is not proper to man alone, but the Same is common to allius e creatures, as well to birds, as to those which the Land and Sea produceth. But this definition is not generall, but of the natural law in things of life.

The law of nature in generall, I take to be that disposition, instinct, and formall qualitie, which God in his eternall providence hath given & imprinted in the nature of every creature, animate, and inanimate. And as it is divinum lumen in men, inlightning our formal reason; so is it more then sense in beasts; and more then ve- 50 getation in plants. For it is not sense alone in beasts, which teacheth them at first fight, & without experience or infiruction, to flie from the enemies of their lines: feeing that Bulls & Horses appeare vnto the sense more fearefull and terrible, then the least kinde of Dogs, and yet the Hare and Deere feedeth by the one, and flieth from the other, yea though by them neuer seene before, and that as soone as they fall from their Dammes. Neither is it sense which hath taught other Beasts to prouide for Winter, Birds to build their nests, high or low, according to the tempessuous or quiet seasons: or the Birds of Indiato make their nests on the smallest twigs which hang ouer Riuers, & not on any other part of the tree, or elsewhere: to faue their egs and yong ones from the Monkies, and other beafts, whose weight fuch a twig will not beare: and which would feare to fall into the water. The instances in this kind are exceeding many which may bee given. Neither is it out of the vegetable or growing nature of plants, that some trees, as the semale of the Palmitto, will not beare any fruit except the male grow in fight. But this they doe by that law, which the infinite and vnfearchable wisedome of God had in all eternitie prouided for them, and for every nature created. In man this law is double, corrupt, and incorrupt; corrupt, where the reason of man hath made it selfe subicet, and a Vassal to passions, and affections brutall: and incorrupt, where time and custom hath bred in men a new nature, which also, as is aforesaid, is a kind of Law. For it was not by the law of Nature incorrupt, which St. Augustine calleth the law Supra & A. ex ofreason, but by a nature blinded and corrupted, that the Germans did anciently loco ad Rom. 7. allow of theft: and that other Nations were by law constrained to become Idolaters; that by the lawes of Lycurgus it was permitted to men to vie one anothers wife, and to the woman to choose them others besides their husbands, to beget Theod. Lo. de cuthem with child: which law in those parts hath lasted long, and is not forgotten randu affett:

Grecorum.

The Seythians, and the people of both Indies, hold it lawfull to burie with them the best beloued wives: as also they have many other customes remem-bred by G. Valentia, against nature and right reason.

And I know not from what authoritie it is that these lawes some men anow to be naturall: except it be of this corrupt nature, as (among others) to pay guile with guile: to become faithlesse among the faithlesse: to prouide for our selues by another mans destruction : that injurie is not done to him that is willing : to destroy Nemo inve na-30 those whom we feare, and the like. For taking the definition of natural lawes, cither out of S. Augustine or Aquinas, (the one calling it the impression of divine light; locupletion fieri the other, the dict ate or sentence of practique reason the same can teach vs, or incline debei. vs to no other thing, then to the exercise of Justice & vprightnesse: and not to offer or performe anything toward others, faue that which we would be content should be offered or performed toward our selues. For such is the law of nature to the mind, as the eie is to the bodie; and that which according to David Aneweth vs Pfalm.4. good, that is, the observation of those things which lead vs therby to our last end; which is eternall life: though of themselves not sufficient without faith and grace.

Now, that which is truly and properly the law of Nature, where the corruption 40 is not taken for the law, is, as a foresaid, the impression of Gods dinine light in men, and a participation of the law increated and eternall. For without any law written the right reason and understanding, which God hath ginen vs, are abilities within our selves, sufficient to gine vs knowledge of the good and euill, which by our gratitude to God, and distribution of right to men, or by the contrarie, wee prepare and purchaic for our felues. For when the Gentiles (faith S.P a v 1) which have not the Rom. 2. ver. 14. Law, doe by nature those things contained in the law: they having not the law, are a law unto themselues. Now, to loue God by whom we are, and to doe the same right to all men, which we defire should be done vnto vs, is an effect of the purest reason: in whose highest Turrets, the quiet of conscience hath made her resting place, and 50 habitation. In arce altissima rationis quies habitat; Therefore, the Gentiles (faith S.PAVE) which show the effects of the law written in their hearts, have their consciences Romanutris.

for a witnesse of those effects: and the reprobate their thoughts to accuse them. And it is most true, that who soeuer is not a law vnto himselfe (while he hopeth to abuse the world by the aduantage of hypocrisic) worketh nothing else, but the betraying of his owne foule, by craftie vnrightcousnesse, purchasing eternall perdition. For it helpeth vs not to hide our corrupt hearts from the worlds eic, seeing from him, who is an infinite eie, we cannot hide them; fome Garlands wee may gather in this May-game of the world, Sed flos ille, dum loquimur, arefeit; Those · flowers wither while we discourse of their colours, or are in gathering them. That wee should therefore inhabit and dwell within our selues, and become searefull witnesses of our secretest euils, did that reverend Philosopher Pythagoras teach in this golden precept : Nil turpe committas, neque ceram alijs, neque tecum, maxime omnium verere teipfum; Commit nothing foule or dishones, faith he, neither to be knowne to others, nor to thine owne heart: but aboue all men reverence thine owne conscience. And 10 this may be a precept of nature and right reason : by which law, men, and all creatures, and bodies, are inclined to those operations, which are answerable to their owne forme; as fire to giue heate. Now, as the reasonable minde is the forme of man, so is heaptly moved to those things which his proper forme presenteth vnto him: to wit, to that which right reason offereth, and the acts of right reason are the acts of vertue: and in the breach of the rules of this reason, is man least excufable: as being a reasonable creature. For all else, both sensitiue, growing, and inanimate, obay the law which God imposed on them at their first creation.

The Earth performeth her office, according to the Law of God in nature: for it bringeth forth the bud of the hearbe which seedeth seede, &c. and the Beast, 20 which liueth thereon. He gaue a Law to the Seas, and commanded them to keepe their bounds: which they obay. He made a decree for the raine, and a way for the lightning of the thunders. He caused the Sunne to moue, and to give light, and to serue for signes and for seasons. Were these as rebellious as man, for whose sake they were created, or did they once breake the law of their natures and formes, the whole world would then perish, and all returne to the first Chaos, darkenesse,

By this naturall Law, or Law of humane reason, did Caine perceive his owne wickednesse, and offence, in the murther of Abel: for he not onely seared the displeasure of God, but the reuenge of Men: it being written in his reason, that 30 whatfoeuer he performed towards others, the same by others might bee done vnto him againe. And that this judgement of well and euill doing, was put into our natures by God, and his eternall law, before the law written: Moses in the person of God witnesseth, Gen. the fourth : If thou doe well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doe not well, sinne lyeth at thy dore.

The Schoolemen are large also in this question of the natural Law: the same being opened amply by Reinerius, Antoninus, and Valentia. But it is not my purpose

And to these appetites are referred the first indemostrable lawes of nature, for the most part. For it needs no proofe, that all creatures should desire to be, to live, and to be defended, and to line in their iffue, when they cannot in themselves. And as to write a volume of this subject. But this law which Thomas Aquinas calleth an act of reason taken properly, and not a habite, as it is an cuident naturall judgemet of practique reason: they divide into 40 indemonstrable, or needing no demonstration (as that good is to be followed, and euill eschewed) and demonstrable, which is euidently proued, out of higher and more vaiuersall propositions. Againe, as it answereth the natural appetite, prescribing things to be defired as good, or to be avoided as evill (as of the first, to defire to liue, and to satisfie hunger, &c. and of the second, to eschew paines, sorrow, and death) in this consideration they divide it, according to the divers kinds of appe-Tho.4.94.411.2. tites that are in vs. For in every man there are 3. forts of appetites, which answere the three degrees of naturall Law. The first is, to be that which we are; in which is comprehended the desire, both to liue, and to preserve our being & life, also the desire of issue, with care to provide for them; for the Father after his death lives in 50 his children; and therefore the desire of life comprehends the desire of children.

man is a being, Ens or Res: so hee doth desire good, and shunne euill. For it is common to all things, to defire things agreeable to their owne natures, which is, to desire their owne good. And so is Good defined by Aristotle, to be that which all Estical, 1. e. z. desire. Which definition Basil vponthe 44. Psalme approueth: Recte guidem Bonum definierunt, Quod omnia expetunt; Rightly haue some men defined Good, or Goodnesse. to be that which all things desire.

The second kinde of appetite is of those things which appertaine to vs. as wee have fense. Whence, by the law of Nature, wee defire the delights of euerv sense: but with fuch moderation, as may neither glut vs with fatietic, nor burt vs with excesse. For as Sense it selfe is for the preservation of life and being: so is it meete. even by the law of nature, that the fensitive appetite should not carrie vs to the destruction, either of our life or being. And although (seeing both these kinds of appetites are in beafts) we may well fay, that Nature hath given divers lawes vnto them: In which sense the Civilians define Naturallright, or Ins naturale, to bee the fame which Nature hath taught all living creatures; Yet the Schoolemen admit not, that the instincts of beasts can be properly called a Law, but onely a Im, or Right, which is the matter, & aime of every Law. For fo they distinguish it: where Vibian affirmeth, that Ius naturale is that, which Nature hath taught all living creatures. In this place (faith Valentia) lus is not to be taken for a Law, but for the 30 matter of the Law. And yet where Vipian also distinguisheth the right belonging to living creatures in generall, from the right belonging to men; calling the one tus nature, the other Tus gentium: the Divines vnderstand the law of nature more largely, that is, for all cuident dictates, precepts, or biddings of divine reason: both in bealts and men; and restraine the law of Nations to a kinde of humane right.

The third appetite is of those things which appertaine properly to man, as he is a liuing creature reasonable: as well with relation to God, and to our Neighbour, as for our selues: and the lawes of this appetite are the Commandements

Now although there are many other branches and divisions of this law of na-20 ture answering the division of matter, which it prescribeth, and as manifold, as the morall actions are which it commandeth or forbiddeth: yet is the law of nature but one law, according to Aquinas; first, because it hath one fountaine or roote in the naturall or motive facultic, which is but one, firring vp to good, and declining the contrarie: fecondly, because all is contained in that generall naturall precept, That good is to be followed, and ill avoided: and thirdly, because all the parts are reduced to one and the fame last end.

That this law of nature bindeth all creatures, it is manifest: and chiefly man; because he is indued with reason; in whom as reason groweth, so this band of observing the law of nature increaseth, Postquam ratio ad perfectum venit, tune fit Basil. 40 quod (criptum est, Adueniente mandato, peccatum reuixit; When reason grew to perfection, then it came to passe, which was written by S. PAVL, When the Commandement came, sinne revived. Neither is it a small warrant for this law of nature, when those which breake the same, are said by S. P A V L, To be delivered over into a reprobate sense (or Rom.1.28: minde) to doe those things which are not convenient : and againe, that their consciences Rom.2.15. beare witnesse, and their thoughts accuse them. For, though this law of nature firetch not to every particular : as to command fasting and the like : yet, it commandeth in generall all good, and what soeuer is agreeable to right reason. And therefore, faid D A M A S C E N E; homines facti sunt mali, declinando in id quod contra naturam est; Men (faith he) are made enill, by declining unto that which is contrarie to nature: and La Fidenico. 50 S.Avgvstine, Omnevitium natura nocet, ac per hoc contra naturam est; Euery vice 6.30. doth wrong to nature, and is therefore contrarie unto it.

Neither yet are the rules of this law of nature so fireight, but that they suffer exceptions in some particulars. For whereas by this law all men are borne Lords of the earth, yet it well alloweth inequalitie of portions, according to vnequal merit:

by taking from the euill, and giving to the good: and by permitting and comman. ding that all men shall enjoy the fruits of their labours to themselves: according to the rules of justice and equitie.

And though the law of nature command, that all things beereffored which are left in truft, vet in some causes this her law she suffereth to be broken: as to denie a mad man his weapons, and the like, which he left in keeping while hee was fober. But the vniuerfall principles can no more be changed, than the decrees of Godare alterable: who according to St.P AVL, abideth faithfull, and cannot denie himself

Of the written Law of God.

Fter the eternall, and naturall, the law Positive or imposed is the next in order, which law, being nothing but an addition, or rather explica-tion of the former, hath two kinds: Diuine, and Humane. Againe, the divine positive law is double; the old and new: The old was giuen vnto Moles in Mount Sinai or Horeb, at fuch time as the world had flood 2512. whole yeeres: and in the 67.day of this yeere when as Ascatades or Ascades governed the Assyrians, Marathus the Sycionians, Triopus the Argines, Ce- 20 crops Attica, and Acherres Agypt: to wit, after the promise to A raham 430. yeeres. And this, it feemes, was the first written law which the world received. For the very word Nomos, fignifying a law, was not then, nor long after invented by the Gracians: no not in Homers time: who lived after the fall of Troy 80. yeeres at leaft: and Troy it felle was cast downe 235. yeeres, after Moses led Ifrael out of Egypt. This law, it pleased God to ingrave in stone, that it might remaine a lasting booke of his exprest will in the Church; and that the Priests and people might have, whereof to meditate, till the comming of Christ: and that so these children of Ifrael, though bred among an Idolatrous people in £gypt, might be without excuse : the flight defences of ignorance being taken from them.

The reason knowne to vs why this law was not written before, is, that when the people were few, and their lives long, the Elders of families might easily without any written law inftruct their owne children: and yet as they increased, so doubtlesse they had, besides the law of Nature, many precepts from God, before the law written. But now at length, for a fmuch as the law of nature did not define all kinds of good, and cuil; nor condemne euery sinne in particular: nor sufficiently terrifie the consciences of offenders: nor so expound divine worship, as for those after-ages was required, who gaue enery day leffe authoritie than other to the naturall law; In these respects it was necessarie, that the law should be written, and fet before the eies of all men: which before, they might, but would not reade, in 40 their owne consciences. The Schoolemen, and the Fathers before them, inlarge the causes and necessitie, why the law was written, whereof these are the chiefest.

The first, for restraining of sinne, directly grounded upon this place of DAVID, The law of the Lard is undefiled, converting foules: The testimonies of the Lord are faithfull giving wisedome to children. For the humane law, faith St. Augustine, meeteth not with all offences, either by way of prohibition or punishment; feeing thereby it might take away something seeming necessarie, and hinder common profit: but the divine law written, forbiddeth euery euill, and therefore by David it is called undefiled.

Secondly, it serueth for the direction of our minds. For the lawes of men can 50 onely take knowledge of outward actions, but not of internall motions, or of our disposition and wil: and yet it is required, that we be no lesse cleane in the one, than in the other. And therefore were the words converting our soules, added by David: wherein are all our outward acts first generated, according to the Cabalists. Actiones

Снар.4. $.8. hominum nulla essent, nisi prius in mente dicerentur; The actions of men (lay they) would be none at all, were they not first conceived in the minde.

Thirdly, it leadeth vs to the knowledge of truth, which by reason of diversitie of opinion, and difference of peculiar lawes among fundrie Nations, we cannot bee affured of; but the law of God bindeth all men, and is without errour; and therefore also said DAVID, That the testimonie of the law of God is faithfull : giving wisedome ta children.

Of the unwritten law of God, ginen to the Patriarks by Tradition.

Ow, that in all this long tract of time, betweene the creation and the written law, the world and people of God were left altogether to the law of reason and nature, it doth not appeare. For the Patriarks of the first age received many precepts from God himselfe, and whatsoever was first imposed by Adam, the same was observed by Seth, who instructed Enos: from whom it descended to Nouh, Sem, Abraham, Isac, Iacob, 10/eph, and Moles. Yea many particular Commandements afterward written, were forno merly imposed and delivered over by Tradition, which kinde of teaching the lewes afterward called Cabala, or Receptio: precepts received from the mouth of their Priests and Elders: to which the Jewes after the law written; added the interpretation of fecret mysteries, reserved in the bosomes of their Priests, and value full to be vittered to the people. But the true Cabala was not to be concealed from any; as being indeede the divine law revealed to the Patriarks, and from them delivered to the pofleritie, when as yet it was vnwritten. The Commandements which God gaue vnto Adam in the beginning, were, that he should impose names to all beasts, according to their natures; to whose perfection of understanding they were sufficiently knowne. For finding the reason of his owne name Adam of Adamah, Earth, or 20 red clay, hee gane other names fignificant, not only to beafts, but to his Children and Nephewes, which afterward his iffues imitated; as the name of Seth fignifieth, as some take it, one that was laid for the ground or foundation of the Church, or rather, one given in recompence for Abel that was flaine; and Enosh fignifieth reading is cum manor milerable, &c. Further, God commanded Adam to till the ground, and terra: but God to line by the labour thereof: God also gaue him the choise of all fruits, but the for- did not destroy bidden, and in Adam also was marriage first instituted: all men thence-after being why may nor commanded to cohabite with their Wines, rather than with their Father and this preposition Mother.

That murther and crueltie was also forbidden, both before the law written, and force, which is sobefore the floud it selfe, it is manifest. God himselfe making it appeare, that it was hathaccording one of the greatest causes of the destruction of mankinde by the general floud. For 4.1. Item. 44.4. God said vnto No A, An end of all flesh is come before mee: for the earth is filled with and Deut. 34.1. crueltie through them: and behold, I will destroy them * from the earth. That offence ing these words therefore, for which all perished, could not be vnknowne to all that perished. Gods are but a repemercie and inflice interpoling betweene the vntaught, and reuenge. This com-tition of that mandement God repeated to Noz, after the waters were dried up from the earth. which is faide, Whoso sheddeth mans bloud, by man shall his bloud be shed: for in the Image of God hath he minem de super-

Also the law of honouring and reuerencing our parents, was observed among the ofaithful, and the contrary punished by the fathers curse: as, Cursed be Canaan, a seruant Gen. 9 25. of (cruants shall be be unto his brethren. Againe, we finde that the unnatural sinne of the Sodomites was punished in the highest degree; as with fire from Heaven. The sinne of Adulteric and Rauishment, was before the law no lesse detested than the rest, as appeareth by that reuenge, taken for Dina's forcing: and by the Gen. 34.25.

iudgement which Iuda gaueagainst Tamar, That she should be burnt: and by the repentance of Pharaoh and Abimelech, against whom this sentence was pronounced. Thou art but dead, because of the Woman which thou hast taken : for she is a mans Wife: To these we may adde the ordinance of Sacrifice, of distinction of cleane and vncleane beafts; of Circumcisson, of the Brother to raise vp seed to his brother that left a Widow childleffe, and divers other constitutions, partly Morall, and partly Ceremoniall, which being deliuered before the written law, were after by it confirmed. So that this Divine Law imposed, of which the Law of Moses containeth that which is called The old Testament, may be said, not only to have been written in the hearts of men, before it was ingrauen in stone, but also in substance to haue beene 10 giuen in precept to the Patriarks. For as S. Paul witnesseth of himselfe, I knew not sinne, but by the Law: so ever the Law naturally preceded, and went before offences, though written after offences committed.

It is true, that all the creatures of God were directed by some kind of vnwritten law; the Angels intuitiuely; Men by Reason; Beafts by sense and instinct, without discourse; plants by their vegetative powers; and things inanimate by their necesfary motions, without sense or preception.

ð. IX.

Of the Morall, Indiciall, and Ceremonial Law, with a note prefixed, How the Scripture (peaketh not alway in one sense, when it nameth the Law of MOSES.

Rem. 3. v. 19.

Ow as the word ( Law) in generall, as is afore said, hath divers significations, and is taken for all doctrine which doth prescribe and reftraine: so this Law, called the Law of Moses in particular, is taken by S. Paul diversly; as sometime for all the old Testament, as, Now week know what seener the Law saith, it faith to them which are under the Law.

When it is opposed, or differenced from the Prophets and Pfalmes, it is there ta- 30 ken for the fine Bookes of Moles. For so Saint Luke hath diffinguished them; as, All must be fulfilled which are written of mee in the Law, in the Prophets, and in the

When it is opposed to the Gospell, then it is taken for the Law Morall, Ceremoniall, and Iudiciall; as, Therefore we conclude, that a man is tustified by faith without the workes of the Law.

When it is opposed to Grace, it signifieth the declaration of Gods wrath, and our guilt of condemnation; or the extremity of the law, and summum iss: as, For yeare not under the Law, but under grace.

Rom.6.4.

When it is opposed to the Truth, namely, where the Ceremonies or signes are 40 taken for the things fignified; as the Sacrifice for Christ, and the like: then it fignificth but shadowes and figures; as, The Law was given by Moses, but grace and truth cameby I ESVS CHRIST.

Lastly, when it is opposed to the time of Christs comming, it signifieth the whole policie of the lewes Common-weale; as, Before faith came, weewere kept under the Law, &c. or the Law of the order and institution of the Aaronicall Priesthood; as, Allthe Prophets and the Law, or the Priests, prophecied unto IOHN. And if the Priesthood bee changed, the Law also, to wit, of the Priesthood, must needes bee

Heb.7.12. & 10.I.

> The word (Law) is sometime also taken by the Figure Metonymia, for Interest, 50 Authority, and Empire, or for constraining force; as, The Law of the Spirit of life, the law or the force of sinne and death, the enforcements of concupiscence, &c.

Rom.7.23.

But the Written Law of Moses, or the Law of the Old Testament, of which we now speake, is thus defined. The Law is a doctrine, which was first put into the mindes of men by God, and afterwards written by Mojes, or by him repeated. commanding Holinesseand Instice, promising eternall life conditionally, that is, to the observers of the law, and threatning death to those which breake the law in the least. For according to Saint lames, Whosoener shall keepe the whole, and faileth in lames 2, 10; one point, is guilty of all. The definition vied by the Schoolemen, in which both the Old and New law are comprehended, is thus given. Lex divina eft divinam decretum, hominibus prascribens modum necessarium ot apte peruentre posint ad supernaturalem beatitudinem, que est vitimus humana vita finis; The divine law (lay they) is the decree of God prescribing unto men a necessary meane, where by they may aptly attaine su-

10 pernaturall beatitude, which is the last end of mans life.

The law of Moses hath three parts: Morall, Ceremoniall, and Iudiciall. The Morall part commandeth this or that good to be done, and this or that cuill to be auoided, in particular; as also it declareth, for whose sake it is to be done; as Doe this, for I am the Lord, whereas the law of nature commands it but in generall. Againe, the Morall law entreateth of vertue and goodnesse; The Ceremonial of divine feruice, and of holines; (for external worthip, and the order of hallowing our felues vnto God is called Ceremony) and the Indiciall teacheth the particular gouernment, fit for the Common-wealth of the Iewes, and prescribeth orders for iustice and equity. And therefore was it faid of Saint Paul, The commandement is iuft, bo- Romania. 20 ly and good: inst, or instice being referred to the Indiciall: holy, or holinesse to the Ceremoniall; good, or honest to the Morall. The Indiciall part is touching the gopernment of the commonwealth of the lewer, in which many things must needs be proper to that estate, as such as were instituted either in respect of place or persons.

The Ceremoniall is divided into foure parts, according to the foure kindes of things of which it speaketh, to wit, Sacrifice, Holy things, Sacraments, and Obferuances. To Sacrifices belong beafts, and the fruits of the earth; to Holy things the Tabernacle, Temple, Veffels, Altars, and the like; to Sacraments, Circumcilion, the Passeouer, & such like. For the Observances, they consisted either in prohibition of certaine meats, as not to cate the bloud and fat of beafts: or in some other 20 outward things, as in wallings, purifyings, anointings, and attire, as not to weare mixt garments of Linnen and Woollen ; as also it prohibiteth other vnnatural and unproper commixtions, as Thou shalt not yoke together in a plough an Oxe and an Asse, or cast mingled seed in one field. It also exhorteth naturall compassion, and forbiddeth cruelty euen to bealts, birds, and plants, whereby the creatures of God might be destroyed without any profit to man. For so some referre these precepts, Thou shalt not kill the bird sitting on her nest; nor beate downe the first buddes of the tree nor muzzell the labouring Oxe, and the like, to the Ceremoniall Law.

Neither is there any of these three parts of the Law of Moses, but it hath as vet in some respects, the same power which it had before the comming of Christ. For 40 the Morall liueth still, and is not abrogated or taken away: sauing in the ability of iustifying or condemning; for therein are wee commanded to loue and worshp God : and to vie charitie one towards another : which for ever shall be required at our hands. Therein also are we in particular directed, how this ought to be done: which power of directing by speciall rules and precepts of life, it retaineth still. For these things also are commanded in both Testaments to be observed; though principally for the feare of God in the one, and for the love of God in the other.

The Ceremoniall also liueth in the things which it fore-fignified. For the shadow is not destroyed, but perfected, when the body it selfe is represented to vs. Besides, it still liueth, in that it giueth both instruction and testimony of Christ, and in so that it gineth direction to the Church, for some Ceremonies and Types of holy fignification, which are ftill expedient; though in a farre fewer number than before Christs comming and in a farre lesse degree of necessity.

Lastly, the Indiciall lineth in substance, and concerning the end, and the naturall and vniuerfall equity thereof.

But

Gal. 3.23. Luc. 16.6.

Rom.8.2.

But the Morall faileth in the point of instification, the Ceremoniall as touching the vic and external obscruation (because Christ himselfe is come, of whom the ceremonies were lignes and shadowes) and the Judiciall is taken away, as farre forth as it was peculiar to the lewes Common-weale, and policic.

A proposall of nine other points to be considered, with a touch of the fine sirst.

The sense and understanding of the Law.

The durance and continuance thereof.

1. The dignitie of the Law is sufficiently prooued by S. Paul, in these wordes: Wherefore the Lawe is holy, and the Commandement is holy, and iust, and good: which three attributes are referred, as aforesaid, to the Morall, Ceremoniall, and Iudi-

The Maiestie of the Law-giver is approved in all his creatures: who as he hath given all things their lives, and beings, so he onely gave the law, who could 30 onely give the end and reward promised, to wit, the saluation of mankinde : but he gaue it not to Moles immediatly, but by the ministery of Angels : as it is faid. And the Law was ordained by Angels, in the hand of a Mediatour : and in the Acts, Hee gave the Law by the ordinance of Angels.

The proprietie and peculiarity of the people, receiving this Law, is in three respects. First, in that they were prepared : Secondly, in that they were a Nation apart and diffeuered: Thirdly, in that they were the children of the promise made to Abraham. Prepared they were, because they had the knowledge of one God, when all other Nations were Idolaters. A Nation apart and severed they were, because of Gods choice and election. Children of the promise they were, for the pro-40 mise was made by Godvnto Abraham, and his seed: not vnto his seedes, as to Esan and Iacob, but to his feede, as to Iacob, or Ifrael fingularly, of whom Christ. Nowto ABRAHAM and his feede were the promises made: he faith not to the feeds, as speaking of many, but to thy feede, as of one, which is Christ.

4. The conveniencie of the time, in which it was given, is noted by S. Augufine: that it was about the middle time, betweene the Law of Nature, and Grace: the law of Nature continued from Adam to Moses: the law written in the Commandements received by Moses in the worlds yeere 2 514. continued to the Baptisme of John: from which time begun the Law of Grace, which shall continue to the worlds end. Other reasons for the conveniencie are formerly given.

The fifth confideration is of the efficacie of this law, the same being a disposition to, or signe of our iustification: but not by it selfe sufficient, but as a figure of Christ in ceremonies, and a preparation to righteousnesse in morall precepts. For through the passion of Christ were sinnes forgiven, who taketh away the sinnes of

CHAP.4. S.II. of the Historie of the World. the world : and therefore S. Paul calleth the rudiments of the law beggerly and weake, Gal. 4. beggerly as containing no grace, weake as not able to forgiue and infine. The bloud of Goates and Bulles, and the afnes of an Heifer could only cleanse the body: but they were figures of christs bloud, which doth cleanse the inward soule. For if the Gal. 20 law could instific then Christ died in vaine.

Of the fixth poynt, to wit, of the difference and agreement of the Old and New Tellament.

He Old and New Testament differ in name, and in the meane and way proposed for attaining to saluation; as the Old by workes, the New by grace: but in the thing it selfe, or object and remote end, they agree: which is mans happinesse and saluation.
The Old Testament or Law or Law

The Old Testament, or Law, or Letter, or the Witnesse of Gods will, was called the Old, because it preceded the New Testament; which is an explication of the Old: from which the New taketh witnesse. Yet the new of more excellencie, in that it doth more liuely expresse, and openly and directly delineate the 20 waves of our redemption. It is also called the Old, to shew that in part it was to bee abrogated: In that be (ayth the New Testament, he hath abrogated the Old. For the old Heb. 68, 11.12 law, though greatly extolled by the Prophets, and delinered with wonderfull miracles, yet was it constituted in a policie perishable: but the New was given in a promise of an euerlasting Kingdome, and therefore called in the Apocalyps, a Testament and Gospel for euer during.

The Old Testament is called the Law, because the first and chiefe part is the Law of Moles, of which the Prophets and Psalmes are Commentaries, explicating that

The New Testament is called the Gospel, because the first and chiefe part there-30 of is the glad tidings of our Redemption: the other Bookes, as the Epistles, or Letters of the Apostles, and the Acts or Story of the Apostles, are plentifull interpreters thereof: The word Euangelian fignifying a joyfull, happie and prosperous message, or (as Homer vsed it) the reward given to the Messenger, bringing joyfull newes. It is also sometime taken for a facrifice, offered after victory, or other pleasing successe, as by xenophon. In the Scriptures it hath three significations; First, for glad tidings in generall, as in E/ay the 52.v.7. concerning peace: Secondly, by an excellencie it is restrained, to signifie that most joyfull message of saluation, as in Luc. 2.10. whence also by figure it is taken for the History of Christ: and so wee understand the foure Ad.x. Gospels.

Lastly, for the preaching and disulging the doctrine of Christ, as Cor. 1.9.v.14. and

The agreement of both Testaments (taken, I thinke, as they are divided in volumes) is by Daneus comprised in these foure.

In their Author.

In the substance of the Couenant, or things promised.

In the foundation, to wit, Christ.

In the effects, that is, in righteousnesse and instification.

In the Author they agree, because both are of God, and therefore both one Testament and will of God in substance of doctrine. For as there was ever one Church, 50 so was there one Couenant, one Adoption, and one Dostrine. As the old Law doth point at Christ, so doth the new Law teach Christ: the old proposing him as to come, the new as already come; one and the same thing being promised in both; both tending to one, and the same end: even the saluation of our soules: which according to S. Peter is the end of our faith. For although it bee faid, that Moses did promise by observing the law an earthly Kingdome, a land flowing with milke and honie, the propagation of children, and other worldly bleffings: yet all these were but figures to teach, and pledges to assure the Fathers of those spiritual bleffings by Christ, for by the earthly hee raised their mindes to the hope of heavenly. And the Fathers notwithstanding these worldly goods, did yet acknowledge themselues strangers, and pilgrims, expecting the heavenly Hierusalem: according to this place of the Hebrewes: All these died in faith, and received not the promises, but saw them a farre off, and beleeved them: confessing that they were strangers and pilgrimes on the earth. To which purposcalso Saint Av GVSTINE: Omnine panci veterem legem intelligunt, non attendentes per promissa terrena aterna promitti: Few (faith hec) doe understand the olde 10 law: not attending that by things earthly eternall are promifed. And S. HIEROME: Noluit Deus palcere Iudeos more pecorum corporalibus donis opibusque, vt Iudei somniant: God would not feede the lewes as beafts with corporall gifts and riches, as themselves dreame. And this may be gathered out of Gods owne words, Ego fum Deus tuus, & ero vobis in Deum ; I am thy God, and I will be your God. For the words , I will be your God, proone that it was not for the present, or for perishable things, that God gaue them this promise; but in respect of the suture: to wit, the safetic of their soules. For as God created both body and foule, so hath he of his goodnesse, not left the better part vncared for, which lineth euer.

The agreement betweenethe Old and New Testament in substance, inferresal-20 fo the agreement infoundation. For Christ is called the foundation of the law, laid both by the Apostles and Prophets: in whom all the promifes of God in the Old and New, are affured: the fathers having eaten the same spiritual foode, which wee eate in our Sacraments. The agreement in effects is, in that the knowledge of our finne and miserie, which is taught vs by the law, maketh way, and as it were, serueth in subordination to the Gospel, the proper effects whereof are mercie and saluation: to which the Law seruing as an introduction ( for to those which acknowledge their sinne and miserie, God sheweth his mercic and saluation) may be said to agree with the Gospel in the effect. For other wise if we seuer the law from subordination to the Gospel, the ef-20 fects are very different: the one sheweth the way of righteousnesse by workes, the other by faith; the Law woundeth, the Gospel healeth : the Law terrisieth, the Gospel allureth; Moses accuseth, Christ defendeth: Moses condemneth, Christ pardoneth. The Oldrestraineththe hand, the New the minde. Data est lex que non (anaret (faith S.Avgvstine) sed qua agrotantes probaret; The Law was given, notto helpe but to discouer sicknesse: and S. CHRY SOSTOME, Data est lex, vt se homo inueniret, non vt moribus (anaretur, fed vt medicus quareretur; The law was giuen that man might finde and know his owne imperfection: not that his difease was thereby holpen: but that he might then feeke out the Phisician. For Christ came to fauethe world, which the law had condemned. And as Mofes was but a feruant, and Christ a Sonne, so the 40 greatest benefit was reserved to bee brought, as by the worthiest person, sayth Cyril: for this law made nothing perfect, but was an introduction of a better hope.

. XII.

Of the rest of the points proposed.

He seuenth consideration is of the end, and vse of the law: which is to bring vs to Christ: for finding no righteous field on rowne workes, we must seeke it in some other. But this is the last, and remote, and vtmost 50 and the next and proper and of the last, is to professional of the last. end: the next and proper end of the law, is to prescribe righteousnesse, and to exact absolute and perfect obedience to God. Cursed is he which continueth not in all the things of this law.

The second end of the law, isto render vs inexcusable before God: who knowing so perfect a law, doe not keepe it: the law requiring a perfect and intire, not a broken or halfe obedience: but both inward and outward righteouincife, and performance of dutie to God and Men.

The third and chiefe end of the law is as bath beene faid, to fend vs to Christ, and his grace, being in our felues condemned and loft. For the law was delivered with thunder, and with a most violent and fearefull tempost, threatning eternall death.

The fourth end of the law was to defigne, and preserue, the place of the Church and true people of God; and to hold them in one Discipline, and awe, till the comming of Christ: after whom the Church was to be dispersed ouer the whole world.

These be the ends of the Morall law. The end and vie of the Ceremonial law is to confirme the truth of Christ, and the new Testament. The vse of the Iudiciall, to teach vs naturall equitie, and right, whereto we must conforme our selues.

The fense and understanding of the law is double, literall and spirituall: by the literall we are taught the worship and service of God: by the spirituall, the sigures

CHAP.4. S.12.

Laftly, for the durance or continuance of the law, the same had being vntill the pallion of Christ: before which time, and while Christ taught in the world, both the The Scepter old and the new were in force. But after that the true facrifice was offered vpon the finall not de-Altar of the Croffe, then the Lewish facrifices and ceremonies, which were Troes and Part from Iufigures of Christ (Christ being the body of those shaddowes) ccased to binde the con-20 sciences any longer: the mysteric of our redemption being now by Christ and in him tweenhis feet, finished. In token whereof the vaile of the Templerent as under; noting that the come. ceremoniall vailes and shaddowes were now to be removed, not that the moralllaw of the Commandements was hereby abolished, or weakened at all: otherwise then that it had not power to condemne according to the Iewish doctrine, as aforesaid. For the observing of the law was by christ himselfe severely commanded : our love towards God being thereby to be witnessed. And herein David so much rejoyced, as he preferred the observation of the law, before all that the world could yeeld. In via testimoniorum tuorum delectatus sum, sicut in omnibus dinitijs 3 I hane beene delighted in thy law as in all manner of riches: And againe. The law of thy mouth is good for me aboue 20 thousands of gold and silver. This is the love of God (laith S. IOHN) that wee keepe his John 1.5. Commandement. And that there is no excuse for the neglect of the things commanded in the law, God himselse in Deuteronomie witnesseth. This Commandement Deut.30.XI.12. (faith hee) which I command thee this day, is not hidde from thee, neither is it faire off. It is Rom. 610 v.6. not in heaven that thou shouldest (ay, Who shall goe up for us to heaven, and bring it us, and 7.8. saufe vs to heare it that we may doe it? neither is it beyond the Sea, that thou shouldest fay, Who shall goe ouer the Sea for vs, and bring it vs? &c. but the word is very necre unto thee, even in thy mouth and in thy heart for to doe it. Behold (faith Moses) I have let before thee this day, life and death, good and eaill, in that I command thee this day to love the Lord thy God, to walke in his waies, and to keepe his Commandements, and his Ordinances, and his Lawes, that thou maiest line, &c. Neither is it said invaine in S. MATTHEVV. St CAP, 9. 17. vis ad vitam incredi, (erua mandata; If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the Commandements: and in S. IO HN: Scio quia mandatum cius vita aterna est: I know that his Commande- c.12, v.50. ment is life enerlasting. And if this be the charitie of God, or of Men towards God, as S. Iohn hath taught, to wit, that we keepe his Commandements: certainely he is but alvar, that professeth to love God, and neglecteth to observe the word of his will, with all his power. And though I confesse it is not in mans abilitie, without the speciall grace of God, to fulfill the law (Christ onely as man excepted) yet if wee rightly consider the mercifull care which God had of his people in those his Com-50 mandements, we shall finde in our selues, how we borrow libertie, and rather let hip our affections, and voluntarily loosen them from the chaines of obedience, to which the word of God and dinine reason hath fastened them, than that we are excusable by those difficulties and impossibilities, which our minde (greedie of libertie) proposeth to it selfe. For this is the lone of God, that wee keepe his Commande-

ments, and his Commandements are not grieuous, 1. IOHN 3. verse 12. and if wee examine cuery precept apart, and then weigh them each after other, in the ballance of our consciences; it is not hard for any man to judge, by what easie perswafions, wee steale away from our owne power, as vnwilling to vse it against our pleafing defires.

d. XIII.

Of the seuerall Commandements of the Decalogue: and that the difficultie is not in respect of the Commandements, but by our default.

Or by the first wee are commanded to acknowledge, serue, and loue one God. Now, whereby are we inticed to the breach of this precept? fecing enery reasonable man may conceine and know, that infinite power cannot be divided into many infinites: and that it is of necessitie, that by this almightic Vnitie, all things have beene caused, and are

continued. And if brute beafts had this knowledge of their Creatour, and how in his providence he hath also provided for every of them, which giveth to beasts their foode, &c. there is no doubt but that they would also serve and love him only.

The second precept is the forbidding of Idolatrie, and worship of Images: the making whereof, out of doubt, was not the invention of an ill intent in the beginning, seeing this is generally true. Omnia mala exempla bonis initijs orta sunt; All ill examples did spring and arise from good beginnings. For their first erection was to keepe the memorie of men famous for their vertue: vntill (faith Lactantius) the Deuill crept into them, and (having blotted out the first intent) working in weake and ignorant foules, changed the nature of the one, and the reason of the other, to serue himselfe thereby. For what reasonable man, if he be not forsaken of God, will call on those blinde, deafe, dumbe, and dead stocks, more worthlesse then the most worthlesse of those, that having life and reason, implore their helpe, which have 30 neither: yea, of more vilde prize and baser, then the basest of beasts, who have sense and estimation? for what doe wee thereby (saith the Wisedome of SALOMON) but call to the weake for helpe, pray to the dead for life, require aide of him that hath no experience, asistance in our iournies of him that cannot goe, and successe in our affaires of him that hath no power? And whether the Idolater, or the blocke, to which hee prayeth, be more senselesse: Danid maketh a doubt. For (faith he) they that make them are like unto them, and so are all the rest that trust in them.

The breach of the third Commandement is neither perswaded by worldly pleafure, nor worldly profit: the two greatest inchanters of mortall men. No, wee are no way allured to this horrible disdaine of God, vnlesse the hate of good men, and 40 Gods curse, bee accounted an aduantage. For as our corruptest nature gives vs nothing towards it, so can it satisfie no one appetite, except euerlasting sorrow, and Hell dwell in our desire. And therefore this strange custome hath the Deuill brought vp among men, without all subtletie of argument, or cunning perswasion, taking thereby the greatest and most scornefull advantage over vs. For slaughter satissieth hatred, Theft giues satisfaction to neede, Adulterie to lust, Oppressionto couctousnesse: but this contemptuous offence of blasphemie, and the irreverent abuse of Gods name, as it giveth no helpe to any of our worldly affections, so the most saluage Nations of the world doe not vse it.

The fourth Commandement, to keepe the Sabbath day holy, hath neither paine, 50 burthen, nor inconvenience. For it giveth rest to the labourer, and consolation to their Masters. And that this law was imposed on man for his benefit, Moses teacheth in the reason of the law: as in Exod. 23.12. And in the seventh day thou shalt rest, that thine Oxe and thine Affermay rest, and the sonne of thy maide, and the stranger may be refreshed.

The first of the second Table to honour our Parents, with whom we are one and the same, is a gratitude which nature it selfe hath taught vs towards them, who after God gaue vs life and being have begotten vs, and borne vs, cherished vs in our weake and helpeleffe infancie, and bestowed on vs the haruest and profit of their labours and cares. Therefore, in the Temporall and Indiciall ordinances, curfing of parents, or the offering them violence, was made death.

The next is, that thou shalt not Murther, that is, thou shalt not doe the acts following the affections of hatred. For the law of God, and after it our owne lawes, and in effect the law of all Nations, have made difference between flaughter cafu-10 all, and furious. Affettio enim tua (faith BRACTON) imponit nomen operatuo: It is the affection and will that makes the worke fuch as it is. And certainely who soener cannot forbeare to commit murther, buth neither the grace of God, nor any vic of his owne will.

The third of the second Table, commands vs from adulterie. Now, if the preferuation of Virginitie haue been possible, for thousands of Men and Women, who Nuprin replens in all ages have mastered their selfly desires, and have returned chast to the grave: 144 Paradijum It cannot be accounted a burthen, to forbeare the dishonour and injurie, which we offer to others by fuch aviolation, seeing marriage is permitted by the lawes of God, and Men to all that affect it. And there is no man living whom the defire of beautie and forme hath so constrained, but he might with case forbeare the prosequuti-20 on of this ill: did not himselfe give sucke to this Infant, and nourish warmth till it grow to strong heate, heate till it turne to fire, and fire to flame. The fourth of the second Table, is, that we shall not steale. And if that kind of violent robberie had been vsed in Moses time, which many Ruffians practise nowa-daies in England, and to the dishonour of our Nation more in England, than in any Region of the world among Christians, out of doubt, he would have censured them by death, and not by restitution, though quadruple. For I speake not of the poore and milerable foules, whom hunger and extreme necessitie inforceth, but of those detefted Theeues, who to maintaine themselves Lord-like, assault, robbe, and wound the Merchant, Artificer, and Labouring man, or breake by violence into o-20 ther mens houses, and spend in Brauerie, Drunkennesse, and vpon Harlots, in one day, what other men fometime have laboured for all their lives: impoverishing whole families: and taking the bread and food from the mouthes of their children. And that this Commandement might easily be observed; it would soone appeare, if Princes would resolue, but for a few yeeres to pardon none. For it is the hope of life, and the argument of sparing the first offence, that incourageth these Hella

Common-wealth, but these men would in a short time impouerish or destroy it. The fifth Commandement of this fecond Table, is, the prohibition of false witneffe: from which if men could not forbeare, all furety of estate and life were taken away. And so much did God detest a false witnesse, and a false accuser, especially in matters criminall, that the law ordained him to fuffer the same death or punishment, which he fought by falsehood to lay on his brother.

hounds. And if every man may prefume to be pardoned once, there is no state or

The last of the ten Commandements forbiddeth vs to couet any thing, which belongeth to another man, either the bodies of their wines for concupifcence, or their goods for defire of gain. And this precept feemeth the hardest for men to obferue; so esteemed by reason of our fraile affections: and yet if wee judge hereof rightly, it may be doubted whether it extend to all our inconfiderate fancies and vaine thoughts. For although it be not easie to master all our sudden passions, yet 50 we may referaine and hinder the growing, and farther increase, if wee please to intend our strength, and seeke for grace. How the word Coucting reacheth to all those it is to be considered. For Concupiscentia, according to some, Est effranatus habendi appetitus; An unbrideled, or unrestrained appetite of having : And as touching such an appetite, we canot excuse our selues by any our natural frailty, or vnaduised error;

But, as I suppose, the word Concupiscence is more largely taken, either for a determinate and vnbridled cuill intent, or for fome vrging inclination thereunto. All the question is of the later fort: which is, Actus imperfectus, id est, non deliberatus ratione que est principium proprium actus boni aut vitiosi; Such passions, or inclinations are unperfect acts, that is, not deliberated upon by reason, which is the proper principle of a good or vitious action. And fure, it may feeme, that follong as wee relift fuch motions, they harme vs not: as they fay, Quamdiu refragamur nihil nocent: nocent autem cum eas daminari permittimus; As long as wee give no ascent onto them, it is thought by some that they hurt vs not; and that then onely they hurt, when we suffer them to be are sway. But these men, as it seemes, make nothing forbidden in this tenth precept, but what hath been to forbidden in the other: for in every Commandement, not only the outward act. but also the inward affent vnto cuill, though it breake not out into act, is forbidden: therefore, that wee may know the difference betweene this Commandement and the reft, the distinction of delires is to be held: that some are with assent, and vnbridled: others bridled, and without affent. For so even the Morall Philosopher can rell vs. that the Continent man hatheuill desires, but without assent (for they are bridled by the strength of right reason) as on the other side the Incontinent hath good defires, but restrained and suppressed by contrarie passions. The enill defires when they are accompanied with affent, are in every Commandement forbidden, together with the outward act; and therefore, if wee will have any thing proper to this 20 Commandement, we must needes say, that the evill desires of the Continent man (that is, even those which we resist and bridle) are heere forbidden. For though he that bridleth his cuill defires be much better than he that yeeldeth vnto them: yet fuch a man, euen according to the Heathen Philosopher, is not worthy the name of a vertuous man. For Ariftotle himselfe makes Continentia, not to be vertue, but only a degree vnto it: confessing, that though the Continent man do well in bridling his euill affections, yet he doth not all, seeing he ought not so much as to have them at all. Neither is it much more, that true divinitie delivereth touching this matter. For, as he faith, that in the Continent man the having of these cuill delires, though he relift them, is the cause that he cannot be called a vertuous man: so we, that the 30 having of them is a sinne. Only in this we excell him heere: that we are able out of Divinitie to give the true reason of this doctrine: which is, that every one sinneth. that doth not love God with his whole heart and affection: whence it followeth that the cuil defires of the Continent man, that is, of him which bridleth them, must needs be finne: feeing such desires, though bridled, are a-pulling away of a part of our heart and affection from God.

Seeing therefore it hath pleased God, to make vs know, that by our faithfull indeuours to keepe his commandements, we witnesse our love toward himselfe; wee may not fafely give libertie to our vanities, by casting backe upon God (who is inflice it selfe) that he hath given vs precepts altogether beyond our power, and com- 40 mandements impossible for vs to keepe. For as hee is accursed (faith St. Hierome) that anowes that the law is in all things possible to bee observed: so hee hath made this addition: Maledictus qui dicit impossibilia Deum pracepisse; Accursed is heethat faith that God hath commanded things (in themselves, and not through our fault) imposible. Now, as the places are many which command vs to keepe the law; so is our weakenesse also in the Scriptures laid before vs, and therefore it is thus safely to be vnderstood, that we should without cuasion, or without betraying of our selves, do our faithfullindeuours to obserue them: which if we doe vnfainedly, no doubt, but God will accept our desires therein. For that there is no man just, David witnesseth. Enter not into indeement with thy servant, for in thy sight no flesh that liveth shall bee 50 iustified. And in the first of Kings, There is no man that simneth not: And againe, who can (ay, I have made my heart cleane? But seeing there is no sinne grieuous without deliberation; let euery mans conscience judge him, whether he give way willingly or restraine himselse in all that he can; yea, or no? For when a King gives to his subiecta commandement vpon paine of losse of his loue, to perfome some service: if the subject neglecting the same, seeke to satisfie his Soueraigne with shifting excuses, out of doubt such a Prince will take himselfe to be derided therein. d. XIIII.

If there were not any Religion nor Judgement to come, yet the Decalogue were most necessarie to be obsersed.

Снар.4. $.14.

Nd if we consider aduisedly and soberly, of the Moralllaw, or ten Commandements, which God by the hand of Moles gaue vnto his people, it will appeare that fuch was his mercifull providence in the choile of them, as were there neither paine, nor profit adjoying to the observing, or not observing of them, were there no divine power at all, nor any Religion among men, yet if we did not for our owne fakes striue to obferue these lawes: all societie of men, and all indeuours, all happinesse and contentment in this life would bee taken away; and enery state and common-weale in the world fall to the ground and diffolue. Therefore, these lawes were not imposed as a burthen, but as a bleffing: to the end that the innocent might bee defended that 20 enery man might enjoy the fruits of his owne tranaile, that right might be done to all men from all men: that by iustice, order, and peace, wee might live the lives of reasonable men, and not of beasts; of free-men, and not of slaves; of civill men, and not of faluages. And hereof making our humane reason only Judge, Let vs see the inconveniences in this life which would follow by the breach and neglect of thefe lawes.

As first, what would the iffue be if wee acknowledged many Gods? would not a farre greater hatred, war, and bloud-fied follow, than that which the difference of ccremonie, and diversitie of interpretation, hath already brought into the world, euen among those Nations which acknowledge one God, and one Christ?

And what could it profit mankind to pray to Idols, and Images of gold, metall. dead stones, and rotten wood, whence nothing can be hoped, but the losse of time, and an impossibilitie to receive thence from either helpe or comfort?

The breach of the third Commandement bringeth there-with this disaduantage, and ill to man, that who locuer taketh the name of God in vaine, shall not at any time benefit himselfe by calling God to witnesse for him, when hee may justly víc his holy name.

The offeruing the Sabbath holy, gineth rest to men and beasts, and nature her selfe requireth intermission of labour.

If we despise our Parents, who have given vs being, we thereby teach our owne 40 children to scorne and neglect vs, when our aged yeeres require comfort and helpe

If murther were not forbidden, and severely punished, the races of mankinde would be extinguished; and whosever would take the libertie to destroy others, giueth libertie to others to destroy himselfe.

If adulteric were lawfull and permitted, no man could fay vnto himselfe, This is my sonne: there could be no inheritance proper, no honour descend to posteritie, no indevour by vertue and undertaking to raife families: murthers and poisonings betweene man and wife would be daily committed: and euery man subject to most filthic and vncleane diseases.

If stealth and violent rapine were suffered, all mankinde would shortly after perith, or liue as the faluages, by rootes and acornes. For no man laboureth but to enioy the fruits thereof. And such is the mischiefe of robberie, as where Moses for leffer crimes appointed restitution sourc-fold, policie of State and necessitie hath made it death.

Pfal.143. C.8 v.46. Pro.20.v.9.

To permit false witnesses, is to take all mens lines and estates from them by corruption: the wicked would sweare against the vertuous: the waster against the wealthie: the idle begger and loiterer, against the carefull and paineful labourer; all triall of right were taken away, and justice thereby banished out of the world.

The coucting of that which belongs to other men, bringeth no other profit than a distraction of minde, with an inward vexation: for while wee couet what appertaines to others, we neglect our owne : our appetites are therin fed with vaine and fruitlesse hopes, so long as we doe but couet; and if we docuattaine to the desire of the one, or the other, to wit, the wives or goods of our neighbours, wee can looke for no other, but that our selves shall also either by thest or by strong hand be de- to

Wherein then appeareth the burthen of Gods Commandements, if there benothing in them, but rules and directions for the generall and particular good of all liuing? Surely, for our owne good, and not in respect of himselfe, did the most mercifull and prouident God ordaine them; without the observation of which, the vertues of heavenly bodies, the fertilitie of the earth, with all the bleffings given vs in this life, would be vnto vs altogether vnprofitable, and of no vse. For we should remaine but in the state of brute beasts, if not in a farre more vnhappie condition.

Of humane Law, written and unwritten.

Vmane Law, of which now it followeth to speake, is first divided into two. viz. Written and Vnwritten. The vnwritten confifts of vlage, approved by time : which Isidore calls Mores: and he defines Moresto be Consuetudines vetustate probata, to be customes approved by antiquitie or unwritten lawes. Now custome differeth from vie as the cause from the effect: in that cuttome is by vie and continuance established into a law; but yet 30 there where the law is defective, faith Isidore.

And of cultomes there are two generall natures, containing innumerable particulars, the first are written customes, received and exercised by Nations, as the cu-Romes of Burgundie, and Normandie: the ancient generall custome of England, and the customes of Castill, and other Provinces ..

The second are these pettie customes, vsed in particular Places, Cities, Hundreds, and Mannors. The generall or Nationall customes are some written, others

The particular or pettie customes are seldome written, but witnessed by testimonie of the inhabitants. The customes of the Duchie of Cornewall comprehending 40 also the Stannerie of Deuon, as touching Tin, and Tin causes, are written in Deuon, but not in Cornewall. But how soener vse and time hath made these customes as lawes, yet ought every custome to be rationabiles, as well as prascripta. Non firmatur tractu temporis quod de iure ab initio non subsistit; That which at first was not grounded woon good right, is not made good by continuance of time. And (faith V L PIAN) quod ab initio vitio sum est, non pote strattu temporis conualescere; Course of time amends not that which was naught from the first beginning. For these two defences are necessarie in all lawes of custome; the one, that it be not repugnant to the law divine, and naturall: the other, that the cause and reason be strong, proving a right birth, and necessarie continuance: it being manifest that every custome, which is against the law, had his 50 beginning from cuill deedes, and therefore not without the former confiderations to be allowed. And it is true, that all customes of this nature were but tolerated for a time, by the law-makers, though they baue beene since continued, because posteritie is not bound to examine by what cause their Ancestors were thereto mo-

ued. For non sufficit simplex toleratio. And it is in this fort ouer-ruled in the law : Per populum consuetudo contra legem induci non potest, nisi de voluntate illius qui nouam legem, & nouam constitutionem statuere potest, qui solus princeps est; The people cannot bring a new custome against law : saue by his will, who hath power to make a new law and ordinance, which is onely the Prince.

Humane Law generally taken, to wit, humane law written, is by some defined to be the decree or doome of practique reason: by which humane actions are ruled and directed. Papinian calls the Law a common precept, the aduisement of Wifemen, and the restraint of offences committed, either willingly or ignorantly. Isidare 10 calls the Law a Constitution written, agreeing with Religion, fittest for Gouernement and common profit: And more largely, Omnesd qued ratione confilit; All that

Lastly, and more precisely it is thus defined. Humane Law is a righteous decree, Gree, de Val. ex agreeing with the Law naturall, and eternall: made by the rationall discourse of Tho. q.p. art. 3, those, that exercise publique authoritie: prescribing necessarie observances to the 4.94. art. 2. subject. That every law ought to be a righteous decree, S. Augustine teacheth, faving: Wibilex effe non videtur, qua iusta non fuerit; It seemes to be no law at all to me, which is not iust: and iust it cannot be, except it agree with the law naturall and eternall. For there is no law inft and legitimate (faith S. Jugustine) which the Lawno makers have not derived from the eternall. Wibil instum aique legitimum est, qued L. 1. delib. drb. non ab aternalege sibi homines deriuauerint.

Secondly, it ought to be constituted by discourse of reason, whereby it is distinguished from the law naturall, to wir, the naturall, indemonstrable, or needing no demonstration from whence the law humane is taken and deduced.

Thirdly, that it ought to bee made by an authorised Magistracie, it cannot bee doubted, be the Gouernment of what kinde socuer. For it falleth other wise vnder the Title of those decrees called Violentia, or inique constitutiones; Violences, or wicked constitutions.

Of humane Law there are foure properties, especially answering these foure 4. Parts: 20 conditions in the former definition. First, as it is drawne out of the law of nature: soenery particular of the humane law may be resolved into some principle or rule Tho.4.9.5.411.2. of the naturall.

Secondly, it is to be confidered as it is referred vnto, and doth respect the com-

Thirdly, it is to be made by publique authoritic.

Fourthly, concerning the matter of the law, it prescribeth, and directeth, all humane actions. And so is the Law as large and divers, as all humane actions are diuers, which may fall under it. For according to THOMAS, Alia lex IVLIA de Adulterys, alia CORNELIA de Sicarys; The law of IVLIAN against Adulterie is one, othe CORNELIAN against Ruffians, is another. Now the humanelaw, generally taken, is in respect of the first of these considerations, divided into the law of Nations, and the Civill.

The Law of Nations is taken lesse or more properly; lesse properly for every law which is not of it selfe, but from other higher principles deduced: and so it seemeth that Vlpian vnderstands it: for he defineth Ius gentium, or the law of IX ations, to be that which is onely common amongst Men, as Religion, and the worship of God: which is not in the very nature of this law of Nations: but from the principles of the Scriptures, and other divine Revelations. But the law of Nations properly taken, is that dictate, or sentence, which is drawne from a very probable, so though not from an euident principle, yet so probable, that all Nations doe affent vnto the conclusion, as that the free passage of Ambassadours be graunted betweene enemies, &c. which Nationalllaw, according to divers acceptions, and divers considerations had of the Humane law, may be sometime taken for a Species of the Naturall, sometime of the Humane.

Ins Civile, or the Civill Law, is not the same in all Common-wealths, but in diuers estates it is also diuers and peculiar, and this Law is not so immediately derived from the Law of Nature, as the Law of Nations is: For it is partly deduced out of fuch principles as all Nations doe not agree in, or easily affent vnto; because they depend on particular circumstances, which are divers, and doe not fit all estates. In Leg. 6. ta. ff. Hercof V L P I A N, Jus civile, neque in totum à naturali & gentium recedit, neque per omde tuflita Iure. nia ei feruit : itad, cum aliquid addimus vel detrahimus Iuri communi, Ius proprium, idest. Civile efficients; The Civillan (faith he) doth neither wholly differ from the law of Na. ture, and Nations, nor yet in all points obay it: therefore when wee adde ought to, or take from the Law that is common, we make a Law proper, that is, the Civill Law.

The law now commonly called the Civill Law, hadits birth in Rome; and was first written by the Decem-vire, 202. yeeres after the foundation of the Citie. It was compounded aswell out of the Athenian, and other Grecian lawes, as out of the ancient Romane customes and lawes Regall. The Regall lawes were deuised by the first Kings, and called Leges Regia, or Papyriana, because they were gathered by Papyriu. Tarquin then raigning. For though so many of the former lawes as maintained Kingly authoritic were abolished, with the name; yet those of Seruius Tullius, for Commerce and Contracts, and all that appertained to Religion, and common villic. sigon.l.t.out tie, were continued, and were a part of the lawes of the twelue Tables. To these lawes of the twelue Tables were added (as the times gaue occasion) those made by 20 the Senate, called Senatuf-consulta: those of the common people, called Plebifeita: those of the Lawyers, called responsa prudentum: and the Edicts of the Annuall Magiffrate : which Edichs being first gathered and interpreted by Iulian, and presented to Adrianthe Emperour, they were by him confirmed and made perpetuall lawes; and the Volume Riled Edictum perpetuum; as those and the like Collections of Justinian afterward were.

The difference anciently between Lawes and Edicts, which the French call Reglements, confilled in this, that lawes are the Constitutions made or confirmed by soueraigne authoritie (bee the soueraigntie in the people, in a few, or in one) and are withall generall and permanent: but an Edict (which is but Iuffum Magufratus, vn- 20 lesse by authoritie it be made a law) hath end with the Officer, who made the same, faith V ARRO. Qui plurimum Edicto tribuunt, legem annuam effe dicunt; They who ascribe the most unto an Edict, say that it is a law for one yeere: Though Isidore dothallo expresse by the word Constitutions or Edicts, those Ordinances called Ass of Prero. gatines ; as Constitutio vel Edictum est quod Rex, vel Imperator constituit, vel edicit; An Ordinance or Edict is that which a King or Emperour doth or daine or proclaime.

Lastly, the Humane law is divided into the Secular, and into the Ecclesiastical, or Canon. The Secular commanding temporall good, to wit, the peace and tranquillitie of the Common-wealth: the Ecclesiasticall the spirituall good, and right Gouernment of the Ecclesialticall Common-wealth, or Church, illud nature legem, boc dininam 40 (pettat; That respecteth the Law of Nature, this the Law of God. And somay Ius Civile be taken two waies; first, as distinguished from the law of Nations, as in the first division; Secondly, as it is the same with the Secular, and divers from the Ecclesiasticall. But this division of the Schoolemen is obscure. For although the Civil be the same with the Secular, as the Civill is a law, yet the Secular is more generall, & comprehendeth both the Civill, and all other lawes not Ecclesiasticall. For of Secular lawes, in vsc among Christian Princes, & in Christian Common-weales, there are three kinds; the Civill which hath enerywhere a voyce; and is in all Christian estates (Englandexcepted) most powerfull; the Lawes of England called Common, and the Lawesof custome or Prouinciall. In Spaine besides the Law Civil, they have the customes of 50 Castill, and other Provinces. In France besides the Civill, the customes of Burgundie, Bloys, Berri , Niuernois, and Lodunois, Ge. Tous lieux situes & asis en Lodunois , seront gouernez selon les costumes du dit pays; All places lying within the precincts of Lodunois, shall bee gouerned according to the customes of that place.

CHAP.4. S.15. of the Hiftorie of the World.

There are also in France the customes of Normandie, and these of two kindes; Generall, and Locall; and all purged and reformed by divers Acts of the three estates. The Charters of confirmation of these ancient customes, before and since their reformation have these words; Nos autem, registrum pradictum, vius laudabiles, & consuctudines antiquas, &c. Laudamus, approbamus, & authoritate Regia confirmamus: The Register aforesaid, laudable we, and ancient customes wee praise, approone, and by our Kinoly authoritie confirme. The common law of England is also compounded of the ancient customes of the same, and of certaine Maximes by those customes of the Realme approoued. Vpon which customes also are grounded those Courts of Re-10 cord, of the Chancerie, Kings Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, with other small

These ancient customes of England have been appropried by the Kings thereof. from age to age: as that custome by which no man shall be taken, imprisoned, disfeiled, nor otherwise destroyed, but he must first be put to answere by the law of the Land, was confirmed by the Statute of Magna Charta. It is by the ancient custome of England, that the eldest Sonne should inherite without partition. In Germanie, France, and elsewhere otherwise, and by partition. In Ireland it is the custome for all Lands (that have not beene refigned into the Kings hands) that the eldest of the house shall enjoy the inheritance during his owne life; and so the second and third 20 eldest (if there bee so many brothers) before the Heire in lineall descent : this is called the custome of Tanistrie. For example, if a Lord of Land have source sonnes, and the eldest of those foure haue also a sonne, the three brothers of the eldest sonne. shall after the death of their brother, enjoy their Fathers lands before the Grandchilde: the custome being grounded vpon the reason of necessitie. For the Irish in former times having alwaies lived in a subdivided Civill warre, not onely the greatest against the greatest, but every Baron and Gentleman one against another, were inforst to leave successors of age and abilitie to defend their owne Territories. Now as in Normandie, Burgundie, and other Provinces of France, there are certaine peculiar, and pettie customes, besides the great and generall custome of the Land, so are there 30 in England, and in every part thereof. But the greatest bulke of our lawes, as I take it, are the Acts of Parliament: lawes propounded and approound by the three estates of the Realme, and confirmed by the King, to the obedience of which all men are therefore bound, because they are Acts of choise, and selfe-desire. Leges nulla alia vip. ff. de Leg. saula nostenent quam quodindicio populirecepta funt; The lawes doe therefore binde the Lig. 32. subject, because they are received by the judgement of the subject. Tum demum humana le- Aug, de veraveges habent vim suam, cum sucrint non modo institute, sed etiam firmate approbatione com- lig. cap. 31. munitatis; It is then that humane lawes have their strength, when they shall not onely be de- Gratian in dec. uised, but by the opprobation of the people confirmed.

Isidore fasteneth these properties to every Christian law, that the same be honest, to that it be possible, that it bee according to Nature, and according to the custome of the Countrie; also for the time and place convenient, profitable, and manifest, and without respect of private profit, that it be written for the general good. Hee also giues foure effects of the law, which Modeflinus comprehends in two; to wir, obligation, and instigation: the former binds vs by feare, to avoide vice; the later incourageth with hope, to follow vertue. For according to CICERO; Legem oportet effe vitiorum emendatricem, commendatricemá, virtutum; It behooueth the law to be a mender of vices, and a commender of vertues. The part obligatorie or binding vs to the obsernation of things commanded or forbidden, is an effect common to all lawes; and it is two-fold, the one constraineth vs by feare of our consciences, the other by feare of externall punishment. These two effects the law performeth, by the exercise of those two powers, to wit, Coast ue, and Directine.

The second of these two effects remembred by Modestinus, is Instigation, or incouragement to vertue, as Aristotle makes it the end of the law, to make men vertuous. For lawes being such as they ought to bee, doe both by prescribing and forbidding, vrge vs to well-doing; laying before vs the good and the cuill, by the one and the other purchased. And this power affirmative, commaunding good, and power negative, forbidding euill, are those into which the law is divided, as touching the matter: and in which David comprehendeth the whole body and fubstance thereof: faying, Declina à malo, & fac bonum; Decline from euill, and doe

That onely the Prince is exempt from humane lawes, and in what fort.

Ow whether the power of the humane Law bee without exception of any person, it is doubtfully disputed among those that have written of this subject, as well Divines as Lawyers: and namely, whether Sour-raigne Princes beecompellable; yea, or no? But whereas there are two powers of the law, as aforefaid; the one Directine, the other Co-

active: to the power Directive, they ought to be subject, but not to that which conftraineth. For as touching violence or punishments, no man is bound to give a pre- 20 judiciall judgement against himselse; and it equalls have not any power over each other, much lesse haue inferiours ouer their superiours, from whom they receive their authoritie and strength.

And speaking of the supreme power of lawes, simply then is the Prince so much aboue the lawes, as the foule and body vnited, is aboue a dead and senselesse carcasse. For the King is truely called, Ius vinum & lex animata: An animate and living law. But this is true, that by giving authoritie to lawes, Princes both adde greatnesse to themselues, and conserve it; and therefore was it said of Bratton out of Ivs TINIAN: Merito debet Rex tribucre legi quod lex attribuit ei : nam lex fasit vt ipfe fit Rex; Rightfully ought the King to attribute that to the law, which the law first attributeth to the King; for 20 it is the law that doth make Kings.

But whereas Bracton ascribeth this power to the humane law, he is therein mistaken. For Kings are made by God, and lawes divine; and by humane lawes onely declared to bee Kings. As for the places remembred by the Dinines and Lawyers, which inferre a kinde of obligation of Princes, they teach no other thing therein. than the bond of conscience, and profit arising from the examples of vertuous Princes, who are to give an account of their actions to God onely.

P/al. 50. ff. de Leg.

Tibi (eli peccani, faith DAVID; Against thee onely haue I sinned: therefore, the Prince cannot be faid to be subject to the law; Princeps non subjectur legi. For seeing according to the Schoolemen, the law humane is but quoddam organum & instrumen- 40 tum potestatis gubernatiua: non videtur posse eius obligatio adeum seextendere, adquem ipfaves potestatis human enon pertinct; sed vis potestatis humane non se extendit ad gubernatorem, in quo illa residet. Ergo neg lex condita per talem potestatem obligare potest ipsum conditorem. Omnis enim potentia actiua, est principium transmutandi aliud: Secine humane law (say they) is but a kinde of organ, or instrument, of the power that gouerweth it feemes that it cannot extend it felfe to binde any one whom no humane power can controll, or lay hold of : but the Gouernour himfelfe, in whom the gouerning power doth reside, is a person that cannot by himselfe, or by his come power be contolled. And therefore the law which is made by such a power, cannot binde the law maker hemselfe : for every active abilitie is a cause or principle of alteration in another body, not in the body in which it selfe re- to fides. And feeing Princes have power to deliver others from the obligation of the law: Ergo etiam potest ipsemet Princeps sine legislator sua se voluntate pro libito ab obligatione legis liberare; Therefore also may a Prince or law-maker at his owne will and pleasure deliner himselfe from the bond of the law. Therefore in the rules of the law it is thus mon good. Now concerning the politique lawes, given by Moles to the Nation of the Ifraelites, whether they ought to be a President, from which no civil inflitutions of other people should presume to digresse, I will not presume to determine, but leaue it as a question for such men to decide, whose professions give them greater abilitie. Thus much I may be bold to affirme, that we ought not to sceme wifer than God himselfe. to who hath told vs that there are no lawes for ighteous, as those which it pleased him to give to his Elect people to be governed by. True it is, that all Nations have their fenerall qualities, wherein they differ, euen from their next borderers, no leffe than in their peculiar languages: which difagreeable conditions to governe aprly. one and the same law very hardly were able. The Roman civil lawes did indeede containe in order a great part of the then knowne world, without any notable inconvenience, after such time as once it was received and become familiar : yet was not the administration of it alike in all parts, but yeelded much vinto the naturall customes of the fundric people, which it governed. For whether it bee through a long continued perswasion; or (as Astrologers more willingly graunt) some influ-20 ence of the Heavens, or peraduenture some temper of the soile and climate, affoording matter of prouocation to vice (as plentic made the Sybarites luxurious: want and opportunitie to feale, makes the Arabians to bee Thecues) very hard it were to forbid by law an offence so common, with any people, as it wanted a name, whereby to be distinguished from just and honest. By such rigour was the Kingdome of Conso vnhappily discreed from the Christian Religion, which it willingly at the first embraced, but after with great furic rejected, because pluralitie of Wives was denyed vnto them. I know not how necessarily, but more contentiously than feafonably. In such cases, me thinks, it were not amisse to consider that the high God himselfe permitted somethings to the Israelites, rather in regard of their 20 naturall disposition (for they were hard-hearted) than because they were consonant vnto the ancient rules of the first perfection. So, where even the generall nature of man doth condemne (as many things it doth) for wicked and vniust; there may the law, given by Moses, worthily bee deemed the most exact reformer of the cuill, which forceth man, as necre as may by, to the will and pleasure of his Maker. But where nature or custome hath entertained a vicious, yet not intolerable habite, with folong and fo publique approbation, that the vertue opposing it would seeme as vncoutin, as it were to walke naked in England, or to weare the English fashion of appa-

To this effect it is well observed by Master Doctor willet, that the morall Iudicialls of Moles doe partly binde, and partly are let free. They doe not hold affirmatinely that we are tyed to the same scueritic of punishment now, which was inflicted then; but negatively they doe hold, that now the punishment of death should not be adjudged, where sentence of death is not given by Moses: Christian

But I will not wander in this copious argument, which hath beene the subject of many learned discourses, neither will I take vpon mee, to speake any thing definitiuely in a case which dependeth still in some controversie among worthie Diuines. Thus much (as in honour of the Iudiciall Law, or rather of him that gaue it) I may well and truely fay, that the defence of it hath alwaies beene very plaufible. And furely howfocuer they bee not accepted (neither were it expedient) as a generall and onely law; yet shall wee hardly finde any other ground, whereon the conscience of a Judge may rest, with equal satisfaction, in making interpretation, or giving sentence vpon doubts, arising out of any Law besides it. Hereof, perhaps, that ludge could have beene witnesse, of whom Fortescue that notable Bulwarke of our lawes doth speake, complaining of a judgement giuen againsta 10 Gentle-woman at Salisburie, who being accused by her owne Man, without any other proofe, for murdering her Husband, was thereupon condemned, and burnt to alhes: the man who accused her, within a yeere after being Conuict for the same offence, confest that his Mistris was altogether innocent of that cruell fact, whose terrible death hee then (though ouer-late) gricuously lamented: but this ludge, faith the same Authour, Sapius ipse mihi fassus est, quod nunquam in vita sua animum eiu de boc factaipse purgaret; Hee himselfe often confessed unto mee, that bee should neuer during his life, be able to cleare his conscience of that fact. Wherefore that acknowledgement which other Sciences yeeld vnto the Metaphysiques, that from thence are drawne propositions, able to produe the principles of sciences, which out of the sciences themselues cannot be proued, may justly be granted by all other politique inflitutions, to that of Moses; and so much the more justly, by how much the subject of the Metaphyliques, which is, Ens quatenus Ens; Being as it is being, is infinitely inferiour to the Ens Entium; The being of beings, the only good, the fountaine of truth, whose feare is the beginning of wisedome. To which purpose well saith Saint AVGVSTINE, Conditor legum temporalium si vir bonus est & Sapiens, illam ipsam consulit aternam, de qua nulli anima iudicare datum est; The Author of temparall lames if he bee good and wife, doth therein consult the law eternall, to determine of which there

è. I.

Of the numbring and disposing of the Host of I frael, for their marches through the Wildernesse; with a note of the reverence given to the worship of God. in this ordering of their troupes.

HEN Moses had received the Law from God, and published it among the people, and finished the tabernacle of the Arke and Sanctuarie: bee mustred all the Tribes and Families of Ifrael: and having scene what numbers of men fit to beare armes, were found in every Tribe, from 20. yeeres of age vpwards; hee appointed vnto them, by direction from the Lord, fuch Princes and Leaders, as in worth and reputation were in enery Tribe most eminent. The number of the whole Armie was 6025 50. able men for the warres, besides women and children; also, besides the strangers which followed them out of Agypt. This great Armic was divided by Moles into foure 30 groffe and mightie Battalions, each of which contained the strength of three whole

The first of these containing 186400. able men, consisted of three Regiments, which may well, in respect of their numbers, bee called Armies; as contayning the three whole Tribes of Iudah, Islachar, and Zabulon. In the Tribe of Iudah were 74600 fighting men, led by Naason: in Islachar 54400.led by Wathaniel: in Zabulon 57400. led by Eliab. All these marched vnder the Standard of the Tribe of Iudah, who held the Vauntguard, and was the first that mooued and marched, being lodged and quartered at their generall incamping on the East side of the Armie, which was held the first place, and of greatest dignitie.

The second Battalion or Armie, called in the Scriptures the Host of Reuben, had joyned vnto it Simeon and Gad, in number 151450. All which marched vnder the Standard of Reuben. In the Tribe of Ruben were 46500. vnder Elizur: in Simeon 59300. vnder Shelumiel: in Gad 45650. vnder Eliasaph, These had the second place, and incamped on the South fide of the Tabernacle.

Thethird Armie marched under the Standard of Ephraim, to whom were ioyned the Regiments of Manasse and Beniamin; who, io yned together, made in number 108100. able men. These marched in the third place, incamping on the West quarter of the Tabernacle. Ephraim had 40500. vnder Elishama: Manasse 32200. vnder Gamliel: Beniamin 35400. vnder Abidam.

The fourth and last Armie, or Squadron, of the generall Armie, contayning 157600. able men, marched under the Standard of Dan; to whom were joyned the two Tribes of Nephtali and Asher. And these had the Rereward, and moued last, incamping on the North side. Dan had 62700. vnder Ahiezer: Asher 41500. vnder Pagiel: Nephtali 53400. vnder Ahira.

Besides

Besides these Princes of the seugral Tribes, there were ordained Captaines over Thousands, ouer Hundreds, ouer Fifties, and ouer Tens; as it may appeare by that murinic and insurrection against Moses, Num. 16. v. 1. 6 2. For there arose vp against Mofes 250. Captaines of the Affembly, famous in the Congregation, and men of renowne: of which number were Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Which three principle Mutiners, with those 250. Captaines that followed them, were not any of the twelne Princes of the Tribes, or Generall Colonells before spoken of, as by their names

The bleffing which Ifrael gaue to his children, tooke place not onely in the dinifion of the Land of promise, and other things of more consequence, long after fol- 10 lowing; but even in forting them under their severall Standards in the wildernesse it was observed. For Indah had the precedencie and the greatest Armie, which also was wholly compounded of the sonnes of Lea, Iacobs wife. Ruben having lost his birth-right, followed in the second place, accompanied with his brother Simeon, who had vindergone his Fatherscurfe; and with Gad, the sonne of his Mothers Hand-maide. Infeph, who in temporall bleffings had the prerogative of the first borne a double portion, was accounted as two Tribes, and divided vnto two Regiments: the yonger (according to Iacobs prophecie) taking place before the Elder. He was affifted by Beniamin, his best beloued brother, the other sonne of Rashel. To Dan, the eldest some of Iacobs Concubines, was given the leading of the fourth Ar- 20 mie, according to Iacobs prophecie. Hee had with him vnder his Standard none of the children of Lea, or Rachel, but onely the sonnes of the Hand-maides.

In the middle of these foure Armies, was the Tabernacle, or portable Temple of the Congregation carried, fur-rounded by the Leuites. Neere vnto which, as the Heathens and Pagans could not approch, by reason of these soure powerfull Armies which guarded the same: so was it death for any of the children of Israel to come neere it, who were not of the Leuites, to whom the charge was committed. So facred was the mooueable Temple of God, and with fuch reverence guarded and transported, as 22000. persons were dedicated to the service and attendance thereof: of which 8580. had the peculiar charge, according to their feuerall offices and 20 functions; the particulars whereof are written in the third and fourth of Numbers. And as the Armies of the people observed the former order in their incampings : 6 did the Leuites quarter themselves, as in an inner square, on every side of the Tabernacle: the Geshurites on the West, within the Armie, and Standard of Ephraim, ouer whom Eliasaph commanded, in number 7500. The familie of Cohath on the South fide, guided by Elizaphan, within the Armie of Reuben, and betweene him and the Tabernacle, in number 8600. The third companie were of the familie of Merari, ouer whom Zuriel commaunded, in number 6200, and these were lodged on the North side within the Armie of Dan; On the East side, and next within those Tribes and Forces which Indahled, did Moses and Aaron lodge, and their children, 40 who were the first and immediate Commanders, both of the Ceremonies and of the People; vnder whom, as the chiefe of all the other Leuiticall families, was Eleazar the some of Aaron, his successour in the high Priest-hood.

This was the order of the Armie of Ifrael, and of their incamping and marching; the Tabernacle of God being alway fet in the middle and center thereof. The reuerend care, which Mofes the Prophet, and chosen servant of God, had in all that belonged even to the outward and least parts of the Tabernacle, Arke and Santhusrie, witnessed well the inward and most humble zeale borne towards God himselfe. The industrie vied in the framing thereof, and every, and the least part thereof; the curious workmanship thereon bestowed; the exceeding charge and expence in 50 the provisions; the dutifull observance in the laying vp and preserving the holic Vessels; the solemne remooning thereof; the vigilant attendance thereon, and the provident defence of the same, which all Ages have in some degree imitated, is now so forgotten and cast away in this super-fine Age, by those of the Familie, by the Anabaptist, Brownist, and other Sectaries, as all cost and care bestowed and had of the Church, wherein God is to be served and worshipped, is accounted a kinde of Poperie, and as proceeding from an idolatrous disposition: insomuch as Time would foone bring to passe (if it were not resisted) that God would be turned out of Churches into Barnes, and from thence againe into the Fields and Mountaines, and vnder the Hedges; and the Offices of the Ministerie (robbed of all dignitic and respect) bee as contemptible as these places; all Order, Discipline, and Church-gouernement, left to newnesse of opinion, and mens fancies: yea, and soone after, as many kindes of Religions would spring vp, as there are Parish Churches within England: every contentious and ignorant person clothing his fancie with the Spirit of God, and his imagination with the gift of Revelation; infomuch, as when the Truth, which is but one, shall appeare to the simple multitude, no lesse variable than contrarie to it selfe, the Faith of men will soone after dye away by degrees, and all Religion bee held in scorne and contempt. Which distraction gaue a great Prince of Germanie cause of this answere to those that persuaded him to become a Lutheran, Si me adiungo vobis, tunc condemnor ab alijs : si me alijs adiungo, à vobis condemner ; quid fugiam video, sed quid sequar, non habeo; If I adicyne my selfe to you, I am condemned by others; of I toyne with others, I am condemned by you; What I should avoide I see, but I know not what I should follow.

Ow when Moses had taken order for all things necessarie, prouided for the service of God, written the Lawes, numbred his Armie, and divided them into the battailes and troupes before remembred, and appointed them Leaders of all forts, The twelue Princes or Commanders of the Tribes brought their offerings before the Lord, to wit, Num. 8.

the Armic, or great squadron of Inda, led by Waashon, taking the Vauntguard, followed by Nethancel and Eliab, Leaders of the Tribes of Isachar and Zabulon: after whom the rest marched, as in the figure express. And because the passage through fo many Defarts and Mountaines, was exceeding difficult: Moses leaving nothing vnforethought which might scrue for the advancement of his enterprize, he instantly intreated his Father in-law, whom in the tenth of Numbers hee calleth Hobab to accompanie them in their journey towards Canaan; promiting him such part and profit of the enterprize, as God should bestow on them: for this man, as hee was of great understanding and judgement (as appeared by the Counsaile he gaue to Moles for the appointing of Judges ouer the people) so was hee a perfect guide in all those to parts, himselfe inhabiting on the frontier thereof, at Midian, or Madian: and (asir feemeth) a man of great yeeres and experience; for he was then the Priest or Prince of Madian, when Moles fled first out of Agypt, and married his Daughter, which was 42, yeeres before this request made. And though Moses himselfe had lived 40. yeeres in these parts of Arabia, through which hee was now to trauell: yet the better to affure his paffage, and so great a multitude of soules, which could not bee so few as a Million, it was necessarie to vse many guides, and many conducters. To this request of Moses, it may seeme by the places, Exod. 18. 27. and Num. 10, 30. that Ie. thro, otherwise called Hobab, yeelded not: for it is euident, that he went backe from Indic. 1. 16.264. Moses into his owne Countrie. But because it appeareth by other places of Scrip- 20 II. Alfor Sam. ture, that the posteritie of this Hobab was mingled with the Ifraelites, it is most likely that this his returne to his owne Countrie was rather to fetch away his familie. and to take his leave of his owne Countrie, by fetting things in order, than to abide

The voiage from Horeb to Kades: the mutinies by the way: and the cause of their turning backe to the red Sea.

Fter this dismission of Hobab, Israel beganne to march towards the Defarts of Paran: and after three daies wandring, they fate downeat the Sepulchers of luft, afterward called Tabeera, or Incensio: by reason that God confumed with fire those Mutiners and Murmurers which role vp in this remoue, which happened about the 23. day of the same Mo-neth. And from this 23. day of the second moneth, of the second yeere, they rested and fed themselues with Quailes (which it pleased God by a Sea-winde to cast vpon them) to the 24. day of the third moneth, to wit, all the moneth of Sinan or June: whereof furfaiting there died great numbers : from whence in the following meneth, called Thamus, answering to our Iuly, they went on to Hazeroth, where Mirian 40 the fifter of Moses was stricken with the leprosie, which continued vpon her seven daies, after whole recovery Ifrael removed toward the border of Idumea: and incamped at Rithma, neere Kades Barnea, from whence Moses sent the twelve discoverers into the Territorie of Canaan, both to informethemselues of the sertilitie and strength of the Countrie; as also to take knowledge of the Waies, Passages, Rivers, Fords, and Mountaines. For Arad King of the Canaanites surprised divers companiesof the Israelites, by lying in ambush neere those waies, through which the difcouerers and searchers of the Land had formerly past. Now, after the returne of the discouerers of Cades, the wrath of God was turned against Israel; whose ingratitude and rebellion after His so many benefits, so many remissions, so many mira-50 cles wrought, was such, as they esteemed their deliuerance from the Agyptian slauerie, his feeding them, and conducting them through that great and terrible wildernesse (for so Moses callethit) with the victorie which hee gaue them against the powerfull Amalekites, to be no other then the effects of his hatred, thinking that hee led them on and preserved them, but to bring them, their wives, and children to be flaughtered, and given for a prey and spoile to the Amorites or Canaanites. For it was reported vnto them, by the searchers of the Land, that the Cities of their enemies were walled and defended with many strong Towers and Castles; that many of the people were Gyantlike (for they confest that they saw the sonnes of Anas there) who were men of fearefulltature, and fo farre over-topped the Ifraelites, as they appeared to them, and to themselues, but as Grashoppers in their respect. Now, as this mutinie exceeded all the rest, wherein they both accused God, and consulted to choose them a Captaine (or as they call it now a daies, an Electo) to carry them to backe againe into Egypt; fo did God punish the same in a greater measure, than any of the former. For he extinguished every soule of the whole multitude ( Iosua and Caleb excepted) who being confident in Gods promises, perswaded the people to enter Canaan, being then neere it; and at the mountaine foote of Iduman; which is but narrow, laying before them the fertilitie thereof; and affuring them of victorie. But as men; whom the paffion of feare had bereaued both of reason and common fense, they threatned to stone these encouragers to death; accounting them as Num. 14.10. men either desperate in themselues, or betrayers of the lines, goods, and children of all their brethren, to their enemies; but God resisted these wicked purposes, and interpoling the feare of his bright glory betweene the vnaduised furie of the mul-20 titude, and the innocencie and constancie of his servants, preserved them thereby from their violence; threatning an intire destruction of the whole Nation, by sending among them a consuming and mercilesse pestilence. For this was the tenth in- Num. 14. U.21. furrection and rebellion, which they had made, since God delivered them from the flaueric of the Egyptians. But Mofes (the mildeft or meckeft of all men) praied vnto Num. 12, v. 3. God to remember his infinite mercies; alledging, that this fo severe a judgement, how descruedly soener afflicted, would increase the pride of the Heathen Nations, and give them occasion to vaunt, that the God of Ifrael, failing in power to performe his promises, suffered them to perish in these barren and fruitlesse Desarts. Yet as God is no leffe iust than merciful, as God is slow to anger, so is his wrath a consu-30 ming fire; the same being once kindled by the violent breath of mans ingratitude: & therfore, as with a hand leffe heavy than hoped for he scourged this iniquitie, so by the measure of his glory (euermore iealous of neglect and derision) he suffered not the wicked to passe vnpunished referuing his compassion for the innocent: whom,

Ow when Moses had reuealed the purposes of God to the people, and made them know his heavie displeasure towards them, they beganne to bewaile themselues, though ouer-late: the times of grace and mens repentance, having also their appointment. And then when God had left them to themselues, and was no more among them, after they had so often plaid and dallied with his mercifull sufferings, They would needes amend their former disobedience by a second contempt: and make offer to enter the Land contrarie againe to the aduice of Moles; who affured them, 50 that God was not now among them; and that the Arke of his coucnant should not moue, but by His direction, who could not erre; and that the enemies sword which God had hitherto bended and rebated, was now left no leffe sharpe than death; and in the hands of the Amalekites, and Canaanites no leffe cruel. them to their own destructions: so the Hebrewes, after they had for saken the opportunitie by God and their Conductors offered: and might then have entered Indea before their enemies were prepared and joyned; did afterward, contrarie to Gods commaundement, vndertake the enterprise of themselues; and ranne headlone and without aduice into the mountaines of Idamaa. There the Canaanites and the Amalekites being joyned and attending their advantage, fet on them, brake them. and of their numbers flaughtered the greatest part: and following their victorie and pursuite, consumed them all the way of their flight even vnto Hormah; the Amalekites in reuenge of their former loffe, and ouerthrow at Raphidim: the Canaanites to prevent their displantation and destruction threatned. Of which power, to full affemblie of those two Nations (affisted in all likelihood with the neighbour Kings joyned together for their common safetie) it pleased God to forwarne Me. les, and to direct him another way, than that formerly intended. For hee commaunded him to returne by those painefull passages of the Desarts, through which they had formerly trauelled, till they found the bancks of the red Sea againe: in which retraite before they came backe to passeouer Iordan, there were consumed 38. yeeres; and the whole number of the fixe hundreth and odde thousand, which came out of Agypt (Moles, Johna and Caleb excepted) were dead in the Wildernesse, the stubborne and carelesse generations were wholy worne out, and the promifed Land bestowed on their children; which were increased to 600000, and to more. For besides the double fault both of refusing to enter the Land vpon the returne of the discouerers, and the presumption then to attempt it, when they were countermaunded: it seemeth that they had committed that horrible Idolatrie of worshipping Molech, and the Host of heaven. For although Moses doth not Amos c. J. v. 15. mention it, yet Amos doth, and so doth the Martyr Stephen, as also that the Ifra. AEL C.7. Now after the broken companies were returned to the Campe at Cades, Moles, according to the commaundement received from God, departed towards the South from whence he came, to recouer the shoares of the Red Sea. And so from 30 Cades or Rithma he remooned to Remmonparez, so called of abundance of Pomegranates there found and divided among them. From thence he went on to Librah, taking that name of the Frankincense there found. From Librah hee cross the valley, and fate downe at Resa, neere the footc of the mountaine. And after he had rested there, he bended towards the West, and incamped at Ceelata; where one of the Hebrewes, for gathering broken wood on the Sabbath, was stoned to death. After which, Moses alwaies keeping the valley, between two great ledges of mountaines (those which bound the Desart of Sin, and those of Pharan) cross the same from Ceelata, and marched Eastward to the mountaine of Sapher, or Sepher: this making the Twentieth mansion. From thence he passed on to Harada; then to Maceloth; 40 and then to Thahah; & To to Thara or Thare: the foure & twentieth mansion. Where while Moles rested, the people began that insolent and dangerous mutinic of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram; who for their contempt of God and his Ministers, were some of them swallowed vp aliue, and by the earth opening her mouth deuoured; others, euen two hundred and fiftie which offered incense with Korah, were consumed with fire from heaven; & 14700. of their partie, which murmured against Moles. stricken dead with a sudden pestilence: one of the greatest maruailes and judgements of God, that hath beene shewed in all the time of Moses his government, or before. For among fo great a multitude, those lay-men who would have vsurped Ecclesia-Ricall authoritie, were suddenly swallowed vp aliue into the earth with their fami- 50 lies and goods; even while they fought to overthrow the Order, Discipline, and power of the Church, and to make all men alike therein, rebelliously contending against the High Priest and Magistrate, to whom God had committed the gouernment both of his Church and Common weale of his people. And the better to affure the people, and out of his great mercie to confirme them, it pleafed him in this place also to approoue by miracle the former election of his servant Aaron, by the twelue rods given in by the Heads of the twelue Tribes; of which Moles received one of every Head, and Prince of his Tribe: which being all withered and drie Wands, and on every rod the name of the Prince of the Tribe written, and Aarons on that of Leui; it pleased God, that the rod of Aaron received by his power a vegetable Spirit, and having laine in the Tabernacle of the Congregation before the arke one night, had on it both Buddes, Blossomes, and ripe Al-

From Tharab the whole Armie removed to Methra; and thence to E/mona; and thence to Moleroth, (or Majurit after S. Hierome) and from Moleroth to beneincan; and fo to Gadgad, which Hierome calleth Gadgada; thence to letabata, the thirtieth Mansion; where from certaine fountaines of water gathered in one, Adrichomius maketh a River, which falleth into the Red Sea, betweene Madian and Asiong aber.

Now although it be very probable, that at Asiongaber, where Salomon furnished his Fleetes for the East India: there was store of fresh water; and though Herodotus Horda. maketh mention of a great River in Arabia the stonie, which he calleth Corys, from whence (faith hee) the inhabitants conucigh water in pipes of leather to other places, by which device the King of Arabia relieued the Armie of Camby (es: yet is Adrichomius greatly deceined as many times he is, in finding these springs at Gadgad, or 20 Ietabata, being the nine and twentieth or thirtieth Mansion. For it was at Punon, that those Springs are spoken of, which in Deut, the 10.0.7. is also called Ietabata, or lotbath, a Land of running waters, and which by all probabilitie fall into the Riuer Zared, the next adioyning. And that these Springs should fall into the Red Sea, at Assongaber, or Eloth, I cannot belieue, for the way is very long. And this I finde in Belonius, that there are diucrs Torrents of fresh water in those sandie parts of Arabia: which though they continue their course for a few miles, yet they are drunke up by the hot and thirsty sand, before they can recouer the bankes of the Red Sea.

From Ietabata, Moles directed his journey towards the Red Sea, and incamped at Hebrona, and from thence to Estiongaber: which Citie in Iosephus time had the name of Berenice; and in Hieroms Esta. From thence keeping the Sea, and Eloth on his right hand, he turned towards the North, as he was by God commanded : Estiongaber Deut. 2. being the farthest place towards the South-East, that Moses trauailed in that passage.

It seemeth that Estiongaber or Asiongaber, Eloth and Madian were not at this time in the possession of the Kings of Edom. For it is said, That the Lord spake unto Mos Es Numacao, v. 13 and A AR O N in the Mount Hor; neere the coast of the Land of Edom; so as the Mount Her was at this time in the South border of Idumea. And if Estongaber, and the other places neere the Red Sea, had at this present been subject to the Idumeans, Moses would also have demanded a free passage through them. It is true, that in the future the Idumeans obtained those places: for it is said; And they arose out of Midian, and came 1. King. 11.18. to Paran, and tooke men with them; which were those companies that followed yong Adad of Idumes, into Egypt, when he fled from Ioab. Likewise it is said of Salomon, that he made a Nauie of ships in Estiongaber besides Eloth, in the Land of Edom.

tieth yeere taking end at Esiongaber. And at this Citie of Cades (for foit was thought to be) or necre it, died Miriam or Mary, Moses sister, whose Sepulchre was to bee feene in Saint Hieromes time, as himfelfe auoweth. From hence ere they departed to the Mountaine Hor, all the people murmured most violently against Moles, by reason of the scarcitie of water. For neither the punishments by fire from Heauen: by beeing denoured and swallowed up by the earth; by the sudden pestilence, which often seized them; nor any miracle formerly shewing, either the love or wrath of God, could preuaile with this Nation any longer, than while they were full fed and satisfied in every of their appetites: but in stead of seeking for helpe and reliefe at Gods hands, when they suffered hunger, thirst, or any other want, they mur-10 mured, repined, and rebelled, repenting them of their changed estates, and cashing ungratefully on Moles all their miladuentures; yea, though they well knew that their owne Fathers had left their bodies in the Delarts, and that they were now entred into the fortieth yeere, wherein all their miseries were to take end. And beeing, as it were, in the fight of the Land promised, they againe as obstinately tempted God as in former times, and neither trutted his promifes, nor feared his indignation. But as the will and purposes of God are without beginning; so his mercies being without end, he commanded Moles to firike a Rockeadioyning with his rod; and the waters issued out in a great abundance, with which both themselues and their cattell were satisfied. Neuerthelesse, because God perceiued a kinde of diffidence bothin 20 Moses and Aaron, at this place; therefore he permitted neither of them to enter the Land promised, whereto perchance their worldly defires might inuite them. But it pleased Him to ende the trausiles of Aaron at the Mountaine Hor, beeing the next, and foure and thirtieth Station. At which Mountaine of Hor, Aaron was despoiled of the Garments of his Priest-hood, and the same put on Eleazar his Sonne, as God had commanded. Which done, Moses and Eleazar descended the Mountaine; but God received Aaron on the top thereof, and hee was no more

Of this Mountaine called Hor, otherwise Mosera, as in Deuter. 10. vers. 6. those Horites tooke name, which the Idumeans had formerly vanquished. Some there are 20 which make Mosera, which was the seuen and twentieth Mansion; and Mosera which they write Moleroth for difference, which was the foure and thirtieth Manfion, and is also called Hor, to be two distinct places: because Moses in passing from Cadesbarne towards Estiongaber, incamped at Molera, after he departed from Helmana, and before hee came to Beniascan. And this Mosera, which is also called Hor, he came vnto after heeleft Cades, where Miriam, Moses fister died; the first beeing the feuen and twentieth, and the second being the foure and thirtieth Mansson. But for Hor, which is also called Mosera, it should have beene written, Hor iuxta Mosera; Hor neere Mosera: for it is but one roote of a Mountaine, divided into divers tops, as Sinai and Horeb are : Whereof the West part Moses calleth Mosera, and the East 40 part Horeb. By the West part Moles encamped, as he past towards the Red Sea, on his left hand; by the East part, as hee went backe againe North-wards towards Moab: as in the description of Moses his passage through Arabia, the Reader may perceiue.

Now it was from Cades, before they came to Hor, because Hor belonged to Edom, that Moses sent Messengers to the Prince of Idumaa, praying him that hee might passe with the people of Israel through his Territorie into the Land of Canaan, which bordered it. For it was the neerest way of all other from the Citie of Kadesh, where Moses then encamped; whereas otherwise taking his journey by the Riuers of Zared, Arnon, and Iordan, hee might have runne into many hazzards 50 in the passage of those Rivers, the farre way about, and the many powerfull Kings, which commaunded in those Regions. Now the better to perswade the Prince of Idumea hereunto, Moses remembred him, that hee was of the same race and familie with Ifrael: calling him by the name of Brother, because both the

Edomites and Israelites were the Sonnes of one Father, to wit, Isaat; inferring thereby, that hee had more reason to fauour and respect them, than hee had to alfilt the Canaanites; against whome Elau his Ancester had made warre, and drinen out the Horites ( who were of their ancient races descended of Cham ) out of the Region of Seir, calling it by his owne name Edom, or Edumea. Hee also making a short repetition of Gods bleshings bestowed on them, and of his purposes and promifes; affured Edom, or the King thereof, that hee would no way offend his people, or waste his Countrey, but that hee would restraine his Armie within the bounds of the Common, and Kings high wayes, paying money for whatfoeuer hee vsed, yea, euen for the water, which themselues or their Cattell should drinke. For Moles was commaunded by God, not to prouoke the children of Elau. But the King of Edumea knowing the strength of his owne Countrey, the Denka 4. fame beeing neere Canaan, rampard with high and sharpe mountaines: and withall suspecting; as a naturall wise man, that 600000. For, as it is written; Then E D o M came out against bim (to wit, M o s E s) with Nums. 20. 20 much people, and with a mighty power. Whereupon Moles confidering, that the ende of his enterprise was not the conquest of Seir or Edumea, and that the Land promifed was that of Canaan: like vnto himfelfe who was of a naturall vnderstanding the greatest of any man, and the skilfullest man of warre that the world had, hee refused to aduenture the Armie of Ifrael against a Nation, which being ouer-come, gaue but a passage to inuade others; and which by reason of the scate of their mountainous Countrey, could not but haue endangered, or (at least) greatly enfeebled the strength of Ifrael, and rendred them leffe able, if not altogether powerleffe, to have conque-

Etherefore leaving the way of Idumaa, turned himselfe towards the East, and marched towards the Desarts of Moab. Which when Arad King of the Canaanites understood, and that Moses had blanched the way of Edumea; and knowing that it was Canaan, and not Edom, which Israel aimed at , beethought it fafest, rather to finde his enemies in his neighbours Countrey, than to be found by them in his owne: which he might haue done with a farre greater hope of victorie, had Mofes beene enforst first to haue made his way by the sword through Idames, and thereby though victorious, greatly haue leffened his numbers. But although it fell out otherwise than Irad hoped for, yet being resoluted to make triall, what courage the Israelites brought with them out of Ægype, before they came neerer his ownehome, leading the strength of his Nation to the edge of the Defart, hee fet vpon some part of the Armie; which, for the multitude occupied a great space, and for the many heards of Cattell that they 30 draue with them, could not encampe so neere together, but that some quarter or other was euer-more subject to surprise. By which advantage, and in that his attempts were then perchance vnexpected, he flew some few of the Israelites, and carried with him many prisoners.

Now it is very probable, that it was this Canaanite, or his Predecessour, which Dd 2

iovned his forces with the Amalekites, and gaue an ouerthrow to those mutinous Israelites, which without direction from God by Moses would have entred Canaen from Cadesbarne. For it seemeth that the greatest number of that Armie were of the Canganites, because in the first of Deuteron.44. the Amorites are named alone without the Amalekites, and are faid to have beaten the I/raelites at that time. And this Arad, if hee were the same that had a victory ouer Ifrael, neere Cadesbarne, or if it were his Predecessour that then prevailed, this man finding that Moles was returned from the Red Sea, and in his way towards Canaan, and that the South part of Canaan was first to bee inuaded, and in danger of beeing conquered, not knowing of Moles purpose to compasse Moab, determined while he was yet in the Desart to trie 10 the quarrell. And whereas it followeth in the third verse of the twelfth Chapter of 2 umbers, that the Ifraelites vtterly destroyed the Canaanites and their Cities, they are much mistaken that thinke, that this destruction was presently performed by the Israelites. But it is to be vndcrstood, to have beene done in the future, to wit, in the time of Iolua. For had Moles at this time entred Canaan in the pursuit of Arad. hee would not have fallen backe agains into the Defarts of Zin and Month, and haue fetcht a wearifome and needelesse compasse, by the Riuers of Zared and

Neither is their coniecture to bee valued at any thing, which affirme, that Arad did not inhabite any part of Canaan it selfe, but that his Territorie lay with-20 out it, and neere the Mountaine Hor. For Hor and Zin Cades were the South borders of Edom, and not of Canaan. And it was in the South of the Land of Canaan, that Arad dwelt: which South part of Canaan was the North part of

Againe, Horma (for so farre the Ifraelites after their victory pursued the Canaanites ) is seated in the South of Indea. There is also a Citie of that name in Simeon. But there is no fuch place to the South of Edom. And were there no other argument, but the mutinie which followed presently after the repetition of this victory, it were enough to prooue, that the same was obtained in the future, and in Iosua his time, and not at the instant of Arads assault. For had the Israelites at this time 20 fackt the Cities of Arad, they would not the next day have complained for want of water and bread. For where there are great Cities, there is also water, and bread. But it was in the time of Io/ua, that the Israelites tooke their reuenge, and after they had past Iordan: Iofua then gouerning them; who in the twelfth Chapter and fourteenth Verse, nameth this Arad by the name of his Citic so called; and with him the King of Horma: to which place the Ifraelites pursued the Canaanites. And hee nameth them amongst those Kings, which hee vanquished, and putto

Now after this affault and surprise by Arad, Moses finding that all entrance on that side was defended, hee led the people Eastward to compasse Idumea and the 40 Dead Sea, and to make his entrance by Arnon and the Plaines of Moab, at that time in the possession of the Amorites. But the Israelites, to whom the very name of a Desart was terrible, began againe to rebell against their Leader; till God by a multitude of fiery Serpents, (that is, by the biting of Serpents, whose venome inflamed them, and burnt them as fire) made them know their error, and afterward, according to his plentifull grace cured them againe by their beholding an artificiall Serpent, by his Commandement set vp.

From the Mount Hor, Moles leaving the ordinarie way which lyeth betweene the Red Sea, and Cælosyria, encamped at Zalmona: and thence hee removued to Phunon, where hee erected the Brazen Serpent; making these iourneys by the 50 edge of Edumaa, but without it. For Phunon was sometime a principall Citie of the Edomites. Now where it is written in Numbers 21. Verfe 4. That from Mount Hor they departed by the way of the Red Sea, which grieved the people, it was not thereby meant that the Ifraelites turned backe towards the Red Sea;

neither did they march (according to Fonse ca) per viam, que habet à lateremare rubrum; By the way that sided the Red Sea, but in decide they cross, and went athwart the common way from Galaad, Trachonitis, and the Countries of Moab, to the Red Sea, that is, to Eliongaber; Eloth, and Midian: which way, as it lay North and South. To Ilrael to shunne the border of Edom, and to take the vimoit East part of Moab, crost the common way towards the East, and then they turned againe towards the North as before.

From Phunon he went to Oboth; where they entred the Territory of Moab, adjoyning to the Land of Suph, a Countrey bordering on the Dead Sea; and from thence to Abarim, the eight and thirtieth Mansion, that is, where the Mountaines so called take beginning, and are as yet but small Mountures of Hills, on the East border of Moab; From thence they recovered Dibon Gad, or the River of Zared, which rifeth in the mountaines of Arabia, and runneth towards the Desd Sea, not farre from Petra the Metropolis thereof, being the nine and thirtieth Station. And having paft that River, they lodged at Dibon Gad, and from thence they kept the way to Diblathaim, one of the Cities of Moab; which Hieremie the Prophet 6.48.v.22. calleth the Houle of Diblathaim, the same which afterward was destroyed among the rest by Nabushadnessar. From thence they came to the River of Arron, and incamped in the mountaines of Abarim: though in the 22. of Numbers, Moles doth not remember 20 Helmon diblathaim, but speaketh of his remooue from the River of Zared, immediately to the other side of Arnon; calling Arnon the border of Moab, betweene them and the Amerites: speaking, as hee found the state of the Countrie at that time. For Arnon was not anciently the border of Moab, but was lately conquered from the Moabites, by Schon, King of the Amorites: even from the Predecessour of Balac Peor then raigning. From Diblathaim, Mofes fent Messengers to Sehon, King of the Amorites, to defire a passage through his Countrie: which though he knew would be denied him, yet he desired to give a reason to the neighbour Nations, of the warre he vndertooke. And though Edom had refused him as Schon did, yet hee had no warrant from God to enforce him. Moses also in sending messengers to Schon, observed 30 the same precept, which he left to his posteritie, and successors, for a law of the war. namely in Deut. 20. v. 10. in these words, When thou commest neere unto a Citie to fight against it, thou shalt offer it peace, which if it doe accept of and open unto thee, then let all the people found therein bee tributaries unto thee, and serue thee; but if it refuse, &c. thou shalt Smite all the males thereof with the edge of the sword. Which ordinance all Commanders of Armies have observed to this day, or ought to have done.

d. VII.

Of the Booke of the battailes of the Lord, mentioned in this Storie, and of other Bookes mentioned in Scripture which are loft.

Ow concerning the Warre betweene Ifrael and Schon, Moses seemeth Num.c.21.v.14 to referre a great part of this Storie to that Booke, entituled, Liber bellorum Domini, The booke of Gods battailes: and therefore passets our ma-en y encounters, and other things memorable, with greater breuity in this place. His wordes after the Geneua translation are these. Wherefore it shall be spoken in the Booke of the battailes of the Lord, what things he did in the Red Sea, and in the Rivers of Arnon. The Vulgar copie differeth not in sense from this: But Numari. the Greeke Septuagint varie. For the Greeke writes it to this effect; For thus it is faid " Of the coun-50 in the boooke: the Warre of the Lord hath burnt (or inflamed) Zoob, and the brooks of Arnon, trie of Suph see Innius for the Red Sea, which is in the Genenan and Vulgar Edition, names the Region 5.4. †.2. of * Suph, a Countrie bordering the Dead Sea towards the East, as he coniectureth. & of the force The Text hee readeth thus. spoten in repeating of the battailes of IEHOVAH, against VAHEB in the Countrie of S VPH: and against the Rivers, the Rivers of Arnon. In which words he vnderstands. that amongst the Warres which the Lord disposed for the good of the Ifraelites. there was in those times a famous memory in the mouth of most men, concerning the Warre of Sehon against Vaheb, the King of the Moabites, and of his winning the Countrie neere Arnon, out of the possession of the Moabites. For this Vaheb was the immediate Predecessour of Balae, who lived with Moles: though it be written that this Balac was the sonne of Zippor, and not of Vabeb. For it seemes (as it is plaine in the succession of the Edomites) that these Kingdomes were elective, and not succeffiue. And as Iuntes in this translation understandeth no special Booke of the bat-10 tailes of the Lord: so others, as Vatablus in his Annotations, doubt whether in this place any speciall Booke bee meant; and if any; whether it bee not a prediction of Warres in future ages, to be waged in these places, and to be written in the booke of Iudges. Siracides c.46. tells vs plainely, that those battailes of the Lord were fought by I o sva. Who was there (faith he) before him like to him? for he fought the battailes of the Lord. But seeing the Histories of the Scripture elsewhere often passe ouer matters of great weight in few words, referring the Reader to other Bookes, written of the same matter at large: therefore it seemeth probable, that such a booke as this there was; wherein the seuerall victories by Israel obtained, and also victories of other Kings, making way for the good of the Ifraelites, were particularly and largely 20 written. And that the same should now be wanting, it is not strange, seeing so many other Volumes, filled with divine discourse, have perished in the long race of time, or have been destroyed by the ignorant and malicious Heathen Magistrate. For the bookes of Henoch, how soeuer they have been in later ages corrupted, and therefore now suspected, are remembred in an Epistle of Thaddaus, and cited by Origen wei apxin, and by Tertullian.

That worke also of the Patriarch Abraham, of Formation, which others bestow on Rabbi Achiba, is no where found. The bookes remembred by Iosua e. 10.v.12. and in the second of Samuele. 1. v. 18. called the Booke of lasher, or Instorum, is also lost; wherein the stay of the Sunne and Moone in the middest of the Heauens is recor-20 ded, and how they stood still till Ifrael had auenged themselues of their enemies; out of which also Danid tooke the precept, of teaching the children of Inda, to exercise

Some thinke this to be the booke of eternall Predestination, in which the instare written, according to the 69. Pfalme, v.28. where it is faid, Let them be put out of the booke of life , neither let them bee written with the righteous. HIEROME thinkes, that Dauid by this booke understood those of Samuel; Rabbi Salomon, that the bookes of the Law are thereby meant, in which the acts of the iust Abraham, of Ifaac, Iacob, and Moses, are written; others, that it was the booke of Exodus; others, as Theodoretus, that it was a Commentary vpon 10 sua, by an vnknowne Author.

The booke of Chozai, concerning Manasse, remembred in the second of Chron. 33. v.18.6 16. Of this booke, also lost, Hierome conceiues that the Prophet Isay was

The same mischance came as well to the Story of Salomon, written by Ahia Silonites, who met with Ieroboam, and foretold him of his obtaining the Kingdome of Israel from the sonne of Salomon: as to the bookes of Nathan the Prophet, and to those of Icedo the Seer, remembred in the second of Chron c. g.v.29. with these haue the bookes of Shemaiah and of Iddo, remembred in the second of Chron. 12. v. 15. perished: and that of lebu the sonne of Hanani, of the acts of leboffaphat, cited in the fecond of Chron. 6.20.2.34. Alfothat booke of Salomons which the Hebrewes write 50 Ha/cirim, of 5000. verses, of which that part called Canticum Canticorum onely remaineth, I. Kings 4.32. and with this divers other of Salomons workes have perished, as his booke of the natures of Trees, Plants, Beafts, Fishes, &c. 1. Of Moses his sparing theissue of Lot; and of the Giants in those parts; and of SEHON and OG.

CHAP.5. S.8.

Hen Moles had past Arnon, hee incamped on the other side thereof at Abarim, opposite to the Citic of Nebo, leaving the Citic of Midian on his left hand, and attempting nothing upon the Moabites on that side. For Moab did at this time inhabite on the South side of Arnon, hauing lost all his ancient and best Territorie, which was now in the possession of Sehon the Amorite. For Moses was commanded by God not to molest Moab, Deut. 2. 19.65 neither to prouoke them to battaile, God having given that Land to the children of Lot; the same which was anciently possess by the Emims, who were men of great stature, and comparable to those Giants called Anakims, or the sonnes of Anas.

God also commanded Moses to spare the Ammonites, because they likewise were descended of Lot: who had expelled from thence those Giants, which the Ammonites called Zamzummims. For it feemeth that all that part, especially to the East of lordan, even to the Defart of Arabia, aswell on the West, as on the East side of the Mountaines of Gilead, were inhabited by Giants. And in the plantation of the Land promised, the Israelites did not at any time passe those Mountaines to the East of Basan, but left their Countrie to them, as in the discription following is made manifest. We finde also, that as there were many Giants both before and after the floud: so these Nations, which anciently inhabited both the border of Canaan, and the Land it selfe, had among them many families of Giant-like men. For the Anakims dwelt in Hebron, which sometimes was called the Citie of Arbah, which Arbah in Iolua is called the Father of the Anakims; and the greatest man of the Anakims.

There had also beene Giants in the Land of the Mosbites, called Emims : and their chiefe Citie was Areer or Ar, neere the River of Arnon. To the Giants of the Rephaims, the Ammonites gaue the name of Zamzummims; which were of the same ancient Canainites : and their chiefe Citie was Rabba, afterward Philadelphia. They were alfo called Zuzims, which is as much to fay, as Viri robufti, horrendig, Gigantes; Strong men, and fearefull Giants, who inhabited other Cities of Ham, or Hom, in the same Province, and not farre to the North of Aroer.

Now Moses having past Arnon, and being incamped at Abarim; and having (as before) fent to Sehon, as hee had done to Edom, to pray a passage through his Countrie, was denied it. For sehon being made proude by his former conquest vpon Vaheb the Moabite, which Nation the Amorites esteemed but as strangers and vsurpers, (themselves being of the sonnes of Canaan, and the Moabites of Lot) refused to grant Israel any entrance that way; and withall prepared to encounter Moses with as much speede as he could, because Moses incamped in the Countrie of his new conquests, to wit, the Plaines of Moab; the two and fortieth and last Mansion: which Moles wasted with the multitude of his people, and cattell. Towards him therefore hasting himselfe, they encountred each other ar lahaz: where Schon with his children and people were broken and discomfitted: and the victorie so pursued by Moses, as few or none of the Amorites escaped. Hee also slaughtered all the Women and

50 Children of the Amorites, which hee found in Effebon, and all the other Cities, Villages, or Fields; they being of the race of Canaan, as those of Basan also were: and descended of Emoreus or Amoreus : for Moses calleth the Basanites also Amorites. Deut. 1.38. And although Israel might now have taken a ready way and passage into Iudea: being at this time, and after this victorie at the bankes of Iordan: yet hee knew it to bee perilous to leaue fo great a part of that Nation of the Amorites on his backe, as inhabited all the Region of Bafan or Traconitis: and therefore he led on his Armieto inuade Og: a person of exceeding itrength and stature: and the only man of markeremaining of the ancient Giants of those parts, and who at that time had 60. Cities walled and defenced : lying betweene the mountaine of Hermon (which mountaine faith Moses, the Sidonians call Shirion, and the Amorites Shenir) and the River of Iordan. And it befell vnto the King of Bafan ( who attended Mofes comming at Edrei) as it did vnto Sihon: for he and his sonnes perished, and all his Cities were taken and posselt. After this, Moses with-drawing himselfe backe againe to the moun. taines of Abarim, left the presequation of that warre unto Jair the sonne of Manasse: 10 who conquering the East parts of Basan, to wit, the Kingdome of Argob, euen vnto the Nations of the Gessuri and Machati, 60. walled Cities: called the same after his owne name Hauoth lair: of all which conquests afterward the halfe Tribe of Manaffe possest the North part as farre as Edrei, but the East part that belonged to sibon the Amorite, with the mountaines of Gilead adioyning, was given to Reuben and

Fter these victories, and while Israel sojourned in the valley of Moab. the Madianites and Moabites (ouer both which Nations it feemeth that Balae King of the Moabites then commanded in chiefe) fought, according to the aduice of Balsam, both by alluring the Hebrewes to the loue of their daughters, and by perswading them to honour and serue their Idols, to divide them both in Loue and Religion among themselves: thereby the better both to defend their owne interest against them, as also to beate them out of Moab, and the Countries adioyning. The Ifraelites as they had ever beene inclined, so were they now easily perswaded to these cuill courses, and thereby drew on 20 themselues the plague of pestilence, whereof there perished 24000. persons: befides which punishment of God, the most of the offenders among the Hebrewes, were by his commandement put to the fword, or other violent deaths : after this, when that Phiness the sonne of Eleazar had pierced the bodies of Zimri, a Prince of the Simeonites, together with Cosbia Daughter of one of the chiefe of the Midianites, the plague ceased, and Gods wrath was appealed. For such was the loue and kindnesse of his all-powerfulnesse, respecting the ardent zeale of Phineas in prosequuting of Zimri (who being a chiefe among the Hebrewes became an Idolater) as hee forgane the rest of Ifrael, and staied his hand for his sake.

Ow let vs a little, for instruction, looke backe to the occasions of sundrie of the great euents, which have beene mentioned in this Storie of the life of Moses, for (excepting Gods miracles, his promise, and fore-choise of this people) hee wrought in all things else by the medium of mens affections, and naturall appetites. And so we shall find that the feare which Pharao had of the increase of the Hibrewes, multiplied by God to exceeding great numbers, was the next naturall cause of the forrowes and losse, which befell himselfe, and the Egyptian Nation : which numbers when he sought by cruell and vigodly policies to cut off and leffen, as when hee commanded all the male-children of the Hebrewes to be flaine, God (whose providence cannot bee resi-Red, nor his purposes preuented by all the foolish and saluage craft of mortall men) moved compassion in the heart of Pharao's owne Daughter, to preserve that child which afterward became the most wife, and of all men the most gentle and milde, 40 the most excellently learned in all Divine and Humane knowledge, to be the Conductor and deliverer of his oppressed Brethren, and the overthrow of Pharao, and all the flower of his Nation; even then, when he fought by the strength of his men of Warre, of his Horse, and Chariots, to tread them under and burie them in the dust. The griefe which Moses conceived of the iniuries, and of the violence offered to one of the Hebrewes in his owne presence, moved him to take revenge of the Egyptian that offered it: the ingratitude of one of his owne Nation, by threatning him to difcouer the flaughter of the Agyptian, mooued him to flie into Midian: the contention betweene the sheepe-heards of that place, and Iethro's Daughters, made him knowne to their Father: who not onely entertained him, but married him to one of 50 those Sisters: and in that solitarie life of keeping of his Father in lawes sheepe, farre from the presse of the world, contenting himselfe (though bred as a Kings Sonne) with the lot of a poore Heards-man, God found him out in that Desart, wherein hee first suffered him to live many yeeres, the better to know the wayes and passages through which hee purposed that hee should conduct his people, toward the Land promised: promised: and therein appearing vnto him, he made him know his Will and divine Pleasure for his returne into Egypt. The like may be said of all things else, which Moles afterward by Gods direction performed in the Storie of Israel before remembred. There is not therefore the smallest accident, which may sceme vnto men as falling out by chance, and of no consequence: but that the same is caused by God to effect somewhat else by: yea, and oftentimes to effect things of the greatest worldly importance, either presently, or in many yeeres after, when the occasions are either not considered, or forgotten.

Of the Nations with whom the Israelites had dealing after their comming out of Ægypt; and of the men of re-nowne in other Nations, about the times of Moses and losva, with the summe 20 of the Historie of losva.

N like manner if we looke to the qualitie of the Nations, with whom the I/raelites, after their comming out of Egypt, had to doc, either in the Wilderneffe, or afterward: we shall finde them long before-hand, by the disposing providence of God, as it were prepared for enmitie: partly in respect that they were most of them of the issue of Canaan, or at lest of Ham : and the rest (as the Edomites, Moabites, Ammonites, and Ismaelites ) were mingled with them by mutuall marriages: 40 whereas the Ifraelites still continued strangers, and separate from them: and so partly in this respect, and partly by ancient injuries or enmities, and partly by reason of diversitie in Religion, were these Nations, as it were prepared to be enemies to the Israelites: and so to serue for such purposes as God had reserved them for. To make these things more manifest, we must understand that this part of Syria bounded by the mountaines of Libanus, and Ziden on the North, by the same mountaines continued as farre as the Springs of Arnon on the East : by the way of Agypt, and the Red Sea on the South: and by the Mediterran Sca on the West: was inhabited and peopled by two Nations, the one springing from the sonnes of Cham, the other from Sem: but those of 50 Sem, were but as firaneers therein for a long time, and came thither in effect but with * one familie, to wit, that of Abraham, and a few of his kindred. The other for the greatest part were the Canaanites, the ancient Lords and Possessor those Territories: by processe of time divided into severall families and names: whereof fome fome of them were of eminent stature and strength, as the Anakims, Zamzummims, or Zuzei, Emims, Horites, and others. These (as men most valiant and able commonly doe) did inhabite the vtter borders and mountaines of their Countries: the rest were the Zidonians, Iebusites, Amerites, Heuites, Hetites, and others, who tooke name after the sonnes of Canaan, and after whom the Countrie in generall was still called.

As for the Hebrewes which descended of Shem by Abraham, they were of another familie, and strangers in that Countrie respecially the Israeletes, and this was some cause that the Canaanites did not affect them, or induce them: no more them to the Philistims ded, who descended also of Chamby Mizraim. For though Abraham himselfe being a stranger was highly esteemed and honoured among them: especially by the Amorites inhabiting the West part of Iordan : yet now even they which descending from Abraham, or from his kindred, abode and multiplied in those parts, were alienated in affections from the Ifraelites: as holding them strangers and intruders: making more account of their alliance with the Canaanites, and the rest of the iffue of Cham, with whom they dayly contracted affinitie: than of their olde petigree from Abraham.

True it is that these Nations descended of Abraham, or of his kindred, who had Dem. coll. v.s. lincked themselues and matched with the Canaanites and others, had so farre possest themselues of the borders of those Regions, as they began to bee equall in strength 20 to the bordering Canaanites, if not superiour. For of Lot came those two great families of the Moabites, and Ammonites: of Efaithe Idumaans: of Madian the Madianites : of Ismael, the cldeft son of Abraham, came the Ismaelites, with whom are joyned as of the same nation, the Amalekites, whom though the more common opinion thinketh to have been a tribe of Edom, because E/au had a grand-child of that name, yet manifest reason conuinceth it to have been otherwise. For the Israelites were forbidden to prouoke the Edomites, or doe them any wrong, whereas contrariwife At Deut.c. 11. v.g. malek was cursed, and endlesse warre decreed against him: but hereof more elsewhere. Chap. 8. d. 3. Of Ismaels eldest Sonne Nabeth sprung the Arabians of Petrea, called Nabathai. Now even as Abraham besought God to bleffe Ismael, so it Gen. 17. pleased him both to promise and performe it. For of him those twelve Princes came, which inhabited, in effect, all that Tract of Land betweene Havilath vpon Tigris, and Sur which is the West part of the Defart of Arabia Petraa. Yet howsoe-

the entrance of the Ifraelites into Canaan, was in respect of feare: because all Princes and States doe not willingly permit any stranger or powerfull Nation to enter their Territories. Wherefore, though all these samilies beforenamed, were not so vnited, in and among themselves, but that they had their jealousies of each other, and contended for Dominion: yet fearing a third more strong than themselves, whether they stood a-part or united, they were taught by the care of ther owne presernation, to joyne themselves together against Israel: though they did it nothing so maliciously and resolutedly as the Canaanites did. For the Edumaans only denied the Hebrewes a passage: which the Moabites durst not denic: because their Countrie lay more open; and because themselves had lately beene beaten out of the richest part of their Dominions, by the Amerites: and as for the Ammonites, their Countrie lay altogether out of the way, and the strength of Sehon and Og Kings of the Amorites, was interjacent: and besides that, the border of the Ammonites was strong, by reafon of the mountaines which divided it from Bafan. Againe, that which moved the Num.c. 21.12.24

uer the strength of these later named nations, which descended from Abraham, were great: yet it is not vnlikely, but that some reason which moved them not to favour

30 Moabites in their owner eason not much to interrupt I/rael, in the conquest of Sehon the Amorite, and of Og his Confederate, was that the Moabites might hope after such time as the Amorites were beaten by Moles, that themselves might recover againe their owne inheritance: to wit, the Vallies and Plaines lying betweene the mountaines of Arabia and Iordan: But as soone as Sehon was slaine, and that the King of Moab.

Month Balac, perceived that Moles allotted that valley to the Tribes of Gad and Ruben, the began to practife with Balaam against Ifrael, and by the Daughters of Mi dian; as aforesaide, to allure them to Idolatrie; and thus at length the Moabites by specialloccasion were more and more stirred up to enmitte against Ifrael. And as for divers of the rest that were descended from Abrahams kindred, wee may note how in the beginning, betweene the Authors of their Petigrees, God permitted fome enmities to be as it were presages of future quarrells, which in the posteritie might bee the eafter incenfed, by the memorie of oldegrudges: and withall by forme diffaine from the elder in nature to the yonger. For the ismaelites being descended from the eldest forme of Abraham, and the Edomites from the eldest some of Mane, Tacob he ing but a fecond fonne, of a fecond brother, those Princes which were descended of the elder Houles being naturall men, might scorne to give place, much lesse to subiect themselves, to their inferiours, as they tooke it, and for a more aggravation the iffues of E/au Princes of Edumea, might keepe in record that their Parent was bought out of his birth-right by Iacobs taking his advantage, and that he was deceived of his Fathers bleffings also by him; and that Iacob after reconciliation came not vnto him as he promised into Seir or Iduman.

So also in the posteritie of Ismael, it might remaine as a seede or pretence of enmitie.that their fore-father was by the infligation of Sara, cast out into the Defart, with his Mother Hagar : and had therein perished, but that it pleased God by his Angel 20 to relieue them. Ismaelalso had an Agyptian both to his Mother and to his Wife: 1 and Amales was also an Horite by his Mother : which Horites were of the ancient Canaanites. The Edumeans also, or Edomites, were by their Maternall line descended of the Canaanites. For Efau tooketwo Wives of that Nation : one of them was A. dath, the Daughter of Elou, the Hittite, and the other Aholibamah, the grand childof Zibeon the Heuite, Lord of Seir, before the same was conquered by Esau, and called after his name, Edom, or Edumaa.

Lastly, it appeareth that all those families of the Ismaelites, Amalekites, Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, &c. were in processe of time corrupted, and drawne from the knowledge and worship of God, and became Idolaters, infected and seduced by the 30 conversation of those people among whom they dwelt, and by those Wives of the Canaanites which they had married : onely a few of the Kenites and those Madianites, which inhabited on the edge of the Red Sea, whereof Iethro was Priest, or Prince, or both, worshipped the true and euer-lining God.

> Of the Kings of the Canaanites and Madianites, mentioned in the ancient Warres of the Israelites.

F the Kings of the Canaanites, descended of Cham, (for Melchizedek 40 may be thought to be of a better Petigree) wee finde foure named by Moses: and one and thirtie remembred by Iosua, though few of these named, otherwise than by the Cities ouer which they commanded: to which each of them had a small Territorie adioyning, and no other

Dominion. These Cananites in a generall consideration are to be understood for all those Nations, descended of Chamby Canaan, as the Hittites, Iebusites, Amorites, Gergesites, Heuites, &c. and so heere wee understand this name in speaking of the Kings of the Canaanites: and so also we call the Countrie of their habitation, the holy Land, or the Land of promise: for God had appointed that the seuen principal! Families should bee rooted out: and that his owne people should inherite their Lands and 50 Cities. But if wee consider of the Name and Nation in particular, then is their proper habitation bounded by Iordan, on the East, and by the Mediterran Sea on the West: in which narrow Countrie, and in the choisest places thereof, those Canaanites which held their Paternall name chiefly inhabited. The

of the Historie of the World. CHAP.6. S.2.

The first King of these Nations, named in the Scriptures, was Hamor or Hemor, of Gen. 24. the Heuites, whom Simeon and Leui flew, together with his Sonne Sichem, in reuenge of their Sisters rauishment.

Arad was the second King which the Scriptures have remembred, who had that part of Canaan towards the South, neighbouring Edom and the Dead Sea; the same which surprised Ifrael, as they incamped in the Wildernesse in the edge of Edu- Num.21.1.

The third named was Sehon King of Effebon, who before Moses arrivall had beaten the Moabites out of the West part of Arabia Petres or Nabathea, and thrust them Numatica 10 ouer Arnon intake Defarts, the same whom Moses ouer-threw in the plaines of Moab: at which time he tooke Essebon, and all the Cities of the Amorites.

Presently after which victorie, og was also slaine by Israel, who commaunded the North part of that Valley betweene the Mountaines Traconi or Galaad and Iordan, Numarias. who was alfoa King of the Amorites.

The fift was Adonizedek King of the Iebusites, and of Hierusalem, with whom Io-Ganameth foure other Kings.

Deber, King of Eglon, who were all Amorites ouerthrowne in battell: and hanged 10fua. 10. 20 by Iofua. After this overthrow Iofua nameth Iabin, King of Hazor, and Tobab, King of Madon: whom he also slaughtered, and tooke his Cities: and this Idin feemed to have fome Dominion over the rest, for it is said in the Text, For Issue, I.v.o. HAZOR before-times was the head of all those Kingdomes.

After these Adonibezek that notorious Tyrant is named: who confest that he had cut off the thumbs of the hands, and feete, of 70. Kings, inforcing them to gather Ind. 1. Tofebblib. crummes vnder his Table: who, after Iuda and Simeon had vsed the same exequition 5,049,2. vpon himfelfe, acknowledged it to be a just revenge of God: this King was carried to Hierusalem where he died.

The last King named is Tabin the second, who as it seemeth had rebuilt Hazor, 20 burnt by Iofus. For at such time as he imploied Sifara against Ifrael, whom hee oppresit twentie yeeres, after the death of Ehud, He inhabited Hazor. This Iabin, Barac Iud. 4. ### d. 111. of the Amalekites and Ismaelites.

E F the Kings of the Amalekites and Ismaelites, I finde few that are named, and though of the Ismaelites there were more in number than of the rest (for they were multiplied into a greater Nation, according to 40 the promise of God made unto Abraham) yet the Amalekites, who together with the Midianites were numbred among them, were more renowned in Mosestime than the rest of the Ismaelites. So also were they when Saul gouerned Ifrael. For Saul pursued them from Sur vnto Hauilah, to wit, over a great part of Arabia Petraa, and the Defart. The reason to me seemeth to beethis: That the twelue Princes which came of Ismael, were content to leave those barren Desarts of Arabia Petraa, called Sur, Paran, and Sin, to the iffue of Abraham by Cetura, that joyned with them (for so seeme the Amalekites to have beene, and so were the Madianites:) themselves taking possession of a better soile in Arabia the Happie, and about the Mountaines of Galaad in Arabia Petrea. For Nabaioth the eldest of those twelve Princes planted that part of Arabia Petrea, which was very fruitfull though adiouning to the Defart, in which Mofes wandred, afterward called Nabathea: the fame which neighboureth Iudea on the East side. They also peopled a Prouince in Arabia the Happie, whereof the people were in after-times called Napathei (B) changcdinto(P).

Kedar, the second of Ismaels Sonnes, gave his owne name to the East part of Basan, or Batanea, which was afterward posselt by Manasse, so much thereof as lay within the Mountaines Traconi, or Gilead. Which Nation Lampridius calleth Kedarens and Plinie Cedraans.

Of Duma were the Dumeans, betweene the Adubens and Raabens: where the Citie Dumeth sometimes stood.

Of Massa the Massani, and of Hadar, or Chadar the Athrite, who bordered the Nanatheans in the same Happie Arabia.

Thema begat the Themaneans, among the Arabian Mountaines, where also the Ciric of Thema is seared.

Of Naphri the Nubeian Arabians: inhabiting Syriz Zoba: ouer whom Adadezer Plin.1.6.c.28. commanded, while Danid ruled Israel.

Cadma, the last and twelfth of Ismaels sonnes, was the Ancestor of the Cadmoneans: who were afterward called Asta: because they worshipped the fire with the Baby- Innius.

The Amalekites gave their Kings the name of sigag, as the significant the name of Pharaoh to theirs, and the ancient Syrians Adad to theirs, and the Arabian Nabatheans, Aretas, as Names of Honour.

The Amalekites were the first that fought with Moses, after he past the Red Sea: Exod.17. when of all times they flourished most, and yet were vanquished.

Afterward they joyned with the Canaanites, and beate the Ifraelites neere Cades- Num. 14. barne. After the Government of Othoriel, they toyned them with the Monbites: after Barac with the Madianites: and invaded Ifrael. God commanded that as soone as ifrael had rest; they should roote out the name of the Amilekites: which Saul exequuted in part, when hee wasted them from the border of Agypt, to the border of Chaldas: from Hanilah to Shur.

In Davids time they tooke Siklag in Simeon: but David followed them, and surprised , Sameso. them, recovering his prisoners and spoiles. And yet, after David became King, they 2, Sam. 8, 12. againe vexed him, but to their owne loffe.

In Ezekias time as many of them as joyned to Edumaa were wasted and displanted x.chron.a. 40 by the children of Simeon.

Augustine have observed, that Prometheus flourished : Quem proptered ferunt de luto formasse homines, quia optimus sapientia Doctor fuisse perhibetur : Of whom it is reported that he formed men out of clay, because he was an excellent teacher of Wisedome: and fo Theophrastus expoundeth the invention of fire ascribed to PROMETHEVS. Stone, and Clay: meaning that before his birth and being, those people among whom hee lived had nothing elfe worthy of men, but externall forme and figure. By that fiction of Prometheus, being bound on the top of the Hill Caucasus, his entrailes the while deuoured by an Engle, was meant the inward care and restlesse desire hee had to inuestigate the Natures, Motions, and Influences of Heauenly bodies, for so it is sayde: Ideo altissimum ascendisse Caucasum, vt serene calo quam longissme aftra, signorum obitus & ortus spectaret; That hee ascended Cau-20 casus, to the end that hee might in a cleere skie discerne a farre off the settings and rijings of the Starres: though Diedorus Siculus expound it otherwise, and others

Africanus makes Prometheus farre more ancient, and but 94. yeeres after Ogyges. Porphyrius sayes that hee lived at once with Inachus, who lived with

There lived also at once with Moses, that famous Atlas, brother to Promethem, both being the Sonnes of Ispetus, of whom though it bee saide, that they were borne before Moses dayes, and therefore are by others esteemed of a more an- 50 cient date: yet the advantage of their long lives gave them a part of other ages among Men, which came into the World long after them. Besides these Somnes of lapetus, Alchylus findes two other, to wir, Oceanus, and Hesperus, who being famous in the West, gauename to the Euening, and so to the enening Starre. Also besides this Atlas of Libya or Mauritania, there were others. which bare the fame name : but of the Libyan, and the brother of Prometheus, it was that those Mountaines which crosse Africa, to the South of Marocco, Sus, and Hea, with the Sea adioyning tooke name, which memoric Plato in Criticas bellowes on Atlas, the Sonne of Neptune.

Cicero in the fifth of his Tusculan questions, affirmeth that all things written of prometheus and Atlas, were but by those names to expresse diume knowledge. Nes verò ATLAS sustinere cœlum, nec PROMETHEVS as fixus Caucaso, nec fiellatus CE-PHEVS sumVxore traderetur, nisi diuina cognitio nomen corum ad errorem fabula tra-10 duxiffet; Neither should ATLAs bee faid to beare up heaven, nor PROMETHEVS to be taftened to Caucasus, nor CEPHEVS with his Wife to bee fellefied; unleffe their divine knowledge had raised upon then names these erroneous fables.

Orpheus sometime exprest Time by Prometheus, sometime hee tooke him for Saturne; as Rhea conius alme Promethen. But that the floric of Promethens was not altogether a fiction; and that he lived about this time, the most approved Historians and Antiquaries, and among them Eulebius and S. Augustine have not doubted, For the great judgement which Atlas had in Astronomie, faith S. Nd in this age of the World, and while Moses yet lived, Deucalion raigned in Theffalie, Crotopus then ruling the Argines. This Deucalion clem. Alex, strom was the Sonne of Prometheus, faith Herodotus, Apollonius, Hesiodus, and lib.z. Strabo. Hesiodus gauc him Pandora for Mother; the rest Clymene: Homer Strabo.lib.g. in the fifteenth of his Odyfees makes Deucalion the Sonne of Minos: but 40 he must needes have meant some other Deucalion; for else either Vlysses was mistaken, or Homer, who put the tale into his mouth. For Vlyfes after his returne from Troy fained himselfe to beethe brother of Idomeneus, who was sonne to this later Deucalion, the sonne of Minos: but this Minos lived but one age before Troy was taken: (for Idomeneus ferued in that Warre) and this Deucalion the Sonne of Prometheus, who lived at once with Moses, was long before. In the first Deucalions time happened that great in undation in Thessalie. by which in effect every soulc, in those parts, perished, but Deucalion, Pyrrha his Wife, and some few others. It is affirmed that at the time of this floud in Thessalie, those people exceeded in all kinde of wickednesse and villanie: and as the impietic of men is the forcible attractine of Gods vengeance, 50 so did all that Nation for their foule sinnes perish by waters: as in the time of Noah, the corruption and crueltie of all mankinde drew on them that generall destruction by the floud Vniucrfall. Only Deucalion, and Pyrrha his wife, whom God spared, were both of them escemed to bee louers of Vertue, of Iustice and of Religion. Of whom ouid:

Hieronymo.

No man was better, nor more iust than hee: Norany Woman godlier than shee.

It is also affirmed that Prometheus fore-told his sonne Deucalion of this over-flowing; and aduised him to prouide for his safetie: who hecreupon prepared himselfea kindeof Vessell, which Lucian in his Dialogue of Timon calls Cibotium; and others Larnax. And because to these circumstances, they afterward adde the sending out 10 of the Doue, to discouer the Waters fall and decrease, I should verily thinke that this Storie had beene but an imitation of Noahs floud deuised by the Greekes, did not the times fo much differ, and S. Augustine with others of the Fathers and reuerent Writers approue this storic of Deucalion. Among other his children Deucalion had these two of note, Hellen of whom Greece had first the name of Hellas, and Melantho, on whom Neptane is faid to have begot Delphus, which gave name to Delphos, forenowned among the Heathen for the Oracle of Apollo therein founded.

And that which was no leffe strange and maruallous than this floud, was that great burning and conflagaration which about this time also happened vnder Phaeton; not onely in £thiopia, but in Istria, a Region in Italie, and about Cuma, and the 20 Mountaines of Velunius : of both which the Greekes, after their manner, haue inuented many strange fables.

è. VI. of HERMES TRISMEGISTYS.

Vt of all other which this age brought foorth among the Heathen, Mercurius was the most famous, and renowned; the same which was also called Trismezistus, or Ter maximus; and of the Greekes Hermes.

Many there were of this name; and how to distinguish, and set them in their owne times, both S. Augustine and Lastantius findeit difficult. For that Mercurie which was esteemed the God of Thecues, the God of Wreftlers, of Merchants, and Sea-men, and the God of Eloquence (though all by one name confounded) was not the same with that Mercurie, of whose many workes some fragments are now extant.

Cicero, Clemens Alexandrinus, Arnobius, and certaine of the Greekes reckon fiue Mercuries. Of which, two were famous in Agypt, and there worshipped; one, the Sonne of Nilus, whose name the Agyptians feared to vtter, as the lewes did their Tetragrammaton; the other, that Mercurie, which flew Argus in Greece, and flying 40 into Agypt, is said to haue deliuered literature to the Agyptians, and to haue given them Lawes. But Diodorus affirmeth, that Orpheus, and others after him, brought learning and letters out of Agypt into Greece: which Platoalfo confirmeth, faying; That letters were not found out by that Mercurie which flew Argus, but by that ancient Mercurie, otherwise Theuet; whom Philo Biblius writeth Taautus; the Agyptians Thoyth; the Alexandrians That; and the Greekes (as before) Hermes, Andto this Taautus, Sanconiatho, who lived about the Warre of Troy, gives the invention of letters. But S. Augustine making two Mercuries, which were both Egyptians, calls neither of them the sonne of Nilus, nor acknowledgeth either of them to have slaine Argus. For he findsthis Mercurie, the flayer of Argus, to be the grand-child of that 50 Atlas, which lived while Moses was yet yong. And yet L. Viues vpon S. Augustine feemes to understand them to bee the same with those, whom Cicero, Alexandrinus, and the rest haue remembred. But that coniecture of theirs, that any Gracian Mercurie brought letters into Egypt, hath no ground. For it is manifest, (if there bee

any truth in prophane antiquitie) that all the knowledge which the Greekes had, was transported out of Agypt or Phanicia; and not out of Grecce, nor by any Gracian into Agypt. For they all confesse, that Cadmus brought letters first into Baotia. either out of Egypt, or out of Phanicia: it being true, that betweene Mercurius. that lined at once with Moses, and Cadmus, there were these descents cast; Crotopus King of the Argines, with whom Mofes lined, and in whose time about his tenth veere Moses died; after Crotopus, Sthenelus who raigned eleuen yeeres; after him Danaus fiftie yeeres; after him Lynceus : in whose time, and after him in the time of Minos King of Crete, this Cadmus arrived in Baotia. And therefore it cannot be true. that any Mercurius about Moles his time, flying out of Greece for the flaughter of Areus, brought literature out of Greece into Egypt. Neither did either of those two Mercuries of Agypt, whom S. Augustine remembreth, the one the grand-father, the other the Nephew or grand child, come out of Greece. Eupolemus and Artapanus note, that Moses found out Letters and taught the vie of them to the lewes; of whom the Phanicians their Neighbours received them; and the Greekes of the Phanicians by Cadmus. But this invention was also ascribed to Moses, for the reason before remembred; that is, because the Iewes and the Phanicians had them first from him. For cuery Nation gaue vnto those menthe honour of first Inuentors, from whom they received the profit. Ficinus makes that Mercurie, vpon part of whose 20 workes he Commenteth, to have beene foure descents after Moses; which he hath out of Virgil, who calls Atlas, that lived with Moles, the maternall grand-father of Virgil Ab. 4.40 the first famous Mercurie, whom others, as Diodorus, call the Counsailer and Instru-neid. ther of that renowned Isis, wife of Osiris. But Ficinus gineth no reason for his opini- Ficin.in Presat. on herein. But that the elder Mercurie instructed Isis, Diodorus Siculus affirmeth, and Pamand. Merthat such an inscription was found on a piller creeted on the Tombe of Iss. Lod. Viues vpon the fixe and twentieth Chapter of the eighth Booke of S. Augustine, De Civitate Dei, conceineth, that this Mercurie, whose workes are extant, was not the first which was entituled, Ter maximus, but his Nephew or grand-child. * Sancho-niatho. See Enniaton, an ancient Phænician, who lived (hortly after Moses, hath other fancies of this fib. de prap.E-30 Mercurie; affirming that hee was the Scribe of Saturne, and called by the Phanicians, unng. lib.i.e. 6. Taustus; and by the Egyptians Thost, or Thoyt. It may bee, that the many yeeres vines in Hb. 8.c. which he is said to haue lived, to wit, three hundred yeeres, gave occasion to some 26 Aug. de Cinit. Writers to finde him in one time, and to others in other times. But by those which have collected the grounds of the Egyptian Philosophic and Divinitie, he is found more ancient than Mofes: because the Inventor of the Egyptian Wisedome, wherein it is faid, that Moses was excellently learned. It is true, that although this Mercurie or Hermes doth in his Divinitie differ in many particulars from the Scriptures, especially in the approuing of Images, which Moles of all things most detested; yet who soeuer shall read him with an even judge-40 ment, will rather resoluc, that these workes which are now extant, were by the Greekes and Agyptian Priests corrupted, and those fooleries inserted, than that ever they were by the hand of Hermes written, or by his heart and Spirit deuised. For there is no man of understanding, and master of his owne wits, that hath affirmed in one and the same Tract, those things which are directly contrarie in doctrine, and in nature: For out of doubt ( Moses excepted) there was neuer any man of those elder times that hath attributed more, and in a stile more reuerend and divine, vnto almightie God, than he hath done. And therefore if those his two Treatises, now among vs; the one converted by Apuleius, the other by that learned Ficinus, had beene found in all things like themselues: I thinke it had not beene perilous to hauc 50 thought with Eupolemus, that this Hermes was Moles himselfe; and that the Ægyptian Theologie hecreafter written, was devised by the first, and more ancient Mercurie, which others have thought to have beene Ioseph, the sonne of Iacob: whom, after the exposition of Pharaohs dreames, they called Saphanet phane, which is as much to fay, as ab (conditorum repertor; A finder out of hidden things. But these are ouer-ven-turous opinions. For what this man was, it is knowne to God. Enuie and aged time hath partly defaced, and partly worne out the certaine knowledge of him: of whom, wholoeuer he were, Lastantius writeth in this fort : Hic scripsit libros, & anidem multos, ad cognitionem diuinarum rerum pertinentes, in quibus Maicstatem summi ac singularis Dei afferit, if demg, nominibus appellat, quibus nos, Deum & Patrem; Hee hath written many Bookes belonging to, or expressing the knowledge of divine things, in which he affirmeth the Maiestie of the most High and one God , calling him by the same names of God and Father, which we doe. The same Father also feareth not to number him among the Sybils and Prophets. And so contrary are these hisacknowledgements to those Idolatrous fictions of the Egyptians and Gracians, as for my selfe I am perswaded, to that what soener is found in him contrary thereunto, was by corruption inserted. For thus much himselfe confesseth: Deusomnium Dominus, & Pater, fons & vita. Dotentia & lux, & mens, & Spiritus ; & omnia in ipfa, & fub ipfo funt. Verbum cnim ex eius elle prodiens, perfectissimum existens, & generator & opifex, &c. God (faith hee) the Lord and Father of all things, the fountaine, and life, and power, and light, and minde. and Spirit; and all things are in him and under him. For his Word out of him (elfe proceeding being most perfect, and generative, and operative, falling upon fruitfull nature, made it also fruitfull and producing. And he was therefore (faith Suidas) called Ter maximus, quia de Trinitate loquutus est: in Trinitate unum esse Deum afferens; Because he spake of the Trinitie, affirming that there is one Godin Trinitie. To this I will only adde his two last speeches reported by Calcidius the Platonist, and by Volateran out of SVYDAS. Hactenus filipulsus à patria, vixi peregrinus & exul, nunc incolumis repeto : cumá, post paulum à vobis corporeis vinculis absolutus discessero, videtote ne me quasi mortuum lugeatis: N am ad illam optimam beatamá, Ciustatem regredior: ad quam vninersi cines mortis conditone venturi sunt. Ibi nama lolus Deus est 29 Jummus Princeps: qui ciues suos replet suauitate mirifica: ad quam hac, quam multi vitam existimant, mors est potins dicenda quam vita; Hitherto, O Sonne, being driven from my Country, I have lived a stranger and banished man; but now I am repairing home-ward againe in safety. And when I shall after a few dayes (or in a short time ) by being loosed from these bonds of flesh and bloud depart from you, see that you doe not bewaile me as a man dead, for I doe but returne to that best and blessed Citie, to which all her Citizens (by the condition of death) (hall repaire. Therein is the onely God, the most high and chiefe Prince, who filleth or feedeth his Citizens with a sweetnesse more then marueilous: in regard whereof this being which others call a life, is rather to bee accounted a death then a life. The other and that which seemeth to be his last, is thus converted by others, agreeing in sense but 40 not in words with Svy DAs. O calum magni Dei sapiens opus, teg, O vox patris quam ille primam emisit, quando vniuersum constituit mundum, adiuro per vnigenitum cius verbum, & Spiritum cuncta comprehendentem, miseremini mei; Iadiure thee O heauen, thou wife worke of the great God, and thee O voyce of the Father, which he first uttered, when hee framed the whole world, by his onely begotten Word, and Spirit, comprehending all things, Haue mercie voon mee.

But as some vertues and some vices are so nicely distinguished, and so resembling each other, as they are often confounded, and the one taken for the other: (religion and superstition having one face and countenance) so did the workes and workings of Moles, and of Pharaos Sorcerers appeare in outward shew, and to the beholders of common capacities, to bee one and the same art and gift of knowledge. For the Deuill changeth himselfe into an Angel of light: and imitateth in all he can the wayes and workings of the most High. And yet on the contrary every worke which furmounteth the wisedome of most men, is not to bee condemned as performed by the helpe or ministerie of ill Spirits. cules, according to Philostratus, which came to Gades, whom he calleth an Agyptian; Manifestum fit, non Thebanum HERCVLEM, sed Ægyptium ad Gades peruenisse, er ibi finem statuisse terra ( saith PHILOSTRATUS; ) It is manifest that it was the Agyptian HERCVLES, and not the Theban, which travailed as farre as the freights of Gades. and there determined the bounds of the earth. In this time also while Moles wandered in the Defarts, Dardanus built Dardania.

But who focuer they were, or how worthy focuer they were that lived in the dayes and age of Moses, there was never any man, that was no more than man, by whom it pleased God to worke greater things; whom he fauoured more; to whom (according to the appearing of an infinite God) hee so often appeared; neuerany to man more familiar and conversant with Angels; neuer any more learned both in Diuine and Humane knowledge; neuer a greater Prophet in Ifrael. He was the first that received and delivered the Law of God entire; the first that left to posteritie by letters, the trueth and power of one infinite God; his creating out of nothing the World vniuerfall, and all the creatures therein; that taught the detectation of idolatry, and the punishment, vengeance, and eradication, which followed it.

Syracides calleth Moles the beloued of God and Men, whose remembrance is bleffed. He made him (faith the same Author) like to the glorious Saints, and magnified him by the feare of his enemies, made him glorious in the light of Kings, shewed him his glorie, caused him to heare his voyce, sanctified him with faith sulnesse and meekenesse, and chose him 20 out of all men.

He is remembred among prophane Authors; as by Clearchus the Peripatetick : by Megastenes, and Numenius the Pythagorian. The long lives which the Patriarchs enioved before the floud, remembred by Moses, Estieus, Hieronymus Agyptius, Heestans, Elanicus, Acusilaus, Ephorus, and Alexander the Historian, confirme. The vniuerfall floud which God reucaled vnto Moses, Berosus, Nicolaus Damascenus, and others have testified. The building of the Tower of Babel, and confusion of tongues. Abydenus, Estieus, and Sybilla have approved. Berosus also honoureth Abraham. Hecateus wrote a Booke of him. Dama/cenus before cited, speaketh of Abrahams passage from Damascus into Canaan, agreeing with the bookes of Moses. Eupolemon writeth 30 the very same of Abraham, which Moses did. For beginning with the building of Babel, and the ouerthrow thereof by divine power, hee faith that Abraham, bornein the tenth generation, in the Citie called Camerina, or Vrien, excelled all men in wifedome: and by whom the Aftrologic of the Chaldeans was invented. Is institute pietateg, sua ( faith Eusebius out of the same Anthor) sic Deo gratus fuit, vt divino pracepto in Phanicem venerit, ibig habitauerit; For his inflice and piety bee was fo pleasing vnto God, as by his commandement he came into Phanicia, and dwelt there. Likewise Diodorus Sisulus in his second Booke and fifth Chapter speaketh reuerently of Moses: There are many other among prophane Authors, which confirme the Bookes of Moles, as Eusebius hath gathered in the ninth of his Preparation to the Gospel, Chapter the third 40 and fourth, to whom I referre the Reader. Laftly, I cannot but for some things in it commend this notable testimony of Strabe, who writeth of Moses in these wordes. Mose senim affirmabat, docebat g. Egyptios non recte fentire, qui bestiarum & pecorum imagines Deo tribuerunt : itemá, Afros & Gracos, qui Dijs hominum figuram af finxerunt : id verò solumesse Deum, quod nos & terram & mare continet, quod cœlum & mundum, & verum omnium naturam appellamus : cuius profecto imaginem, nemo sanamentis, alicuius earum rerum, que penes nos sunt, similem audeat effingere. Temple and place of prayer was to bee erested vuto bim, and he to be worshipped without any figure at all therein.

Now concerning the Agyptian wisedome, for which the Martyr Stephen commended Moles, saying, That Moses was learned in all the wisedome of the Agyptians, and was mighty in his workes and words; the same is collected (how truly I know not) by Diodorus , Diogenes Laertius, Iamblicus, Philo Iudaus, and Eusebius Casariensis , and divided into foure parts, viz. Mathematicall, Naturall, Divinc, and Morall.

In the Mathematicall part, which is diftinguished into Geometrie, Astronomie, Arithmetike, and Musicke; the ancient Agyptians excelled all others. For Geometry which is by interpretation, measuring of grounds, was viefull vato them: because it confifting of infallible principles, directed them certainely in bounding out their proper Lands, and Territories, when their fields and limits, by the inundations of Nihus, were yeerely overflowne and confounded, so as no man could know what in

For the second part, to wit, Astronomie, the site of the Countrey being a leuell and spacious Plaine, free and cleere from cloudes, yeelded them delight with ease, in obferning and contemplating the rifings, fallings, and motions of the Starres.

Arithmeticke also, which is the knowledge of numbers, they studied; because without it, in Geometrie and Astronomie, nothing can be demonstrated or concluded. But of Musicke they made no other account, nor defired farther knowledge, than seemed to them sufficient to serue and magnisse their Gods, their Kings, and good Men.

The Naturall part of this Wisedome, which handleth the principles, causes, elements, and operations of naturall things, differs little from Peripateticall Philosophie; teaching, that Materia prima is the beginning of all things; that of it all mixt bodies and living creatures have their beeing; that Heaven is round like a Globe; that all Starres have a certaine fouent heate, and temperate influences, whereby all things grow and are produced; that raines proceede and bee from mutations in the ayre; that the Planets have their proper soules,&c.

The Dinine part of this wisedome, which is called Theologie, teacheth and belee-20 ueth that the world had a beginning, and shall perish; that men had their first originall in Agypt; partly by meanes of the temperatenesse of that Countrey, where neither Winter with cold, nor Summer with heate are offenline, and partly through the fertilitie, that Nilus gineth in those places; That the soule is immortall, and hath transmigration from body to body; That God is one, the Father and Prince of all Gods; and that from this God, other Gods are, as the Sunne and Moone, whom they worshipped by the names of Osiris and Iss, and erected to them Temples, Statues, and divers Images, because the true similitudes of the Gods is not knowne; that many of the Gods have been in the estate of mortall men, and after death, for their vertues, and benefits bestowed on mankinde, haue beene Deisied; that those beastes, whose Images and formes the Kings did carrie in their Armes, when they obtained victory, were adored for Gods: because vnder those Ensignes they preuailed ouer their enemies. Moreover, the Egyptian Divines had a peculiar kinde of writing, mysticall and secret, wherein the highest points of their Religion and worship of God, which was to bee concealed from the vulgar fort, were ob-

Epistolar, which is vsed in writing common Epistles; Sacerdotall, which is peculiar to their Priests; and Sacred; which Sacred containeth Scripture of two kindes: the one proper, which it expressed by letters Alphabeticall in ob-30 scure and figurative wordes; as for example, where it is written: The Ibis by the Hornet participateth the beauty of the Hawke; which is read thus: The Moone doth by the Sunne borrow part of the light of God: because Light is an Image of Divine beauty; the other symbolicall, or by signatures, which is three-fold, viz. racters, like to the things fignified, as by a Circle the Sunne; and by the Hornes of the Moone, the Moone it selfe: Tropicall or transferent, which applies the diners formes and figures of naturall bodies or creatures, to fignific the dignities, fortunes, conditions, vertues, vices, affections, and actions of their Gods and of men. So with the Egyptian Divines, the Image of an Hawke signifieth God, the figure of the Hornet signifieth the Sunne, the picture of the Bird Ibis signifieth the Moone: by the forme of a Man. Prudence and Skilfulnesse: by a Lion, Fortitude: by a Horse. Libertie: by a Crocodile, Impudencie: by a Fish, Hatred is to be vnderstood: A. nygmaticallisa composition or mixture of Images or Similitudes: in which sense. the monstrous Image of a Lions body having a Mans head, was graven on their 10 Temples and Altars, to fignifie, that to men all divine things are Ænygmaticall and obscure. So the Image of the Sunne set on the head of a Crocodile. (which liueth aswell in the Waters, as on Land) expresseth that the Sunne nourisheth Meteors in the Ayre, aswell from the Waters as from the Earth. So a Scepter, at the top whereof is made an Eye, and an Eare, fignifieth God, Hearing, Seeing and Gouerning all things. The Scythians are thought to have been delighted with this kinde of writing. For Pherecides Syrius reporteth, That when Darius sending letters, threatned Idanthura, King of the Scythians, with ruine and destruction of his Kingdome, vnlesse he would acknowledge subjection: Idanthura returned to him a Mouse, a Frog, a Bird, a Dart, and a Plough-share: which orontopagas, Tribune of 10 the Souldiers, interpreted to lignifie, that by the Mouse, their dwellings: by the Frog , their waters: by the Bird, their aire: by the Dart, their weapons: by the Plough, their lands: were signified to be ready to bee delivered to Darius, as their Soueraigne Lord. But Xyphodres made another construction, viz. that the King meant, That except Darius with his Men did hasten away, as a Bird through the avre, or creepe into holes as a Mouse, or runne into the waters which they had passedas a Frog, they should not escape his armes, but either bessaine, or being made Captines, Till his grounds. The same Historie is with little difference reported by

Herodotus. The fourth and last part, which is Morall and Politique, doth containeespecially 20 the Lawes, which (according to Laertius) Mercurius Trismegistus, or Ter Maximus deuised: who in his Bookes or Dialogues of Pimander and Asclepius, hath written so manythings of God, worthy of admiration; aswell (faith Sixtus Senensis ) of the Trinitie, and of the comming of Christ, as of the last and fearefull day of indgement: that (as faith the same Author, the opinion being also ancient) hee is not onely to be accounted a Philosopher, but a Prophet of things to come.

Iamblicus in his Booke's of Mysteries of the Egyptians, taking two very ancient Historians for his Authors, to wit, Seleucus and Menatus, affirmeth that this Mercurie was not only the Inventor of the Agyptian Philosophie, but of all other learning, called the Wisedome of the Agyptians before remembred: and that he wrote of that 40 subiect 36525. Bookes, or Pages. Of which there were numbred, of Fiery Spirits, one hundred Bookes; of Aercall Spirits as many, and of Spirits Celestiall a thousand; which because they were out of the Agyptian language converted by certaine learned Philosophers into the naturall Greeke, they seemed to have been first written in that Tongue. Clemens Alexandrinus writeth, that among the Bookes of Hermes, to wit, of the Wifedome of the Agyptians, there were extant in his time 26. of Physicke fixe bookes; of the orders of Priests ten; and of Astrologie foure.

Fter the death of Moles, and in the one and fortieth yeere of the Egresfion in the first moneth called N ifan, or March, lofua the sonne of Wun, of the Tribe of Ephraim, being filled with the Spirit of wisedome, tooke on him the Gouernment of Ifrael: God giving him comfort, and encouraging him to passe the River of Iordan, and to possesse, and

The beginning of lofus rule S. Augustine dates with the raigne of Amintas, the Lib.18.de Civit. eighteenth King in Assyria; with Corax the fixteenth King in Sicyonia, when Danaus

And as Moses beganne to distribute those Regions beyond Iordan, to wit, the Lands of the Amorites, which Og of Basan, and Sihon held, so did Iosua performe the reft; and after a view and partition made of the Territories, hee gaue to each Tribe his portion by lot. But this partition and distribution was not done at once, but at three seuerall times; first, by Moses to Gad, Ruben, and the halfe Tribe of Manalle. of the Lands ouer Iordan; Secondly, by Iosua, to the Tribe of Iuda, Ephraim, and the other halfe Tribe of Manaffe, about the fifth yeere of his government; proued in the 14. of Iofus. v. 10. and a third division was made to the other seven Tribes at

The victories of Iosua against the Kings of the Canaanites, are so particularly set to downe in his owne bookes, as I shall not neede to lengthen this part by their repetition. In whose Storie I chiefly note these particulars. First, how in the beginning of the warre, those little Kings or Reguir of the Cansanites, had not so much vnderstanding, as to vnite themselves together against the Ifraelites; but according to the custome of those estates, from whose. Gouernours God hath taken away all wisdome and fore-fight, they left those of their owne Nation, which were next the inuaders. to themselves, and to their ownedefences; hoping that the fire kindled somewhat farre off, might againe haue beene quenched, ere it could spread it selfe so far as their owne Territories and Cities. Butafter such time as lerico and Ai were entred, and the Kings, People, and Cities confumed; fine of those 31. Kings (all which at length 20 perished in that warre) ioyned themselues together, first attempting the Gibeonites. who had rendred themselues to Iolua. Onely fine (the rest looking on to see the succeffe) namely, the King of the lebusites, in lebus, or Hierusalem, the Kings of Hebron, larmoth, Lachis, and Eglon, address themselves for refistance: whose Armie being by Iosua surprised and broken, themselves despairing to scape by flight, and hopelesseof mercy by submission, creeping into a Caue vnder ground, were thence by Iosua drawne forth and hanged. In the prosequation of which victorie hee also tooke Makkedath, and Libnah, and Lachis. To the reliefe whereof Horam King of Gezar haltened, and perilhed. After which lofus possest himselfe of Eglon, Hebron, and Debir, destroying the Cities with their Princes.

In the end, and when the South Countries were possest, the Cities thereof conquered, and their Kings and People made dust: the rest of the Canaanites, guided by the ouer-late counsailes of necessitie, united themselues, to make one groffe strength and body of an Armie: which Isbin, King of Hazor, practifed and gathered together, by Iofuz discouered, as the same rested neere the Lake of Meron, hee vsed such disgence, as hee came on them vnawares; and obtaining an absolute victoric ouer them, he prolequited the same to the vttermost effect. And, besides the slaughter of the defendants, he entred their Cities, of which hee burnt Hazor only, referning the rest for I/rael to inhabite and enioy.

Secondly, I note, that Io (ua shewed himselfe a skilfull man of Warre, for that in 40 those ancient times he ysed the stratageme of an ambush in taking of Ai; and in that he broke the Armies of the first fluc Kings of the Amorites, which attempted Gibeon, by surprise. For he marched all night from his camp at Gilgal, and set on them early the next day, when they suspected no enemie at hand: as hee did also at Merom, when he overthrew labin, and his confederates. After which, making the best profit of his victoric, he affaulted the great Citie of Hazor.

Thirdly, the miracles which God wrought during this warre, were exceeding admirable; as the stay of the River Iordan at the Springs, so as the Armie of Ifrael past it with a drie foote; the fall of lerico by the found of the Hornes; the showres of Haile-stones, which fell voon the Amorites in their flight from Gibeon, whereby 50 more of them perished, than by the sword of Ifrael: againe, the arrest of the Sunne in the firmament, whereby the day was fo much the more lengthened, as the Ifraelites had time to execute all those, which fled after the ouerthrow: a wonder of wonders, and a worke onely proper to the all-powerfull God.

Fourthly, out of the passage betweene losus and the Gibeonites, the Doctrine of keeping Faith is fo plainly and excellently taught, as it taketh away all cualion, it admitteth no diftinction, nor leaueth open any hole or out-let at all to that cunning perfidiousnesse, and horrible deceit of this latter age, called Aquiuocation. For, notwithstanding that these Gibeonites were a people of the Heuites, expresly and by 10/9.7. name, by the commandement of God to be rooted out, and not with itanding that they were liers, and deceivers, and counterfeits, and that they did over-reach, and as it were, deride Iofus, and the Princes of Ifrael, by faining to bee fent as Embassadours from a farre Countrie, in which trauaile their clothes were worne: their bread mouldie, which they answed to have beene warme for newneffe when they first set out; their barrells and bottles of wine broken; their shoes patcht; and their facks rent and ragged : Yet Iosua having sworne vnto them by the Lord God of Iosa from the If rael, hee durft not, though vrged by the murmure of the people, to lay violent very handes on them; but hee spared both their Lives, and the Cities of their inhe-

Now if ever man had warrant to breake Faith, and to retract his promise made. lofua had it. For first, the commandement which her received from God to roote out this Nation among the reft preceded by farre the peace which hee had granted them. Secondly, he might justly have put these men to the sword, and have sackt their Cities; if there bee any cuasion from a promise made, whereof the living God is called to witnesse. For it was not to the Gibeonites that hee gaue peace, because hee knew them to bee a people hated of God. Hee told them, that if they 10/9.7. were of the Heuites, it was not in his power to make a league with them. But it was to a strange people that hee gave faith, and to a Nation which came from farre, who hearing of the wonders which the God of Ifrael had done in Agypt and ouer Iordan, fought for peace and protection from his people. Thirdly, the accord, 10,6,9,verf.14. which Israel made with these craftie Cansanites, was without warrant. For it is written in the same place. That the Israelites accepted their tale, that is, belowed 20 what they had faid, and counfailed not with the mouth of the Lord. Fourthly, thefe men who wereknowne Idolaters, and ferued those Puppers of the Heathen, men of an Apish Religion, as all Worshippers of Images are, could not challenge the witnesse of the true God, in whome they believed not. I say therefore, that if euer man might have ferued himfelfe by any cuasion or distinction, Josua might iustly have done it. For hec needed not in this case the helpe of Aquinocation, or Mentall Referuation. For what hee sware, hee sware in good Faith; but hee fware nothing, nor made any promise at all to the Gibeonites. And yet, to the pers of the Deuill. For it is not, as faithlesse men take it, that he which swearcth to a Man, to a Societic, to a State, or to a King, and sweareth by the name of the liuing Lord, and in his presence, That this promise (if it be broken) is broken to a Man, to a Societie, to a State, or to a Prince; but the promise in the name of God made, is broken to God. It is God, that wee therein neglect: wee therein professe that wee scare him not, and that we fet him at nought and defie him. If hee that without Refervation of honour giueth a lie in the presence of the King, or of his Superiour, doth in point 50 of Honour give the lie to the King himfelfe, or to his Superiour; how much more doth he breake Faith with God, that giveth Faith in the presence of God, promi-

his example, who knowing well, that the promifes hee made in the name of God, inuiolable, notwithstanding that they, to whom hee had sworne it, were worship-

40 were made to the liuing God, and not to the dying Man, hee held them firme, and

feth in his name, and makes him a witnesse of the Couenant made?

Out of doubt, it is a fearefull thing for a Sonne to breake the Promise, Will, or Deed of the Father; for a State, or Kingdome, to breake those Contracts which have beene made in former times, and confirmed by publique faith. For though it were 400. yeeres after Iofua, that Saul, euen out of denotion, flaughtered some of those people descended of the Gibeonites: yet God who forgat not what the Predecessours and Fore-fathers of Saul & the Israelites had sworne in his name. afflicted the whole Nation with a consuming famine; and could not be appealed. till seuen of Sauls sonnes were deliucred to the Gibeonites grieued, and by them hanged vp.

And certainly, if it be permitted by the helpe of a ridiculous distinction, or by a God-mocking equiuocation, to sweare one thing by the name of the living God. and to referve in silence a contrarie intent: the life of man, the estates of men, the 10 faith of Subiccts to Kings, of Servants to their Masters, of Vassalls to their Lords, of Wives to their Husbands, and of Children to their Parents, and of all trialls of right, will not onely be made vncertaine, but all the chaines, whereby freemen are tied in the world, be torne afunder. It is by oath (when Kings and Armies cannot paffe) that we enter into the Cities of our enemies, and into their Armies : it is by oath that warres take ende, which weapons cannot ende. And what is it or ought it to be that makes an oath thus powerfull, but this; That he that sweareth by the name of God, doth affure others that his words are true, as the Lord of all the World is true whom he calleth for a witnesse, and in whose presence he that taketh the oath hath promised? I am not ignorant of their poore enasions, which play 20 with the seucritie of Gods Commaundements in this kinde: But this indeed is the best answere, That he breakes no faith, that hath none to breake. For whosoeuer hath faith and the feare of God, dares not doe it.

The Christians in the Holie Land when they were at the greatest, and had brought the Caliph of Egypt to pay them tribute, did not only lose it againe, but were some after beaten out of the Holie Landit selfe: by reason (laith William of Tyre, a reuerend Bishop which wrote that storic) that Almerick the fiftieth King after Godfrer brake faith with the Caliph Elhadech, and his Vicegerent, The Soldan Sanar; who becing sodainely inuaded by Almerick, drew in the Turke Syracon to their aide: whose Nephew Seladine, after he had made Egypt his owne, beat the Christians out of 30 the Holie Land; neither would the woodden Croffe (the very Croffe, fay they that Christ died on) give them victorie over Seladine, when they brought it into the field as their last refuge: seeing they had for sworne themselves in his name, that was crucified thereon. And it it be a direction from the holy Ghost, That hee that speakethlies, shall be destroied, and that the mouth which ottereth them, slaieth the soule: how much more perilous is it (if any perill be greater than to destroy the soule) to fwearea lie? It was Eugenius the Pope, that perswaded, or rather commanded the King of Hungarie after his great victoric ouer Amurath the Turke, and when the faid King had compelled him to peace, the most advantagious that ever was made for the Christians, to breake his faith, and to prouoke the Turke to renew the warre. 40 And though the faid King was farre stronger in the field than euer; yet he lost the battaile with 30000. Christians, and his owne life. But I will stay my hand: For this first volume will not hold the repetition of Gods judgements vpon faith-breakers; bee it against Insidels, Turkes, or Christians of divers Religions. Lamentable it is, that the taking of oathes now-a-daies, is rather made a matter of custome than of conscience.

It is also very remarkeable; That it pleased God to leave so many Cities of the Canaanites vnconquered by Ifrael, to scourge and afflict them, by fore-seeing their Idolatrie, and as it is said in the Scriptures, To bee Thornes in their eies to proue them, 10/1.23. Indig. 1. o Indig. and to teach them to make Warre. For these Cities hereafter named did not onely 50 remaine in the Canaanites possession all the time of Iosua; but soone after his death, the Children of Dan were beaten out of the plaine Countries, and enforst to inhabite the Mountaines, and places of hardest accesse. And those of Iuda were not able to bee Masters of their owne Vallies; because, as it is written in the Judges, The Canaanites had Chariots of yron. And those principall Cities Indianage which stood on the Sca-side, adioyning vnto Iuda, were still held by the remainder of the Anakims, or Philistims : as Azzab, Gath, Aldod; out of one of which Cities came lof. 11. 10.19. Goliath, remembred in Samuel.

Neither did the children of Manaffe over Iordan expell the Gefburites, nor the Manchathites: which inhabited the North parts of Basan, afterward Traconitis.

Nor the Nepthalims possesse themselves of Beth/hems/h: nor of Bethanah, but they 19/13.2.13. intorst those Canaanites to pay them tribute. Neither did Asher expell the Zido. nians, nor those of Acho, or Acon, Athlab, Achzib; Heblah, Aphike, and Rehob, nor in- Ind 1.0.31. 10 force them to tribute.

No more could Zabulon enjoy Kitron, and Nabalol, but received tribute from them. Also the Canaanites dwelt in Gezer among the Ephraims: and among the chil- 14,16.10.10. dren of Manaffe, on the West of Iordan, the Canaanites held Bethfhean, Tacnach, Dor, 16- 1110,2,0,27. leam, and Meggado; yea Hierusalemit selfe did the Iebusites defend about foure hundred veeres, euen till Danids time.

Now Iofualized one hundred and ten yeeres, eighteene of which he gouerned Israel, and then changed this life for a better. The time of his rule is not expressed in the Scriptures, which causeth divers to coniecture diversly of the continuance. losephus gives him five and twentie yeeres, Seder Ollam Rabbithe Authors of the He-20 brew Chronologie eight and twentie: And Masseus fixe and twentie: Maimonius cited by Maßrus, fourteene: Ioannes Lucidus, seuenteene: Caietanus, ten: Eusebius giueth him seuen and twentie : and so doth S. Augustine : Melanethon, two and thirtie : Codoman, fine and twentie. But whereas there passed 480. yeeres from the delinerance of Israel out of Egypt, vnto the building of the Temple, it is necessarie that wee allow to losus onely eighteene of them; as finding the rest supplied otherwife, which to mee seemes the most likely, and as I thinke, a well approoued opinion.

The same necessitie of retaining precisely 480. yeeres from the departure out of Egypt vnto the building of the Temple, convinceth of errour, such as have infer-30 ted yeeres betweene losus and Othoniel, of whom Eusebius findes eight yeere, to Euseb.Prap.Ewhich Arius Montanus adhereth; and for which hee gineth his reason in his foure "ang. and twentieth and last Chapters vpon Iosua: Bunting reckons it nine yeere: Bucholzer and Reusner but one, Codoman twentie, and Nicephorus no lesse than three and thirtie : whereas following the fure direction of these 480. yeeres, there can be no void yeeres found betweene Tofus and Othoniel, vnleffe they be taken out of those eighteen aferibed vnto Iosua by the account alreadic specified. The prayses and acts of Iosua are briefly written in the fixe and fortieth Chapter of Ecclefiafticus, where among many other things it is faid of him, Who was there before him like to him, for hee fought the battells of the Lord?

40 That he wrote the booke called by this name, it was the opinion of Arius Montanus, because it is said in the last Chapter ver. 26. And I o s v A wrote these wordes in the booke of the law of God: which seemeth rather to have been meant by the conenant which Iosua made with Israel in Sichem, where they all promised to serue and obey the Lord: which promise Iosua caused to be written in the booke of the Law: and of this opinion were Caietan and Abulensis: Theodoret doth likewise conceine that the booke of Iofus was collected out of an ancient Volume, intituled Liber Iustorum; 1.10.13. remembred by Iolus himselfe, and others, that it was the worke of Samuel: for whereas Montanus groundeth his opinion vpon these wordes of the 26. verse, And I o s v a wrote these wordes, &c. this place bath nothing in it to proue it, for when the 50 people had answered I o s v A; The Lordour God will we ferue, and his voice will we obey, 5.1aft.v.24.v.26

it followeth that Io/ua made a couenant with the people, and wrote the fame in the booke of the Law of God.

There lived at once with Iolus, Ericthonius in Attica, who taught that Nation to yoke beafts together, thereby to till the ground with more case and speede: And about the same time the fiftie Daughters of Danâus (as it is said) slew the sistie Sonnes of Egyptus, all but Lynceus who succeeded Danaus, if the tale be true. There lined also with Iofus, Phanix and Cadmus, and neere the end of Iofus life, Iuniter is faid to have ravished Europa the Daughter of Phanix, (afterward marryed to Aller Lib. 18.c. 12. De rius King of Creta) and begat on her Mines, Radamanthus, and Sarpedon. But S. Augustine reports this rauishment to be committed by Xanthus, and yet they are more commonly taken for the Sonnes of Iupiter. But it may be doubted whether Minos Homer, Odys & was Father to Deucalion, and Deucalion to Idomeneus, who was an old man at the war of Tro), and Sarpedon was in person a young or strong man at the same Trojan warre. And so doth Nestor reckon vp in the Councell of the Greekes, Theseus and Perithous 10 for men of antiquitic, and of ages past: Minos being yet more ancient than anv of thefe. But hercof elsewhere.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Tribes of Israel, that were planted in the borders of Phænicia, with sundrie Stories depending vpon those places.

The Proame to the description of the whole Land of Canaan, with an exposition of the name of Syria.

HE Storie of the Indges ought to follow that of Islua, after whome the Common-wealth of the Iewes was gouerned by Kings, of which fo many of them as ruled the tenne Tribes, shall be remembred when wee come to the description of Samaria: but because the Land of Canaan, and the borders thereof, were the Stages and Theaters, whereon the greatest part of the Storie past, with that which followeth, hath beene aded. I thinke it very pertinent (for the better understanding of both) to make a Geographicall description 40 of those Regions: that all things therein performed by the places knowne, may the better bee understood, and conceined. To which purpose (besides the addition of the Neighbour Countries) I have bestowed oneuery Tribe his proper portion: and doe shew what Cities and Places of strength, were by the Iewes obtained: and what numbers it pleased God to leave vnconquered: by whom he might correct and scourge them, when vngrateful for his many graces, they at fundry times forgat or neglected the Lord of all power, and adored those deafe and dead Idols of the Heathen. Dinina bonitas (faith Avgvstine) tdeo maxime irafeiturin hoc faculo, ne irafeatur in futuro: & mifericor diter temporalem adhibet seueritatem, ne aternam iuste inferat ultionem; The dinine goodnesse is especially therefore 50 angrie in this world, that it may not be angric in the world to come, and doth mercifully ve temporall feueritie, that it may not iufly bring upon us eternall vengeance.

To the Cities heerein described, I have added a short Storie of the beginnings and ends of divers Kingdomes and common-weales: and to helpe my selfe herein, Thaue perused divers of the best Authors vpon this subject: among whom, because I finde fo great disagreement in many particulars, I hauerather in such cases aduentured to follow mine owne reason, than to borrow any one of their olde patternes.

And because Canaan, with Palastina of the Philistims, and the Lands of Og and sihon Kings of Balan, and the Arabian Amorites, were but small Provinces of Syria: it shall be necessarie, first to divide and bound the generall, and so to descend to this particular, now called the holy Land.

Syrra, now Soria, according to the largest description, and as it was anciently ta- Ptol. But taking it shorter, and from the coast of Cilicis, which is the North border, vnto Idumea towards the South, Tigris towards the Sunne riling, and the Mediterran Sca Westward: it then containeth besides Babylonia, Chaldea, Arabia the Desart, and Arabia Petras, that Region also which the Greekes call Mefopotamio, the Hebrewes Syria of the two Rivers, to wit, Tigris and Euphrates, for fo Aram-Nahairaijm is expounded: also Padan Aram: that is, Ingum Syrie, because the two Riners goe along in it

Edella, sometime Rages, now Rage, was the Metropolis of this Region of Syria. In Aurogalles. Syria taken largely, there were many small Provinces, as Calefreia which the Latines 20 call Syria Cana, because it lay in that fruitfull Valley betweene the Mountaines of Lybanus, and Anti-lybanus, in which the famous Cities of Antioch, Laodicea, Apamea, with many others were feated. Then Damascena or Syria Lybanica, taking name of the Citie Damascus, and the Mountaines of Lybanus, the Regall seate of the Adades, the first Kings of Syria. # Q. II. Of the bounds of the Land of Cansan, and of the promises touching this Land.

Vt that Land which was anciently Canaan, taketh a part of Phanicia, and stretcheth from behinde Lybanus to the great Defarts betweene I-& dumen and Egypt: bounded by the Mid-land Sea on the Weft, and Cathe Mountaines of Hermon; Galaad, and Arnon towards the East: the fame Hills which Strabo calleth Traconi or Traconite, and Ptolomie Hip- Strab. L. 10. 40 pus. The name of Canaan it had from Canaan the Sonne of C H A M, & lingua appellata fuit CANAAN; The language was also called CANAAN, saith Montanus: and after Hebreaosthe Hebrewes: who tooke name from Heber, the Sonne of Sale, according caleb.f.62. to S. Augustine. But Arias Montanus not so well allowing of this derivation, makes it a common name to all those of Noahs Sonnes, which past ouer Emphrates towards the West Sea. For the word Heber, saith hee, is as much as transiens or transmittens, of going or passing ouer. And because the children of Abraham had for a long time no certaineabiding: therefore as he thinks, they were by the Egyptians called Hebrai, as it were passengers, which is also the opinion of C. Sigonius, and of Eusebius long Euseb. Prep. E. before them both. It had also the name of Indaa from Inda; and then afterwards in- uang 17.6.3. 50 tituled The holy Land, because therein our Sautour Christ was borne and buried. Now this part of Syria was againe divided into foure; namely, into Edom, (otherwise Seir, or Edumaa) Galilee, Samaria, and Iudas. Galilee is double, the superior called Gentium, and the inferiour: and that Galilee and Indea are diffinguished, it is plaine in Math. 2. the Euangelists, though both of them belong to Phanicia.

Now

Now besides these provinces of Phanicia, and Palastina (both which the River of Jordan boundeth; fauing that Phanicia stretcheth a little more Easterly towards Damascus) that part also to the East of Iordan, and within the Mountaines of Hermon Gilead and Arnon, otherwise Traconi, fell to the possession of halfe Manasse, Gad, and Ruben, and therefore are accounted a part of Canaan also: aswell because anciently possess by the Amorites, as for that they were conquered and enjoyed by the Israelites, which Eastermost parts are againe divided into Basan or Basanea, into Gilead. Meab, Midian, Ammon, and the Territories of the Machati, Geffuri, Argobe, Hus. They are knowne to the later Cosmographers by the name of Arabia in generall: and by the names of Traconitis, Pieria, Batanea, &c. of which I will speake in their pro- 10

But where Moses describeth the Land of Canaan in the tenth of Genesis, he maketh no mention of the later Provinces, which fell to Manasse, Gad, and Ruben, for these be his words, Then the border of the Canaanites was from Zidon, as thou commest to Gerar until Azzah (which is Gaza) and this was the length of the Countrey North and South: then it followeth in the Text; And as then goeft unto Sodome and Gomorah, and Admah, and Seboijm, euen unto Lasha: by which words Moses setteth downe the breadth, to wit, from the Dead Sea to the Mediterran. But in Deuteronemie it seemeth to be farre more large: For it is therein written; All the places whereon the soale of your feet shall tread, shall be yours : your coast shall be from the wildernesse and 20 from Libanon, and from the River Perah, vato the vitermost Sea. Now for the length of the Countrie North and South, this description agreeth with the former: onely Libanon is put for Zidon: and the Wilderneffe for Gerar and Azzab, which make no difference: but for the breadth and extent East and West, if Perah bee taken for Eyphrates: then the Land promised stretcheth it selfe both ouer Arabia Petraa, and the Defart as farre as the border of Babylon: which the Ifraelites neuer possest: nor arany time did so much as invade or attempt. And therefore Vadianus doth conceive that by the River Perah, was meant lordan, and not Euphrates: taking light from this place of Iosva: Behold, I have divided unto you by lot thefe Nations, that remaine to be an inheritance according to your Tribes: from Iordan with all the Nations that I have destroit 20 ed, suen unto the great Sea Wellward.

And though it bee true that David greatly enlarged the Territoric of the holy Land: yet as Vadianus well noteth, if Perab in the former place be taken for Euphratium cap. Pale. tes, then was it put per gentes in amicitiam receptas. For Dauted did not at any time enter so farre to the East as Affria, or Babylonia. Neither doth the not possessing of all these Countries give advantage to those that would make any irreligious cauill, as touching the promise of God to the Israelites unperformed: For when both their Kings, Magistrates, and People, fell from his worship and service, it pleased him not onely to inclose them within that Territorie, which was for so many people exceeding narrow; but therein and elsewhere to subject them vnto those Idolatrous Na-40 tions, whose false and foolish Gods themselves also served and obeyed. And sure the promise by which the Hebrewes claimed the inheritance of Canaan, and the lasting injoying thereof, to wit, as long as the heavens were about the earth, was tied to those conditions, both in the Verses preceding, and subsequent; which the Israelites neuer performed. And therefore they could not hope for other than all mankinde could or can expect; who know that all forts of comforts from the mercifull goodnesse of God looked for, as well in this life as after it, are no longer to bee attended, than while wee perseuer in his lone, seruice, and obedience. So in the eighth Verse of the eleuenth of Deuteronomie, the keeping of Gods Commandements was a condition iouned to the prosperity of Ifrael. For thereinit is written; Therefore shall yee 50 keepe all the Commandements which I command you this day: that ye may be strong, and goe in, and possesse the Land, whither yee goe to possesse it. Also that you may prolong your dayes

The like condition was also annexed to the enioping of the land conquered, and

the possession thereof, so long as the heavens were about the earth. For if yee keepe Dent. 11. dilivently, faith he, all these commandements, which I command you to doe, that is, to love the Lord your God, &c. then will the Lord cast out all these Nations before you, and yee hall possessed Nations, and mightier than you. And heere, though it bee manifelt, that by reason of the breach of Gods Commandements, and their falling away from the worship of his all-powerfull Majestie, to the Idolatrie of the Heathen, the conditionall promifes of God were absolutely void, as depending vpon obedience unperformed:yet I cannot millike that expolition of Melanethon: For faith he oftendit promissonem pracipuam non esse de hoc Politico regno; He sheweth that his chiefe proto mile unot of a civil Kingdome. To which agrees that answere, which S. Hierome made to a certaine Heretique in his Epistle ad Dardanum, who accused S. Hierome that he ouerthrew the reputation of the Iewes Storie, and brought the truth thereof in question, by drawing it altogether into an Allegorie, and adillam duntaxat viuentium terram que in calis est; (that is) Onely to that Land of the luing which is in Heauen. Quoniam tota Iudaorum Regio adeo angusta sit ambitu, vt vix longitudinem habeat 160. milliarium, latitudinem vero 40.8 in his etiam regiones, loca, vrbes & oppida sunt piurima, nunquam à ludeis occupata, sed tantum divina pollicitatione promissa; Because the whole Countrie of the lewes is fo narrow in compasse, that it scarce hath 160. miles in length, and 40. miles in breadth, and in these are Countries, Places, Cities, and many Townes, which the 10 lewes neuer poffeft, but were only granted by divine promife. In like manner the same Father speaketh vpon Esay touching the bleffings promised vnto Hierusalem: where hec hath these words: De quo discimus Hierusalem nequaquam in Palastina Regione Cap.49.14. petendam: qua totius Prouincia deterrima est : & saxosis montibus asperatur & penuriam patitur sitis: ita vt calestibus vtatur plunys, & raritatem fontium esternarum extructione Gletur : sed in Dei manibus ad quam dicitur festinauerunt structores tui ; From whence, faith he, we learne, that Hierusalem is not to be sought in that Region of Palastina, which is the worst of the whole Prouince, and ragged with craggic Mountaines, and (uffereth the pepurie of thirle: so as it preserveth raine water, and supplieth the scarcitie of Wells by building Cesternes, but this Hierusalem is in Gods hands, to which it is said, Thy builders have haste-30 ned, so farre S. Hierome, where also to preuent mistaking, hee thus expoundeth himselfe. Neque hoc dico in suggillationem terra sudaa, vt Harcticus Sycophantamentitur: aut quo auferam historia veritatem : qua fundamentum est intelligentia spiritualis, sed ve decutiam supercilium Indeorum : qui Synagoga angustias latitudini Ecclessa preserunt. Si enim occidentem tantum seguuntur literam, & non spiritum viuificantem : ostendant terram promissionis lacte & melle manantem; Neither (faith he) fay I this to disgrace the land of Indea (as the Hereticall sycophant doth believe) or to take away the truth of the Historie, which is the foundation of spiritual understanding, but to beate downe the pride of the lewes : which enlarge the straits of the Synagogue farther then the breadth of the Church: for if they follow onely the killing letter, and not the quickening spirit, let them shew 40 the Land of promise, slowing with milke and honnie.

By this it may also be gathered, how socuer it be vnlikely (seeing the West-bound in the place, Deut. 11. 24. had his truth in the literall fense, that Euphrates or Perath. which is made the East bound, should be taken only in a spirituall sense) yet neuertheleffe that Hieroms opinion inclineth to this, as if this Perath were not to be vnderflood for Euphrates: and that the promise it selfe was never so large: much leffe the plantation and conquest of I/rael.

And now for a more particular description of this Holy Land, because Asher, Nephralim, and Zabulon, held the Northermost part, and were seated in Phanicia, I will begin with these three, taking Asher for the first: of which Tribe yet before 50 I speake, I must admonish the Reader touching the names of places in this, and the other Tribes to be mentioned, that he remember that many names by reason of the divers fancies of Translators, are diversly expressed, so that to the viskilfull they may seemediners, when they are one and the same: the reason of this diversitie (as by those learned in the Hebrew I am taught) is, partly because the ancient Editions of the Hebrew want vowels, the old Translators imagined other vowels than now the Hebrew Editions have; and partly because the Ancient expressed or omirted divers consonants, otherwise than the latter thinke sit.

This part of Canaan was very fruitfull, abounding in Wine, Oile, and Wheate, besides the Ballamum, with other pleasant and profitable commodities: according to that Prophecie. #### Of Zidon.

Ant.Itin.

Gen.4.9.

Gen. 10. lofeph.

He first Citic seated on the North border of the Territoric of Asser. was Zidon, which Iosua calleth the great Zidon, both for strength and magnitude. The Greekes and Q. Curtius make Agenor the founder thereof: and Institute deriues the name from the abundance of Fish found on those shores: whereof it hath been called Zidona. But that it was farre more ancient, Moses, Iosua, and Iosephus witnesse, 40 the fame being founded by Zidon the eldeft of Canaan's Sonnes : and fo strong it was in Issuas time, as neither did himselfe attempt it, neither could the Afferites, or any of their Successors master it: but it continued all the time of the Indges and Kings, euen vnto the comming of Chrift, a Citie interchangeably gouerned, by their owne Princes or other Magistrates: though according to the warnings and threats of the Efa.13. Hier. 47 Prophet's Efay, Hieremie, Ezekiel, and Zacharie, it was often affliced both by the enc-Ezek. 28. 6 32. mies sword, and by the pestilence.

Zidon is scated on the very wash of the Phanician Sea, which is a part of the Mediterran or Mid-land Sea. It hath to the North the Citie of Berythus, and the River Leant is: and to the South Sarepta, or Sarphat: which standeth betweene it and Tyre, 50 the distance betweene which two great and famous Cities, to wit, Zidon and Tyre, Falefi. Seig. f. 19. is fourteene thou fand paces, faith Seiglerus: but Vadianus makes it two hundred furlongs, and so doth Weißinburie in his description of the holy Land, and both from Strabo: which two hundred furlongs make fine and twentie miles. This difference of distance as well betweene these two knowne Cities, as all the rest, make it over disficult to deuise any new scale to the Map, and description of the holy Land.

What Kings it had till Agenors time there is no memorie: The Storie which Zeno the Philosopher, who was a Zidonian, wrote thereof, being by time confumed and loft. It seemeth to bee more ancient than Tyre: which was also built by the Zidonians. For as Strabo noteth, Homer speaking of Zidon, neglecteth the memorie of Strab.l.16. Tre: because it was but a member of Zidon, and a Citie subsect to the Kings thereof: though it bee true that in after-times it contended with Zidon for Primacie, and became farre more renowned, opulent, and strong: From Zidon had Salomon and Zoto robabel, their principall workmen, both in Timber and Stone; for the building of the Temple. For as it flourished in all forts of learning, so did it in all other Mechanicall Arts and Trades: the Prophet Zacharie calling them the wife Zidonians. The Zacharies. Ciric was both by nature and art exceeding strong, having a Castle or Citadellon the North-side, standing vpon an vnaccessible Rocke, and compassed by the Sea, which after the Citizens became Christians, was held and defended by the Knights of the Dutch Order: and another Castle it hath on the South side by the Port of Egypt, which the Templers guarded. It also sent many other Colonies besides that

t. III.

Of Sarcpia, with a briefe Historic of Tyre in the same coast.

Arepta, or after the Hebrew, Sarphath, is the next Citic Southward from Ziden. Doctweene it and the River called Naar, or Fons hortorum Libani ( of which more hereafter) standing in the way towards Tyre, a Citie very famous for the excellent Winegrowing neere it : of which Sidonius.

> Vina mihi non funt Gazetica, Chia, Falerna, Queq. Sareptano palmite mi fa bibas.

I have no wine of Gaza, nor Falerna wine, Nor any for thy drinking of Sarepta's vine.

This Citic had also a Bishop of the Diocesse of Tyre: after it came to the Saracens and Turkes, as the reft: and is now called Saphet, faith Postellus.

Not farre from Sarepta was fituate that sometime famous Citie of Tyre, whose fleets of ships commanded, and gaue the law ouer all the Mediterran Sea, and the borders thereof: during which time of greatnesse and power, the Tyrians erected Vtica, Leptis, and Carthage in Affrica, of which VIRGIL. Vrbs antiqua fuit Tyry te- 40 nuere Coloni Carthago. And Carthage was therefore called Punica quasi Phanicum, a Colonie Of the Phanicians. In Spaine they founded Gades, now Caliz. In Italie, Nola: in Afia the leffe, Dromos Achillis, which Citie the Scholiast of Apollonius placeth neere the River Phyllis, in Bithyma.

It had anciently the name of Zor, or Tzor; and so it is written in Iosua the 19.12king name from the situation; because built on a high Rocke, sharpe at one end. The Latines, as it seemes, knew it by the name of Sarra; for Virgil calleth the purple of Tyre, oftrum Sarranum, by which name Invenal and Silius remember it. The Zidonians built it vpon a high Hill, whereof many ruines remaine to this day; the place being still knowne by the name of the ancient Tyre: and because it was a Colonie of the Zidonians, the Prophet Esay calleth it the Daughter of Zidon; which Trogus also 50 confirmeth, though Berofus by affinitie of name makes Thiras the Sonne of Taphet to be the Parent thereof: and though no doubt it was very ancient (for so much the Prophet Efay also witnesseth, Is not this your glorious Citie whose antiquitie is of ancient

For strength and for the commoditic of the harbour, and the better to receive 10 Trade from all places, it was in this new crection founded in an Iland, 700. paces from the continent : and therefore Ezekiel placeth it in the middest of the Sca, as Ezek, 28,2.27. some reade, or asothers in the inner-most part of the Sea, whence hee calleth it ross. situate at the entrie of the Sea, as also the same Prophet calleth it the Mart of the people Esting. 3. for many lles : and Es AY a Mart of the Nations: and fo Proude, Wealthic, and Magnificent was this Citie, as the Prophet E/ay calleth the Merchants thereof Princes, and 27.8. their Chapmen the Nobles of the world.

Itexcelled both in learning, and in manu-facture : especially in the making and dying of Purple, and Scarlet-cloth: which, faith Iulius Pollux, was first found out by Hercules Dogge, who passing alongst the Sca-coatt, and cating of the Fish Con-20 chilis or Purpura: the haire of his lips became of that colour. It worshipped the same Idolls that Zidon did : saving that Hercules became their Patron in after times? For Alexander Macedon, when the Tyrians presented him with a crowne of gold. and other gifts, desiring to remaine his friends and allies, answered them, that he had vowed a facrifice to Hercules, the Defender of their Citie and the Ancester of the Macedonians Kings: and must therefore enter it. Whereupon they sent him word, that Hercules his Temple was in the Mountaine of old Tyre: where he might performe that ceremonie: but this availed not. For Alexander was not fo fuperlitious, as ambitious, hee desired to enter the Towne, which being denied, he as one whom no perill could feare, nor labour wearie, gathered together as many 20 ships as he could; and brought from Libanus so great a number of Cedars, and so many waightie Stones, from the old Citic of Tyre adioyning, as not with tlanding that his materialls were often walkt away with the strength of the Sca, and the Tides, yet he neuer refted, till hee had made a foote passage from the Continent to the Iland: and having once approched their Walls, hee over topt them with Turrets of wood, and other frames: from whence ( having filled the body of force with the violent mouing Spirit of resolution ) he became Lord thereof, putting all to the fword that refifted, after which he caused 2000 more to bee hung vp in a ranke all alongst the Sea-shore: which exequation vpon cold bloud hee performed (as some Authors affirme) vpon the iffues of those flaues which had formerly flaine all their Masters, taking their Wines, Children, Riches, and power of Gouernement to themselves. This victorie of Alexander over the Tyrians, Inserbus remembreth: 10sepani. Inde. and how Sanaballat revolted from Darius, and came to Alexander with 8000. Souldiers: who was the last Satrapa or Provinciall Governour, which Parius leated in Samaria: the same who having married his Daughter to Maneffe, brother to laddus the high Priest of Hierusalem, Obtained of Alexander that a Temple might bee built on the Mountaines Garizim over Samaria: that the forces of the Iewes being divided. Alexander might the better hold them in obedience. The Honour of which Priesthood he bestowed on his sonne-in-law Manasse, whom the Ieres oppugned, for that he had married out of their Tribes, and with a Gentile : but while Alexander belieged De bell face 50 Gaza, Sanaballat, whom Guil. Tyrins calleth Sanabula, died.

Long before this desolation of Tyre, by the crucktie of Alexander, it was attempted by Salmanaffer the Affyrian King: when the growing pride of the Affyrians, after that they had conquered the ten Tribes, with the rest of Syria, became envious of the beautie, riches, and power of that Citie. Hee besieged it both on the Land-side, and with three-score ships of Warre held the Port; to the end that neither any vi-Etualls nor any supply of men might enter it: but the Tyrians with twelve faile seattered that fleete, and tooke 500. prisoners of the Assirians: notwithstanding, the Affrican continued his resolution and lay before it by his Lieutenants fine yeeres. but with ill successe. And this siege Menander Ephesius, cited by losephus, madereport of in his Chronicles, as hee found the Storic among the Annalls of the Trians (which the faid Menander converted into Greeke) adding that Elulaus, whom Trius calleth Heliseus, was then King of Tyre, having governed the same sixe and twentie yeeres. Soone after this repulse of Salmanaffar, and about 200. yeeres before the victoric of Alexander, Nabuchodonofor at fuch time as hee defiroyed Hierufalem with to the Temple, came before this Citie: who indeed gaue to Alexander the example of that despairefull worke, of ioyning it to the Continent. For Nabuchodonofor had formerly done it: though by the diligence of the Citizens, and the firength of the Sea, the same cawley and passage was againe broken downe, and demolished.

Against Nabuchodonofor, for many yeeres, the Tyrians defended themselves: for folong did these Babylonians continue beforeit, As euery head was made bald, and euery (houlder made bare, faith Ezekiel, who with the Prophet Esay had manifestly foretold the destruction of this proude place. In the end and after thirteene yeeres siege or more, the Tyrians despoiled of all their hopes, and remembring ouer-late the predictions and threatnings of Gods Prophets, having prepared a convenient number 20 of thips, abandoned their Citie, transporting with themselves the ablest of all that remained: and with their wives, children, and portable riches failed thence into cyprus, Carthage, and other Maritimate Cities of their Tribuearies, or Confederates: fo as the Babylonians finding nothing therein, either to fatisfie fo many labours and perills, or any person upon whom to avenge themselves for the losse of so many bodies in that Warre: It pleased God in recompence thereof (who strengthened this resolution, as in a worke of his owne ) to make Nabuchedonosor victorious ouer the Egyptians: and gaue him that Kingdome and the spoile thereof, as it were in wages for his Armie. Whereupon Saint Hierome noteth, that God leaueth not the good deeds of the Heathen vnrewarded: who though they cannot hope by any laudable 20 worldly action, to attaine vnto that eternall happinessereserned for his Sernants and Saints: yet such is the boundlesse goodnesse of God, as he often repaieth them with many worldly gitts and temporall bleffings.

Zgek.29.v.19.

Now of this enterprise of Nabuchodonofors against Tyre, prophane Historians have not beene filent. For both Diocles, and Philostratus (as Iosephus citeth them) the one in his second Booke, the other in his Phanician Histories remember it.

Iosep.ant.l.10.

After these two great Vastations by the Kings of Babylon and Macedon: this Citie of Tyre repaired and recovered it selfe againe : and continued in great glorie about 300. yeeres, even to the comming of our Sautour Christ: and after him flourishedin the Christian Faith neere 600. yeeres: the Archbishop whereof gaue place to none 40 but to the Patriarke of Hierusalem only : who within his owne Diocesse had fourteene GuliTyr, bell, fac. great Cities, with their Bilhops and Suffragans: namely Caipha, otherwise Porphiria, Acon Or Ptolomais, Sarepta, Zidon, Cafarea Philippi, Berytus, Byblus, Botrys, Tripolis, Orthosia, Archis, Aradus, Antaradus (or Tortosa) and Maraclea. Two yeeres after which victorie the bodie of that famous Fredericke Barbaroffa ( who by the lamentable accident of following the Christians enemies over a River vintoordables to perished by the weight of his armor therein) was brought and interred in the Cathedrallchurch of Tyre, neere vnto that glorious Sepulchre of Origen, garnished and grauen with guilt pillars of Marble, 940. yeeres before therein buried but in the yeere 1289. the Saracens againe attempted it, and carried it, and it now remaineth subject to the Turks.

> †. IIII. Of Ptolomais or Acon.

10 T He third Citic alongst the coast of the Sea, which the Assertes could not obtaine, on the South bound of Affer was Acho, which was the ancient name thereof after Hierome, though other good Authors affirme that it tooke name from Acon the brother of Ptolomie. Plinie calleth it Ace : and otherwise the Colonie of Claudins. Plinibs sang. It had also the name of Coth or Cod, and by Zeiglerus it is called Hactipos.

fame time was the aforesaid Alexander in the warre against Demetrins one of the fonnes of Antiochus the great with whom Ptolomie loyned, querthrowne and treacherously murthered by Zabdiel the Arabian: to whom he fled for succour: and his head presented vnto his father in law Ptolomie: who enjoyed not the glory of his vifloric and treason about three dayes, for God strucke him by death.

For the beautie and strength of this Citie, this Alexander made it his regall seate; two parts of the same being invironed by the Sea, and the Port for safetie and capacitie not inferiour to any other in all that Tract. This Citic is distant from Hieto rusalem some source and thirtie miles: source miles to the North from the Mountaine Carmel, and as much to the South from Castrum Lamberti: from Tyre, Antoni- Ant. And though 10 for the credit of S. Georges killing the Dragon, I leave every man to his owne beliefe: Of the place & yet I cannot but thinks, that if the Kings of England had not some probable record memorieor his death, See of that his memorable act, among many others: it was ftrange that the Order full of Honour, which Edward the third founded, and which his Successours Roially have continued, should have borne his name, seeing the world had not that scarcitie of Saints in those dayes, as that the English were driven to make such an erection voon a Fable, or Person sained. The place is described by Adrichomius in his description of Affer, to have beene in the fields of Libanus : betweene the River Adanis, and Zidon : his owne wordes are thefe: Hoc loco qui ab incolis Cappadocia appellatur. non longe à Beryto, memorant inclytum Christi Militem D. The twelve searchers of the Land which Moles sent from Cadesbarne, travailed Hieron. de Lois as farre to the North as Roob, or Recheb, in the Tribe of Affer, which Recheb, as al-Hebr. 10, 10 Berothe which by Ezekielcap. 47. v. 16. is placed in these North borders, belonged in Davids time to the King Hadarhezer, as it may bee gathered out of the second of Samuel the 8. cap. and 8. verse, and cap. 10. vers. 6. and it defended it selfe against the Afferites, as Zidon, Tyre, Achzich, Ptolomau, Alab, Helbah, and Aphek did.

This Aphek it was, whose Wall falling downe, slew seuen and twentie thousand of Benhadads Souldiers, after that a hundred thousand had beene slaughtered by the Israelites, under the conduct of Abab. Here Iunius finds that the Philistims incamped a little before the battaile at Gilboa, though in his Note vpon the first of Samuel, the 50 1.Kings 20.39. 9. and 1. he takes Aphek there mentioned (at which battaile the Arke was taken) to haue beene in Iuda. The next place alongst the coast is Sandalium, first called Schandalium of Schander, which we call Alexander, for Alexander Macedon built it, when hee befreged Tyre: and fer it on a point of Land which extendeth it selfe into the Sea, betweene Acziba and Trre: which Cattle Baldwine the first rebuilt and fortified; in the yeere of Christ 1157. when he vndertooke the recouerie of Tyre.

Not much about a mile from this Callle, there ariseth that most plentifull spring of water, which Salomon remembreth, called the Well of living waters: from whence cantal not only all the fields and plaines about Tyre are made fruitfull by large pipes hence drawne: but the same Spring, which bath not about a bow-thot of ground to trato vaile till it recover the Sea, driveth fixe great Mills in that short passage, saith Hints

Within the Land, and to the East of Acziba, and Sandalium, flandeth Hofa: and 10/12:40. beyond it, under the Mountaines of Tyre, the Citie of Achlaph, or Axab, or after S. Hierome Acifap, a Citie of great strength, whose King amongst the rest was slaine by lofus, at the waters of Merom.

†. VII. Of Thoron, Giscala, and some other places.

FArther into the Land towards Iordan, was seated the Castle of Thoron, which Hugo de Sancio Abdemare built on the Easter-most Hills of Tyre, in the yeere 1107. thereby to restraine the excursions of the Saracens, while they held Tyre apainft the Christians: the place adjoyning being very fruitfull, and exceeding pleafant. From this Castle the Lords of Thoron, famous in the Storie of the Warres for the recoverie of the Holy Land, derive their names, and take their Nobilitie. It had initacurious Chappell, dedicated to the bleffed Virgin, in which Humphrey of Thoron, Constable to Baldwine the third, King of Hierusalem, lieth buried : There were fine Castles besides this within the Territorie of Affer: whereof source are seated almost of equal distance from each other : to wit, Castrum Lamperti, Montfort, Indin (or Saron ) Castrum Regium, and Belfort: The first necre the Sea under the Hills of Saren: the next three, to wit, Indin, Montfort, and Regium, fland more within the Land, and belonged to the Brother-hood and Fellowship of the Teutonici, or Dutch Knights (by which they defended themselves, and gave succour to other Christians atfuch time as the Saracens possess the best part of the vpper Galilee ) the chiefe of which Order was in Ptolomais Acon. The first Fortresse was for beautic and strength called Belfort, seated in the high ground vpon the River Naar, neere the Citic Rama: of which in this Tribe Iof. 19.29 for which the Vulgar reades Horma: making the articlea part of the word, and miliaking the vowells: from the liege of this Callle of Herold, 12,16.4. 10 Belfort, the great Saladine King of Syria and Egypt, was by the Christians Armie rai- Continuation of fed, and with great loffe and dishonour repulsed.

To the East of Belfort, is the firong Citic of Alab ( or Achlab) which S. Hierome calleth Chalab, one of those that defended themselves against Affer, as Roob (or Re-

Almost of equal distance from the Castle of Thoron, they place the Cities of Gir. cala, and Gadara: of which Gadara is rather to be placed ouer lordan: Gifcala was made famous by John the Sonne of Leui, who from a meane estate gathering together foure hundred Theenes, greatly troubled all the upper Galilee: at fuch time as the Romans attempted the conquest of Judea: by whose practice losephus, who then commanded in the upper Galilee, was greatly indangered: whereof himselfe hath written at large, in his second Booke of those Warres. This John betraying in all hee could to the Citie of Gifeala (whereof he was native) to the Roman State : and finding a refistance in the Citic, gaue opportunitie, during the contention, to the Tyrians and Ga. darims, to surprize it : who at the same time for stit, and burnt it to the ground : but being by Io/ephus authoritie rebuilt, it was afterward rendred to Tetus by composition. They finde also the Cities of Cana Major, and * Cades: ( or Cedeffa) of the first was that Syro-phanician, whose Daughter Christ delivered of the euil Spirit. Neere the other, they say, it was that Ionathas Machabaus ouer-threw the Armie of De-Marc. 7. Maccab. 11.73.

He rivers to the North of Affer, are Adonis, afterward Canis, to which Ziegler ioyneth Lycus, Ptolomie, Leontis: both which fall into the Sea neere Berytus: which River of Leonis, Montanus drawes neere vnto Zidon: finding his head notwithflauding, where Ptolomie doth, betweene Zidon and Tyre. It hath also a River called 40 fons hortorum Libani, which Adrichome out of Brochard intituleth Eleutherus: for which hee also citeth Plinie; and the first of Machabees the 11. Chap. but neither of those authorities proue Eleutherus to be in Affer : for this River falleth into the Sea at the Ile of Aradus : not farre from Balanaa, witnesse Ptolomie : and therefore Pinetus callethit Valania, and Postellus Velana: which River boundeth Phanicia on the North fide: to which Strabe also agreeth: but this principall River of Affer, Arias Montanus calleth Gabatus. The Mountaines which bound Affer on the North, are those of Anti-libanus, which city Iuwhich with Libanus bound Calefyria: two great ledges of Hills, which from the Sea nins taketh of Phanicia and Syria, extend themselves farre into the Land Eastward: soure han- Shieber in that dreth stadia or furlongs, according to Strabo: for that length he giveth to the Valley buthowsoever no of Culefyria: which those Mountaines inclose: but Plinie gives them 1500, furlongs whether this in length from the West ( where they beginne at Theipsophon, or Deifacies, necre be a River of a Tripolis) to the Mountaines of Arabia beyond Damascus: where Anti-libanus turneth city, it appears towards the South. These ledges where they beginne to part Traconitis and Basan, that this name is found, both from the Defart Arabia, are called Hermon : which Mofes also nameth Sion , the Pha- in the North micians Syrion, and the Amerites Sanir, neither is this any one Mountaine apart; but bound of the a continuation of Hills: which running farther Southerly, is in the Scriptures called holy Land, 10/2 Galaad or Gilead: the same being ftill a part of Libanus, as the Prophet Hieremie pro- South bound, ueth: Galaad tu mibi caput Libani: noting that this Galaad is the highest of those Hils 10/13.3. of Libanus. The Rivers which Libanus bestoweth on the neighbour Regions are, Chrysorrhous, Iordan, Elentherus, Leontes, Lycus, Adonis, Fons hortorum Libani, and others.

Therest of the Mountaines of Affer, are those Hils about Tyre, and the Hills of Saron, both exceeding fruitfull: but those are but of a low stature, compared with Libanus : for from Nebo, or the Mountaine of Abarsm, in Reuben, Moses beheld Libanus three-score miles distant.

S. IIII. THE TRIBE OF NEPHTALIM.

Of the bounds of Nephtalim, and of Heliopolis,

He next Portion of the Land of Canaan bordering Asher, was the vpper Galilee : the greatest part whereof fell to the lot of Nephtalim, the Sonne of Iacob by Billa, the hand-maide of Rachel: who while they abode in Agypt, were increased to the number of 52400. persons. able to beare armes, numbred at Mount Sinai: all which leaving their bodies in the Desarts, there entred the Holy Land of their Sonnes 45400. besides, Infants, Women, and Children, under twenty yeeres of age. The Land of Mephtalim tooke beginning on the North part, from the Fountaines of Iordan, and the Hills of Libanus adioyning, as farre South as the Sea of Galilee, bounded on the West 20 by Alber, and on the East and South-cast by Iordan.

On the North-side of Libanus, and adioyning to this Territory of Nephralim, did the Amorites (or Emorites) also inhabite, in which Tract and under Libanus, was the Citic of Heliopolis: which the heighth of the Mountaines adioyning shadowed from the Sunne, the better part of the day. Post E L Lvs calls it Balbec; NIGER, Marbech; and LEONCLAVIVS, Beallebeca.

Of this name of Heliopolis, there are two great Cities in Agost: the first called On, by the Hebrewes, and the Chaldean Paraphrast, otherwise Bethsemes, or after the Latines, Solis oppidum, or Domus Solis; The Citie of the Sunne : into which, faith Vlpian, Severus the Roman Emperour fent a Colonie: the other Gestelius nameth Dealmarach: 30 and of this name Stephanus also findeth a Citie in Thrace, and Glyces in Phrygia.

There is also in the same Valley adioyning to Nephtalim, Chalcis, and Abila. Chalcis, of whom the Region towards Palmyrena hath the name of Chaleidica, ouer which bel-Mitsfaim, at Herod, Agrippa, and Berenice the Queene commanded.

Abila alfo gave name to the Region adioyning, of which Lyfanius the Sonne of Herod the elder, became Tetrarch or Gouernour: whereof Ptolomie gaue it the additifame Tribe of on of Lylany, and called it Abila Lylany. Volaterran names it Aphila nof which hee notes that one Diogenes, a famous Sopbifter, was natiue, who by Volaterran is intituled Aphilem, not Abilems. After that this Citic of Abila or Aphila, had received the Chrifian Faith, Priscillinus became Bishop thereof: slaine afterward by our Brittish Maxi-40 mus at Treuer. For diftinction of this Citie (if it be not the same, as it may be thought to be the same ) it is to be remembred that in the Tribe of a Manafes, joyning upon the bounds of the Tribe of Nephtalim, there is another Citic of the fame name, fauing that it is written with an (E) for an (I) and called Abela, remembred in the 30. Chapter of the second of Samuel. The same Tosephus calls Abelmachen, and Hierome Bethmacha. In the place of Samuel for distinction sake it is written, Abel Beth-Mahaca, (for belike it was the Towne of Mahaca, the Wife of Macir, the Sonne of Manafe, the Father of Gilead) in the Chronicles it is called Abel-Maym. This Citie Ioab besieged : because Sebathe sonne of Bichri, who rebelled against David, fled thereinto for succour: but a certaine wise woman of the Citic perswading the people to cast Seba 50 his head ouer the wall, Joab retired his Armic. The same Citie was afterward taken by the King of Damascus, Benadad: and after a while by Teglatphalasar.

The word Abel may bee expounded, either to signisse bewayling, or a plaine ground, and therefore no maruell, that many Townes ( with some addition for di-

In after times when these Regions became subject to the State of Rome, it had the name of Paneas, from a Fountaine adjoyning so called: and therefore Ptologie calls it Calaria Panie. Hegesippus calls it Parnium, faith Weissenburg: but he had read it in a corrupt copie: for in Hegefippus set out by Badius, it is written Paneum without an (R): and at such time as Phelip the some of the elder Herod, brother to Herod, Tetrareh of Galilee became Gouernour of Traconitis, sometime Basan; this Citie was by him amplified and fortified; and both to give memorie to his owne name, and to * Of another flatter Tiberius Cafar, he called it * Cafaria Philippi: and fo it became the Metropolis. But as nothing remained with that Emperour, but the memorie of his impictie: fo in S. Hieromes time the Citizens remembred their former Paneas, and forecalled it, with the Territorie adioyning by the ancient name. Of this Citie was that woman whorn Christ healed of a bloudie iffue, by touching the homme of his Garment with a conftant Faith: who afterward, as shee was a woman of great wealth and abilitie, being mindfull of Gods goodnesse, and no lesse Enfeb hift. Eccl. gratefull for the same, as Eufebius and Nicephorus report, caused two Statues to bee cast in pure Copper: the one representing Christ, as neere as it could be emoulded: the other made like her felfe, kneeling at his feete, and holding vp her hands towardes him. These shee mounted vpontwo great Bases or Pedestals of the same Metall, 20 which shee placed by a Fountaine neere her owne house: both which (saith Eusebiw) remained in their first perfection, even to his owne time: which himselfe had feene, who lived in the Raigne of Conftantine the Great. But in the yeere after Christ 363, that Monster Iulius Apostata, caused that worthie Monument to be cast downe, and defaced: fetting vp the like of his owne in the same place: which Image of his was with fire from heaven broken into fitters: the head, body, and other parts, sundered and scattered, to the great admiration of the people at that time living. The truth of this accident is also confirmed by Sozomenus Salaminius, in his fifth booke, and twentieth Chapter.

This Citie built by the Danites, was neere the joyning together of those two Ri- 20 uers which arise from the springs of Ior and Dan, the two a apparant Fountainesof Iordin: in a fovle exceeding fruitfull, and pleasant; for, as it is written, Judg. 18. It is a place which doth want nothing that is in the world. In the fields belonging to this Citic, it was that S. Peter acknowledged Christ to be the Sonne of God: whereupon it was or Dan, where- answered, Tues PETRVS, & Superhanc Petram, Go. After this Citic received the by it is conie- Christian faith, it was honoured with a Bishops seate: and it ranne the same fortune first Spring of with the rest, for it was after taken and retaken by the Saracens, and Christians: vnder Torian is from Fulch the fourth, King of Hierusalem, and after the death of Godfry of Bullion, the King of Damascus wrested it from the Christians; and shortly after by them againe it was recovered. Laftly, now it remaineth with all that part of the world subjected to 40 the Turke.

Of Capernaum, and the Cities of Decapolis.

Mong the remarkable Cities within this Tribe, Capharnaum is not the least: so often remembred by the Euangelists. This Citie had the honour of Christs presence three yeeres: who for that time was as a Citizen therof, in which he first preached and taught the Doctrine of our saluation: according to that notable Prophecie 50 of Elay 9. The people that walked in darknesse, have seene a great light: they that dwelt in the Land of the Shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined.

Capharnaum was feated on Iordan, euen where it entreth into the Sea of Galilee: in an excellent and rich soile: of whose destruction Christ himselfe prophecied inCHAP. 7. S. 4. 1.4. of the Historie of the World.

these words. And thou Caphernaum which art lifted up unto heaven, shalt he brought downe to Hell, &c. which shewed the pride and greatnesse of that Citie: for it was one of the principall Cities of Decapolis, and the Metropolis of Galilee. And although there were some markes of this Cities magnificence in S. Hieromes time, as himselfe confesseth: it being then a reasonable Burge or Towne: yet those that have since, and long fince feene it, as Brochard, Breidenbech, and Salimac affirme, that it then confifted but of fixe poore Fisher-mens houses.

The Region of ten principall Cities called Decapolitana or Decapolis, is in this defeription often mentioned, and in S. Matthew, Marke, and Linke, also remembred; Math. 4. but I finde no agreement among the Cosmographers, what proper limits it had: and Lukes. fo Plinie himselle consesset, for Marius Niger speaking from others, bounds it on Niger, comment, the North by the mountaine Casius in Casiois: and endeth it to the South at Agypt and Arabia; by which description it imbraceth Phanicia, a part of Calefyria, all Palasti-

This River Ortelius takes to bee the River Iaboc: which boundeth Gad and Manaffeh ouer tordan : but he mistaketh it ; for Hieromaix falleth into the Sca of Galilee, betweene Hippos and Gerasa, whereas 1aboc entreth the same Sea betweene Ephron and Phanuel. For the seventh he nameth * Hippos, or * Plinie hath Hippondion, a Citic fo called of a Colonie of Horsemen there garrifond by Herod, on the which Volater-East side of the Galilean Sea, described hereafter in the Tribe of Manasse ouer Ior- ran reads Hip-30 dan. For the eighth Rella, which is also called Butis, and Berenice, seated in the South pidion, Ortelius border of the Region ouer Iordan, called Perca. For the ninth Gelasa, which Iosephus two Cities. takes to be Gerafa: and Gerafa is found in Calefyria by Iofephus, Hegesippus, and Stephanus: but by Ptolomie (whom I rather follow) in Phanicia. The tenth and last, Plinie nameth Canatha, and to doth Suetonius and Stephanus, which Volaterran calls Gamala, but Hegesippus rightly Camala, a Citic in the Region of Basan over Iordan, so called, because those two Hills on which it is seated, have the shape of a Camell. But the collection of these ten Cities, whereof this Region tooke name, is better gathered out of Brochard, Breidenbach, and Saligniae, which make them to bee thefe; Cafaria Philippi, and Afor, before remembred, Cedes Nephtalim, Sephet, Corazin, Capharnaum, 40 Bethsaida, Istapata, Tiberias, and Scythopoles, or Bethsan. For all other Authors disagree herein and giue no reason for their opinion. One place of the Euangelist Saint Matthew makes it manifest that this Region called Decapolitana, was all that Tract betweene Zidon, and the Sea of Galilee. For thus it is written: And he departed againe Matth 4: from the coasts of Tyrus and Zidon, and came unto the Sea of Galilee, through the middest of the coasts of Decapolis: so that it was bounded by Damascus and Libanus on the North: by the Phanician Sca, betweene Zidon and Ptolomais on the West: by the Hills of Gelbo and Beth an on the South: and by the Mountaines Tracones, otherwise Hermon, Sanir, and Galaad, on the East: which is from East to West the whole bredth of the Holy Land: and from the North to the South, necrethe fame distance which may 50 be each way fortie English miles.

other in Nephikalim, though Matt Berealdus rejecting Hierome, rather follow the opinion of Zeigler aboue menther one or other of their is either Antiochia or Epiphania, howbeit that the fame Citie which Iosua 19.35. is called Chammath, and placed in Wephthalim, was also called Chamath (whence the word Hamath and Emath, were framed) it may bee gathered partly because the other Hamath, 2. Chron. 8.3. for distinction is called Chamath T/oba, as this (as it may feeme by Iof. 21.32.) was Chamath Dor, and Chamath Inda, as wee have noted, 2. Reg. 24. Secondly, because Num. 34 8. and also Exchiel 47, 10. Chameth in the North side of the holy Land, is placed too neer the West corner, to bee that Chamath-I faba: for in the line which should make the North border which begins at the great Sea, they make Mofesto name neuer a place Eastward along all the bredth of the holy Land, vntill we come to Hermen (for fo they expound Mount Hor, Num. 34.7.) and beyond Hermon Eastward in this North fide, they make him to name divers Townes, first chamath, then Tfedad, then Ziphron, and laftly, Chatfar benan, athing most vnlikely : feeing Ifiael had little or nothing Eastward beyond Hermon. Theretore wee must needes expound Hor to be one of the Hills neere Sidon, and to those Townes, as they are named to lie in order on the North fide of A-Sher, Nephthalim, and Manasses: and in like manner those in Ezekiel: first, Cheston, then Chamath, and so in order, Berotha, Sibraim, Tjedad, Chauran, Chatfar-henan. c Of which, 10f. 19.35. d Which Rehab, or Rechob, in 10fua 19.28. is placed in After towards Zidon, in the confines

the other Hamath or Emath (being farre removed and beyond the forenamed mountaines, which inclose all those Lands which Israel ever had polletion of ) is that Emath, which is also called Burea, witnesse Stella and Laichan ; and not that in Neph-Stella and Peter talim, where f Ionathas Macchabass attended the Armie of Demetrius, who fled from

For though Traconitis be comprehended within Itures (and therefore it is faid to be finitima Galilea Gentium) yet it hath beginning over the mountaines Traconis, and fo it stretcheth into the plaines of the Territory of Iturea; whence Philip the brother of Herode was Tetrarch or President both of Ituraa and Trachonitis: both which

In the first of which places it bordereth the Land of promise, these being the wordes: From Mount Hor you shall point (that is, direct or drawa 20 line ) untill it come to Hamath: In the second place, thus : So they went up , and fearched out the Land from the Wilderneffe of Sin, unto Rehob to goe to Hamath: Then in EZEKIEL: The West part also shall be the great Sea from the border, till a man come ouer against Hamath: that is, the coast of the Sea shall beethe West border from the Southermost part of the holy Land, till you come directly ouer against Hamath Northward: from whence if a line bee drawne to the Sea, it will touch the walls of Zidon: which is 40 the Northwest corner of the holy Land. This Citic Chamath or Hamath in Nephtalim seemes to have beene as ancient as garens, against the other in Iturea, both built by Amatheus the eleventh sonne of Cinian. Whether benites and Gain the time of David, this, or the other had Tohu for King, it is not certaine; for Ha- dises made war, math or Emath beyond the Mountaines, and Hammath in Nephtalim were both try they posses neighbours to Damascus: of whose subjugation Tohu rejoyced, because Hadadeser in the time of whom the Damasceni came to helpe, was his enemie. This Tobu fearing the strength their fore-faand prosperitie of Dauid, hearing of his approach towards his territorie, bought his there had done peace with many rich prefents, and with many ancient vessells of gold, filuer and in the time of Scullatter his

But it feemeth that David in such great successe would not have had peace with Amalekits, chia Tobu, if he had bin King of any place in Nephtalim, and therefore it is probable that herefocusions where the countries of th heruledin Tloba: which Citie Salomon after his Fathers death made himselse Ma- trie is placed at fler of, as a part of the lands (* in the larger and conditionall promife) allotted by the Eaft of Gi-God to the children of Ifrael.

But this Hammath of Nephtalim, in the end, and after divers mutations and chan-pomife exges both of name and fortune, being as it hath beene said, possessed by Antiochus E- prest Dout. 1.7. piphanes, it was called Epiphania.

While Saint Hierome lined, it remained a Citie well peopled, knowne to the Syri- one of the 30 ans by the name Amathe, and to the Greekes by Epiphania.

Alongst the West border of Galilee, towards the South from Beth aida, was the firong Castle of Magdalum, the habitation of Marie Magdalen, not long since standing.

And beyond it the strong and high seated Citie of Jotapata: fortified by Josephus in the Roman Warre: but in the end after a long fiege surprised by Velpasian; who flaughtered many thousands of the Citizens: and held 1200. prisoners, whereof Iosephus the Historian was one.

The last and greatest of the Cities on that * Sea and the Lake of Genezareth within to Zabulon was that of Tiberias, from whence afterward the Galilean Sca also changed name, and was called the Sea of the Citie Tiberias, fo named in honour of Tiberius Cefar, it was one of the ten Cities, and the Metropolis of the Region Decapolitan, and the greatest and last of the lower Galilee. From hence our Saujour called Matthew from capernaum, Tie the toll or custom house, to bean Apostle, and neere vnto it raised the daughter of Jairus from death; it was built (as Iofephus reports) by Herod the Tetrarch, the brother of Philip, in the beginning of the raigne of Tiberius Cafar: in the most fruitfull part adde cinnereth, of Galilee; but in a ground full of Sepulchres: Quim iuxta nostras leges (faith hee) ad Ceptem dies impurus habeatur, qui in talibus locis habitet; Whereas by our law hee should bee fenen daves held as uncleane, who inhabited in (uch a place: by which wordes, and by the 20 whole place of losephus it appeares, that this Tiberias is not (as some have thought) the same as the old Cinnereth, which was scated, not in Zabulon, but in Nepthalim.

Neere vnto this Tiberias, at Emaus, there were hot baths, where Velpalian the Emperour encamped against Tiberias: More into the Land toward the South-Westis Rethulia feated on a very high Hill, and of great ftrength, famous by the flory of Holofernes and Indeth, such as it is. This Sephoris greatly vexed Vespasian cre hee wanne it. Hered Antipas when he made it the Regall feate of the nether Galilee, and forounded it with a strong wal, called it Autocratorida, which is as much to say as Imperiall, faith 10fephus; and it is now but a Castle called Zaphet.

To the South-West of this Sepheris or Diocafaria was that blessed place of Nazareth, the Citie of Marie the Mother of Chrift; in which hee himselse was conceiued, it standeth betweene Mount Taber, and the Mediterran Sea. In this Citie hee abode chiefly foure and twenty yeeres, and was therefore called a Nazarite, as the Christians afterward were for many yeeres. It was erected into an Archbishopricke in the following age. Neere vnto it are the Cities Buria (afterward well defen-50 ded against the Turkes ) and Nahulal of which 10f. 19.15. and Iud. 1.30. where it is called Nahalal: and 10f.21.35. where it is a Citie of the Leuites, neere the Sea; adiovning to the River of Chifen is Sarid, noted in Iofua for the vitermost of Za-

In this Territorie of Zabulon there are divers small Mountaines : but Tabor is the most renowned, by the Apparition of Moses and Elias: and by the Transfiguration of Christ in the presence of Peter, James, and John : vnto whom Moses and Elias appeared; in memorie wherofon the top of the Mountaine, the Empresse Helen built a sumptuous Chappell.

The chiefe River of Zabulon is Chilon, which riling out of Tabor, runneth with one streame Eastward to the Sea of Galilee, and with an other streame Westward into the great Sea. This River of Chifon where it rifeth, and to farre as it runneth Southward, is called Chedumim or Cadumim: and for mine owne opinion, I take it to bee the same which Ptolomie calleth Chorfeus: though others distinguish them: and set Charless by Cafaria Palastina. There is a second Torrent or Brooke that riseth in the Hills of Bethulia, and falleth into the Sea of Galilee by Magdalum: and the third is abranch of a river riling out of the Fountaines of Capharnaum, which falleth also into the same Sea, and neere Magdalum: which Torrent they call Dotham, from the name Mappe in Orof the Citie, from which it paffeth Eaftward to Beth aida, and so ioning with Iorda-telius. nis paraus, which runneth from the Valley of Iephthael which Iosua reckoneth in the 105.19.14. bounds of Zabulor, it endeth in the Sea of Galile.

THE TRIBE OF FSACHAR.

He next adioyning Territoric to Zabulon, to the South and Southwest, was I (achar, who inhabited a part of the neather Galilee, within Iordan: of whom there were increased in Agypt, as appeared by their musters at Mount Sinai 54400. able and warlike men, who leaving musters at Mount 51941 54400. and and their bodies with the rest in the Defarts, there entred the Holy

The first Citie of this Tribenecre the Sea of Galilee, was Tariebea , distant from Tariebea in Snee Tiberias eight English mile, or somewhat more, a Citie wherein the Iewes (by the ton.

Iewes carried thence captine; and afterward with great difficultie by Vespasian : who entred it by the Sea side, having first beaten the lewes in a sea-fight vpon the Lake or Sea of Galilee: he put to the sword all forts of people, and of all ages: fauing that his furie being quenched with the Rivers of bloud running through every street, he reserved the remainder for slaves and bond-men. 40 Next to Tarichea is placed Cession, or Cistion, of the Leuites, and then Hachar, re- 10f. 21.28 Killing membred in the first of Kings, c. 4. v. 17. then Abes or Ebets, Iof. 19. 20. and Remeth 6.7. is called of which lof. 19.21. otherwise Ramoth. 1. Vnder Aphee towards the Scathey fet the Citic of Efdrelon, in the plaines of Ga. lilee, called also the great field of Esdrelon, and Maggedo: in the border whereof are the ruines of Aphic to be seene, saith Brochard, and Breidenbach. After these are the Cities of Cafaloth, of which, I. Maccohab. 9. 2. Anem or Hen-Gannim of the Leuites, and to Scesima or Shahatsima, the West border of Isachar, of which 10. 19.22. From hence ranging the Seacoalt, there is found the Castle of Pilgrimes: a strong Castle invironed with the Sea formetime the store-house and Magasine of the Christians, and built by the Earle of St. Giles or Tolonfe.

From the Cattle of Pilgrimes the Sea maketh a great Bay towards the North, and the farthermost shore beginneth Mount Carmel, not farre from the River Chison: where Elijah affembled all the Prophets, and Priests of Baal, and prayed King Achab and the people affembled, to make triall whether the God of I/rael, or the Idoll of Bash were to be worthipped, by laying a facrifice without fire on the Altar; which done, the Priests of Baal prayed, and cut their owne flesh after their manner, butthe 22 fire kindled not, while Elijab in derifion told them that their God was either in purfuite of his enemics not at leifure, or perchance a-fleepe, &c. but at the prayer of Elijah his fire kindled, not withstanding that he had caused the people to cast many Vesselisof water thereon; by which miracle the people incenfed, flew all those Idolaters on the bankes of Chilan adjoyning.

At the foote of this Mountaine to the North standeth Caiphas, built, as they say, by Caiphes the high Priest. It is also knowne by the name of Porsina and Porphyria, fomctime a Suffragane Bilhops seate. Returning againe from the Seacoast towards Tiberias by the bankes of Chifon, there are found the Citic of Hapharaim or Aphraim, and the Castles of Mesta, and Saba: of which Brochard and Breidenbach: and then 30 Naim on the River Chilon: a beautifull Citie while it flood, in the Gates whereof Christ raised from death the widdowes only sonne.

Then Seen or Shion named Iosus 19. between the two Hills of Hermon, in Ischar: beyond it standeth Endor, famous by reason of the Inchauntresse that vndertooke to raise up the body of Samuel at the instigation of Saul.

Beyond it stands Anaharath and Rabbith named Iof. c. 19. v. 19. 20. Then Dabarath as it is named, 10/.21.28. or Dobratha, as it is named, 1. Chron. 6.72. This Citie ( which stretcheth it selfe ouer Chison) was a Citie of refuge belonging to the Le-

THE HALFE OF THE TRIBE OF MANASSE.

Of the bounds of this halfe Tribe: and of Scythopolis, Salem, Therfa, and others.

He next Tribe which iognethit felfe to Ifachar towards the South, is the halfe of Manasse, on the West side of Iordan. Manasses was the first begotten of Ioseph, the eleventh sonne of Iacob. His mother was an Agyptian, the daughter of Putiphar, Priest and Prince of Heliopolis: which Manaffes with his brother Ephraim, the grand-children of Jacob, were by adoption numbred among ft the fonnes of Iacob, and made up the number 20 of the twelve Patriarkes.

Of Manaffer there were increased in Egypt, as they were numbred at Mount Smai, 32200. able men: all which being confumed in the Defarts, there entred of their iffues, 52,700 bearing armes. The Territory which fell on this one halfe of Manalle, was bounded by Jordan on the East, and Dors upon the Mediterran Sea on the Weit, Iefrael on the North, and Machmata is the South border.

The first and principall Citic which stood in this Territoric was Beth an, sometime Nyfa, faith Plinie, built by Liber Pater, in honour of his Nurse there buried, of Plindib.54.184 the same name; which solinus confirmes. Afterward when the Scythians invaded Asathelesse, and pierst into the South, to the vetermost of Calesyria, they built this 30 Citie a-new, and very magnificent; and it had thereupon the name of Scythopolis, or the Citic of Scythians given it by the Greekes.

These barbarous Northren people constrained the Iewes to fight against their owne Nation and kindred, by whose handes when they had obtained victorie, they themselves set on the lewes which served them, and slew them all. Stephanus makes it the vtmost towards the South of Calesgrea: and Strabo iounes it to Galilee. It is feated betweene lordan and the Hills of Gilboe, in aulone ad montes acrabitena, faith Ziegler. But I finde it in the East part of the Valley of Iefrael neere Iordan : after that. lordan streightneth it selfe againe into a River: leaving the Sea or Lake Genezareth. Notwithstanding, Montanus describes it farre to the West, and rowards the Medipoterran Sea, neere Endor, contrarie to Stella, Laiestan, Adrichome, and all other the best Authors. This Citie was the greatest of all those of Decapolis: but the children of Manaffe could not expell the Inhabitants thereof; and therefore called it Sane an enemie, or Beth-fan, the house of an enemie.

Ouer the walls of this Bethfan the Philistims hung the bodie of Sanl, and his sonnes, 111dg. 1.10s. 17. flaine at Gilboe. It had, while the Christian Religion flourished in those parts, an Archbishop, who had nine other Bishops of his Diocesse, numbered by Tyrius, in his 14. Booke and 12. Chapter: but the same was afterward translated to Nazareth. The later transilers in those parts affirme, that there is daily taken out among the rubble and the ruines of that Citie, goodly pillers and other pieces of excellent marble, 10 which witnesse the stately buildings, and magnificence which it had in elder times, but it is now a poore and desolate Village.

From Beth/an keeping the way by Iordan, they finde an ancient Citic called Salem, which Citie the ancient Rabbines, faith Hierome, doe not finde to be the same Higgson, in Hoise. with Hierusalem: there being in the time of Hierome and fince, a towne of that name, Loc. Hebr.

necre Scythopolis before remembred, which if the place of Scripture Gen. 12.18.doe not confirme, where the Vulgar readeth transfuitg in Salem wrbem Sichemorum (for which others reade, venit incolumis ad Civitatem Sechemum, making the word Shalem not to be a proper name, but an adiective) yet the place loka 3.13. where it is faid. that John was baptizing in Anon necre Salem, may fomewhat strengthen this onini. on, and verit is not vnlikely that this Salem of which S. Sam. 13.17. for as for that which is added out of Cant. 6.12. of Shulammitis, as if it had been as much as a Woman of this Saleim, neere Anon, it hath no probability.

rael, and Indi, to the number of 330000, when hee meant to relieue Iabelh Gilead, a. gainst N sash the Ammonite: who would give them no other conditions of peace, than to luffer their right eyes to be thrust out. Neere Bezech is the Citie of Betbbera or rather Beth-bara, of which Indg. 7.24. in the floric of Gideon: and then Ephra or Hophra, wherein Gedeon inhabited: in the border whereof flood an Altar confecrated to Baal : which he pulled downe and defaced : and neere it that stone, on which Abimelech the Bastard sew his 70. brothers: a Heathenish cruelty, practised by the Turke to this day; and not faire hence, betweene the Village of Alophon and Iordan, Ptolo-20 Jostin and Sathurus overthrew Alexander King of the Iewes: and Saughtered as Iosephus numbreth them 3000. but according to Timagenes 50000. after which victory, as Ptolomie past by the Villages of the lewes; he slew all their women : and caused the yong children to bee fod in great caldrons, that the rest of the Iewes might thereby thinke that the Agyptians were growne to be men-caters, and strike them with the greater terrour.

Towards the West and on the border of Isachar, they place the Cities of * Aner of the Leuites, and Abel- Mehola, which Innius, Judg. 7.22. placeth in Ephraim, it was the habitation of Helifaus the Prophet, numbred among those places, 1. Reg. 4.12. which were given in charge to Baana by Salomon, to whose charge also Tahanac be-20 longed, a place of great itrength, which at the first resisted Io/us, though their King was afterward hanged, and their Citie given to the Leuites.

In the bodie of this Territory of Manaffe, but somewhat neerer Iordan, than to the Mediterran Sea, were three great Cities, to wit, Therfa, whose King was one of those that Issua flew: which the Kings of Ifrael vsed for their Regall seate: till such time as Samaria was built. From hence the wife of Ieroboam went to Achia to enquire of her sonnes health: who knowing her, though she were disguised, told her of her sonnes death.

The second was Thebes neere Samaria, of which name there are both in Agypt, and Greece, of great fame: in the affault of the Tower of this Towne, whereinto the 40 Citizens retired, the Bastard Abimilee was wounded by a waighty stone, throwne by a Woman over the Wall, who despairing of his recovery, commanded his Page to flay him out-right, because it should not be said that he perished by the stroke of a Woman. But others fet this Citie in Ephraim neere Siehem or Neapolis.

The third is Aerabata, of which the Territory adiopning is called Aerabatena, (one of the ten Toparchies or Gouernments in Iudaa) for which Hierome, 1. Matt. 5. reades Arabathena: but in the Greeke it is Acrabatine: Isidore calls it Agrabat. This Citic had one of the largest Territories of all Palastine belonging to the Gouernour thereof. Iosephus remembreth it often, as in his second Booke of the Jewes Warres, 6.11.25.28. and elsewhere.

The difference betweene a Tetrarchie and a Toparchie, was, that the first was taken for a Prouince, and the other for a Citic with some lesser Territory adioyning, and a Tetrarch is the same with Prases in Latine, and President in English, being commonly the fourth part of a Kingdome: and thereof fo called: Plinie nameth seven-reene Tetrarchies in Syria: the Holy Land had foure, and so hath the Kingdome of Ireland to this day, Lemfter, Vifler, Connath, and Mounster.

To the South-west of Acrabata they place the Cities of Balaam or Bilham, and Gethremmon of the Leuites : but Iunius out of Iof. 21.25. and 1. Chron. 6.70. gathers that these two are but one; and that libleham los. 16. 11. is another name of the same

Then is Iefrael a Regall Citic, set at the foot of the Mountaines of Gilboe, towards the South-west: herein Iezabel by a false accusation caused Naboth to bee stoned, to the end shee might possessed his Vineyard adioyning to the Citie, which Naboth reto fuled to fell, because it was his inheritance from his Father.

Internal fo was cast unburied into the same field: for which his Mother Iezabel King, 2. aap. 2.

murthered Naboth.

Toward the Sea from Jefrael is the Citie which they call Gaber: in whose ascent as Abaziah King of Iuda fled from lehu, when hee had flaine Ioram, hee was wounded with the shot of an arrow, of which wound hee died at Mageddo adioyning. The 1.King.9,27. Scripture calls this Citic of Gaber, Gur.

Then Adadremmon, necre vnto which the good King Iosias was flaine by Necho, King of gypt, in a Warre vnaduisedly undertaken. For Necho marched towards Affire a against the King thereof; by the commaundement of God: whom Iostas

20 thought to relitt in his passage. It was afterward called Maximianopolis.

Aneighbour Citie to Adadremmon was Maggeddo, often remembred in the Scrip- Ind. 1.c.5. tures; whose King was flainc among the rest by Josus: yet they defended their Ci- Jos. 17. tiefor a long time against Manasse. The River which passeth by the Towne, may perhaps bee the same which Ptolomie calleth Chorseus: and not that of which wee hauespoken in Zabulan. For because this name is not found in the Scriptures, many of those that have described the Holy Land delineate no such River. Moore only setsit downe in his Geographie of the twelue Tribes: but the River which paffeth by Maggeddo hee understandeth to bee but a branch, falling thereinto. Laicstan and Schrot make a great confluence of waters in this place : agreeable to this Scripture in 30 the fifth of Judges: Then fought the Kings of Canaan in Tanaac by the waters of Maggeddo. But these Authors, and with them Stella, give it no other name then the Torrent fo called.

But seeing that ancient Cosmographers stretch out the bounds of Phanicia, even to Sebasse or Samaria; and Strabofarre beyond it on the Sea-coast: And Iosephus calls Strab. 1.16. Sebaffe or Samaria; and Strabotatre Beyond it off the Sca-Coale This appropriate as logoptistical; Cafaria Palaiting a Citie of Phænicia, yea Laurentius Corninus extendeth Phænicia as Riger. farre as 6224: seeing also Ptolomie sets downe Chorseus for the partition of Phanicia and Indaa: this River running East and West paralell with Samaria: it is very probable that this Torrent called Maggeddo, after the name of the Citie, which it wateteth, is the same which Ptolomiein his fourth Table of Asia calleth Chorseus. The 40 later travailers of the holy Land call Maggeddo Subimbre at this day.

†. II. Of Cafaria Palastina, and some other Townes.

Rom Maggeddo toward the West, and necre the Mediterran Sea, was that glorious Citie of Calaria Palastina: first, the Tower of Straton: the same which Pliniecalls Apollonia: though Ptolomie fets Apollonia elsewhere, and toward Egypt, betweenethis Citie and loppe, to which Vespasian gaue the name of Flania Colonia. It sowas by Herodrebuilt, who therein laboured to exceede all the workes in that part of the world. For belides the edifices, which hee reared within the Walls, of cut and polishe marbles, the Theater and Amphitheater, from whence he might looke ouer the Seas farre away, with the high and stately Towers and Gates: hee forced a Harborow of great capacitie, being in former times but an open Bay: and the winde blowing from the Seathe Merchants haunting that Port, had no other hope, but in the strength of their cables and Anchors. This worke hee performed with such charge and labour, as the like of that kinde hath not beene found in any Kingdome. nor in any age; which, because the Materialls were fetcht from farre, and the waight of the stones was such as it exceedeth beliefe, I have added 10/ephus owne wordes 10fep.l.13.6.13. of this worke: which are thefe: Hanc locorum incommoditatem correcturus, circulum portus circumduxit quantum putaret magna classi recipienda sufficere: & in viginti vlnarum profundum, pragrandia faxa demisis: quorum plerag, pedum quinquaginta lono itudinis latitudinis verò octodecim, altitudine nouem-pedali: fuerunt quadam etiam maiora. minora alia: To mend this inconvenience of place (faith I ose PHVs) hee compast in a Bay 10 wherein a great fleete might well ride : and let downe great stones twentie fadome deepe: whereof some were fiftie foote long, eighteene foote broade, and nine foote thicke : some bigger, and some leffer. To this he added an arme or cawfie of two hundred foote long, to breake the waves: the rest he strengthened with a stone wall, with divers, frately Towers thereon builded : of which the most magnificent hee called Drusus after the name of Drusse the some in law of Casar : in whose honour hee intituled the Citie it felfe. Cafaria of Palastine: all which he performed in twelue yeerestime. It was the first of the Easterne Cities that received a Bishop : afterward erected into an Archbishopricke, commanding twentic others under it, faith Trius.

St. Hierome nameth Theophilus, Eufebius, Scacius, Euzorus, and Gelafius to have 20 beene Bilhops thereof. In this Citic was Cornelius the Centurion baptized by S. Peter: and herein dwelt Philip the Apostle: S. Paul was heerein two yeeres prisoner, under the President Falix, vnto the time and government of Porcius Festus: by whom making his appeale, he was sent to Cafar. Here, when Herod Agrippa was passing on to celebrate the Quinquennalia, taking delight to be ecalled a God by his flatterers, hee was stricken with an Angell vnto death, saith Iofephia.

To the North of Cafaria standeth Dora, or Naphoth Dor, as some reade Iof. 1.2: fo called (faith Adrichomius) because it io yneth to the Sea, whose King was flaine by Iolua. But Iunius for in Naphoth Dor, reades in tractibus Dor; and so the Vulgar, in regionibus Dor: although I. Reg. 4 II. for the like speech in the Hebrew it readeth 30 omnis Nephath Dor: The Septuagint in the place of lolus call it Nepheth-Dor, and in the other of the Kings, Nepha-Dor : but the true name by other places (as 10f.12.23. Iude, 1. 27.) may feeme to bee Dor. It was a frong and powerfull Citic; and the fourth in account of those twelve Principalities or Sitarchies, which Salomon ere-Eted. Innius vpon Marchab. 15.11. placeth it betweene the Hill Carmel and the mouth of the River Cherleus: for so some name the River Chorleus, of which wee have spoken already.

Into this Citie, for the strength thereof, Tryphon fled from Antiochius the sonne of Demetrius: where he was by the same Antiochus besieged with 120000. foote-men and 8000. Horse: the same perfidious villaine that received 200, talents for the ran- 40 fome of Ionathan Macchabaus (whom he had taken by treacherie) and then flew him: and after him flew his owne Master, vsurping for a while the Kingdome of Syria. It had also a Bishops scate of the Diocesse of Cafaria.

G≈.xyr.de Bøll.

From Cafaria towards the South, they place the Cities of Capharnaum, Gabe, and Galgal: for besides that Capharnaum famous in the Euangelists, they find in these parts neere the West Sea, another of the same name. Of Gabe Hierome in locis Hebraicis. The famous Galgal or Gilgal, was in Beniamin: but this Gilgal, they fay, it was whole King was Daine by Jofua.

Then Antipairis so called of Herode, in honour of his Father: but in the time of the Machabees it was called Caphar lalama : in the fields whereof Indas Machabaus 50 ouerthrew a part of the Armie of Nicanor, Lieutenant to Demetrius: an armie drawn into Iudes by a traiterous Iew, called Aleimus: who contended for the Priest-hood, first vnder Bacchides, and then vnder Nicanor. To this was S. Paul carried prisoner from Hierufalem, conducted by 470. Souldiers, to defend him from the furic of the

In after-times the Armie of Godfrey of Bulion attempted it in vaine: yet was itaken by Baldwine. It was honoured in those dayes with a Bishops seate, but it is now a poore Village called Affur, faith Brochard. Neere vnto this Citie the Prophet loust was three dayes preserved in the bodie of a Whale.

Into the Land, from Antipatris and Cafaria, standeth Narbata, whereof the Territorietaketh name: which Cestins the Romane wasted with fire and sword, because the leves which dwelt at Cafaria fled thence, and carried with them the Bookes of Osofes. Neere vnto it is the Mountaine of Abdia, the Steward of King Achab: wherein he hid an hundreth Prophets, and fed them, after which hee himselfe is said to to have obtained from God the Spirit of prophecic also.

Of the Kingdome of Phanicia.

The bounds and chiefe Cities, and Founders, and Name, of this Kingdome: and of the innention of Letters ascribed to them.

ECAVSE these five Tribes, of Affer, Nephtalim, Zabulon, Iffachar, and the halfe of Manafe, poffet the better part of that ancient Kingdome of Phanicia, to wit, of so much as lay to the South part of Anti-libanus: I have therefore gathered a briefe of those Kings which have gouerned therein: at least fo many of them as time (which denoureth all things ) hath left to posteritie : and that the rest haue perished, it is not firange: feeing fo many volumes of excellent learning in so long a race and revolution, and in so many changes of Estates and Conquests of Heathen Princes, haue been torne, cast away, or otherwise consumed.

The limits of this Kingdome, astouching the South parts, are very vincertaine: 40 but all Cosmographers doe in effect agree, that it takes beginning from the North, where that part of Syria, which is called Calietis, ends: most of them bounding it by Orthosia, to the North of Tripolis. Ptolomie makes it a little larger, as reaching from Pto.4. Tab. Ilands) to wit, Aradus, Ortholia, Tripolis, Botrys, Byblus, Berytus, Sidon, Tyre, Ptolomais (or Acon) Dora, and Cafaria Palestina: and by reason of the many Ports and goodly Sea-townes, it anciently commanded the Trades of the Easterneworld: and they were absolute Kings of the Mediterran Sea.

The ancient Regall Scate of those Princes was Zidon, built by Zidon the first some of Canaan: and the people then subject to that people were called Zidonians: the same state continuing even vnto Iosaac time. For till then it is probable that there was but one King of all that Region; afterward called Phanicia: which Procopius also confirmeth in his second Booke of Vandall Warres. But in processe of time the Citie of Tyre adiovning became the more magnificent: yet according to the Proposition and by them first built and peopled.

But after the death of Moses, and while Iosua yet gouerned Israel, Agenor an Egyptian of Thebes, or a Phanician bred in Egypt, came thence with his sonnes Cadmu, Phanix, Cyrms, and Cilix, (say Cedrenus and Curtius) and built and posses the Cities of Tyre and Zidon: to wit, the new Tyrms, and brought into Phanicia (so called after the name of his second Sonne) the view of letters: which also Cadmus in his pursuite after his sister Europa taught the Gracians. For Taurus King of Crete, when he surprised Tyre, had stollen her thence: of which the Poets deused the fable of Impiterstransformation into a Bull, by whom that stealth was also supposed to be made. Pomponius Sabinus makes Belus the first King of Phanicia: and sindes Cadmus his successour: 20 whom he calleth his grand-child: and it seemeth that Balus was the Father of Agenor, and not Neptune: because the successors of Dido held that name alwayes intenerence, making it a part of their owne, as Afarubal, Hannibal: which memorie Virgil also toucheth in these Verses:

The Queene anon commands the waighty bowle (Waightie with precious stones and massie gold) To slow with wine. This Belus vs'd of old, Andall of Belus Line.

Whether this Belin were Father or Grand-father to Agenor, the matter is not great. But it seemeth to me by comparing of times, that Belin was Ancestor to these Phanicians, and preceded Agenor. For were Belin, or Inpiter Belin, the sonne of Reptune by Libya, the Daughter of Epaphin, or were he the Sonne of Telegonin, according to Eusebin; yet it is agreed that Cecrops then ruled in Attica: and in the end of Cecrops time, saith S. Augustine, Moses lest Egypt: Agenors succession living at once 40 with Iosua. Now that Agenor returned about the same time into the Territory of Zidon, I cannot doubt: neither doe I donie, but that he gaue that Region the name of Phanicia, in honour of his Sonne. But in stead of the building of Tyre, and Zidon, it is probable that he repaired and fortified both: and therefore was called a Founder, as Semiramis and Nabuchodonosor were of Babylon.

For bee it true that Agenor was of the same Nation, and brought vp in Agenor was of the same Nation, and brought vp in Agenor where he learnt the vse of letters (Egypt flourishing in all kind of learning in Mose time) or were he by Nation an Agenor yet is it very likely that either he came to save his owne Territory: or otherwise to desend the coast of Canaan, from the Israelites: who were by Moses led out of Agenor, to the great losse and dishonour of so that Nation: and by 10/12 conducted ouer 10rdan, to conquer and possesse they conducted ouer 10rdan, to conquer and possesse they conducted out of Agenor is the losse which they received by the hand of God, in the Red Sca, and by the ten plagues cast on them before that, and by the staughter of so many of the Male children at the same time, could not hinder the Hebrewes from inuading Canaan by Land: which also they knew had so many powerfull Nations to defend it: the Defarts inter-jacent, and the strong E-domites, Moabites, Emorites, and Ammonites their borderers: yet Agypt having such Vessells, or. Ships, or Gallies, as were then in vse: did not in all probabilitien neglect to Garrison the Sea coast, or assist Agenor with such forces, as they had to spare; and which they might perform with the greater facilitie, in that the Philistrins which held the shores of Canaan, next adiopning vnto them, were their Friends and Con-

Now as it appeareth by the course of the storie, those Cities of Phanicia, which Now as said to have built (that is, to have fortified and defended against Iosua, and against the Tribes after him, as Zidon, Sor, or Tyre, by Iosua called the strong Citie, Aceto afterward Ptolomais, Aceto and Dor) were all that Phanicia had in those

That the Kings of Phanicia were mightie, especially by Sea, it appeareth, first by their desence against Israel: secondly by this, that David and Salomon could not master them: but were glad of their alliance: thirdly, that one of their Cities, though they were then but Reguli, desended it seite 13, yeares against a King of Kings, Natheodonoson: and that Alexander the great (who being made victorious by the production of God, seemed vntesistable) spent more time in the recourse of Tyre; than in the conquest of all the Cities in Asia.

Other opinions there are, as that of Berofus out of losephus, who conceives that Tyre was founded by Tyres the sonne of lapbet. And for the Region it selfe, though Callishees deriue it ab arbore dactylorum; and the Greekes from the word Phonos, of slaughter, because the Phanicians slew all that came on their coasts, yet for my selfe Itake it that Phanix the sonne of Agenor gaue it that name. But that either Agenor in Phanicia, or Casmus his sonne in Greece, were the Inventors of Letters, it is ridiculous: and therefore the dispute vanceessarie.

The Æthiopians affirme that Atlas, Orion, Orpheus, Linus, Hercules, Prometheus, Calmus, and others, had from them the first light of all those Arts, Sciences, and couill Policies, which they afterward profest, and taught others: and that Pythagor as himselfe was instructed by the Libyans: to wit, siom the South and Superior Ægyptians: from whom those which inhabited neerer the out-let of Nilus, as they say, borrowed their Divinitie and Philosophie: and from them the Greekes, then barbarous, received Civilitie. Againe, the Phamicians challenge this invention of Letters and of Learning: acknowledging nothing from the Ægyptians at all; neither doe they allow that Agenor and his sonnes were Africans; whence Lucan.

Out of doubt the Phanicians were very ancient: and from the Records and Chronicles of Tyre, 10/ephus the Historian confirmes a great part of his Antiquities. The Thracians againe subscribe to none of these reports: but affirme constantly, that the great Zamolxis flourished among them: when Atlas lived in Mauritania: Nilus and Vulcan in Agypt : and Ochus in Phanicia. Yea, some of the French doc nor blush to maintaine, that the ancient Gaules taught the Greekes the vic of Letters, and other Sciences. And doe not we know that our Bardes and Druids are as ancient as those Gaules, and that they sent their sonnes hither to bee by them instructed in all kinde of learning?

Lastly, whereas others bestow this invention on Moses, the same hath no probabilitie at all, for hee lived at fuch time as learning and arts flourished most, bothin Expt, and Affiria, and he himselfe was brought up in all the learning of the gyptians, from his infancie.

But true it is that letters were invented by those excellent Spirits of the first age. and before the generall floud: either by Seth, or Enes, or by whom elfe God knowes, from whom all wifedome and understanding hath proceeded. And as the same infinite God is present with all his Creatures, so hath hee given the same inventionto divers Nations: whereof the one hath not had commerce with the other; as well in this as in many other knowledges: for euen in Mexico, when it was first discovered. there was found written Bookes after the manner of those Hieroglyphicks, anciently 20 vsed by the Egyptians, and other Nations and so had those Americans a kinde of Heraldrie; and their Princes differing in Armes and Scutchions, like vnto those vsed by the Kings and Nobilitie of other Nations. #### ò. 11. Of the Kings of Tyre.

Vt what soeuer remaineth of the storie and Kings of Phanicia (the 20 bookes of Zeno, Sachoniatho, Mnaseas, and others of that Nation, being no where found) the fame is to be gathered out of the Scriptures, Iojephus, and Theophilus Antiochenus.

Agenor lived at once with Lofua, to whom succeeded Phanix, of whom that part of Canaan, and so farre towards the North as Aradus, tooke the name of Phanicia: what King succeeded Phanix it doth not appeare; but at such time as the Gracians belieged Troy, Phasis governed Phanicia.

In Hieremies time and while Iehoiakim ruled in Inda, the Tyrians had a King apart: for Hieremie speaketh of the Kings of Zidon, of Tyre, of Edom, &c. as of severall

In Xerxes time, and when he prepared that incredible Armie wherewith hee inuaded Greece, Tetramnestus ruled that part of Phanicia, about Tyre, and Zidon: who commanded, as some Writers affirme, Xerxes fleete, or rather, as I suppose, those 200. Gallies, which himselfe brought to his aide: for at this time it seemeth, that the Phanicians were Tributaries to the Persian: for being broken into Reguli, and pettie Kings in Hieremies time, they were subjected by Nabuchodonofor; of whose conquests in the Chapter before remembred, Hieremie prophecied.

Tennes, though not immediately, succeeded Tetramnestus: remembred by D. Siculus in his 14. Booke.

Strato, his fuccessor, and King of Zidon, Alexander Macedon threw out, because of his dependencie vpon Darius, and that his Predecessors had served the East Empire of against the Gracians. But divers Kings, of whom there is no memorie, came betweene Tennes and Strato. For there were confumed 130. yeeres and somewhat more betweene Xerxes and Alexander Macedon. And this man was by Alexander efteemed eleemed the more vinworthie of restitution, because (saith Curtius) hee rather sub- L. 4 mitted himselfe by the intigation of his Subiects (who foresaw their voter ruine by relitance) than that hee had any disposition thereunto, or bare any good affection towards the Macedonians.

Of this Strato, Athenaus out of Theopompus reporteth, that hee was a man of ill Athen, 1,12.6.13 liuing: and most voluptuous; also that hee appointed certaine games and prizes for Women dancers, and lingers: whom he to this end chiefly inuited, and affembled: that having beheld the most beautifull and lively among them, hee might recover them for his owne vse and delights. Of the strange accident about the death of one of these coalts, S. Hierome and others make mention: who having heard Hieron, la, cont. that the Persians were neere him with an Armie too waightie for his strength, and louin. finding that hee was to hope for little grace, because of his falling away from that Empire, and his adhering to the Agyptians: hee determining to kill himselfe, but fainting in the exequation, his wife being present wrested the sword out of his hand and flew him: which done shee also therewith pierced her owne bodie, and died.

After Alexander was possest of Zidon, and the other Strato driven thence, Hee gaue the Kingdome to Hephestron, to dispose of : who having received great enterrainement of one of the Citizens, in whose house he lodged, offered to recompence him therewith; and willingly offered to establish him therein: but this Citizen no 20 leffe vertuous than rich, delired Hephaftion that this Honour might bee inferred on some one of the bloud and race of their ancient Kings: and presented vnto him Balonymus, whom Curtius calls Abdolominus, I v S T I NE Abdolomius, and Plutarch Alynomus: who at the very houre that hee was called to this regall Estate, was with his owne handes working in his Garden, setting hearbes, and rootes, for his reliefe and fustenance: though otherwise a wise man and exceeding iust.

These were the ancient Kings of Zidon : whose estate being afterward changed into Popular or Aristocraticall: and by times and turnes subjected to the Emperours of the East: there remaineth no farther memorie of them, than that which is formerly deliuered in the Tribe of Affer.

The Kings of Tyre, who they were before Samuels time, it doth not appeare: Issophus the Historian, as is saide, had many things wherewith hee garnished his Antiquities from the Tyrian Chronicles : and out of Io/ephus, and Theophilus Antiochenus. there may be gathered a descent of some twentie Kings of the Tyrians, but these Authors, though they both pretend to write out of Menander Ephelius, doe in no fort agree in the times of their raignes; nor in other particulars.

Abibalus is the first King of the Tyrians, that Iofephus and Theophilus remember: whom Theophilus calls Abemalus: the same perchance that the sonne of Sirach men- c. 46. tioneth in his fourtie and fixth Chapter, speaking of the Princes of the Tyrians.

To this Abibalus, Suron succeeded, if hee be not one and the same with Abibalus. 40 Dauid (faith Eusebius out of Eupelemus) constrained this Suren to pay him Tribute, of Prep. Euang. 1.9. whomalfo David complaineth Pfal.83.

Hiram succeeded Suron, whom Iofephus calls Irom, and Theophilus sometime Hieromenus, sometime Hieromus, but Tatian and Zonaras Chiram. He entred into a league with Dauid, and sent him Cedars with Masons, and Carpenters, to performe his buildings in Hierusalem: after he had beaten thence the Jebusites. The same was hee that logreatly affilted Salomon: whom he not only furnished with Cedars, and other Materialls towards the raising of the Temple, and with great summes of money, but also he loyned with him in his enterprize of the East India, and of Ophir: and furnished Salomon with Mariners and Pilots: the Tyrians being of all Nations the most excellent 50 Nauigators: and lent him 120. talents of gold. Of this Hiram there is not onely mention in divers places of Scripture, but in Isfephus in his Antiquities the 7. and 8. 2. Sam. S. etc. chap. 2. & 3. in Theophilus his 3d booke, in Tatianus his Oration against the Greekes: and 2. Sam. c. 5. in Zonaras Tome the first. This Prince seemed to be very mighty and magnificent, 1.61:91.14. he despised the 20. townes which Salomon offered him; he defended himselfe against 2. chron, 2.8.9.

that victorious King Dauid rand gaue his Daughter in marriage to Salomon, called the Zidonian: for whose sake he was contented to worship Asteroth, the Idoll of the Phanicians. Hiram lived 53. yeeres.

Baleastartus whom Theoph. Antiochemus, calleth Bazorus, succeeded Hiram, King of Tyre and Zidon, and raigned 7, yeeres according to Iosephus.

Abdastartus the eldett sonne of Baleastartus, gouerned 9. yeeres, and lived but 20. veeres according to Iosephus: but after Theophilus he raigned 12. yeere, and lived 54. who being flaine by the foure fonnes of his owne Nurce, the eldeft of them held the Kingdome 12. yeeres.

Phelles the fourth sonne of Baleastartus, and brother to the three former Kings.

flew Altarimus, and raigned 8. Moneths; lived 55. yeeres.

Ithobalus (or Inthobalus, in Theophilus) son to the third brother Aftarimus, who was the chiefe Priest of the Goddeffe Astarta, which was a dignitie next vnto the King, reucnged the death of his father, and flaughtered his Vncle Phelles: and raigned 22. veeres, the same which in the first of Kings chap. 16 is called Ethbaal, whose Daughter Iezabel, Achab married.

Badezor or Bazor the sonne of Ithobalus or Ethbaal, brother to Iezabel, succeeded his 1.King.16,v.31 Toleph 6. yeeres Father, and raigned 6, yeeres, and lived in all 45.

Mettimus succeeded Badezor, and raigned but 9. yeeres, (faith Iosephus) he had two fonnes Premalion and Barca, and two Daughters Eli/a and Anna.

Premalion raigned after Mettimus his Father 40. yeeres, and lived 56: In the 7. veere of whose raigne, Elisa sailed into Affrica, and built Carthago, 142, yeeres and 8. Moneths, after the Temple of Salomon: which by our accompt was 289, yeeres after Troy taken, and 143. before Rome: and therefore that fiction by Virgil of Anews and Dido must be farre out of square. For Pygmalion couctous of Sicheus his riches, who had married his fifter Elifa, flew him traiteroufly as hee accompanied him 30 in hunting : or if wee beleeue Iustine and Virgil, at the Altar : whereupon Elisa fearing to be despoiled of her husbands treasure, fled by Sea into Affrica as a foresaid: whom when Pygmalion prepared to pursue, he was by his Mothers teares, and by threates from the Oracle arrefted. Barea accompanied his fifter, and affifted her, in the credion of Carthage: and from him sprang that noble Familie of the Barca in Affrica, of which race descended many famous Captaines, and the great Hannibal. Seruius interprets this name of Dido by Virago, because of her man-like acts, others from Iedidia. a furname of Salomon.

Eluleus succeeded Pygmalion: and raigned 26, yeeres: the same that overthrew the fleete of Salmanaffar, in the Port of Tyre: not with standing which hee continued his 40 siege before it on the Land side fiue yeeres, but in vaine.

After Eluleus, Ethobales governed the Tyrians, who vaunted himselfe to bee as wise as Daniel: and that he knew all secrets (saith Ezekiel) of whom the Prophet writeth at large in his 28. Chapter: out of whom it is gathered, that this Prince died, or was flaine in that long fiege of Nabuchodonofor: who ferrounded and attempted Tyre 13:

Baal followed Ethobales, and raigned 10. yeeres a tributaric, perchance, to Nabucho. donofor: for after his death it was gouerned by divers Iudges, succeeding each other: First, by Ecnibalus, then by Chelbis, Abarus the Priest, Mittonus, and Gerastus, who held it among them some 7. yeeres, and odde Moneths: after whom Balatorus commanded 50 therein as a King for one yeere: after him Merbalus sent from Babylon 4. yeeres: after him Irom fent thence also, 20. yeeres. ò. III.

Of Bozivs his conceit that the Edumans inhabiting along the Red Sea, were the Progenitors of the Tyrians, and that the Tyrians from them received and brought into Phanicia the knowleage of the true

F the great mutations of this Kingdome and State of the Tyrians, mixed with a discourse of divers other Nations, there is one Bozius that hath written a Tractat large, intituled deruinis Gentium. And although the great, and many alterations found in this and other Cities, yea in all things under Heauen; haue proceeded from his ordinance who onely is vnchangeable, and the same for quer; yet whereas the said Bozius, inforcing heerehence, that the prosperitie and ruffie of the Tyrians were fruits of their imbracing or for saking the true Religion, to proue this his affertion, supposeth the Tyrians to have beene Edumaans, descended from Esau, Iacobs brother: first, it can hardly be beleened that Tyre, when it flourished most in her ancient glorie, was in any sort truely deuout and religious. But to this end (besides the proofe which the Scriptures giue of Hisrams good affection when Salomon built the Temple) he brings many coniecturall ar-20 guments: whereof the strongest is their petigree and descent: it being likely in his opinion, that the posteritie of Esau received from him by Tradition the Religion of Abraham and Isaac. That the Tyrians were Edumaans, he endeuours to shew, partly by weake reasons, paincfully strained from some affinitie of names, which are arguments of more delight than waight: partly by authoritie. For Strabo, Herodetus, Plinie, and others witnesse, that the Tyrians came from the Red Sea, in which there were three Ilands, called Tyrus, Aradus, and Sidon: which very names (as he thinketh) were afterwards given to the Cities of Phanicia. Considering therefore that all the coaft of the Red Sea, was (in his opinion) under the Edumeans: as Elah and Esiongaber; or to vider the Amalek. 1885, who descended of Amales the Nephew of Esas, whose chiefe Citic was Madian, so called of Madian the sonne of Abraham by Cethura, whose posteritie did people it: the consequence appeares good (as he takes it) that the Tyrians originally were Edomites: differing little or nothing in Religion from the children of Ifrael. Hereunto hee addes that Cadmus and his Companions brought not into Greece the worthip of Aflartis, the Idoll of the Sidenians. That the Parents of Thales and Pherecydes being Phanicians, themselves differed much in their Philosophie from the Idolatrous customes of the Greekes. That in Teman, a Towne of the Edumeans, was an Vniuersitie, wherein as may appeare by Eliphas the Temanite, who disputed with leb, Religion was fincerely taught.

Such is the discourse of Bozius, who labouring to proue one Paradoxe by an other, deserues in both very little credit. For neither doth it follow, that if the Tyrians were Edumeans, they were then of the true Religion, or well affected to God and his People: neither is it true that they, were Edumeans at all. In what Religion Efair brought vp his children it is no where found written, but that himselse was a prophane man, and disauowed by God, the Scriptures in plaine termes expresse. That his posteritie were Idolaters, is directly proued in the fine and twentieth Chapter of the second booke of Chronicles. That the Edomites were perpetuall enemies to the House of Israel, saue only when David and some of his race, Kings of Iuda, held them in subjection, who knowes not? or who is ignorant of Davids unfriendly behaviour 30 amongst them, when first they were subdued? Surely it was not any argument of Kindred or Alliance, betweene Tyrus and Mount Seir, that Hiram held fuch good correspondence with David: even then when loab flew all the Males of Edon: neither was it for their denotion to God, and good affection to Israel, that the Edomites were so ill intreated. It seemeth that the pietie and ancient wisedome of Eliphaz the

Themanite was then forgotten, and the Edumaans punished, for being such as Danid in his owne dayes found them. Although indeed the Citie of Teman whence Eliphaz came to reason with lob, is not that in Edumea, but another of the same name. lying East from the Sca of Galilee, and adioyning to Hus, the Countrie of lob: and to Such the Citie of Bildad the Subite, as both such Chorographers who best knew those parts, doe plaintly shew, and the holy Text makes manifest. For lob is said to have exceeded in riches; and Salomon in wisedome, all the people of the Hast; not the inhabitants of Mount Seir, which lay due South from Palestina. True it is that Eliphaz the sonne of E/au had a sonne called Teman: but that Fathers were wont in those dayes to take name of their sonnes, I no where finde. And I/mael also hada to fonne called Thema: of whom it is not vnlike that Theman in the East had the name: for as much as in the feuenth Chapter of the booke of Iudges, the Midianites, Amalekites, and all they of the East are called I/maelites. And he that well confiders how great and strong a Nation Amalee was, which durst give battaile to the Host of Ifrael, wherein were 600000. able men, will hardly beleeue that such a people were defcended from one of Efau his grand-children. For how powerfull and numberleffe must the forces of all Edom have beene; if one Tribe of them, yea one Familie of a Tribe had beene so great? furely Mount Seir and all the Regions adioyning could not have held them. But wee no where finde that Edom had to doe with Amale: or affilted the Amalekites: when Saul went to roote them out. For Amales is no 20 where in Scripture named as a Tribe of Edom: but a Nation of it selfe, if distinct from the Ismaelites. The like may be faid of Midian, that the Founder thereof being fonne to Abraham by Cethura, doubtleffe was no Edomite. And thus much in generall for all the Seigniorie of the Red Sea-coast, which Bozius imagines the Edumeans to have held : if the Edomites in after-times held some places as Elan and Esioneaber on the Red Sea shore, yet in Moses time, which was long after the building of Tyre, they held them not. For Moses himselfe saith, that Israel did compasse all the borders of Edom: within which limits had Midian stood, Mojes must needs have knowne it: because he had sojourned long in that Countrie: and there had left his Wise and Children, when he went into Agypt.

But coniccturall Arguments, how probable soeuer, are needlesse in so maniscs a case. For in the 83. Pfal. Edom, Amalee, and Tyre, are named as distinct Nations: yea the Tyrians and Sidonians being one people, as all good Authors shew, and Bozius himselfe confesset, were Canaanites, as appeares, Gen. c. 10. v. 15. & 19. appointed by God to have beene destroyed, and their Lands given to the children of Assertage. See because they were ever Idolaters, and of the cursed seed of Canaan, not Cousins to Israel, nor professors the same Religion. For though Hiram said, Blessebe God that hath sent King David a wise some, we cannot inferre that hee was of Davids Religion. The Turke hath said as much of Christian Princes, his confederates. Certaine it is that the Sidonians then worshipped Assarch; and drew Sa-40

lomen also to the same Idolatrie.

Whereas Hiram aided Salomon in building the Temple, hee did it for his owne endes, receiving therefore of Salomon great provision of Corne, and Oile, and the offer of twentie Townes or Villages in Galilee. And if wee rightly confider things, it will appeare that Hiram, in all points, dealt Merchant-like with Salomon, Hee allowed him Timber, with which Libanus was, and yet is ouer-peffered: being otherwise apt to yeeld silkes: as the Andarine silkes which come from thence, and other good commodities. For Corne and Oile, which hee wanted, hee gaue that which hee could well spare to Salomon. Also gold for Land: wherein Salomon was the wifer: who having got the gold first, gaue to Hiram the worst Villages that hee had: with which the Tyrian was ill pleased. But it was a necessarie police which in forced Tyrus to hold league with fael. For Danid had subdued Moab, Ammon, Edom, the Aramites, and a great part of Arabia, even to Euphrates: through which Gountries the Tyrians were wont to carrie and recarrie their Wares on Cammells, to their fleetes on the Red Sea; and backe againe to Tyrus: fo that Salomon being Lord of all the Countries through which they were to passe, could have cut off their Trade.

But the Israelites were no Sea-men, and therefore glad to share with the Tyrians in their adventures. Yet Salomon as Lord of the Sea-townes, which his Father had taken from the Philistims, might have greatly dittressed the Tyrians, and perhaps have brought them even into subjection. Which Hiram knowing, was glad (and no merualle) that Salamon rather meant as a man of peace to employ his Fathers treasure, in magnificent workes, than in pursuing the conquest of all Syria. Therefore hee willingly aided him, and sent him cunning workmen, to increase his delight in goodly buildings, imageries, and instruments of pleasure.

As these passages betweene Salomon and Hiram, are no strong Arguments of pictie in the Tyrians: fo those other proofes which Bozius trames negatively vpon particular examples, are very weake. For what the Religion of Cadmus was, I thinke, no man knowes. It seemes to me, that having more cunning than the Greekes, and beingvery ambitious, hee would faine have purchased divine honours: which his Daughters, Nephewes, and others of his house obtained, but his owne many misfortunes beguiled him of such hopes, if hee had any. Thales and Pherecydes are bur fingle examples. Euery faluage Nation hath some whose wisedome excelleth the Vulgar, euen of ciuill people. Neither did the morall wisedome of these men ex-20 prefle any true knowledge of the true God. Only they made no good mention of the Gods of Greece: whome being newly come thither, they knew not. It is no good argument to say, that Cadmus and Thales being Tyrians, are not knowne to have taught Idolatrie, therefore the Tyrians were not Idolaters. But this is of force, That Carthage, Vica, Leptis, Cadiz, and all Colonies of the Tyrians (of which, I thinke, the Ilands before mentioned in the Red Sea to have been, for they traded in all Seas) were Idolaters, euen from their first beginnings : therefore, the Tyrians who planted them, and to whom they had reference, were so likewise.

This their Idolatry from Salomonstime on-wards is acknowledged by Bozius, , who would have ve thinke them to have been formerly a strange kinde of denout Edomites. In which fancie he is so peremptory, that he stileth men of contrary opinion, impios politicos, as if it were impiety to thinke that God (who euen among the Heathen, which have not knowne his name, doth favour Vertue and hate Vice) hath often rewarded morall honestie, with temporall happinesse. Doubtlesse this doctrine of Bozius would better have agreed with Iulian the Apostata, than with Cyril. For if the Afgrians, Greekes, Romanes, and all those Nations of the Gentiles, did then prosper most, when they drew necrest vnto the true Religion: what may bee said of the foule Idolatry which grew in Rome, as fast as Rome it selfe grew : and was inlarged with some new superstition, almost vpon enery new victory? How few 40 great battailes did the Romanes winne, in which they vowed not either a Temple to some new God, or some new Honour to one of their old Gods? yea, what one Nation, saue onely that of the lewer, was subdued by them, whose Gods they did not afterward entertaine in their Citie? Onely the true God, which was the God of the lewes, they rejected, vpbraiding the lewes with him, as if hee were vnworthy of the Romane Maieltie: shall we herevpon enforce the lewd and foolish conclusion, which Heathen writers vsed against the Christians in the Primitive Church: That such Idolatrie had caused the Citie of Rome to flourish, and that the decay of those abominations did also bring with it the decay of the Empire? It might well be thought so, if prosperitie were a signe or effect of true Religion. Such is the blind zeale of Bozius, 50 who writing against those whom he falsely termes impious, gives strength to such as are impious indeede. But such indiscretion is vsually found among men of his humour; who having once either foolifuly imbraced the dreames of others, or vainely fashioned in their owne braines any strange Chimera's of Divinitic, condemne all fuchin the pride of their zeale, as Athersts and Infidels, that are not transported with

Of the Tribe of EPHRAIM, and of the Kings of the tenne Tribes, whose head was EPHRAIM.

Of the memorable places in the Tribe of EPHRAIM.

A v I N G now past ouer Phanicia, we come to the next Territory adioyning: which is that of Ephraim: fomtime taken per excellentiam for the whole Kingdome of the tenne Tribes. Ephraim was the second sonne of 10/eph, whose issues when they left Egypt were in number 45000. all which dying in the Defarts ( Iosua excepted) there entred the Holy Land of their children growne to bee able men 32500. who fate 20 downe on the West side of Iordan, betweene Manasse, and Beniamin: who bounded Ephraim by the North and South; as Iordan, and the Mediterran Sea, did by the East and West:

The first and chiefe Citie which Ephraim had, was Samaria, the Metropolis of the Kingdome of Ifrael, built by Amris or Homri King thereof, and scated on the top of the Mountaine Somren, which over-looketh all the bottome, and as farre as the Sea-coast. It was afterward called Sebaste, or Augusta, in honour of August. Casar. This Citie is often remembred in the Scriptures: and magnificent it was in the first building; for as Brothard observeth, the ruines which yet remaine, and which Bro- 40 chard found greater then those of Hierusalem, tell those that behold them, what it was when it flood vpright: for to this day there are found great flore of goodly marble pillars, with other hewne and carued stone in great abundance, among the

It was beaten to the ground by the Sonnes of Hireanss the high Prieft: restored and built by the first Herod the sonne of Antipater: who to flatter Cafar called it Sebafte. Herein were the Prophets Helisaus, and Abdias buried: and so was Iohn Baptift. It now hath nothing but a few Cottages filled with Grecian Monkes.

Neere Samaria toward the South, is the Hill of Bethel, and a towne of that name: on the top of which Mountaine Ieroboam erected one of his golden Calues, to bee to worshipped: with which he seduced the Israelites.

In fight of this Mountaine of Bethel, was that ancient Citie of Sichem; after thereflauration called Neapolis, now Pelosa, and Napolasa: It was destroyed by Simeon and Leui, in reuenge of the rauishment of their sister Dina: and after that by Abimeles

Of the Kings of the ten Tribes from IER OBOAM to ACHAB.

F the first Kings of Israel. I omit in this place to speake: and reserve it to the Catalogue of the Kings of Inda: of whom hereafter.

Touching the acts of the Kings of the ten Tribes, but briefly, beginning after the division from Iuda and Beniamin, now it followeth to speake. The first of these Kings was Ieroboam, the sonne of Nebat, an Ephrathite of Zereda, who being a man of strength and courage, was by Salomon made ouer-feer of the buildings of the Mille or Munition in Hierusalem, for as much as belonged to the charge of the Tribes of Ephraim and Manaffe: and fo many of them as wrought in those workes. During which time as he went from Hierusalem, heeencountred the Prophet Abijah: who made him know that he was by God destinied to be King of Ifrael: and to command ten of the twelve Tribes. After this fearing that those things might come to Salomons knowledge, hee fled into Egypt to Shishak, whom Eulebius calleth Olosbores, whose Daughter hee married the Predecessour of which Shifbak (if not the same) did likewise entertaine Adad the Idumean, when he was carried yong into Egypt from the furie of Danid, and his Captaine loab; which Adad, the King of Egypt married to his Wives fifter Taphnes; vling both him and terobams as inftruments to shake the Kingdome of Indea; that himselfe might the 1,8eg.14. calilier spoile it as he did: for in the fifth yeere of Rehoboam, Shishak sackt the Citie of Hierusalem, and carried thence all the treasure of David and Salomon, and all the spoiles which Danid tooke from Adadezer of Soba, with the presents of Tohu. King of 10 Hamath, which were of an inestimable value.

This Ieroboam after the death of Salomon became Lord of the ten Tribes: and though he were permitted by God to gouerne the Ifraelites, and from a meane man exalted to that state: yet preferring the policies of the world before the service and honour of God(as fearing that if the Tribes vnder his rule should repaire to Hierusa-Ambrofe, or rather of Aarons Calfe in Horeh) further he made election of his Priests out of the basest and vnlearned people. This King made his chiefe feate and Palace at Sichem: He despised the warning of the Indean Prophet, whome Tofephus calleth Adon, and Glycas Ivel: His hand there-after withered, and was againe restored: but continuing in his Idolatry, and hardened vpon occasion that the Prophet returning was slaine by a Lyon, Abiah makes him know, that God purposed to roote out his posteritie.

He was afterward ouerthrowne by Abia King of Iuda, and died after he had go- 10 uerned two and twenty yeeres; whom Nadab his sonne succeeded; who in the se-

Baasha the sonne of Abijah, the third King after the partition, made warre with Ala King of Iuda: hee leated him elfe in Therfa: and fortified Rama against Iuda, to restraine their excursions. Hereupon A/a entertained Benhadad of Dama scus against him, who inuaded Nephialim, and destroyed many places therein: the meane while Asacarried away the Materials, with which Baasha intended to fortific Rama; but being an Idolater, he was threatned by Iehuthe Prophet, that it should befall his 20 1.Kin.15. 216 race, as it did to Ierobosm: which afterward came to passe: He ruled four eand twen-tie yeeres and died. To Baasha succeeded Ela his sonne, who at a feast at his Palace of Thersa, was in his cups flaine by Zambris after he had reigned two yeeres: and in him the prophecic of lehu was fulfilled. Zambris succeeded Ela, and assumed the name of a King seuen dayes; But Ambris in reuenge of the Kings Murther, let vpon Zambris, or Zimri; and inclosed him in Ther(a, and forft him to burne himselfe.

Ambris or Homri succeeded Ela, and transferred the Regall scate from Thersato Samaria: which he bought of Shemer, built, and fortified it. This Ambris was also 20 an Idolater, no leffe impious than the rest; and therefore subjected to Tabremmon, King of Syria; the Father of Benadad according to Eulebius, Nicephorus, and Zonara: but how this should stand, I doe not well conceine; seeing Benadad the Sonne of Tabremmon was inuited by A/a King of Inda, to affaile Baa ha King of Ifrael, the Father of Ela who forewent Ambris. This Ambris raigned twelue yeeres, fixe in Ther-Sa, and fixe in Samarea, and left two children, Achab and Athalia.

III.

Of ACHAB and his Successors, with the captinitie of the ten

CHAB or Ahab succeeded Omri, who not onely vp-held the Idolatrie of Ieroboam, borrowed of the Egyptians: but hee married Iezabel the Zidonian: and as Ieroboam followed the Religion of his Agyptian Wife: so did Achab of his Zidonian: and erected an Altarand a Groue to Baal in Samaria. He suffered 'ezabel to kill the Prophets of the most high God. GoD sent famine on the Land of Ifrael. Achab met Elias : Elias preuailed in the triall of the Sacrifice, and killeth the false prophets: and afterward flieth for feare of Iezabel.

Benadad, not long after, belieged Samaria : and taken by Achab, was by him fet at libertie : for which the Prophet (whom Glycas calleth Michaus) reproueth him : afterward hee caused Naboth by a false accusation to bee stoned. Then in young with Iolaphat in the warre for the recourse of Ramoth, hee was flaine as Micheas had fore-

Hee had three sonnes named in the Scripture, Ochozias, Ioram, and Ioas : belides feuentie other sonnes by fundry wines and Concubines.

Ochozias succeeded his sather Achab. The Moabites fell from his obedience : hee Beelle but was bruiled himselfe by a fall : and sent for counsaile to Beel-zebub the God of Acharon, the same with Eliab the Prophet meeteth the messenger on the way: and misliking that Ochozias to, land Plusto, fought helpe from that dead Idoll, asked the meffenger, If there were not a God in nere you link. Israel? Ochozias sendeth two Captaines, and with each fiftie souldiers to bring Eliah 2. Kings 1. 10 vnto him, both which with their Attendants were confumed with fire. The third Captaine befought mercie at Eliahs hands, and hee spared him, and went with him to the king; anowing it to the king that he must then die, which came to passe in the fecond yeere of his raigne.

Isram the brother of Ochozias by Iszabel, succeeded: He allured Islaphat king of Inda, and the king of Edom to affift him against the Mosbites, who refused to pay him the tribute of 20000. sheepe. The three kings wanted water, for themselves and their horses, in the Desarts. The Prophet Elisha causeth the ditches to flow. The Moa- 2.Kinga. bites are ouerthrowne: their king flieth to Kirharafeth, and being befieged, according to some Expositors, burnt his sonne on the walles as a Sacrifice, whereat the three 20 kings moued with compassion returned and left Moab, washing and spoyling that Region. Others, as it seemes with better reason, understand the Text to speake of the some of the king of Edom, whom they suppose in this irruption to have been taken prisoner, by the Mosbites, and that the king of Mosb showed him ore the walls, threatning, vnlesse the siege were dissoluted, that he would offer him in sacrifice to his Gods. Whereupon the king of Edom belought those of Inda and Israel to breake off the fiege for the fafetie of his sonne: which when the other kings refused to yeeld vnto, and that Moab according to his former threatning had burnt the king of Edoms sonne vpon the rampire, that all the affailants might discerne it, the king of Edom being by this sad spectacle inraged, for sooke the partie of the other kings; for want of whole affistance the siege was broken vp.

After this the king of Aram sent to Ioram, to heale Naaman the Captaine of his Armie of the leprousie. The answere of Ioram was; Am I God to kill, and to give life, that hee doth fend to heale a man from his leprousie? adding, that the Aramite fought but matter of quarrell against him. Elisha hearing thereof, willed the king to fend Naaman to him; promiting that hee should know that there was a Prophet in Ifrael, and so Naaman was healed by washing himselfe scuentimes in Iordan. Elisharefuled the gifts of Naaman. But his servant Gebazi accepted a part thereof: from whence the fellers of spirituall gifts are called Gehazites, as the buyers are Simonians 2. Kings. 5.

of Simon Magus.

Afterward Benhadad king of Aram or Damaseus, having heard that this Prophet did discouer to the king of Israel what souer the Aramite consulted in his secretest councell, fent a troupe of horse to take Elisha: all whom Elisha strooke blinde, and brought them captives into Samaria: Ioram then asking leave of the Prophet to flay them, Elisha forbade him to barme them: but caused them to be sed and sent backe to their owne Prince in fafetie.

The king of Aram notwithstanding these benefits, did againe attempt Samaria, and brought the Citizens to extreme famine. Ioram imputeth the cause thereof to the Prophet Elisha. Elisha by prayer caused a noise of Charriots and armor to sound in the ayre, whereby the Aramites affrighted, fled away, and left the fiege; an act 10 of great admiration as the same is written in the second of Kings. After this, when 2 King 1. Azael obtained the kingdome of Syria by the death of his Master, Ioram entring vpon his frontire tooke Ramoth Gilead: in which warre he received divers wounds, and returned to Iefrael to be cured. But whilest hee lay there, Iehn (who commanding the armie of Ioram in Gilead, was anounted king by one of the children of the Prophets Prophets fent by Elissa surprized and slew both him and all that belonged vnto him, rooting out the whole posteritie of Ahab.

Jebs who raigned after Iehoram, destroyed not onely the race of his foregoers, but also their Religion; for which hee received a promise from God, That his seede should occupie the Throne vnto the fourth generation. Yet hee vpheld the idolatrie of Ieroboam, for which hee was plagued with grieuous warre, wherein he was beaten by Hazzel the Aramite, who spoiled all the Countries to the East of Iordan: in which warre he was flaine, faith Cedrenus: whereof the Scriptures are filent. Ichu raigned 28. veeres.

Josephaz or Ieboahaz the sonne of Jehn succeeded his father, whome Azael and his to fonne Benhadad often inuaded, and in the end subjected, leaving him onely 50. horse. 20. chariots, and 10000. foot; and as it is written in the Scriptures, he made them like dust beaten into powder. loachaz raigned 17. yeeres.

After Ioachaz Ioas his sonne gouerned I/rael, who when hee repaired to Elisha the Prophet ashe lay in his death-bed, the Prophet promised him three victories ouer the Aramites: and first commaunded him to lay his hand on his bowe, and Elilha couered the kings hands with his, and bad him open the window westward (which was toward Dama(cus) and then shoot an arrow thence out. He againe willed him to beate the ground with his arrowes, who smote it thrice, and ceased: The Prophet then told him, that hee should have smitten five or fixe times, and then hee should 20 have had so many victories over the Aramites as hee gave strokes. And so it succeeded with 10.15, who overthrew the Aramites in three battells, and recovered the Cities and Territorie from Benhadad the sonne of Azael, which his father louchaz had lost. He also ouerthrew Amazia king of Iuda, who provoked him to make the war, whereupon hee entred Hierusalem, and sacked it with the Temple. This 1045 raigned fixteene yeeres and died; in whole time also the Prophet Elisha exchanged this life for a better.

Ieroboam the third from Iehu, followed Ioas his father, an Idolater as his predeceffors; but hee recovered all the rest of the lands belonging to Ifrael, from Hamath which is neere Libanus, to the dead Sea, and raigned one and fortie yeeres.

Zacharias the fift and last of the house of Iehu, flaine by Shallum his vasfall, who raigned in his stead, gouerned six moneths. Shallum held the kingdome but one moneth, being flaughtered by Menahem of the Gadites.

Menahem who tooke reuenge of Shallum, v fed great crueltie to those that did not acknowledge him: ripping the bellies of those that were with child. This Menahem being inuaded by Phul, bought his peace with ten thousand talents of silver, which he exacted by a Tribute of fiftie shekels from every man of wealth in Ifrael. Mens-hem gouerned twentie yeeres.

Pekahiah or Phaceia, or after Zonar as Phacesia, succeeded, and after hee had ruled two yeeres, hee was flaine by Phaca or Pekah the Commaunder of his armie, who 40 raigned in his place. In this Pekahstime Phulassar or Tiglat-Phylassar inuaded the kingdome of Ifrael, and wan Iton, Abel-Bethmaaca, Ianoach, Kedesh, Hasor, and Gr lead, with all the Cities of Galilee, carrying them captines into Affyria: he was drawn in by Achas king of Indea against Pekah and Rezin, the last of the Adades. For Achas being wasted by Pekah of Ifrael and by Rezin of Damascus, did a third time borrow the Church riches, and therewith ingaged the Affirian, who first suppressed the Monarchie of Syria and Damasous, and then of Israel: and this inuiting of the great Assirian, was the vtter ruine of both States, of Ifrael and of Indea. Pekah raigned twentie yeeres.

Then tiofhea or Ofea, who slew Pekah, became the vastall of Salmanasfar; but ho- 50 ping to shake off the Assyrian yoke, he sought aide from So, or Sua, or Sebicus king of Egypt: which being knowne to the Affyrian, he cast him into prison, besieged Samaria, and mastred it : carried the ten idolatrous Tribes into Niniuie in Affria, and into Rages in Media, and into other Easterne Regions, and there dispersed them; and re-planted Samaria with divers Nations, and chiefly with the Cutha (inhabiting about Cutha a River in Persia, or rather in Arabia Deserta) and with the people Catanei bounding vpon Syria, and with those of Sepharuaijm (a people of Sephar in Me-Copotamia vpon Euphrates, of whose conquest Senacherib vaunteth) also with those of Esai.37. Aua: which were of the ancient Auins who inhabited the Land of the Philistims in Abrahams time, dwelling neere vnto Gaza, whom the Caphtorims rooted out; and at this time they were of Arabia the Defart, called Hausi, willing to returne to their ancient feates. To these he added those of Chamath or Iturea, the ancient enemies of the Ifraelites, and fometime the Vassalls of the Adads of Damafeus, which so often afto flifted them. And thus did this Affyrian adulfe himselfe better than the Romanes did. For after Titus and Vefpasian had wasted the Cities of Indez, and Hiernsalem, they carried the people away captine: but left no others in their places, but a very few fimple labourers, belides their owne thin Garrisons, which soone decaied: and thereby they gave that dangerous entrance to the Arabians and Saracens, who never could be driven thence againe to this day.

And this transmigration, plantation, and displantation, hapned in the yeare of the world 3292. the fixth yeare of Ezekia King of luda: and the ninth of Holea the last King of Israel.

Of the memorable places of DAN, SIMEON, IVDA, RVBEN, GAD, and the other halfe of MANASSE.

Of DAN, where of Ioppe, Gath, Accaron, Azotus, and other Townes.

Ow following the coast of the Mediterran Sea, that portion of Land assigned to the Tribe of Dan, joyneth to Ephraim, whereof I spake last : of which familie there were numbred at Mount Sinai 62700. fighting men, all which leaving their bodies with the rest in the 20 Defarts, there entred the Holy Land of their sonnes 66400. bearing armes. The first famous Citie in this Tribe on the Sca coast was Ioppe, or Iapho, as in the 19. of losua: one of the most ancientest of the World, and the most famous of others on that coast, because it was the Port of Hierusalems. From hence Ionas imbarked himselfe when hee fled from the service of God, towards Tharsis in Cilicia. In the time of the Macchabees this Citie received many changes: and while Indas Macchabaus governed the Iewes, the Syrians that were Garrisond in Loppe, having their fleet in the Port, invited 200. principall Citizens aboord them, and cast them all into the Sea: which Iudas revenged by 39 firing their fleet, and putting the companies which fought to escape to the sword.

It was twice taken by the Romanes, and by Cessius the Lieutenant vtterly burnt and ruined. But in the yeare of Christ 1250. Lodonick the French King gaue it new Walls and Towers: It is now the Turkes, and called Iaffa. There are certaine Rocks in that Port, whereunto it is reported that Andromeda was fastired with chaines: and from thence delivered from the Sea-Monster by Perfeus. This fable (for so I take it) L.3.x.14.de bel. is confirmed by lolephus, Solinus, and Plinie. Marcus Scaurus during his office of Ædileship, shewed the bones of this Monster to the people of Rome. S. Hierome vpon Ionas speakes of it indifferently.

The next vnto Joppe was Jamnia, where Indas Macchabaus burnt the rest of the Sy- 40 rian fleet: the fire and flame whereof was seene at Hierusalem 240. furlongs off. It had sometime a Bishops seate, saith Will of Tyre; But there is no signe of it at this time that fuch a place there was. After Ismniais the Citie of Geth or Gath, sometime Anthedon, faith Volaterran, And so Montanus seemes to understand it. For he sets it next to Agypt, of all the Philifim Cities, and in the place of Anthedon. But Volaterran gives neither reason nor authoritie for his opinion; for Ptolomie fets Anthedon farre to the South of Toppe: And Geth was the first and not the last (beginning from the North) of all the great Cities of the Philistims: and about fixteene miles from Toppe; where St. Hierome in his time found a great Village of the same name. It was sometime the Habitation and 50 Seminarie of the Anakims: firong and Giant-like-men, whom Iosua could not expell, nor the Danites after him : nor any of the Ifraelites, till Danids time: who flew Goliath, as his Captaines did divers others not much inferiour in strength and stature vnto Goliath.

Roboum the Sonne of Salomon rebuilt Geth: Ozias the sonne of Amazia destroied ir againe. It was alfolaid waste by Azael King of Syria. Fillke the fourth King of Hiera/alem, built a Castle in the same place out of the old ruines. Whether this Geth was the same that Will. of Tyre in the holy Warre calls Ibiglin, I much doubt: the L.21.6.18. errour growing by taking Gath for Anthedon.

Not farre from Geth or Gath standeth Bethfemes or the house of the Sunne. In the fields adjoyning to this Citie (as is thought) was the Arke of God brought by a voke oftwo Kine, turned loose by the Philistims: and the Bethsemites presuming to looke therein, there were flaine of the Elders 70. and of the people 50000 by the ordinance 10 of God. After which flaughter and the great lamentation of the people: it was called the great * Abel, faith St. Hierome. Benedict us Theologus finds three other Cities of this name; one in a Nepthalim: another in Iuda: and another in Isachar. Hierome felle, but the finds a fifth in Beniamin.

Keeping the Sea-coast, the strong Citie of Accaron offereth it selfe, sometime one which stone of the fine Satrapies, or Gouernments of the Philistims. St. Hierome makes it the same the Philistims with Cafaria Palastina. Plinie confounds it with Apollonia: It was one of those that fet the arke, defended it selfe against the Danites and Indeans. It worthipped Beel-zebub the God ingeasie from of Hornets or Flies. To which Idollie was that Ahaziah King of Ifrael fent to enquire Eben or Aben, of his health: whose Messengers Eliah meeting by the way caused them to returne, which associates 20 with a forrowfull answere to their Master. This Citie is remembred in many places Abel which sig

Neere it was that famous d Indas Ma- ther of Pharao chabaus flaine by Bacchides and Alcimus, the Lieutenants of Demetrius. Afterward it yeers together was taken by Ionathas: and the rest of the Citizens being put to the sword, all that whence terem 30 fled into the Temple of Dagon, were with their Idoll therein confumed with fire: of the refidue necre which also he overthrew Apollonius.

Gabinius the Romane rebuilt it. It had a Bishops scate while Christianitie flourished in those parts. But in St. Hieromes time it was yet a faire Village. And this was un the last of the Sea-Townes within the Tribe of Dan.

The Cities which are within the Land Eastward from Azotus, and beyond the Fountaine of Athiopia, wherein Philip the Apostle baptized the Eunuch, are Torah, Maccine. or Sarara, and Esthaol, and betweene them Castra Danis neere Hebron: though this 10/19.41. place where Sampson was borne, may seeme by the words Ind. 18.12. to bee in 18.02. the Tribe of Iudah, as the other also were bordering Townes betweene Dan and 10 Iuda.

There are besides these the Citic of Cariathiarim, that is, the Citic of the woods: Alias Cariathia 50 seated in the border of Iuda, Beniamin, and Dan, wherein the Arke of God remained bast and Bast, twentic yeares in the house of Aminadab: till such time as Danid carried it thence to 1. ### S. II. THE TRIBE OF SIMEON.

He Tribe of simeon takes up the rest of the Sea-coast of Canaan, to the border of Agypt: who being the second Sonne of Iacob by Lea, there were increased of that familie while they abode in Agypt, as they were numbred at Mount Sinai, 59300. able men, all which ending their lives in the Defarts, there entred the Land of Promise of theirisfues 22200. bearing armes, who were * in part mixed with Iuda, and in part seuered, 30 inhabiting a small Territorie on the Sea-coast, belonging to Edumaa, of which the first Citie adioyning to Dan, was Ascalon.

The Reguli or pettie Kings thereof were called Ascalonite: of which Volaterran out of Xanthus, in the Historie of the Lydians, reports, that Tantalus and Ascalus were the be reckoned in this Tribe: fee fonnes of Hymenau: and that Ascalus being imployed by Aciamus King of the Lydishis Tribe: fee ans, with an Armie in Syria, falling in loue with a yong Woman of that Countrie, built this Citie and called it after his owne name: the same hath Nicolaus in his Historic, faith Volaterran.

Diodorus Siculus in his third Booke remembreth a Lake neere Ascalon, wherein there hath beene a Temple dedicated to Derceto, the Goddesse of the Syrians: having 40 the face of a Woman and the bodie of a Fish: who, as I haue said before, in the storie of Ninus, was the Mother of Semiramis, fained to be cast into this Lake, and fed and relected by Doues. And therefore was the Doue worshipped both in Babylonia and Syria, of which Tibulus the Poet:

It was one of the chiefest and strongest Cities of the Philistims. It bred many lear- 50 ned men (faith Volaterran) as Antiochus, Sofus, Cronus, Dorotheus the Historian, and Artemidorus who wrote the storie of Bithynia.

In Ascalon, as some say, was that wicked Herod borne, that seeking after our Sauiour, caused all the Male-children of two yeeres old and vnder to be staine. In the Christian

Next to Ascalon Rood Gaza or Gazera, which the Hebrewes call Hazza, the Syrians Azan: of Azonus (as they fay) the sonne of Hercules. Other prophane writers affirme that it was built by Iupiter. Pomp. Melagines the building thereof to Cambries the Persian: because belike hee rebuilt it, and Gaza in the Persian tongue is as much to favas Treafure. This Gaza was the first of the five Satrapies of the Philistims; and the Politics. South bound of the Land of Cansan towards Egypt. But this Citie was farre more ancient than Camby (es, as it is proued by many Scriptures. It was once taken by Cabb: but the strength of the Anakims put him from it. At such time as Alexander Macedon invaded the Empire of Persia, it received a Garrison for Darius: in despight Steph.de Vil whereof it was by the Macedonians after a long siege demolished, and was called Gaza I. King. 6. & alib 20 of the Defart.

Alexander Janneus King of the Jewes surprised it: and slew 500. Senators in the 10/0p.13.am.19. Temple of Apollo which fled thither for Sanctuarie: but this Gaza was not fet vo in the same place againe, to wit, on the foundations which Alexander Macedon had ouer-turned, but somewhat neerer the Sea side: though the other was but two mile off. It was a Towne of great account in the time of the Machabees, and gave many wounds to the Jewes till it was forst by Simon: of which hee made so great account as by the name of Gazara. At the very out-let of the River of Befor, standeth Maiomathe Port of Gaza: to which the priviledge of a Citie was given by the great Constantine, and the place called Constance after the name of the Emperours Sonne. But Iulian the Apostata Soone Historip. L.G.c.4. after favouring the Gazeans, made it subject vnto them, and commanded it to be cal-

In St. Hieromer time it seemes it had the name of Daema: Iosua 15.49. it is called Vrbs Sanna: from the name, as it seemes, of some of the Anakims, as Hebron was called Vrbs Arbahi. For even hence also were these Giants expelled. It was taken chiefly by Othoniel, incouraged by Calebs promife of his Daughter in marriage: but that Iofua and the Hoast of Ifnael were arthe fur. prise, it appeares 10, 10.39. This Citie 10f.21. 15. is named among those which out of Simeon and Iuda were given to the Leuites. And hence it seemes they attribute it 10 to this Tribe.

Besides these, there are many others in the Tribe of Simeon, but of lesse same, as Hain, of which Iof. 19. 7. which also Iof. 21. 16. is reckoned for one of the Cities of the Leuites, given out of the portion of uda and Simeon (for which Iunius thinkes Hasham is named 1. It was also called the Citicof Isac, because hee dwelt long there. While the Christians held the Holy Land, they laboured much to strengthen this place, standing on the border of the Arabian Defart, and in the South bound of Canaan. It hath now the name of Gibelin. The other Cities of Simeon which are named in the pla-30 ces of Iosus, and of the Chronicles, about noted, because they helpe vs nothing in storie, I omit them. In the time of Ezekia King of Iuda, certaine of this Tribe being streightned in their owne Territories, passed to * Geder, as it is 1. Chron. 4.29. (the same place which Iof. 15. 36. is called Gedera and Gederothaima) which at that time was inhabited by the iffue of Cham: where they feated themselves: as also five hundred others of this Tribe, destroied the Reliques of Amalec in the Mountaines of Edom, and dwelt in their places.

The Mountaines within this Tribe are few, and that of Sampson the chiefest: vnto which he carried the Gate-post of Gaza. The Rivers are Befor, and the Torrent of Agypt called Shiehar, as is noted in Affer.

THE TRIBE OF FVDA.

F Iuds the fourth Sonne of Iacob by Lea, there were multiplied in Egypt 74600, all which (Caleb excepted) perished in the Defarts. And of their sonnes there entred the Land of Canaan 76500 bearing armes: Agreeable to the greatnesse the Land or Canaan 76500, bearing armes: giuen, called afterward Indea: within the bounds whereof were the portions allotted to Dan and Simeon included. And many Cities named in these Tribes, did first, as they say, belong vnto the children of Inda: who had a kind of Soveraigntie over them: as Succoth, Cariathiarim, Lachis, Bethsemes, Thiglag, Beersbeba, and others. The multitude of people within this small Province (if it be meated by that ground given to this Tribe onely) were vncredible, if the witnesse of the Scriptures had not warranted the report. For when David numbred the people, they were found five hundred thousand fighting men.

The Cities of Iuda were many. But I will remember the chiefest of them: beginning with Arad, or Horma, which standeth in the entrance of Judea from Idumea: whose King first surprised the Ifraclites as they passed by the border of Canaan to- Num. 21. v.3. whole King lift in price the 1/2 and tooke from them some spoiles, and many prisoners: who being lift. 2.16. afterward ouerthrowne by the Israelites, the sonnes of Keni, the Kinsmen of Moses, obtained a possession in that Territorie: who before the comming of the Israelites,

Following this Frontier towards Idumea and the South, Ascensus Scorpionis, or Num. 34.4. Attabbim is placed, the next to Arad: fo called because of Scorpions, which are faid tobe in that place: from which name of Acrabbim, Hierome thinks that the name of 30 the Toparchie called Acrabathena was denominated: of which we have spoken in Manasses. On the South side also of Indea they place the Cities of Ingur, Dimona, Adada, Cedes, Alhna, lethnam, and Alor or Chatfor, most of them Frontier Townes.

And then Ziph: of which there are two places so called one besides this in the body of Iuda, of which the Defart and Forrest adioyning tooke name: where David hid himselfe from Saul. After these are the Cities of Efron, Adar, Karkab and Asemo-

Turning now from Idumea towards the North, we finde the Cities of Danna, Shemah, Amam, the other Afor, or Chatfor, Behaloth, and the two Sochoes: of all which fee 10f. 15. also Carioth by Iofuac. 15. v.25. called Kerioth: whence Indas the Traitor Indg. 15. 8. 1. 40 was called If-carioth, as it were a man of Carioth. Then Hetham the abode of Sampfon which Reboboam reedified. Beyond these towards the North border, and to- chron.4.32. wards Eleutheropolis, is the Citic of Iethar, or Iatthir, belonging to the Leuites. In Saint notes that this Hieromes time it was called Iethira: and inhabited altogether with Christians: neere it were within vnto this Citie was that remarkeable battaile fought betweene Afa King of Iuda, and the bounds of Zara King of the Arabians, who brought into the field a Million of fighting men: and to Simeon. was not with standing beaten and put to flight: As following the victoric as sarre as 10f.15.48. afterward he delivered from the affaults of the Philistims: neere which the Prophet Abacus was buried: whose monument remained and was scene by St. Hierome.

Neere it is Hebron sometime called the Citie of Arbah, for which the Pulgar hath Cariatharbe: the reason of this name they give as if it signified the Citie of source; because the foure Patriarchs, Adam, Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, were therein buried. but of Adam it is but supposed : and it is plaine by the places losus 14. 14. and 15. 12. and 20. 11. that Arbah here doth not fignific foure, but that it was the name of the Father of the Giants called Anakim, whose sonne as it seemes Anak was: and Achiman, Shelhai, and Talmai (whom Caleb expelled 10f.15.) were the sonnes of this Anak, Num. 12,23. The name of Anak fignifieth Torquem, a chaine worne for orna- to ment : and it seemes that this Anak inriched by the spoiles which himselfe and his Father got, wore a chaine of gold, and fo got this name: and leaving the custome to his posseritie, left also the name: so that in Latine the name of Anakim may not amisse be expounded by Torquati.

The Citic Hebron was one of the ancientest Cities of Canaan, built seven vecres before Toan or Tanis in Agret: and it was the head and chiefe Citie of the Anakims. whom Caleb expelled: to whom it was in part given, to wit, the Villages adioyning. and the rest to the Leuites. It had a Bishop in the Christian times, and a magnificent

Not farre hence they finde Eleutheropolis or the free Citie, remembred often by 20 St. Hierome. Then Eglon who se King Dabir affociated with the other foure Kings of the Amorites, to wit, of Hierusalem, Hebron, Iarmuth, and Lachis, belieging the Gibesnites, were by Iosua veterly ouerthrowne. From hence the next Citie of same was Emaus, afterward Nicopolis, one of the Cities of Gouernment or Prasidencies of Indea. In fight of this Citic Indas Macchabaus (after he had formerly beaten both spollonius and Seron) gaue a third ouerthrow to Gorgias Lieutenant to Antiochus.

In the yeare 1301. it was ouer-turned by an earth-quake, faith Eufebius. In the Christian times it had a Bishops seate of the Diocesse of Casaria of Palastine.

From Emais toward the West Sea there are the Cities of Nahama, Bethdagon, and Gader or Gedera, or Gederothaima, of which and of Gederoth * 10f. 15. v. 36. 6 41. 30 Then Azecha, to which Iosua followed the slaughter of the flue Kings before named, a Citic of great ftrength in the Valley of * Terebinth or Turpintine, as the Vulgarreadeth 1. Sam. 17.2. whence (as it seemes) they seat it neere vnto Soco, and vnto Lebna of the Leuites. It revolted from the subiection of the lewes while Ioram the sonne of Iosaphat ruled in Hierusalem: And next vnto this ftandeth Maceda, which Iosua vtterthi hath invalle ly dispeopled.

On the other side of Emais towards the East standeth Bethsur, otherwise Bethsura, and Bethfor: one of the strongest and most fought for places in all Inda. It is seated on a high Hill; and therefore called Bethfur (the house on the Rocke, or of strength) It was fortified by Roboam, and afterward by Indas Macchabaus. Lyfias forfit, and Antiochu 40 Eupator by famine: Ionathus regained it: and it was by Simon exceedingly fortified

Bethleem is the next vnto it within fixe miles of Hierusalem, otherwise Lehem: fometime Ephrata; which name, they say, it had of Calebs wife, when as it is so called by Moles before Caleb was famous in those parts Gen. 38.16. Of this Citie was A. bestan or Ibzan, Judge of Ifrael, after Iephtah, famous for the thirtie Sonnes and thirtie Daughters, begotten by him. Elimelee was also a Bethlemite, who with his wife Nasmi sojourned in Moab during the famine of Iuda in the time of the Iudges, with whom Ruth the daughter in law of Naomi returned to Bethleem : and maried Booz, of whom Obed, of whom Ishai, of whom David. It had also the honour to be the native Citie 50 of our Saujour Iesu Christ; and therefore shall the memorie thereof neuer end.

In Zabulon of Galilee there was also a Citie of the same name : and therefore was this of our Sauiour called Bethleem Iuda. From Bethleem some foure or five mile standeth Theena, the Citie of Amos the

Hieron, in comm

The rest of the Cities in this part (most of them of no great estimation) wee may paffe by vntill we come to the magnificent Castle of Herodium, which Herodierected on a Hill, mounting thereunto with 200. This Citic was 2,Chron. 10,2. first taken by Chedorlaomer, and the Amorites thence expelled. It was one of the most Gen. 14.7. remarkable Cities of Indea: and one of the Presidencies thereof.

The rest of the Cities are many in the In-land, and among them Iefrael; not that 1.Reg. 21. 30 which was the Citie of Naboth, of which alreadie: but another of the same name, the Citic of Achinoan, the wife of David, the mother of that Ammon, whom Abfalom 2. Sam. 17.25. flew: also as somethinke the Citie of Amasa, Absaloms Lieutenant, and the commander of his Armie. But this feemeth to be an errour grounded vpon the necreneffe of the words, Ifrael and Iefrael: and because the 2. Sam. 17.25. Amasaes father is called a lifraelite, who first of the Chron. 2. 17. is called an ofmaelite: indeede the Hebrew Orthographie sheweth that Amasacs Father is not said to be of the Citie Iefrael, but an Israelite in Religion, though otherwise an Ismaelite.

In this Tribe there were many high Hills or Mountaines, as those of Engaddi vpon the Dead Sea : and the Mountaines of Iuda, which begin to rife by Emaus, and 40 end necre Taphna, and these part Iuda from Dan and Simeon. Of others which stand fingle there is that of Hebron: at the foote whereof was that Oake of Mambre, where the three Angells appeared to Abraham, which St. Hierome calleth a Fir-tree; and Hieron, in loc. faith, that it food till the time of Constantine the yonger. There is also that Moun-Hebr. taine called Collis Achille, on the South fide of Ziph: on the top whereof the great losep. 14. Ant. Herod, inclosing the old Castle, crested by Ionathas Macchabeus, and called Massada, c.20. garnished it with seuen and twentie high and strong Towers: and therein left Armourand furniture for an hundreth thousand men; being as it seemeth a place vnaccessable, and of incomparable strength.

In the Valley afterward called the Dead Sea, or the Lake Afhaltitis, this Countrie 50 had foure Cities, Adama, Sodom, Seboim, and Gomorra, destroyed with fire from Heanen for their vnnaturall finnes.

THE TRIBE OF REVBEN. and his Borderers.

The seates and bounds of Midian, Moab, and Ammon, part whereof the Reubenites wanne from SEHON King of Hesbon.

N the other fide of the Dead Sea, Reuben the eldest of Iacobs sonnes inhabited : of whose children there were numbred at Mount Sinai 46000. who dying with the rest in the Defarts, there remained to posfesse the Land promised 43700. bearing armes. But before wee speake of these or the rest that inhabited the East side of Iordan, something of their borderers: to wit, Midian, Mosb, and Ammon, whose land in our wri. 20 ters are confusedly described, and not easily distinguished. And first wecare to remember that out of Abrahams kindred came many mightic Families: as by I/aac and Iacob the Nation called Ifrael, and afterward Iewes: by Efau or Edom the Idumeans: by Imagel the eldeft fonne of Abraham, the Imagelites: and by Keturah his last wife the Midianites. And againe by Lot, Abrahams brothers sonne, those two valiant Nations of the Moabites, and Ammonites: all which being but strangers in the Land of Canaan (formerly possess by the Canaanites, and by the Families of them descended) these iffues and alliances of Abraham, all but Iacob, whose children were bred in Agpt, inhabited the frontier places adjoyning.

Elau and his sonnes held Idumea, which bounded Canaan on the South. Ismael 20 tooke from the South-east part of the Dead Sea; stretching his possession over all Arabia Petras, and a part of Arabia the Defart, as farre as the River of Tigris, from Sur to Hauilah.

Moab tooke the rest of the coast of the Dead Sea, leaving a part to Midian, and pasfing over Arnon, inhabited the plaines betweene Iordan and the Hills of Abarim or Arnon, as far North as Effebon, or Chesbon.

Ammon sate downe on the North-east side of Arnon, and posses the Tract from Rabba afterward Philadelphia, both within the Mountaines of Gilhead, and without them as far-forth as Arroer, though in Moses time he had nothing left him in all that Num. 1. 2.4. Valley: for the Amorites had thrust him over the River of Iaboc, as they had done 40 Moab ouer Arnon. As these Nations compassed fundric parts of Canaan, so the border betweene the River of Iaboc and Dama Cus was held by the Amorites themselves, with other mixt Nations: all which Territoric on the East side of Iordan, and on the East side of the Dead Sea, was granted by Moses to the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and halfe Manaffe; whereof that part which Moab had, was first possest by the Emims a Nation of Giants weakned and broken by Chedorlahomer, after expulsed by the Moabites, as before remembred. That which the Ammonites held, was the Territorie and ancient possession of the Zamzummims or Zurai, who were also beaten at the same time by Chedorlahomer, Amraphel, and the rest: and by them an case way of conquest was prepared for the Ammonites.

Now where it is written that Arnon was the border of Mondo, the same is to bee vnderstood according to the time when Moses wrote. For then had Sehon or his Ancester beaten the Mosbites out of the plaine Countries, betweene Abarim and lordan, and driven them thence from Hesbon over Arnon, and this happened not long before Moses arrivall upon that border, when Vaheb gouerned the Moabites. For he that ruled Moab when Mofes past Arnon, was not the sonne of Vaheb, but his name was Balac the sonne of Zippor. And it may be that those Kings were elective, as the Edumaans anciently were.

Now all that part of Moab betweene Arnon and Iordan, as farre North as Effebon was inhabited by Reuben. And when Ifrael arrived there out of Agypt, it was in the possession of Sehon, of the race of Canaan by Amoreus : and therefore did Jephtah the Judge of Ifrael inftly defend the regaining of those Countries against the claime of the Ammonites: because (as hee alleaged) Moses found them in the 10 possession of the Amerites, and not in the handes of Mosb or Ammon: who (faith Indg. 11. lephtab) had three hundred yeeres time to recouer them, and did not: whence he inferreth that they ought not to claime them now.

And left any should maruaile why the Ammonites in Iephtah his time should make claime to these Countries: whereas Moles in the place Numb. 21. verse 26. rather accounts them to have beene the ancient possession of the Moabites then of the Ammonites: it is to bee noted that Deut. 3.11. when it is faid that the yron bed of Of was to be seene at Rabbath, the chiefe Citie of the Ammonites, it is also signified, that much of the Land of Og, which the Israelites possessed, was by him or his Anceftors got from the Ammonites, as much of Sehons was from the Moabites.

20 And as the Canaanite Nations were feated so confusedly together that it was hard to distinguish them: so also were the sonnes of Mosb and Ammon, Midian, Amalek, 10,613. werf 25. and Ismael. Yet the reason seemeth plaine enough why Ammon commanded in that the one chiefe, in Iephtahs time; for sometime the one Nation, sometime the other of all halfe of the thoseborderers acquired the Soueraigntie: and againe that one part of the Land I and of Hammon which in which Gad held, namely within the Mountaines of Galaad, or Gilhead, and as farre this place of South as Arreer belonged to the Ammonites. And therefore taking advantage losualisfaid to af the time they then lought to recover is againe. Vet at such times Medicaller, have been giof the time, they then fought to recouer it againe. Yet at such time as Moses overthrew Sehon at Iahaz, the Ammonites had loft to the Amorites, all that part of their dites, was taken possession at labaz, the Ammonies had lost to the Amorives, all that part of their first from the possession which lay about Arroer, and betweene it and laboe: Schon and Og two Ammonitisty 30 Kings of the Amorites having displanted both Moab and Ammon of all within Schon; but the the Mountaines. For it is written in the one and twentieth of Numb. v. 24. that If- place Deug. 11 rul conquered the Land of Schon from Arnon vnto laboe, euen unto the children of aswell 0g, as Ammon, so as at this time the River of Iabos was the South bound of Ammon, with- Schon, had gorinthe Mountaines, when as anciently they had also possessions over labor which of the hands of atlength the Gadites possest, as in the thirteenth chapter of losus vers. 25. it ap- the Ammonites. pearcs.

He chiefe Cities belonging to Reuben were thefe, Kedemoth, for which the Vilgar, without any shew of warrant, readeth lethson. The Vulgar or Hierome fold 106.21,57. lowed the Septuagint those two verses 36. and 37. and 21. Iof. being wanting in the old Hebrew Copies, and the Septuagint read Kedson for Kedmoth, which Kedson by writing flipt into Iethfon.

It was first fortified by Alexander Jannaus, who made ita frontier against the Arabians: but it was demolished by Gabinius, in the warre with to Arifobulus, faith Iofephus. It was thither (faith Iofephus) that Herod fent Iohn Bas. tist, and wherein hee was flaine: his armic foone after being vtterly ouerthrowne by Aretas king of Arabia, and himselfe after this murther neuer prospering. Not farre from Macharus was Bofor or Bozra, a towne of refuge, and belonging to the Le-Int. 108. uites, and necre it Linias vpon Iordan, which Herod built in honour of Linia the mo-Hier in loc bebr. ther of Tiberius C.efar.

To the North of Linias is Setim, or Sittim: where the children of Ifrael embraced the daughters of Midian, or Moab: and where Phineas pierced the bodie of Zimri and Cosbi with his speare bringing due vengeance vpon them, when they were in the middeft of their finne; and from hence Iojua fent the Discouerers to view lerico, 20 flaying heere until hee went ouer Ior dan. As for the Torrent Setim, which in this place Adrichomius dreames of, reading loel 3.18. irrigabit torrentem Setim: The vulgar hath torrentem spinarum : and luntus vallem Cedrorum: expounding it not for any particular place in Canaan: but for the Church, in which the iust being placed, grow as the Cedars, as it is P/al. 92.13.

The plaine Country hereabout, by Moses called The Plaines of Moab, where he expounded the Booke of Deuteronomie to the people, alittle before his death, is in the beginning of the same booke precisely bounded by Moses. On the Southit had the great Defart of Paran : where they had long wandred. On the East it had Challeroth, and Dizahab (of which two the former is that Gazorus, of which Ptolomicin 20 Palastina, the later was a Tract belonging to the Nabathai in Arabia Petras, where * The same as was * Mczabab, of which Gen. 36. 39.) by the Geographers called Medaua and Meirfeems which daba. Also on the same North side towards the confines of Calesyrea, it had Thophel: whereabout sometime Pella of Calefyria flood : which was in the region of Decapolit, and as Stephanus faith, was sometime called Butis. It is also noted in Mosesto be over against or necre vnto Suph, for which the Vulgar hath thered Sca, as also Num. 2. 14.40 Hanum the Am it translateth the word Suphah in like manner: whereas in this place of Deuteronomic inonice. Choose 19. 7. Alfo 1. there is no addition of any word in the Hebrew to fignific the Sea : and yet the Scripture, when this word is so to be taken, vseth the addition of Mara, thereby to diffinguishit from the region of Suph or Suphah: which doubtlesse was about these Plains of Moab towards the dead Sea: where the Country being full of reedes, was therefore thus called: as also the red Sea was called Mare Suph, for like reason.

The place in these large plaines of Moab, where Moses made those divine exhortations, some say was Bethabara where John baptized, which in the Storie of Gedeon is called Beth-bara. Iofephu faics it was where after the Citic Abila flood, necre lordan, in a place fet with Palmetrees: which fure was the same as Abel-sittim in the 50 Plaines of Mosb, Numb. 23. 49. Of the two first of these Moses seemes to give a note that the Num. 32. names were to be changed : because they tasted of the Moabites * Idolatrie. For *Exoda 23.13. Median also is found in these parts, the chiefe Citic of the Medianites in Moab: but not that Midian or Madian by the Red Sea; wherein Jethro inhabited. For of the Madianites there were two Nations, of which these of Mesh became Idolaters. and received an exceeding overthrow by a Regiment of twelve thousand Israelites, fent by Moles out of the plaines of Moab: at such time as Israel beganne to accompanie their Daughters: their fine Kings with Balaam the South-sayer were then slaine : and their Regall Citie with the rest destroyed. shew impregnable, he was content by the persuasion of Antipater, to take a composition of monic, and to quit it. Yet Amasias king of Inda (after he had slaughtered 10000. of the Arabians in the valley called Salinarum) wanne also this Citie. S. Hierome finds Ruth the Moabite to be naturall of this Citic. In the time when the Christians held the Gulty, 20. bell. Kingdome of Hierusalem, it had a Latine Bishop, having before beene under the Greeke Church. It is seated not far from Hor where Aaron died, and on the other side towards the North is the river of Zared or Zered, by which Moses incamped in the 38. Station, 20 Adrichome describeth the waters of Memrim, or rather Nemrim, in his Map of Reuben. not far hence, and betweene Zared and Arnon : and so he doth the Valley of Sane: but the waters of Nimra or Beth-Nimra (for which it seemes Adrichomius writ Nemrim) refresh the plaines of Meab: and the confluence of those waters of Nimra are in the Tribe of Gad. Sane also cannot be found in this place, that is, to the South of Arnon. and under Midian. For after Abraham returned from the pursuite of the Assyrian and Persian Princes, the King of Sodom met him in the Valley of Saue, or Shaneh, which is the Kings Dale, where Ab/alom fet vp his Monument, as it feems, not farre from Hierufalem. And at the same time Melohizedee King of Salem also incountred him. which was also called the Kings Dale, could not be in these parts.

Now because the Sea of Sodom or the Dead Sea, called also the Lake of Aphalonic and the felt Sea (in 1991) titis, and the falt Sea (in distinction from the Sea of Tiberias which was fresh 40 water) also the Sea of the Wildernesse, or rather the Sea * of the plaines, is oftenremembred in the Scriptures, and in this storie also, therefore I thinke it not impertinent, to speake somewhat thereof. For it is like vnto the Caspian Sea, which hath no out-let or disburthening. The length of this Lake Iosephus makes 180. furlongs ( which make two and twentie miles and a halfe of ours) and about 150. in breadth though Deuter. which make eighteene of our miles and somewhat more. Plinie makes it a great mare folitudinis deale leffe. But those that have of late yeeres seene this Sea, did account it (faith as also 2. Reg. 14 2 Weiffenburg ) eight Dutch miles ( which is two and thirtie of ours ) in length: and two and a halfe of theirs (which is ten of ours) in breadth. Of this Lake or Sea Taseemes to be, citus maketh this report: Lacus est immenso ambitu, specie maris, sapore corruptior, gra- 50 uitate odoris accolis pestifer : neque vento impellitur, neque pisces aut suetas aquis volucres plaines of Mo- patitur, incertum unde superiecta ut solide feruntur periti imperitig, nandi perinde at-

It is neither moved nor raised by the winde: nor indureth fish to live init, or fowleto swimme init. Those things that are cast into it, and the unskilfull of swimming, as well as the skilfull, are borne up by this water. At one time of the veere itrasteth vp Bitumen: the Art of gathering which, Experience (the finder of other things ) hath also taught. It is vied in the trimming of thips, and the like businesses.

And then of the Land, hee speaketh in this fort: The fields not farre from this , , Lake, which were sometime fruitfull and adorned with great Cities were burnt ; 10 with lightning: of which the ruines remaine, the ground looking with a fad face as , , having loft her fruitfulnesse: for whatsoever doth either grow or is set thereon, be it 12 fruits or flowers, when they come to ripeneffe, have nothing within them, but ?? moulder into ashes: Thus farre Tacitus. And it is found by experience, that those ;; Pomegranates and other Apples or Oranges, which doe still grow on the bankes of this curfed Lake, do looke faire and are of good colour on the out-fide, but being cut have nothing but dust within. Of the Bitumen which this Lake casteth vp, it was by the Greekes called Asphalities. Vespassion desirous to be satisfied of these reports, went of purpose to see this Lake, and caused certaine Captines to be cast into it, who were not onely viskilfull in (wimming, but had their handes also bound behind them, and notwithstanding they were carried on the face of the waters, and could 20 not linke.

Of the Kings of Moab, much of whose Countrie within Arnon REVBEN possest.

F the Kings of Moab, whose Countrie (within Arnon) Reuben posses (though Unot taken from Moab but from Schon the Amorite) toware knowne. Junius in the 21. of Numbers verse 14. nameth Vabeb, which seemeth to beethe Ancellor of Predecessor of Balas, the sonne of Zippor: which Balas sent for Balasm to curse Israel. For fearing to contend with Moles by armes by the examples of Schon and Og, hee hoped by the helpe of Balaams curfings or inchauntments, to take from them all strength and courage, and to cast on them some pestilent diseases. And though Ba- Num. 21, 22,23. learn at the first moved by the Spirit of God, blest Is ael contrarie to the hope and defire of Mosb; yet being defirous in some fort to fatisfie him, and to doe him service. headuifed Moab to fend Madianitely Women among the I/raelites; hoping by them. as by fit instruments of mischiefe, to draw them to the Idolatrie of the Heathen; but in the end be received the reward of his falling from God, and of his evil counfaile, and was flaine among the rest of the Princes of Midian.

After these times the Kings of the Moabites are not named: saving that wee finde in the first of Chron, the fourth, that Iokim, and the men of Chozeba, and Ioash, and Sareph, all being of the iffue of Inda, formetime had the Dominion in Mond: but as it is written in the same Verse, These also are ancient things: to wit, as some expound it, you the particulars of these mens Governments are no where extant or remaining or as others, has prius fuere, these Families of Iuda were once thus famous : but now their posteritic chuse rather to abide in Babylon, and bee Clay-workers to the King

After this, David himselfe entred the Region of Moab, but not likely in the same Kings time : for he flaughtered two patts of the people; and made the third part tributaric: whereupon it was said of DAVID, Moab is my wash-pot, ouer Edom will cast my shoe : meaning that hee would reduce them to such an abiection; and appoint them for base services : And that he would tread downe the Idumaans.

Mierem.27.

The next King after Davids time, of the Moabites, whose name liveth, was Melha: who falling from Iuda, (perhaps in remembrance of the seueritie of David) fastened himselse to the Kings of Israel, and paied tribute to Abab 100000. Lambes, and 10 200000. Rammes, with the wooll: who renolting againe from I/rael after the death of Ahab, was inuaded by Iehoram: with whom joyned the Kings of Inda and Idumea: and being by these three Kings prest and broken, he fled to Kir-hareseth, asis elsewhere shewed. There is also mention made of the Moabites without the Kines name: when that Nation, affitted by the Ammonites and Idumaans, inuaded Ichofhaphat: and by reason of some private quarrells among themselves, the Moabites and Ammonites fet vpon the Idameans, and flaughtered them : and then one against another; fo as Iehoshaphat had a notorious victoric ouer them all, without either bloud or wound. Also in the time of Hieremie the Prophet, there was a King of Moab which is not named, which was after Melha of Moab many descents : for Melha lived 22 with leboram, and this Moabite in Zedekias time, fourteene Kings of Inda comming betweene, who wasted three hundred and odde yeeres.

Of the memorable places of the Gadites, and the bordering places

Ge#.30. Num.1.32.26. Iof.13.

He Territoric adioyning to Reuben, is that of Gad: whereof all that part which in it is a farreto the South as Aroer. Of the children of of the Ammonites, as farreto the South as Aroer. Of the children of or the children of th Gad the sevench sonne of Iacob by Zelpha, the hand-maid of Lea, there parted out of Agypt, and died in the Defarts 45550. and of their

Ef4.17. Dest.z. Elbele, and Aphcc. The chiefe Citic of Gad was Areer: which they make to be the same with Ar,or Rabbath Moab, the great or commanding Moab. But the learned Innius, attending diligently to those wordes of Moses, Deut. 2.36. Ab Harabero, que est in ripa fluminis Arnon, & Civitate ipla que cst in flumine; Where the Citie in the River is diflinguished 40 from the Citie vpon the banke of the River, (as also in like manner Iof. c. 12. v. 2. and c. 13. v. 9.) thinketh that Haroher which doubtlesse belonged to the Gadites (as Num. 32.34. it is said that they built it) was indeede seated neere Har of the Moabites, but diuerse from it. For that Har was neuer possest by Moses, it is plaine Deut. 2.9. where God forbidding Moses to touch it, saith he hath given Har for an inheritance to the fonnes of Let. Now that this Citie, which in divers places is faid to bee within and in the middle of the River of Arnon (and so distinguished from Haroher, which is said in the same places to be on the banke of Arnon) is Har of the Mosbites, the same Innius proueth out of Num. 21. 15. where Arnon is saide to bee divided into divers streames, where or among which Har is seated: And the same is confirmed by the place of Iof. 13.25. where Haroher is said to be scatted before Rabbah: which Rabbah, 50 as it seemes, cannot be the Rabbah of the Ammonites (for they scate not Haroher neere it, nor in fight of it) and therefore by Rabbah heere we must understand Rabbah of Most, which they make to be Ar or Har: and so wee must needes distinguishit from Hareher. And as for *Har (which also gaue the name to the coast adiopning) it seemes * Deut.2.9. it continued in the possession of the Mosbites after they had once expelled the Gi-place the ant-like people called Emims, first weakened by Chedoriaomer and his Affociates: but words, Num. Haroher by the interchange of times suffered many ancient changes, as being wonne 21.28 are to from the Moabites by Sehon, and from him by the ifraelites, and from them, as it northat the ciseemes in the Story of Iephtha, by the Ammouttes: and from the commonites againe vicof Hor, but by the Israelites under the conduct of Iephtha. In S. Hieromes time the greatest part ioning was of this Citic perished by an earth-quake, as also Zoar, in which Lot laued himselfe, in wasted by the destruction of Sodom, seated not farrehence: which they fay was therefore calto led Vitula consternans, because as a wanton turnelling Heiser, thee was thrice ouer- Indix 135. throwne with earth-quake: for which cause also Hierome seemes to thinke that this Hier in estraph. of the Historie of the World.

Brothard takes Haroher to bee Petra, but erroniously, as before it is noted; seeing wherhe makes that Petra was in the South border of Month, adiopning to Edom, whereas Haroher is Shalifha a plain in the North-cast border. Betweene Haroher and Iordan they seate Dibon, which is Rentamin, and attributed to the Gadites, because they are said to have built it, Num. 32. 34, though the same with lofus 13.0.17. it is faid that Mofes gaue it to the Reubenites. Of this Citie among the Ballas flux, 2. reft of Most, both Efay and Hieremie prophecied, that it should perish: and the Lakes he expounds to about it runne with the bloud of the Inhabitants. It was a great Village neere Arnen Balor Bahalto

Keeping the bankes of Arnon, one of the next Cities of fame to Arner, was Beth- Efa.15.Hier.48 nimrab, of which E/ay prophecieth, That the waters thereof should be dried up: and all Esa. 15.21. the vale of Moab withered. Not farre from Bethnimrah in this Tribe Adrichomius placeth logbeha, and Nobach or Nobe: of both which we reade in the storic of Gedeon: Ind. 8.11. and that logbeha was in Gad, built by the Gadites, it appeares Num. 32.35. and therefore Nobach also must needes be in these parts; but whether in Gad or Manasse it is not certaine: onely that it was anciently called Kenath, Mofes witneffeth. Nobach 20 also (faith hee) went and tooke Kenath with her Townes, and called it Robach of his owne Numaras. name, where because the verses precedent speake of the Manasites, and because it is notlikely that Moles would have severed this seate of the Gadites from the rest, of which he spake before, v.34.35.36. therefore it may seeme that this * Nobach was * Num.21.30. in that part of Maneffe, which was in the East of lordan: though strichomius place the and standard it in Gad. For whereas he supposeth it to be the same with Nob, which Saul destroy- ced in the bored, of this wee shall speake a in the tribe of Beniamin. And as for that Karkor where der of the king Zebach and Salmunah rested themselves in their slight from Gedeon, to which place towards Basan, Gedeon marched through this Wobach and Jogbeha, though some place it in Gad, and and therefore make it the same with Kir-chares, of which E/ay 15. and 2. Reg. 3.25. yet there can gether unprop beeno certaintie that it was in Gad: and if it bee the same with Kir-chares, it is cer-bable that it taine that it was a principall Citic held still by the Moshites, and not in the Tribe was in Gad. of Gad.

In the body of this Tribe of Gad they place Hataroth: of which name the Scripture witnesseth that two Cities were builded by the Gadites; the former simply cal- Num. 32.34.35. led Hataroth, the later Hatroth-Shophan : for which later the Pulgar makes two Cities, Roth and Shophan: the name Hataroth, is as much as Corona.

But touching Inlius (according to Insephus sometimes Bataramptha) the same losephus placeth in the Region of Peren, beyond lordan, which Regio Pe. rea, as the Greeke word fignificth, is no more then Regio viterior, the Countrie beyond the River; and therefore they which labour to fet downe the bounds of this Peres take more paines than needes. Vpon the Sea of Galilee neere to Iulias in Peran, (that is, in the Region ouer Iordan) they finde Vetezobra, as it is called in lofephis, for Beth-ezob, which is as much as domus histore. Of a noble woman of this Citie, which for fafegard in the time of Warre with the Romanes, came with many others into Hierufalem, and was there belieged, in the place noted, reports a lamentable History; how for hunger sheeate her owne child, with other Tragicall accidents hereupon ensuing.

Of Succosts ( which we faid lof 13. is placed with Beth-haran, in the Valley of the Kingdome of Sehon ) it is plaine by the flory of Gedeon that it is necre vnto Iordan: where it is faid, that as hee was palt Iordan with his three hundreth, wearie in the 20 pursuit of Zebah and Salmunah, hee requested reliefe of the men of Succoth: who denying him, and that with contempt in Gedeons returns were by him tortured, as it feemes under a threshing Carre of Tribulum, betweene which and their flesh he put Thornes to teare their fiesh as they were prest and trod vnder the Tribulum, and after which fortalfo David vied some of the ammonites, though not with Thornes. but with yron teeth of the Tribulum. As for thename of Succoth, which signifieth such Tabernacles as were made in halte, either for Men or Cattel, Moles, Gen. 22.17. witneffeth that the original of the name was from such harbours, which Iacob in his returne from Melopotamia built in that place: as also the place beyond the Red Sea, where the children of I/rael, as they came from Ramefes in £gypt, had their first Sta-20 tion, was voon like reason called Succoth: because there they set vp their first Tabernacles or Tents: which they vsed after for sortie yeeres in the Wildernesse. Inremembrance whereof, the Feast of Succoth, or Tabernacles was instituted.

Other foure Cities of Gad are named, Iof. 21.38. Ramoth in Gilehad, Machanaim, Chesbon, and labzer, all of them by the Gadites given to the Leuites, of which labzer, as Cheshon or Heshon was a chiefe Citie of Sehon, whence Num. 22.1. his Countrieis called the Land of Iabzer. It was taken by Moles, having first fent spies to viewit. In the first of the Chronicles it is made part of Gilehad. In later times (as it may be gathered by the prophecie of E/ay, touching Moab) it was possessed by the Moabites: to which place of E/ay also Hieremie in a like prophecie alludes. It was at length re-40 gained (but as it seemes from the Ammonites) by Indas Macchabeus: as it is, I. Mac.5. 8. where Junius out of lofephus reades Jahzer, though the Greeke hath Gazer. For Gazer or Gezer ( as hee gathereth out of Islua 16.2. & 8. and Ind. 1.29.) was farre from these Countries of Schon, seated in the West border of Ephraim, not possessed by the Ifraclites, untill Salomons time, for whom the King of Egypt wan it from the Canaanite, and gaue it him as a Dowrie with his Daughter. Of Chesbon it may bee maruelled that in the place of losus, and 1. Chron. 6.81. it should be said to have been given to the Leuites by the Gadites, seeing Josua 12.V.17. it is reckoned for a principal I Citic of the Reubenites: Adrichomius and fuch as little trouble themselves with such scruples, finding Easbon, I. Mace. 5.26. among the Cities of Gilehad, taken by Indas Macchabaus, makes two Cities of one: as if this Casbon 50 had been the Chesbon of Gad: and that of Reuben distinct from it: but the better reconciliation is, that it being a bordering Citie, betweene Gad and Reuben, was common to both, and that the Gadites game their part to the Leuites: for so also it seemeth that in like reason Dibon is said in one place built by the Gadites, and in another given to Reuben, as before is noted. Of Machanaum, which word fignifieth a double Armie, we reade Gen. 22.2. that it was therefore so called, because the Angels of God in that place met Iscob in manner of another Hoste or company, to joyne with his for his defence: as also Luke 2.13. we reade of a multitude of the Hoste of Heaven. which appeared to the sheep-herds, at the time of our Sauiours birth: and so vnto the Godly King Ofwald of Northumberland, when hee was soone after to ioyne battaile with the Pagan Penda of middle-England, Beda reports, that the like comfort appeared: whence the field where the battaile was fought in the North-parts of in England, is called Heauen-field. In this Citic of Machanaijm David abode during the rebellion of Absalom : and the same for the strength thereof Abner chose for the seat of Ilbboleth, during the warre betweene David and the house of Saul.

Of the fourth Towns which was Ramoth in Gilehad, we reade often in the Scripture, for the recovering of which King Achab lost his life. Iunius thinkes that Ramatha-Mitspe, of which Iosua 13.26. was this Ramoth in Gilehad. Concerning the place where Laban and Iacob (ware one to the other, as it was called Gilehad, which is as much as a witnessing heape, because of the heape of stones which Laban and his fonnesleft for a monument; fo also that it was called Mithab, which fignifieth ouer-looking (because there they called God to ouer see and be witnesse to their co-20 ucnant) it is plaine by the place, Gen. 21.49 that in these parts there was not onely a Towne, but likewise a Region called Mit/pa, it appeares, Iof. 11.3. where we reade of the Chiunites under Hermon, in the Countrie of Mitfea, * the Towne of Mitfea, as it * Of other the Chiuaites under Hermon, in the Countrie of Mitjpa, a the I owned in Mitjpa, as it townes of this feemes both by this place, and in the eighth verse following, beeing not in the Hill name, see in Countrie, but in the valley. But seeing that lephta the Iudge of I/rael, who after hee the Tribeof camehome from Tob, (whither his brethren had driven him) dwelt in this Towne Beniamin. of Mitsha, who doubtlesse was of the Tribe of Manasse, and thence at first expelled Ind. 1.36. by his brethren, it may seeme that they doe not well which place this Towne of Mitsparather in Gad, than in Manasse. By Indas Macchabeus this Towne of Mitspa (whether in Gad or in Manafe) was vtterly spoyled and burnt, and all the males of it 1, Mace, 5, 35. 30 flaine : for it was then possest of the Ammonites.

Betweene Succoth (of which we have spoken ) and the River Iabor was that Peniel or Penuel, which name fignifieth Locum faciei Dei; A place where the face of God was Gen. 32.30. leene: so called for memorie of the Angels appearing to Iacob, and wrestling with him there: the churlishnesse of which Citie, in refusing to relieve Gideon, was the Indg. 8.17. cause that in his returne hee ouerthrew their Tower, and slew the chiefe Aldermen thereof. To these places of the Gadites, they adde Regelim, the Citie of that great and faithfull subicci Barzallai, as it seemes, not farre from Mahanaims, where he su- 2, sam, 19.33. stained King David, during Absaloms rebellion. To these they adde the Townes of Gaddi, Arnon, and Alimis, of which Gaddi, being in Hebrew no more then Gaddita, is 40 ignorantly made a name of a place. Arnon also no whereappeares to bee the name ofa Towne, but still of a Riuer. Alimis Adrichemius frames of & Anhquois, I. Mace. 5. 26. So that the name should rather be Alema, but Iunius out of Iosephus reades Malla, for this in Alimis: and understanding Malla to bee put for Mello, and to be as much Deut. 3.14. as Munitio, (as we have shewed touching the Mills of the Siebemites) hee takes this 10/12-5 Malle, to be Mitfpa Mosbitarum, of which I. Sam. 22.3. As for that Mageth which 4drichomius findes in this Tribe of Gad, it is that Mahacath, which Moses noteth to be Hebrew are veas farre as the furthest of Manasses, out of the bounds of this Tribe. So also Dathema, 14 like, fother of which 1. Mac. 5.10. (which Iunius takes to bee 2 Rithma, of which 2\um. 33.18. a place of flrength in the Territory of the Ammonites) and in like maner Minnith, and 50 Abel vinearum, though by somethey be attributed to the Gadites, or to their borders, yet they are found farther off. For of the two last we reade in Tephta's pursuit of the Ammonites: scated as it seemes by that place of the booke of sudges, the former of thereas for Rothem in the South border, and the other in the East border, both farre removed we have Dodafrom the Gadites. But the chiefe Citie of the Ammonites was necrer, and not farre mim.Gen.10.4.

from the borders of Gad. It is called in the Scriptures sometime Rabbath, as Deut. 2. *Other names II. but more often Rabba. It is supposed to bee that * Philadelphia which Ptolomie findes in Calofria. Hierome and Califtus in Arabia. It was conquered by Og from the Stephanus were Ammonites: but as it feemes neuer possess by the Israelites, after the ouerthrow of Og, but left to the Ammonites: whereupon at length it became the Regall feate of the Ammonites, but of old it was the possession of the Zamzummims: which is as much to say, as men for all manner of craft and wickednesse intamous. The same were also called Raphaim, of whom was Og, which recoursed much of that which be the same A- the Ammonites had got from his Ancestors: who having been first beaten by the Assyrians, and their affiltants (as the Emins in Moab, and the Horims in Seir had 10 beene) were afterward the easier conquered by the Ammonites, as the Emims were by Moab, and the Horims by the Idumeans. Yet did the races of Emoreus, of whom thele Giants were descended, contend with the Conquerours for their ancient inheritance: and as Sehon of Hesbon had dispossest Moab, so had Og of Basan the Ammo. mites, and betweene them recourred the best part of all the Valley, betweenethe alfocality by Mountaines and Iordan. For this Og was also master of Rabba or Philadelphia: And in the possession of the one or the other of these two, Moses and Israel found all those Cities and Countreys which were given to Reuben, Gad, and the halfe Tribe winding about of Manaste. So that though it were 450, yeeres fince that these Zamzammims or Raphaims were expelled, yet they did not forget their ancient inheritance: butha-20 uing these two Kings of one kinred, and both valiant and vndertaking men, to wit, og and Sehon, both Amorites, they recovered againe much of their loft possessions, and thrust the sonnes of Lot over the mountaines, and into the Defarts. And as the Kings or Captaines of Persia and Assyria, (remembred in the 14. of Genesis) made way for Ammon, Moab, and Edom, so by that great conquest which Moles had our those two Amorites, Og and Schon, did the Meabites and Ammonites take opportunity rum, yet it can- to looke backe againe into those plaines, and when the Reubenites, Gadites, and Manassites for looke the worship of the living God, and became slothfull and licentious, they taking the advantage invaded them, and cast them out of their possession ons: and were sometime their masters, sometime their tributaries, as they pleased 30 or displeased God: and according to the wisedome and vertue of their Comman-

In this Citie of Rabba, was the yron bed of og found, nine cubites of length, and foure of breadth. The Citie was taken in Daniels time, and the inhabitants flaine with great severity, and by divers torments. At the first assault thereof Vrias was shot to death, having been by direction from Danid appointed to bee imployed in the leading of an affault, where he could not escape: wherein also many of the best of the Armie perished: and wherein David so displeased God, as his affaires hadill fuccesse afterward, even to his dying day. From hence had David the weightie and rich crowne of gold, which the Kings of Ammon ware: or which as some expound it, 40 was vsed to be set on the head of their Idoll, waighing a talent, which is 60, pound waight after the common talent. In the time of Christians it had a Metropolitan Bishop, and under him twelue others.

The Mountaines which are described within this Tribe, and that of Manasse, with a part of Reuben, are those which Ptolomie calleth the hilles of Hippun, a Citicof Cælosyria: and Strabo *Trachones: the same which continue from necre Damascus vnto the Defarts of Moab: and receive divers names, as commonly mountaines do, which neighbour and bound divers Countries: For from the South part, as farre Northwards as Asteroth, the chiefe Citie of Og, they are called Galaad or Gilead, from thence Northward they are knowne by the name of Hermon, for so Moles calleth them: 50 The Sidonians name them Shirion, but the Amorites Shenir, others Seir: of which name all those Hilles also were called, which part Iudea and Idumea : and lastly, they the hil country are called Libanus, for so the Prophet Hieremie makes them all one, calling the high mountaines of Galaad, the head of Libanus. These mountaines are vere fruitfull, and full of good pastures, and have many trees which yeeld Ballamum, and many other medicinable drugs. The Rivers of this Tribe are the waters of Nimrah, and Diben, and the Riner labor: Others doe also fancie another Riner, which riling out of the Rockes of Arnon, falleth into Iordan.

Of the Ammonites, part of whose Territories the Gadit es wanne from Og the King of Bafan.

His Tribe of Gad poffest halfe the Countrie of the Ammonites, who together with the Mosbites, held that part of Arabia Petras called Nabat hea, as well within as without the mountaines of Gilead: though at this time when the Gadites wanit, it was in the possession of Sehon and og, Amorites: and therefore Moses did not expell the Ammonites, but the Amerites, who had thruft the iffues of Let ouer the mountaines Trachenes or Giead as before. After the death of Otheriel the first Judge of Ifrael, the Ammonites joyned with the Mosbites against the Hebrewes, and so continued long. Iephta Judge Ind. 10. of Ifrael had a great conquest ouer one of the Kings of Ammon, but his name is o-

Afterward wee find that cruell King of the Ammonites, called Nahes: who be- I.Sam. II. fieging labes Gilead, gaue them no other conditions but the pulling out of their right eyes. The reason why he tendred so hard a composition, was (besides this delire to bring (hame vpon Ifrael) because those Gileadites vsing to carrie a Target on their left armes, which could not but shadow their left eyes, should by losing their right. bevtterly disabled to defend themselues: but Saul came to their rescue, and deliuered them from that danger. But Batanea Ptolomie letteth farther off, and to the North-Eaft, as a skirtof, Arabia the Defart : and all these other Provinces before named with Peras, and Itu. that Thishbitis, rea, he nameth but as part of Cælosyria; as farre South as Rabba or Philadelphia; like. wife all the rest which belonged to Gad, and Reuben, saving the Land neere the Dead I.Kin.16.1.and Sca, he makes a part of Arabia Petraa: for many of these small Kingdomes take not of Tobias, Tob. 1 much more ground then the County of Kent.

Balan, or after the Septuagint , Balanitis , firetcheth it felfe from the River of Jabes to the a Machati and Geffuri: and from the Mountaines to Iordan, a Region exceeding fertile; by reason whereof it abounded in all sorts of Cattell. It had also the goodliest woods of all that part of the world: especially of Oakes, which beare mast (of which the Prophet Zacharias, Howle, O yee Oakes of Bashan ) and by reason hereof 20 they bred so many Swine, as b 2000. in one Herd were carried head-long into the the time of saul Sea, by the vncleane spirits which Christ had cast out of one of the Gadarens. It had in it threescore Cities walled and defenced: all which, after Og and his sonnes were malehites & If- flaine, lair descended of Manaffe conquered, and called the Countrie after his owner maelits in those name, Anoth Jair, or the Cities of Jair.

The principall cities of this halfe Tribe (for I will omit the rest) are these; Pells fornetimes c Butis, otherwise Berenice; by Seleucus King of Syria, it is faid to have been called Pella, after the name of that Pella in Macedon: in which both Philip the Father, was part of lin- and his Sonne Alexander the Great were borne. It was taken, and in part demolished by Alexander Iannaus King of the Iewes: because it refused to obey the Iewes lawes: 20 chap.7.5.4.7.5. but it was repaired by Pompey, and annexed to the Gouernement of Syria. fiftParagraph of Tabes Gilead, or Tabelus, was another of the Cities of this halfe Tribe, which being 5.36. and Deut. besieged by Nahas h King of the Ammonites, was deliuered by Saul, as is i elsewhere 3-14. & 10/12.5 mentioned. In memorie whereof these Citizens k recoursed, embalmed, and bu-40 c Anciently as ried the bodies of Saul and his Sonnes: which hung despightfully ouer the walls of it feems it was Beth an or Scythopolis. I Gaddara or Gadara, is next to be named, feated by Plinie on a Hill necre the River Hieromiace, which River Ortelius feemes to thinke to bee Isthe bounds of boc. At the foote of the Hill there spring foorth also hot baths, as at Macharus. Alexander Ianneus after ten moneths fiege wanne it, and subuerted it. Pompey reftored it: and Gabinius m made it one of the five Courts of Iustice in Palastine. Hierusalem being the first, Gadara the second, Emath or Amathus the third, Hierico, and Sephora in Galilee, the fourth and fift. The Citizens impatiently bearing the tyranny of Herod, surnamed Ascalonita, accused him to Iulius Cafar of many crimes: but perceig 2. CHAP.10.S.7.

The next Citie of note, but of more ancient fame, is Edrehi or Edrai, wherein Og Of an other E-King of Basan chiefly abode, when Moses and Israel invaded him: and necrevato decision Nephr. this his Regall Citie, it was that he lost the battaile and his life. It stood in S. Hieromes Deut. 3.100 10. o time : and had the name of Adar or Adara. Not farre from these Townes neere Ior- Item. 10/-13-31dam, in this valley stood Gerassa or Gergessa, inhabited by the Gergestes, descended of the fift sonne of Canaan. Of these Gergestes we reade Mat. 8, 28. that Christ comming Mats. 8.28. from the other fide of the Lake of Tiberias, landed in their coasts: where casting the Diuels out of the possession, hee permitted them to enter into the herd of Hogs: in which storic for Gergesites or Gergesins, S. Luke and S. Marke have Gadarens: not as if Mar. 5. these were all one ( for Gergessa or Gerassa is a distinct Towne in these parts from Gadera) but the bounds being confounded, and the Cities neighbours, either might well be named in this storie. This Citie received many changes and calamities: of which Islephus hath often mention. For besides other adventures, it was taken by 40 L. Annius Licutenant to Velpalian; and 1000.0f the ablest yong men put to the sword, and the Citie burnt. In the yeere 1120. it was rebuilt by Baldwine King of Damafcus: and in the same yeere recovered by Baldwine de Burgo King of Hierufalem: and by him vtterly razed. Neere vnto Gerafa is the village of Magedan, or after the Syriake Magedu, or after the Greeke Magdala, where the Pharifees and Sadducees defired Matt. 15. of our Sauiour a figne from heaven: the fame place or fome adioyning to it, which S. Marke calleth Dalmanutha. By the circumstances of which storic it appeares that Marc. 8. this coast lay betweene the Lake of Tiberias and the Countrie of Decapolis. Brochard Of this Phiola makes both these places to be one; and findes it to be Phiale, the fountaine of Iordan see in Neptb. according to Iosephus: but this Phiale is too farre from the Sea of Galilee, and from C.7.$.41.3. 30 Bethfaida, to be either Magdala or Dalmanutha. For asit appeares by the storie, not far Matt. 14. hence towards the North was the Defart of Bethfaida, where Christ filled 5000. Marc. 6. people with the fine Barley loanes and two Fishes.

But the principall Citie of all these in ancient time was Asteroth: sometime peopled with the Giants Raphaim: and therefore the Countrie adioyning called the Land of Giants, of whose race was og, King of Basan. In Genesis this Citic is called Asteroth of Carnaim, whence 1. Mac. 5. 26 it is called simply Carnaim, as Iof. 13. 21. it is called to Afteroth without the addition of Carnaim. The word Carnaim fignifieth a paire of Hornes, which agree well with the name of their Idoll Aftoreth, which was the Image of a sheepe, as it is elsewhere noted, that Astaroth in Deut. signifieth sheepe. O. thers from the ambiguitie of the Hebrew take Karnaim, to have beene the name of the people which inhabited this Citie: and expound it heroes * radiantes. For of old Hornewhen it the Raphei which inhabited this Citie (Gen. 14.5.) were Giant-like men, as appeares by comparing the words Deut. 3. 11. Og ex residuo gigantum, with the words los. 12. is that theverb 12. Ogen reliquis Raphaeorum : but if the Karnaim (or Karnaym) were these Raphai. of this Nowne the word would not have beene in the duall number : neither would Moses in the place of Genesis have said the Raphai in Asteroth of the Karnaim, but either the Raphai 20 in Afteroth of the Raphai, or some other way fittest for perspicuitie: for this naming of both thus in the same clause, distinguisheth one from the other.

Not farre from Asteroth Adrichomius out of Brochard and Breidenbachius placeth Cedar, in the way out of Syria into Galilee, foure miles from Corazin. This Citie (faith hee) is remembred in the Canticles, and in the booke of Iudith, and there are that of this Citie understand David in his 120. Pfalme : and heere the Sepulchre of Iob is vet to be seene, saith Breidenbach.

Now concerning the Texts which hee citeth, it is so that the Greeke hath Galandin stead of the word Cedar, which the Vulgar doth vse in that place of Iudith, andiovneth Carmel and Galilee. The Canticles and the 120. Pfalme doe rather proue that 20 Gedar was not hecreabout, than any way helpe Adrichomius. For that they speake of Scenita Cedareni, it is apparent, and as euident by the place in the Canticles that they were decolores, much more than any vnder the Climates of the land of Canaan : whence Iunius out of Lampridius and Plinie placeth them in Arabia Petras, farre from thele parts. Touching the Sepulchre of lob, it is certaine that the Arabians and Saracens Rup. Ly an. Ole- (holding those places) faine many things to abuse the Christians, and to get moaft. in Gen. Bell. ney. Further, it may well be affirmed that many (if not all) the historical circumin commun.t.ae trances of Iob are so obscure, that we should rather by finding his Countrie secke Sup.Ep. ad Rom. to get some knowledge of him, than by any presumptions founded upon him, inferre what his Countrie was, and build vnto him a Citie by coniecture.

Of 10b himselfe whether he were the same 10bab remembred in the 36. of Geneentia leb. Epist. to Euagrius, take him for the same.

The Land of Huts or Hus wherein Iob dwelt is from the Greeke Ois, which the vied Austin for Septuagint vie for the word Huts, translated by the Vulgar Sometime Hus, as lob 1.0.1. sometime Austis, as Hierome 25.20. This Land is placed by Junius between Palastina and Calesyria, besides Chamatha (or Hamath) under Palmyrene in the Countrie calthere it is called by Ptolomie Trachonitis or Bathan ea, the bounds of which Countries are confounded with Basan in this halfe Tribe of Manasses. And that this Land of Hus was thus 50 they readeit in feated, it may in part bee gathered out of the place of Ieremie the 25. 20. where hee the Septuagint. reckons the Hushites among the promiscuous borderers of the Israelites, whom hee therefore calleth promiscuous or miscellaneam turbam, because the r bounds were not onely joyned but confounded, and their Seigniories mingled one with the other. but of this place the wordes of Hieremie, Lamentations 4.21. speaking of the same prophesie, of which hee speaketh in the fine and twentieth Chapter, must needes be expounded: as Iunius reades them, distinguishing the Land of Hus from Edom: O filia Edomi, & que habitas in terra Hutzi; O Daughter of Edom, O thou which dwellest in the Land of Hus. Now because the Vulgar doth not so distinguish, but readeth Filia Edom qua habitas interra Hus; Daughter of Edom which dwellest in the Land of Hus: Hence, as it feemes, fome of the learned have thought that lob was an Edomite, as we have faid. and King of Edom, which if they understand by it Idumas or Edom, so called in Moto festime, they are greatly miltaken, making this Land of Hus to be in Edumaa. For it Dent. 3.9. is very probable that E/an when hee first parted from lacob, did not seate himselfe in Edom, or Seir, which lieth on the South border of Iudea, but inhabited Seir farre to the East of Iordan, and held a part of those Mountaines otherwise called Galaad, and Hermon, which by corruption the Sidonians call Shirion, and the Amorites Shenir for Seir, and from this his habitation did Esau incounter lacob when he returned out of Melopotamia, who passed by the very border of Elau his abiding. It is true that at fuch time as Moles wandred in the Delars, that the posteritie of Elau inhabited Seir to the South of Indaa: for it is like that the Amerites who had beaten both Ammon and Moab, did also drive the Edomites out of those parts, who thence-forward 20 feated themselves to the South of Indea, bordering the Defart Paran, and stretched their habitations ouer the Defarts as farre as Hor where Aram died.

Now for this Hus which gaue the name to a part of the Land of Trachonitis, whether it were Hus the sonne of Aram, as Iunius thinkes in his note vpon Gen. 10.22. or rather Hus the sonne of Nachor, Abrahams brother, the question is doubtfull. For my part I rather incline to thinke, that it was His the some of Nachor: partly because these Families of Aram seems long before to have been slost; and partly because in lob 6.22.2. Elibu the fourth of lobs friends, which seemes to be of lobs owne Countrie, is called a Buzite, of Buz, the brother of Hus, the sonne of Nachor : as also Whence the Hieremie 25. in the same continuation (though some other Nations named between) him ex regione 30 where Hus is spoken of there Buz is also named. Neither doth it hinder our conie- austrida. dure, that in the place of 10b 32. Elibu the Buzite is faid to bee of the Familie of Ram: (which Iunius expounds to bee as much as of the Familie of Aram) for that by this Aram we are nor to understand Aram the sonne of Sem, Junius himselfe maketh it plaine, both in his annotation upon the beginning of his booke, where he faith that one of lobs friends ( which must needes be this Elibu ) was of the posteritie of Nachor (as also in this place he confesseth so much expressly) and in as much as hee readeth

As for the other three of lobs friends (of whom by this note of Elibu his being of See Sixtus See to the Syrian Familie, or of the Familie of Nachor) it is implied that they were of other nenfit. kindreds; as also by the Septuagints addition, that this Elihu was of the Land of Him, or Austin, it is implied that they thought onely Elihu to have beene of lobs owne

But lunius thinks that the Shuchits were inhabitants of Arabia the Defart, descended of Shuach the sonne of Abraham and Ketura: of whom 50 Gen. 52.2. perhaps, faith he, the same whom Plinie calls Saccai. So also he thinketh the Themanites of whom Eliphaz was, to have beene of Arabia the Defart : and Eliphaz himselfe to have beene of the posteritie of Theman the sonne of Eliphaz, which was the some of Esau. And so also Nahamah whence Tsophar the third of lobs friends (which in this place of Iob.c.2.v.II. are mentioned) is by the same learned expositor thought Mm 2

Amasevs of all other in this border, and of that pare of the world, was the most famous, excelling in beautie, antiquitie, and riches, and was therefore called the Citie of iov or gladnes; and the House of pleasure; and is not onely remembred in many places of Scripture, but by the best Historians and Colmographers. David was the first that subjected itto the Kingdome of Iuda, after the ouerthrow of Adadezer their King, but in Salomons time. Rezon recovered it againe, though he had no title at all or right to that principalitie : but David having overthrowne Hadadezer king of Sophena, (otherwise Syria Soba or Zobah) Razon or Rezon with the remainder of that broken armie, in-30 uaded Damascena, and possest Damascus it selfe, and became an enemie to Salomon all 1.Rez. 11,0,40.

The next King of Damaseus was Adad the Edomite, who flying into Egypt from 1. Reg. 11. David, and Joab, when they flew all the males in Edom, was there entertained, and married Tabhnesthe King of Egypts wives lifter: of whom Taphnes in Egypt was fo called. This Adadreturning againe, became an enemie to Salomon all his life, and (as some writers affirme) inuaded Damascus, and thrust Rezon thence-out. In the line of Adad that Kingdome continued nine descents (as hecreafter may be shewed in the catalogue of those Kings of Syria) to whom the Asyrians & then the Gracians facceeded. This citie was exceeding strong, compassed with waters from the riners 40 of Abanah, and Parphar: whereof one of them prophane writers call Chryforthous the 2. Reg. s. golden river. Tunius takes it for Adonis. The countrey adioyning is very fruitfull of excellent wines and wheats, and all manner of excellent fruits. being taken by Haomar their King from the Romanes, in the yeere of our redemption 636. And in the yeere 1147. Conrad the third, Emperour of Rome, Lewes King of Fraunce, Baldwine the third King of Hierusalem, Henry Duke of Austrea, brotherto Conrad Frederick Barbaroffa afterward Emperour, Theodorisk Earle of Flaunders, and other Princes affembled at Ptolomais Acon, on the fea coaft, determined to recouer Damascus: but being betrayed by the Syrians, they failed of the enterprize.

In the yeere 1262. Halon the Tartar incompassit, and having formerly taken the King, brought him vnder the walls, and threatned extreme torture vnto him, except the Citizens rendred the place: but they refusing it, the King was torne asunder before them, and in fine the Citie taken, Agab the sonne of Halon was by his fa- to ther made King thereof.

In the yeere 1400. Tamberlaine Emperour of the Parthians, inuaded that region, and befreged the citie with an armie of 1200000. ( if the number be not mistaken i He entred it and put all to the fword, filling the ditch with his prisoners, those that retired into the Castie which scemed a place impregnable, hee ouertopped with another Castle adioyning : he forbare the demolishing of the citie in respect of the beautic of the Church, garnished with 40. gates or sumptuous porches. Ithad within it 9000 lanternes of gold & filuer: but while he inuaded Leypt, they againe furprized Damsfeus. Lastly in his returne after three moneths siege hee forst it: the Mahometans proftrating themselves with their priests, desired mercie: But Tamber- 20 laine commaunding them to enter the Church, he burnt them, and it, to the number of 20000 and did so demolish it, as those that came afterwards to see their houses, knew them not by the foundations. And as a Tropkey of his victorie heraised three towers with great Arte, builded with the heads of those whom hee had flaughtered. After this it was restored and repossest by the Soldane of Agypt, with a garrison of Mammalukes: And in the yeere 1 5 1 7. Selimus Emperour of the Turkes wrested it out of the hands of the Egyptians: in whose possession it now remaineth inhabited with Mahometans, and Christians, of all neighbouring nations.

Ow beeit that Damaseus were founded by Hus the sonne of Aram, or by Damascus the sonne of Eliezer Abrahams steward, we finde no relation of their Kings, or Common wealth till Davids time. For it flood without the boundes of Canaan : and therefore neglected by Moses, Iolua, and the Iudges, as impertinent to that Storie: But were it so that it had some reguli, or pettie Kings ouer it, as all the Cities of those parts had, yet none of them became famous for ought that is left to writing, till such time as 40 David ouerthrew Adadezer prince of Sophena or Syria Zoba: the same Nation which Plinie calleth Nubai, inhabiting betweene Batanea and Euphrates. Now the better to vnderstand the storie of those Syrian Princes, whom soone after the Kings of Damassus made their vassals, the reader may informe himselfe, That on the North-east parts of the holy land there were three chiefe principalities whereof the Kings or Commaunders greatly vexed or disturbed the State or Commonwealth of Ifrael, namely Damascus or Aram, Sophena or Syria Zoba, and Chamath, or Chamath-Zoba, of which these were the Princes in Dauids and Salomons times: Razon or Rezon of Damascus, Adadezer of Syria Zoba, and Tohu of Chamath. But it seemeth that Damascus was one of the cities subject to Adadezer when David inuaded him, though when Saul made warre against Zoba, Damascus was not named. And as Iosephus affirmeth, 50 the leader of those succours, which were leuied and sent to Hadad-Hezer from Damascus, had the name of Adad: who was in that battaile slaine with 22000. Aramites of Damascus: whereof, as of the ouerthrow of Adadezer, Rezon, the Comander of

CHAP.11. S.2. his armic, taking advantage, made himselfe King of Damaseus: Adadezer and Adad of Damaseus being both slaine. About the same time Tobu King of Chamath or Ituraa, 1.Reg. 11. hearing that his neighbour and enemic Adadezer was vtterly ouerthrowne, sendeth for peace to Danid, and presenteth him with rich gifts, but in dolo faith S. Hierome; it was craftily done of him. Now to the North of the Holy Land, and to the West of Damascus, the Tyrians and Zidonians inhabited : but they for the most part were in league and peace with the Indeans and Ifraclites. But to returne to the kings of Syria, I mean of Syria, as it is taken in the Scriptures, containing Dama/cena, Soba or Zoba, and chamath, or Itaraa, to which I may adde Gelbur, because it is so accounted in the 2. of 10 Sam. 15. as ioyning in the Territoric to Damafeus (for Syria at large is farre greater. of which Paleftina it felfe is but a Prouince, as I have noted in the beginning of this Trast.) It is not agreed among the Historians of former times, nor of our later writers, who was the first of those Adads of Syria Zoba, and Damascus. Some acount Rezon, other Adad of Idumea: of whome it is written in the first of Kings, that David having invaded that Region, and left loab therein to destroy all the male childreen thereof: Adad of the Kings seed, fled into Agypt; and was there married to Taphnes the Queenes fifter, as before, who hearing of Danids death, and of the death of his Captaine Ioab (whom indeed all the bordering Nations feared) he turned againe, and as Bunting thinketh, this Adad did expell Rezon out of Damafsus; and was the first of the Syrian Kings. To mee it seemeth otherwise. For as 2. Sam. 8.3. 10 I take it, Adadezer the sonne of Rebob, whom Saul invaded, was the founder of that 1.Sam.14.47. Principalitie: and the first of Adads, who forsaking his Fathers name, as hee grew powerfull, tooke vpon him the style of Adad, the great God of the Asyrians, faith Macrobius, which lignified onenesse or Vnitie. I also finde a Citie called Adada in the same part of Syria: of which, whether these Princes tooke the name, or gaueit, I am ignorant. For Adad ezer, Ben-adad, Eli-adad were the same in name, with the differences of Ezer, Ben, and Eli, adioyned. And that Adadezer was of greatest power, it appeareth first, because it is against him, that David vndertooke the warre : second-'ly, because he lenied 22000. Aramites out of the Territory of Damaseus: as out of his 30 proper Dominions: for had the Damascens had a King apart, it is probable that the Scriptures would have given vs his name; thirdly, because Syria Zoba, of the most of Plinhbans. which Adadezer was King, was an exceeding large Territory, and contained of Arabia the Defart as farre as to Euphrates, according to Plinie: and the greatest part of Arabia Petras according to Niger. Wholocuer was the first, whether Adadezer, or Adad of I-fides the cuil that Adad did, the cuil that Hadad did, seemeth to be referred to Hadad of Idumea, lately returned out of £gypt: to wit, 23. yeares after he was carried thither. The third king of Damaseus, and of Zobah both, was Hezion, to Hezion succeeded Tabrimmon, or Tabremmon, to him Benhadad, as is proued in the first of Kings. For 1.King.15,18. 10 Asa King of Iuda the sonne of Abiam, the sonne of Roboam, the sonne of Salomon, being vexed and invaded by Baa/ba, the successour of Nadab, the sonne of Ieroboam, fent to Benhadad the sonne of Tabrimmon the sonne of Hezion, King of Aram, that dwelt at Damaseus, to inuade Israel (while Baasha sought to fortific Rama against Asa: thereby to blocke him vp, that he should not enter into any of the Territories of Ifrael) who according to the desire of As, having received his presents, willingly inuaded the Countrie of Nepthalim, and tooke divers Cities, and spoiles thence : As in the meane while carrying away all the Materials, which Bas flat had brought to for- 1. dumaa, Rezon was the second: who was an enemie to Ifrael all the dayes of SALOMON. Betifie Rama withall, and converted them to his owne vie. This Benhadads Father Tabremmon was in league with Asa: and so was his Father 50 Hezion; for Asa requireth the continuance of that friendship from Benhadad, his fonne: though it feemeth that the gold and filuer fent him out of the Temple, was the most forcible argument. And that this Tabremmen invaded Ifrael, before the enterprize of his sonne Benbadad, it is conicctured. For Benhadad when he was prisoner with Achab, spake as followeth. The Cities which my Father tooke from thy Father, I will 1, Reg. 20, v. 34. restore:

restore: and thou shalt make streetes or keepers of the borders, for thee in Damascus: as my tather didin Samaria. And herein there arifeth a great doubt (if the argument it felie were of much importance) because Tabremmon was Father indeede to Benhadad which inuaded Baa/ba, at the request of A/a; But this Benhadad that twice entred did, the first of that name, the confederate of afa and Abiam, as before, than the sonne of Tabremmen. For betweene the invasion of Benhadad the first, in Baashas time, and the fiege of Samaria, and the ouerthrow of Benhadad by Ashab, there past

49. yeeres, as may be gathered out of the raignes of the Kings of Ifrael. So that if vecres, ere he was taken by Ashab, which make eighty lacking one, it is whikely that Benhadad at fuch an age would make warre. Belides all this, the first Benhadad came with no fuch pompe; but the second Benbadad vaunteth, that hee was followed with

Baalha and Omri, and Benhadad the second invaded Achab, at whose hands this Benhadid received two notorious overthrowes: the first at Samaria, by a fally of 700, if

tered 100000, of the Aramites; besides 2,7000, which were crusht by the fall of the wall of Aphec. And this Benhadad, Achab againe letteth at liberty: to whom hee but being returned, he refuseth to render Ramoth Gilead, a frontier towne, and of great importance. Now three yeeres after (for folong the league lafted) Ramoth not being delivered, Achab invadeth Gilead, and affiegeth the Citic, being affifted by Iola.

ò. III.

Of the later Kings, and decay and overthrow of their power.

Fter Hazael, Benhadad the second, or rather the third of that name, the sonne of Hazael, reigned in Damaseus: who fought against Israel, with ill successe: for low King of Ifrael, the sonne of the vnhappy 10- 2. Reg. 12. achaz, as he was foretold by Elisha the Prophet, beat Benhadad in three 10/eph.ant.c. severall battels: and he lost all those Cities to Ifrael, which his Father

Hazael had taken violently from Ioachaz.

After this Benhadad the sonne of Hazael, there succeeded three others of the Infeph. Ant. 1.7. fame name, of whom the Stories are loft, onely 2V icholaus Dama scenus cited by Iosephus, makes mention of them: and in one of these Kings times it was that Ieroboams the fecond, the fonne of lows recovered Dama (cus it felfe, to Iudah faith the Geneua, 2.King.14.28. but better in I v N I V s , vtgrecuperabat Damascum, & Chamatham Iehuda pro Ifraele; that is, and how be recovered for Ifrael, Damascus and Chamatha of Indea; for thele Cino ties sometimes conquered by Danied, did of right belong to the Tribe of inda.

And it is likely that this conquest upon the Adads was performed: the first of these three adads then living, of whom there is no Story. For when as lehoas the King of the ten Tribes had thrice ouercome the Syrians in the time of Benhadad the fonne of Hazael and had recovered the Cities which Hazael had wonne from Ifrael ; and fo left his Kingdome to his fonne Ieroboam the fecond, it feemeth that this Ierobeam without delay, and having nothing else left for him to enterprize, instantly

Razin, or Rezin, after Iosephus Rases, after Zonaras Raason, the 10. Adad, maketh league with Pekah, or Phacas King of I/rael, against Achaz King of Iuda; both carrie 30awaya great number of prisoners. After this they both besiege Achaz in Hierulalem: but in vaine. Then Adad alone inuadeth Elath, and beating out the Iewes, maketh 2.K.ing. 16.5. ita Colonie of Syrians. Wherefore Achaz brought Tetglaphalaffar against Razin, who Ef. 1. tooke him, and beheaded him, and wonne Damascus: with whom ended the line of 10seph. Ant.l.g. the Adads and the Kingdome of Damaseus: the Asyrians becomming masters both ofthat and Ifrael. These Adads as they reigned in order are thus reckoned.

6 Benhadad the second, taken prisoner by Achab.

Hazael, whom Elisha foretold, with teares, of his advancement; the same who overthrew Isram King of Ifrael, at Ramoth Gilead. And that there was a second Hazael which preceded Benhadad the third, it is not improbable, because that Hazael which tooke Geth, and compounded the warre with loss, made the Expedition thirty yeeres, and perchance more, after the first Hazael which stifled his master Benhadad, and had flaine Ioram the sonne of Achab King of Israel. For Ioas began to reigne in the 7. yeere of Iehu King of Ifrael; and after he had reigned 23. yeeres, the Temple was not yet repaired, after which (and how long wee know not) it is faid that Ha-Ozael tooke Geth, and turned his face towards Ierusalem. It is also some proofe that Hazael which tooke Geeb, was not the same with Hazael that murdered Benhadail, because he could not at that time but be of good yeeres, being as it seemeth the second person in the kingdome, and Commander of Benhadads men of warre. To this Hazael, be he the first or second, succeeded 8 Ben-Hazael or Azael, the first King of the race of the Adads of Damaseus, was anointed by Elifba, or Elizeus, when he was fent by Benbadad to the Prophet, to know whether Benhadad should recouer his present sicknesse: Hee waged warre with Ioram; who 40 received divers wounds at the encounter at Ramoth in Gilead: from whence returning to be cured at Iefrael, he and the King of Iuda, Abaziah, or Ochozias, are flaine by Iehu, as before is faid. After the death of Ioram, Azael continued the warre against lehu, and wasted Gilcad, and all those portions of Gad, Reuben, and Manasse, 0. uer lordan. Resin or Rezin the last, who loyned with Pekah King of Ifrael, against Jude, at which time Achaz King of Iuda waged for his defence Teglatphalaffar.

Now betweene Benhadad the third, and Rezin the last, Nicholaus Damascenus findes three other Kings of the Adads, which make twelue in all.

For the rest of the Princes of Syria, which were but reguli, as those of Emath, and Geffur, we finde that Tohu was King of Emath or Chamath in Davids time, to whom he fent his sonne Ioram with presents, after Davids victory against Adadezer. Also Senacherib speaketh of a King of Emath, but names him not.

ò. IIII.

Of other leffer Kingdomes of the Syrians, which being brought under the Africans. neuer recourred them selues againe.

F Geffur wee finde two Kings named; to wit, Talmai, and his Father Ammihur. To Talmai, whose daughter David married, it was that Ab-(alon fled, who was his maternall grandfather. Of the Kings of Sophena or Syria, Soba or Calofyria, there are two named, Rehob or Rochob 20 the Father of Adadezer, and Adadezer himselfe, and it is plaine that after his death the feat of the Kings of Soba was transferred to Damaseus, a Citie better fitting their greatnesse. After Rezin became Lord of both Principalities. And the race of these Kings of Syria, (which became so potent, and iouned Soba, Da. malcus, Emath, and the Defart of Arabia with other Provinces into one, under Rezin the second of the Adads ) as it began with Danid, so it ended at once with the Kingdome of Israel. For Ahaz King of Iuda waged the Assyrian Teglatphalassar against Pekab King of Ifrael, and against Rezinthe last King of Damascus : which Teglath first inuaded Damascena, and the region of Soba, and tooke Damascus it selfe, and didput to death Rezin the last, carrying the inhabitants captine. This was the second time 20 that the Asyrians attempted Ifrael. For first, Phul Belochus entred the borders thereof (Menahem gouerning Ifrael) who stopt the enterprize of Phul with a thousand talents of filuer: for this Phul Belochus, whose pedigree wee will examine hereaster, being scarce warme as yet in his seate at Babylon, which hee, with the helpe of his companion Arbaces, had wrested from Sardanapalus: having besides this King of Syria in his way, who feemed to be a great and strong Prince, was content to take the composition of a thousand talents of the King of Israel for that present time. But his some Teglath following the purpose of his Father Belochus, and finding so excellent an occasion, as the warre begun betweene Israel and Iuda, Pekab commaunding in the one, and Achaz in the other, his neighbour Rezin being also wrapt in 40 that warre, and wasted in strength thereby, did willingly accept the offer of Johan King of Inda, his imprest and entertainement. So, first attempting Damaseus, which lay in his path towards Ifrael, bee carried it (as is before remembred) and then with great ease possess himselfe of the Cities of Nephthalim; leading with him a great part of the people captine. And his sonne Salmanassar, whom Ptolomie calleth Nabonassar, after the revolt of Holea, forced Samaria: and rent that Kingdome afunder. So as the line and race of Ninus in Surdanapalus, whom Belochus supplanted; the race and Monarchie of the Syrian Adads in Rezin: whom Teglath flaughtered; the Kingdome of Israel in Hosea, whom Salmanassar ouerturned; happened neere about a time: that of Ninus in the dayes of Belochus, and the other two in the dayes of Teglatphalassar, 50 and Salmanaffar his sonne. For Sardanapalus perished, Osa ruling luda; and the other two Kingdomes were dissolved a dehaz yet living.

Lastly, the Kingdome of Indait selfe, being attempted by Sennacherib, the sonne of Salmanaffar in vaine, and preserved for the time by God miraculously, was at length vtterly ouerturned. Hierusalem and the Temple burnt 132. yeeres after the captinitie of Ifrael, and Samaria: the destruction of Ifrael being in the ninth yeere of Holea: that of Inda in the eleventh of Zedechia. Now the Emperours of Asyria and Babylon held also the Kingdome of Syria, from the eight yeere of Salmanasjar, to the last of Baltassar, whom Herodotus calleth Labynitus: in all about 200. yeeres. After 3603. these the Persians from Cyrus to Darius their last King, held Syria about 200. yeeres.

Then Alexander Macedon tooke this among other Provinces of the Persian Empire, and his fucceffours the Seleucide reigned therein, till it became subject vato the nower of the Romanes, from whom it was wrested long after by the Saracens, and remaineth now in possession of the Turke, as shall bee shewed in due place. Thus much of the nations bordering vpon the Ifraelites, with whom they had most to doe both in warre and peace, being the only people, whose History in those ancient times carried an affored face of trueth.

The reason of the name, or rather a memorable application of the Etymological this name (for it seemes by the place; Deut. 11. 30. that the name was knowne be-"I. Sam.7.15. fore the comming of the Ifraelites into Canaan) is noted 10, 5.9. Ob deut intonem probri Egyptiaci, because their fore-skinnes (the people beeing there circumcifed) were theireads Do- tumbled downe the Hill: which from thence was called Collis preputiorum. This mum Det 19716, and interprets Gilgal was also called Geliloth, as appeares by comparing the places, 10f. 15.7. and 18. it, Kiriath-itha- 17. for it was in the borders of Iordan, of which Iof. 22:13. and Geliloth lignifieth rim where the borders. * It flood (though in some distance) directly Eastward, over against the For (faithhe) two Hills Garizim and Hebal: vpon the one of which the bleffings, and on the other the curfings were to be read to the people, both beeing the mountaines of Ephraim. Further, for the lituation of this Gilgal, it is to be noted, that both it, and Mitbaof Beniamin (of which also weereade oft in the Scripture) were seated about the midst of the length of the land of Canaan: for which reason * Samuel chose these two wherethe Arke places, to either of which hee came yeerely to give judgement to the Ifraelites; of which two, Gilgal (as is faid) was neere lordan on the haft fide of this Tribe; and prace dottinot freake of testi. Mitspa neere the West Sca, towards the land of the Philistims.

The third place, which is named with these two, whither also Samuel vsed yeerely dietall meetings: and be- to come, is * Bethel: which also was seated in this Tribe of Beniamin. Butto refids the Priefts turne to Gilgal which was the first place, where the Arke resided, after they pastouer Iordan (from whence it was carried to Silo, and thence to Kiriath-ieharim, & at length to Hierusa'em) here in Gilgal it was that Iosua pitched vothe twelve stones, which were taken out of the channell of lordan, when it was drie, that the Ifraelites might passe over it: by which Storie, as it is set downe Iof. 4. it appeares, that the same day that they passed over Iordan; they lodged at Gilgal. At the same Gilgal, to omit many other memorable things, it was that Samuel hewed Agag the King of the Amalekites in pieces. And as for Mitspa, whither also Samuel came yeerely to give Judgement, there also were often the greatest meetings held: as that for the reuenge of the Leuites wife against Gibba, and the Beniamites, Iud. 20.1. and another against the Philips, 1. Sam. 7.12. Thither also Iudas Maccabaus gathered the Iewes, (when Hieru-30 thei: though Jalem was possess by the Heathen) as it is 1. Macc. 3.47. in which place this reason it for the place of their meeting is added; Quia locus Orationi fuerat Mitspaanted Israeli. Touching where the arke this Mitspa, to avoid confusion, it is to bee remembred, that the Scriptures mention foure places of this name: Mitspa of Juda, of which Ios. 17.28. * Mitspa of Gilead, of which we have spoken already in the Tribe of Gad: Mitspa of the Moabites, where Dauid for a while held himselfe, commending his parents to the King of Most, I. Mulps or One- Sam. 22.3. and laftly, this chiefe Mitspa of the Beniamites. And as in this place the chiefe meetings were held both before Hierusalem was recovered from the lebusites, peares by that which is added and also in the time of the Machabees (as we have said) when Hierusalem was held by 40 the wicked vnder Antiochiu, so also in the time of Hieremie, after the destruction of for 10fua notes the Temple by the Chaldeys, Gedaliab whom Nabuchodonofor left in 1enry, as Gouershe three quarnour ouer those that were left in the land, held his abiding in this place: vntill (to Weft, and East, the great hurt of the lewes) he was slaine by the treason of Ismael, one of the royall bloud of Inda, as it is Hierem 14.

Neere vnto this Mit [pa, the * Scripture mentioneth Beth-car, after called Aben-Hezer, that is, the Stone of helpe: where Samuel pitched up the pillar or Stone, for a Trophy against the Philistims.

Touching Bethel which (as it seemes) was the third place where Samuel held his chiefe meetings for the ministring of Instice, that it was anciently called Luz, and how it was taken by the issue of loseph (though it belonged to the portion of Ben. 50 iamin, as it is Nehem. 11.31. and 10f. 18.22.) and how another Citie called Luz * neere adiouning to it, was built by the man of the Citic which shewed the entrance to the Spies, as it is Indg. 1. and of the occasion of the name from Iacobs vision: and how 1erobosm

Ieroboam, by erecting one of his calues heere, of Bethel (which fignifieth the house of Borrowing God) made it * Beth-auen, that is, the house of Vanitie, Hof. 4.15. and 10.5. as also oncienbour ther memorablethings of this place, they are so well knowne, out of the Histories of towne in the the Scripture, that we may well passe them over.

The territorie of Bethel, which at the first belonged to the Kingdome of the tenne Inda and Israel Tribes, from the time of the great victoric of Abia against Ierobo.m (of which 2. Chr. betweene Has 13.) was taken from them, and adjoyned to the Kingdome of Iuda: and so it continued as appeares by the Storie of tofhus: which performed the Prophecies against *Seec.9.5.1.
the altar of Bethel, 2. Reg. 23. whence those coaltes 1. Mace. 11.34. are called Aphemaibal vnderno rema, which Greeke word fignifieth as much as, Athing taken away, to wit, from the fland the place tenne Tribes. It was one of the three Seigniories or Prasectures which Demetrius in 1. Mace. 11. 34. his Epiftle mentioneth, as added by him to the Dition of the Iewes, out of the Samed for one maritan Country. Apart of it, as appeares 2. Chron. 13. 19. was Hephrauin, which Iof. of the three 18.23. is called Hophram, belonging to this Tribe of Benjamin.

Not farre from this Bethel, in this Tribe, we finde three other Cities often men-usyeelds to the tioned in the Scriptures, Rama, Gibha, and Gebab. Of the name Rama, *it is noted lewes out of alreadie, in the description of Ephraim, that there were many townes so called, the country of because of their high situation. But whereas they finde out Rama in the Tribe of lying toward Inda (as it seemes because Mat. 2. it appeares that it bordered Bethlehem) and also the East to Icout of Brothard and Breidenbach make Silo to have beene called Rama, and finde yet da toward the another Rama in Zabulon; these three have no warrant in the Scripture. Of Rama West and Ain the Tribe of Affer, as it seemes, wee have testimonie Iof. 19.29. and of another in which even Nephtbalim, lof. 19.26. of a third Rama, where Samuel dwelt in Mount Ephraim 1. CHAP.12. S.I.

Of a fourth Rama we reade 2. Reg. 8. 29. which is Ramoth in Gilehad. The first, Tribe of Sime which is most often mentioned, is Rama of Beniamin, seated as wee said, neere Bethel on toward the 30 the vttermost South-border of the Kingdome of the tenne Tribes: for which cause 16(19,8: 8: scal. Baasha in the time of Asa King of Inda, fortified it, to hinder those that did flie from led Kama of him to Afa. Of this Rama or Ramatha I should rather thinke Iofeph was, that buried otherwise Ba-Chrift: because it was neerer to Hierufalem, and after the captinitie belonged to Iu- halath-beer. dea, as it appeares Efd. 2. 26. where in that it is joyned with Gebah, it is plaine that he fruction, that speaketh of that Rama with whose stones (after Baasha had ceased to build it) Asa (as is Governing itis 1.Reg. 25.22.) built Gebah adiovning to it; both being in Beniamin. And as Rama a genitive case was the South-border of the tenne Tribes, so was Gebab the North-border of the whence the Kingdome of Iuda: whence 2. Reg. 23.8. wee reade that Iofiah through all his King- vulgar out of dome, even from Gedah, which was the North-border, to Beer-sheba which was the the Septinging South-border, destroyed the places of Idolatry.

The third Citie Gibba which was the Citie of Saul (the wickednesse of which nees tor which Citie in the time of the Indges had almost veterly rooted out this Tribe) Adricho- Innius hath Colmiss confounds with Gebab, making one of two (as they are enidently diffinguished this word is Efai. 10.27. of which word Gibba, in another forme Gibbath, he imagineth Gabaath an- oftumes an Ap other Gitie in this Tribe, making two of one. The vicinitie of this citie also to Rama fying a Hill) of Beniamin, appears Ind. 19.12. where the Lenite with his wife notable to reach to Ra. but Additioning ma, tooke vp his lodging at Gibha. By that place of 1.84,22.6 it seemes that there was taking notice of this, builds in this Gibba some towre or Citadell called Rama: where Junius reades in excelso, for in his Citic Gaba-Rama: but it may be that the name of the Kings place in this citie, was Rama: as it alb you this Text & placeth 30 feemes that in Rama of Samuel, the name of the chiefe place where Samuel with the it in Benjamin, Colledge of Prophets abode, was Naioth. The great Citie of Hai ouerthrowne by Iof. when as the which 10f.7.2. is placed neere Beth-auen vpon the East of Bethel, was in this Tribe, as words adioynet that Is proved Nehe.7. 10.20. though it be not named by Iofnac. 18. for it was burned by this Hill was in him and laid desolate, as it is 10f. 8.28. Citic of chiefe note reckoned Iof. 18.25. in this Tribe was Gibhon, the chiefe Citic of the Heuites: whose cunning to bind the Israelites by oath to sauc their lines, is set downe lof. o. whence they were reckoned among the * Nethinai or Profelites : and were bound to certaine publique seruices in the house of God: which oath of sauing these Gibeonites broken in part after by Saul, was by God punished by a famine 2. This Gibeon or Gibhon with Almon and Iebah ( of both which wee have Spoken) and with Hanothoth the natall place of Hieremie the Prophet, were faid tof. 21.28. to be given to the Leuites by the Beniamites. Necreto this Hanothoth was Nob. as appeares. I. Reg. 2 26. where Ebiatbar the Priest, which was of Nob before it was destroyed by Saul, is sent to his grounds at Hanothoth: It is reckoned in the Tribe of 10 Beniamin, Nehem. 9.31. and though in the time of Sant the reliding place of the Atke was at Kiriath-icarim: yet by the lamentable tragedie of bloudshed, which Saul raised in this place (as it is set downe I. Sam. 21. and 22.) in the judgement of Innius, it is proued that the Tabernacle was there for a time.

Of Gifcala in Galilee Iofephus makes often mention, but of any heere in Beniamin, which they make the natall place of S. Other places of leffe importance I omit, and come to the Citic of Hierusalem, and the Princes and Gouernours of this Citie: A great part whereof was in the Tribe of Beniamin, whence lof. 18.28. it is

* See in the hirher halfe of Manaffe.

T what time Hierusalem was built ( which afterward became the Prin 20 cesse of all Cities) it doth not appeare. Some there are who imagine that Melchisedec was the founder thereof in Abrahams time. But according to others, that Citic out of which Melchifedec incountred Abraham (in his returne from the overthrow of the Affyrian and Per-San Kings or Captaines, when Lot was made prisoner) flandeth by the river of lordan, in the halfe Tribe of Manaffe bordering Zabulon, which was also called Salem, and by the Greekes Solima.

Hierusalem (whensoeuer or by whomsoeuer built) was a principall Citie in Iesus his time: yet not fo renowned as Hazor the Metropolis (in thosedayes, and before) of all the Canaanites. Adonizedek (whom Iofus flew) was then King of Hierufalem. 40 That it was belonging to the Iebusites it is manifest : for how long soener they held it before Moses time, they were Masters and Lords thereof almost 400. yeeresafter him: cuen till Danid wanne it: and therefore in all likelihood, it was by the Ichufai (the children of Ichufaus the fonne of Canaan) built ; after whom it was called Ichu. And so much did that Nation relie on the strength of the place, as when Danid attempted it, they bragged that their lame, and blinde, and impotent people should defend it. Danid, after he had by Gods affiftance poffest it, and turned out the Ichufites, gaue it an exceeding great increase of circuit: strengthened it with a Citadell or Castle: and beautified it with many Palaces, and other buildings: changing the name from 50 Iebussalem, the Citic of the lebusites, to Hierusalem, which the Greekes call Hierosolima. After the death of Salomon, and that the Kingdome of the Jewes was cut afunder, Shilhac King of Legypt, and his predecellous, having bred up for that purpose, Adad 2. Chron.12. the Idumean, and Ieroboam, Salomons servant; and both married to Agyptians: the State by the one disturbed, by the other broken: Siffrat first invaded the Territorie 2.King.14. of Iuda, entred Hierusalem, and fackt it, and became Master not onely of the riches 10 of Salomon, but of all those spoiles which Danid had gotten from Adadezer, Tohu, the Ammonites, and other Nations. It was againe fackt and a part of the wall throwne downe by Ion King of Ifrael; while Amasa the twelth King thereof go- 2. King. 16.

It was againg spoiled by the Babylonians, loakim then reigning. But this vngratefull, Idolatrous, and rebellious Nation, taking no warning by these Gods gentle corrections and afflicti-20 ons, but perfitting in all kinde of impictic, filling the Citic even to the mouth with innocent bloud, God railed vp that great Babylonian King Nabuchodonofor, as his 2.Ring.19. scourge and reuenger, who making this glorious Citie and Temple with all the Palaces therein, and the walles and towers which imbraced them, even and levell with the duft, carried away the spoiles with the Princes and people, and crusht them with the heavie yoake of bondage and servitude full 70. veeres, insomuch as Sion was not onely become as a torne and plowed-vp field, Hierufalem a heape of Rone, 25,26.39. and rubble, the mountaine of the Temple as a groue, or wood of thornes and briers, but (as Hierome speaketh) Euen the birds of the avre scorned to flie ouer it, or the beafts to tread on that defiled foile.

Then 70. yeeres being expired, according to the Prophecie of Daniel, and the Jewes Hier. to 3. trad. by the grace of Cyrus returned: the Temple was againe built, though with interruption and difficultie enough: and the Citic meanely inhabited, and without walls or other defences, for some 60. and odde yeeres, till Nehamia by the fauour of Artaxerxes rebuilt them. Then againe was the Temple and Citic spoiled by Bagoses, Nebem. 12. or Vagofes, the Lieutenant of Areaxerxes: after by * Ptolomaus the first; then by 34.60. Antiochus Epiphanes : and againe by Apollonius his Lieutenant. By Pompey it was the Egyotian taken long after, but not destroyed, nor robbed, though Crassus in his Parthian expe- Kings after Adition tooke as much as he could of that which Pompey spared.

But the damages which ir fustained by the violence of facrilegious Tyrants, were fembling his o commonly recompensed by the industrie or bountic of good Princes, the voluntary Religion, came contribution of the people, and the liberalitie of strangers. Before the captiuitie, the lem to offer Sapeople of the land through the exhortation of godly Kings, made many and large cifice. Iofiz. offerings to repaire the Temple of Salomon. The wrong done by Ptolomaus Lags to ant.1. the second Temple, was requited by the bountie of his sonne Ptolomaus Philadelphus. The mischiese wrought by Antiochus Epiphanes and his followers, was amended partly by the great Offerings which were fent to Hiernsalem out of other Nations. Finally all the losses, which either the Citie or Temple had endured, might well feeme forgotten in the reigne of Herod that viurping and wicked, but magnificent cylin. King, who amplified the Citie, new built the Temple, and with many sumptuous so workes did so adorne them, that hee left them farre more stately and glorious than they had beene in the dayes of Salomon.

Of the destruction of Ierusalem by the Romans.

An extreme famine, with the civill diffension, opprest them within the walles; aforcible enemic assailed them without. The Idumeans also, who lay in wait for the destruction of the leves Kingdome, thrust themselves into the Citie, of purpose to betray it: who also burnt the Temple, when Nabuchodone for tooke it. And to be short. there perished of all forts, from the first besieging to the consummation of the vi-Effit. 4.4.4.5. Ctoric, eleuen hundred thousand soules : and the Citic was so beaten downe, and demolifhed, as those which came afterward to see the desolation thereof, could hardly beleeue that there had beene any fuch place or habitation. Onely the three Herodian towres (workes most magnificent, and ouertopping the rest) were spared, af 20 well for lodgings for the Roman garrifons, as that thereby their victorie might bee the more notorious and famous : for by those buildings of strength and State remaining, after-ages might judge what the rest were; and their honour be the greater and more thining that thereover became victorious.

After this; fuch lewes as were scattered heere and there in Iudea, and other Prouinces, beganne againe to inhabite some part of the Citie; and by degrees to rebuild it, and ftrengthen it as they could, being then at peace, and tributaries to the Roman State : but after 65. yeeres, when they againe offered to reuelt, and rebell, Alim. Adrianus the Emperour flaughtered many thousands of them, and ouerturned those three Herodian Towres, with all the reft, making it good which Christ himselfe had 39 foretold; That there should not stand one stone upon another, of that vngratefull Citic. Afterward, when his furie was appealed, and the Prophecie accomplished, he tooke one part without the wall, wherein flood Mount Caluarie, and the Sepulchre of Christ, and excluding of the reft the greatest portion, hee againe made it a Citie of great capacitic, and called it after his owne name, Elia Capitolia. In the gate toward Betbel, he caused a Sowe to be cut in marble, and set in the front thereof, which he did in despight of the Iewes Nation: making an Edict, that they should not from thencefoorth euer enter into the Citie, neither should they dare so much as to beholdit from any other high place ouertopping it.

Nations, and especially by Christians; and so it continued 500. yeeres.

It was afterward in the 636. yeere after Christ, taken by the Agyptian Saracens,

> 6. IIII. Of the vaine and malicious reports of Heathen writers, touching the ancient lewes.

CHAP.12. S.4.

F the original of the tewes, prophane writers have conceived diverfly and injuriously. Quintilian speakes infamously of them, and of their leader; who (faith be) gathered together a pernitious Nation. Diodore and Strabo make them Agyptians. Others affirme that while Is gouerned Agypt, the people were so increased, as Ierosolymus, and Indas ledde thence a great multitude of that Nation, with whom they planted the neighbour Regions; which might be meant by Moses and Aaron : tor the name of Moles was accidentall, because hee was taken up and faued out of the waters. But Infline, of all other most malicious, doth derive the Iewes from the Syrian Kings; of Julin 1,26. whom, Damascus, saith hee, was the first : and to him succeeded Abraham, Moses, and Ifrael. He againe supposeth (somewhat contrary to himselfe) that Ifrael had tenne fonnes, among whom hee divided the land of Iuda; fo called of Iudas his eldeft, who had the greatest portion. The yongest of the sonnes of Israel hee calleth In leph: who being brought up in Egyps, became learned in magical! Arts, and in the interpretations of Dreames, and fignes prodigious, and this Isleph (faith hee) was father to Moles: who with the rest, by reason of their foule diseases, and lest they should infect others, were banished Egypt. Further, hee telleth how these menthus banished, when in the Defarts they suffered extreme thirst and famine, and therein found reliefe the feuenth day, for this cause euer after observed the seuenth day, and kept it Holy; making it a Law among themselues, which afterward became a branch of their Religion. Hee addeth also that they might not marrie 40 out of their owne Tribes, left discourring their uncleannesse, they might also bee expelled by other Nations, as they were by the Egyptians. There and like fables hath Justine.

Cornelius Tacitus doth as grofly belie them, in affirming, That in the inmost Oratoric of their Temple, they had the golden head of an Alle, which they adored. But herein Tacitus forgetteth himselfe, having in the fift booke of his owne Historietruely confessed of the lewes, that they worshipped one onely God: and thought it most prophane to represent the Deitie by any materiall figure, by the shape of a man, or any other creature; and they had therefore in their Temples, no Image or representation, no not so much as in any Citie by them inhabited. ports seeme to have been gathered out of divine letters; though wrested and peruer. ted, according to the custome of the Heathen. For so have they obscured and altred the Storic of the Creation, of Paradife, of the Floud; and given new namesto the children of Adam in the first age: to Nosh and his sonnes, in the second: and so to Abraham, Ifaac, and Iacob, Moses, and the rest of the fathers, and leaders of the Hebrewes: all which fainings, as touching the lewes and their originals, lolephus against Appion, and Tertullian have sufficiently answered. For that the Hebrewes were the Children of Arphaxad and Heber, no man doubteth : and so Chaldeans originally, taking name either of Heber, the sonne of Sale, or else (faith Montanus) of wandring, as is before remembred. And therefore doth Stephanus, the Greeke Grammarian, 10 deriue the Hebrewes or lewes, from Abrabon; having mistaken the name of Abraham, who was the sonne of Heber, in the sixt descent. Their ancient names were first changed by the two grand-children of Abram: for after Iacob, otherwise Israel, the chiefe part were called Ifrael, another part after Efau or Edom, Edomites; at length the remnant of lacob, being most of the Tribe of Iuda, honoured the name of Indas, the some of Iaceb, and became Indaans or Iewes: as also for a time in the name of Ephraim the sonne of Ioseph, the chiefe of the Patriarches of the ten Tribes; the rest of the tenne Tribes were comprehended : but were first rooted out when the Kingdome of Ifrael fell. The Iudeans continued their names, though they fuf. fered the same seruitude not long after, under Nabuchodonosor.

The gouernement which this Nation under-went, was first paternall: which continued till they served the Egyptians. They were secondly ruled by their Captaines and leaders, Moses and losue, by a policie Diuine. Thirdly, they subjected themselves to ludges. Fourthly, they desired a King, and had Saul for the first: Of whom and his successours, before

HEN losus was now dead, who with the aduice of the 70. Elders, and the high Priest, held authoritie ouer the people, and ordered that Common-weale: It pleased God to direct the Tribe of Iuda (in whom the Kingdome was afterward established) to undertake the Warre against the Canaanites, ouer whom (with Gods fauour, and the affiftance of Simeon) they became victorious.

In the first attempt which they made, they not only flew ten thousand, but made Adonibezek prisoner: the greatest and cruellest Commander, both of the Canaanites and Perizites.

This tyrants crucltie as else-where bath been fignified, they returned in the farme to kinde vpon his owne head: and so by the torments which hee now telt in his owne person (before no otherwise knowne vnto him but by his malicious imagination) made him confesse and acknowledge Gods inft indgement against him selfe.

The tribes of Iuda and Simeon did also master and possessed during this interregnum (or as some thinke, before the death of Iosua) the Cities of Azotus, Askalon, Ekron and Hierusalem, which they burnt, and the Iebusites afterward reedified. They tooke also the Cities of Hebron, Debir, or Kiriathsepher, and Zephath, afterwards Horma. And although it beenot set downe in expresse words that any one person commanded in chiefe ouer the people, as Moses and Iosua did: yet it seemeth that Caleb was of greatest authoritie among them: and that hee with the aduice of o Phinees directed and ordered their warres. For if any thinke that they proceeded without a chiefe, the good successe which followed their undertakings witnesseth the contrarie. And it was Caleb euen while losus gouerned, as appeares los. 10.39. that propounded the attempt of Debir, to the rest of the Captaines: for the performance of which enterprise, he promised his Daughter Achfah: which hee performed to Othoniel his yonger brother after the conquest: whose behaviour in that service was such, as (next vnto the ordinance of God) it gaue him the greatest reputation among them, and may be effeemed the second cause of his preferment and election for their first Judge soone after. But while those of Juda made warre with their borderers, from whom they onely recoucred the mountainous Countries (for they so could not drive out the inhabitants of the Valley's, because they had Chariots lof gron) 1ud.1.19.

Therest of the Tribes sought also to enlarge and establish their owne Territories: in which warre they laboured with variable successe: for as the house of Tofeph recouered Bethel, or Luz, from the Hittites, so did the Amorites recouer from Dan all 1ud.1.25. the plaine Countries, and forst them to saue themselves in the Mountaines. This, when vpon the like occasion Triptolemus could not performe, fearing the furie of the people, he fled thence by Sea in a kinde of Gallev orlong Boat, which carried in her Prowea grauen or carued Serpent; who because he made exceeding great speed to returne and to relieue his people with Corne, from fomeneighbour Nation: it was fained by the Poets, that his Coach was carried by

Whether the times of these Kings which lived together with Othoniel, and after 20 him with the rest of the Judges and Kings of Ifrael and Juda, be precisely set downe, Icannot anow; for the Chronologers, both of the former and latter times, differ in many particulars, to examine all which would require the whole time of a long life: and therefore I defire to be excused, if in these comparisons I erre with others of betterindgement. For whether Eusebius and all that follow him, or his opposites (who makethemselues so conversant with these ancient Kings, and with the very yeere when they beganne to rule) have hit the marke of time of all other the farthest off and most defaced, I cannot but greatly doubt. First, because the Authorsthemselves, from whom the ancientest Chronologers have borrowed light, had nothing for the warrant of their owne workes, but coniecture: Secondly, because their owne 20 dilagreement and contention in those elder dayes, with that of our owne age among the labourers in times, is such, as no man among them hath yet so edified any mans vnderstanding, saue his owne, but that he is greatly distracted, after what patterne to erect his buildings. This disagreement is found not onely in the raignes of Heathen Kings and Princes; but euen in computation of those times which the indisputable authoritie of holy Scripture hath summed up, as in that of Abrahams birth; and after in the times of the ludges and the oppressions of Israel, in the times from the egression to the building of Salomons Temple, in the Persian Empire, the seventie Weckes, and in what not? Wherefoeuer the account of times may fuffer examination, the arguments 40 are opposite, and contentions are such, as for ought that I see, men have sought by so many wayes to vincouer the Sunne, that the dayes thereby are made more darke, and the clouds more condenst than before: I can therefore give no other warrant, than other men have done in these computations: and therefore that such and such Kings and Kingdomes tooke beginning in this or that yeere, I anow it no otherwise than as a borrowed knowledge, or at least as a private opinion: which I submit to better iudgements. This Othoniel is thought by Tostatus to have been the yonger brother of Caleb, for as much as in the booke of Indges he is twice called Othoniel the Sonne of Cenaz, Calebs yonger brother. Others doe rather interpret those wordes ( Calebs vonger brother) as if they fignified the meanest of his kinred. Indeed it is not like. ly, that Calebs Daughter should marrie with her owne Vncle; yet it followes not therefore that Otheriel should have beene the meanest of the kinred. Wherefore we may better thinke that he was the Nephew of Caleb, (2s some learned men ex. 10 pound it ) and as the very words of Scripture seeme to enforce. For Caleb was the Sonne of lephunneth, and Othoniel the sonne of Cenas, Calebs yonger brother; thatis, he was not brother to Caleb, but his yonger brothers forme, to whom it was not one ly lawfull, but commendable to marrie with his Coulin German Calebs daughten.

How long it was from the death of Island to the government of Othoriel, it can not be found: but it seemes to have been no short time. For many Warres were made in that space against the people of the Land. Leifb was then taken last thought) by the Danies; and the best writers are of opinion, that betweene the time of Iofus and Otheniel that civil warre brake out betweene the Beniamites and the rest of Israel, for the forcing to death of the Leustes wife. For it is written that in 30 those dayes there was no King in Ifrael, but every man did that which was good in his owne eyes. And as Iuda led the people against the Canaanites during the Interregnum, so was hee commanded to doe against Beniamin, even by the Lord God, whose direction they craued, as wanting a Judge to appoint what should beedon, which sheweth it to have been when Iofnah was dead, and before the government of Otheniel, especially considering, that all other times wherein they wanted Gouernours, were frent under fuch oppression of strangers, as would have given them no leave to have attended such a civill Warre, if their power had been as great, asit was in the menaging of this action, wherein they so weakned the body of their flate, by effusion of bloud, that in many ages they could not bring into the field such to numbers as formerly they had mustered against their bordering enemies.

make them feele the difference betweene his grace and his displeasure) these Heathen neighbouring Nations had an easie conquest ouer Ifrael: whom God himselfe exposed to those perils: within which they were so speedily folded vp. In this mis ferable estate they continued full eighteene yeeres under Eglon King of the Moabites. and his confederates. Yet as the mercies of God are infinite, he turned not his cares from their crying repentance: but raised up Ehud the sonne of Gera to deliver them: by which weake man, though maimed in his right hand, yet confident in the inflnesse of his quarrell, and fearing that the Israelites were too few in numbers to contend with the Head of those valiant Nations, heeresolued to attempt vpon the per- 20 fon of Eglen, whom if he could but extinguish, he affured himselfe of the following victorie: especially giving his Nation no time to reestablish their government or to choose a King to command, and direct them in the Warres. According to which refolution, Ebud went on as an Embassadour to Eglon, loaden with presents from the Ifraelites, as to appeale him, and obtaining private accesse vpon the pretence of some secret to be reuealed, he pierst his body with a Poniard, made of purpose with a double edge: and shutting the doores of his closet vpon him, escaped.

It may seeme that being confident of his good successe, hee had prepared the ftrength of Ifrael in readinesse. For suddenly after his returne, he did repasse Jordan. and invading the Territorie of Moab, overthrew their Armie confifting of 10000.33 able and firong men: whereof not any one escaped. After which victory, and that Samgar his Successour had miraculously slaine 600. Philistims with an Oxe goade: the Land and People of Ifrael lived in peace vnto the end of four clore yeeres from the death of Othoniel, which terme expired in the Worlds yeere 2601.

In the dayes of Ehud, Naomi with Elimelech her husband, and with her two sonnes. trauailed into Moab, and so the storie of Ruth is to be referred to this time. About the beginning of the four core yeeres which are given to Ehud, it was that Oreus King of the Molosians: otherwise Pluto, fiale Proferpina, as shee walked to gather flowers in the fields of Hipponium in Sieilia: or (according to Paulanias) by the River Cephilus, which elsewhere he calleth Chemer, if he meane not two distinct Rivers. This stealth 40 being made knowne to Pyrithous, with whom Hercules and Thefeus joyned themfelues, they agreed together to recour her: but Plato or Orcus (whom otherscall Aidonius) had (as they fay) a very huge Dogge, which fastened on Pyrithous, and tare him in pieces, and had also worried Theleus, but that Hercules speedily rescued him: and by strength tooke and mastered the Dogge Cerberus: whereof grew the fable of Hercules his delivering of Thefeus out of Hell. But Zezes, as I take it, hath written this storie somewhat more according to the truth. For These and Printhew, Saith he, attempted to ficale Proferpina Daughter to Aidonius, King of the Molossams, who had Ceres to Wife, the mother of Proferpina. Proferpina being a generall name also for all faire women. This purpose of theirs being knowne to aidonius, Theseus 50 and Pyrithens were both taken; and because Pyrithous was the principall in this conspiracie, and Thefew drawne on by a kinde of affection or inforcement, the one was giuen for foode to Aidonius his great Dog Cerberus, the other held prisoner, till Hercales by the infligation of Euriftheus delivered him by firong hand. The Molosis which which Stephanus writes with a fingle (S) were a people of Epirus inhabititing neere the Mountaines of Pindus: of which Mountaines Octa is one of the most famous, where Hercules burnt himselfe. The River of Acheron (which the Poets describe to be in Hell) riseth out of the Tame Hills. There is another Nation of the Molosi in The fall: but the le are neighbours to the Caftiopai, faith Plutareh in his Greeke que-

The rape of Orithya the Daughter of Ericthem, King of Athens, taken away by Boreus of Thrace, is referred to the time of Ehud. The Poets alcribe this rape to the North winde, because Thrace is situate North from Athens. In his time also Tereus to rauished Philomela, of which the sable was denised of her connection into a Nightingale. For Tereus hauing married her fifter Progne, conducting Philomela from Athens to fee her lifter, forft her in the passage, and withall cut out her tongue, that shee might not complaine; perswading Progne his Wife, that Philomela died in the mid-way: all which her brother in law's mercilesse behauiour towards her, Philomela expressed by her needle vpon cloth, and sent it Progne. In reuenge whereof Progne caused her onely sonne ligs to be cut in pieces, and set before Tereus her husband, so drest as it appeared to be some other ordinary soode: of which when he had caten his fill, thee caused his head, hands, and feete, to bee presented vnto him : and then fled away with such speede towards Athens where her Father Pandion yet lived, as 20 the Poets fained, that thee was turned into a Swallow. The place where it was performed, Strabo findes to bee Daulis in Phocis: and the Tombe of Tereus, Paulanias L. 9. hath built neere the Rockes Mergi, in the Territory of Athens. By which, as also by Pau, in Att. the name Daulis, where the fethings are supposed to have beene done (whence also Philomels is called Daulius ales) it appeares that it is true, which Thucydides notes by Thuc 1.2. way of digreffion in his Peloponne fian Warre, That this Tereus was not King in that which is now called Thracia, or in Odry/a, (as the Poets call him Odryfus) but that Phocis a Countrie in Greece not farre from Attica a Citie whereof is called Daulia, was in Pandions time inhabited by Thracians : of which this Tereus was King : whence Pandion, to have amitic with his neighbours, made him his sonne in law : as it is good 20 to beleeue, faith Thueydides, that Pandion King of Athens made that alliance with a neighbour King, from whom hee might have fuccour, rather than with any Terem, that should have held the Kingdome of Odrysa, which was greatly distant from thence. The occasion that the Poets chose a Swallow for Progneto be turned into, may seeme to have beene partly because, as Pausanias sayes; Daulide nec nidificant, nec habitant in tota circum regione Hirundines; As if a Swallow, remembring the wrong that was there done to her, and to her lifter, did for euer hate that place.

Necre this time Melampus (who is faid to have vnderstood the voyces of Birds and Beafts) flourished, being also effected for an excellent Physician. Hee restored to their former health the Daughters of Pretus King of the Argines, who (as the Paulla. 40 Poetsplease) were made mad by Iuno: and thinking themselves to be Kine, fled into Homer, odiff 12 the Woods, fearing to be constrained to the Plough: for in those Countries, where the ground was light, they did vie often to plough with Kine.

In the 47. yeere of Ehud, Tros began to raigne in Dardania, and gaue it his owne name; about which time Phemone the chiefe Priest of Spollo in Delphos, denised the Paulo Heroicall Verle.

Of the same date was Tantalus, King of Lydia: whom Eusebius makes King of Phrygia: and also of that part of which the people were anciently Meones. Of Tantalus was deuised the fable that some Poets have applied to the passion of lone: and function to the concrous that dare not inion his riches. Eusebins calls this Tantalus the unit 12. He was said to be the sonne of Inpiter: as some will haue it; because he had that Planet in his ascendent, betokening wisedome and riches. It is said that when he made a feast to the Gods, having nothing more precious: he caused his own Sonne to be flaine and dreft for the banquet : of whom Ceres ate part of one of the shoulders:

shoulders: whereby was signified that those men which seeke after Divine know. ledge, preferre nothing on earth before it: no not the care of their owne children of all else the most dearest. And where it was deuised, that hee had alwayes Water and Fruit offered to his lips, and yet suffered the torment of hunger and thirft, it was meant thereby, that though he abounded (by reason of his riches) in all delicacie of the world, yet his minde being otherwise and to higher desires transported, he enjoyed no pleasure at all by the reft. Of whom Ouid:

> Quarit aquas in aquis, & poma fugacia captat TANTALVS, hoc illi garrula lingua dedit.

Here TANTALV sin water seekes for water, and doth misse The fleeting fruit hee catcheth at : His long tongue brought him this.

This punishment, they say, was inflicted upon him, for that hee discourred the fecrets of the Gods: that is, because he taught wisedome and vertue to mortall men: which storic Cornelius Gallus hath elegantly express in Verse. Others expound this fable other wife and fay, That Tantalus, though he excelled in riches, yet being thirstie of more abundance, was neuer satisfied. Of whom Horace against couctous nesse:

> TANTALVS à labis sitiens fugientia captat Flumina quidrides? mutato nomine de te Fabula narratur.

The thirsting T ANTALV s doth catch at streames that from him see. Why laughest thou? the name but chang'd, the tale is told of thee.

Others conceive where it is fained of Tantalus, that he gave the Nectar and Ambrofia of the Gods to vaine and unworthy men, that he was therfore by them in that 20 fort punished. Of which Natalis out of Pindarus:

> Immortalitatem quod furatus, Coetaniis conuinis Nectar Ambrofiamá, dedit.

Because that stealing immortalitie, He did both Weltar and Ambrofiagiue Toguefts of his owneage to make them liue.

Whereby it was meant, that the secrets of Divinitie ought not to bee imparted to the vnpure Vulgar. For as the cleaned meates in a foule stomake, are therein corrupted, so the most high and reserved mysteries are often peruerted by an vncleane and defiled minde.

Mark.4.34. Greg.in Orat.de de Dee. 1.Cer.12.

To you it is given (faith Christ in MARKE) to know the mysterie of the Kingdome of God, but unto them that are without, all things bee done in parables. So is it said of him, that he expounded all things to his Disciples apart. And therefore doth Gregorie Nazianzene inferre vpon a place of S. PAVL: Qued fi PAVLO liquisset effari ea, querum ipli cognitionem calum tertium & vlque ad illud progresso suppeditavit, fortalle de Dec, nobis aliquid amplines constaret; If PAVI might have ottered the things, the knowledge 50 whereof the third heavens, and his going thither didbring unto him, peraduenture we might know somewhat more of God.

Pythagoras, faith Reuclin, thought it not the part of a wife man, Afino lyram expowere, ant mysteria, que ita reciperet, ve Sue tubam, & fidem graculus, & unquenta Scarabeus : quare silentium indixit discipulis, ne vulgo dininorum arcana patefacerent, que meditando facilius, quam loquendo apprehendantur; To fes an Affe to a harpe, or to learne mysteries: which he would handle as a Swine doth a trumpet, or a lay a viall, or Scarabies and uncleane flies foueraigne ointment. Wherefore he commanded filence to his disciples, that they should not disclose duine mysteries to the common fort, which are easier learnt by meditation than by babbling. And therefore did the Agyptians communicate their mysteries among their Priests in certaine Hieroglyphick letters, to the end that their fecrets might bee hidden from the Vulgar: and that they might bestow the more time in the contemplation of their couered meanings.

But to proceede with the contemporaries of Aod, or Ehnd, with him it is also said. that Tityus lived whom Apollo flew, because he sought to force his Mother Latona. Euphorion hath it thus, that Tityus was the Sonne of Elara, the Daughter of Orchomenus; which Elara being beloued of Jupiter, to avoid Juno's revenge, he hid Elara in the earth, where shee was delivered of Tityus: whose Mother dying, and himselfe therein nourished, he was therefore called the sonne of the earth. Paulanias speaking of the grave of this Gyant, affirmes that his body occupied the third part of a furlong. But Tibullus hath a louder lie of his stature out of Homer.

Hom.Od.11.

Nine furlongs stretcht lies TITYVs, who for his wicked deeds, The hungrie birds with his renewing liuer daily feeds.

This Strabo doth thus expound; that Apollo killing this cruell and wicked Tyrant of Panopea, a Citie in Phoes, it was fained by the Poets to the terrour of others, that he was still eaten in Hell by birds, and yet still lived, and had his stell renewed.

Admetus King of The Salie lived also in this Age, whom it is said that Apollo first 30 served as a Herd-man, and afterward for his excellent wit was by him advanced; but having flaine Hyacinthus, he croft the Hellefoont, and fled into Phrygia: where together with Neptune, hee was entertained by Laomedon, and got his bread by working in bricke, for building of the walls of Troy, not by making the bricks leape into their places by playing on his Harpe: according to him in Ouid, which

Thus the Poets: but others, that hee laboured with his hands, as hired in this worke. And that he also laboured at the building of the Labyrinth in Greece, all the Megariens witnesse, faith Paufanias.

In these daies also of Ehud, or (as some finde it) in the daies of Deborab, lived Perseus, the sonne of Inpiter and Danae, by whose Souldiers (as they sailed out of Peloponnefus, to seeke their adventure on Africa side) Medusa, the Daughter and Successor of Phoreus, being weakely accompanied as shee hunted, neare the Lake 10 Triton, was surprised and slaine: whose beautie, when Perfeus beheld, he caused her Tritona Lake of head to be imbalmed, and carried into Greece: the beautie whereof was such and Africa, which so much admired, and the beholders so assonished which beheld it, as thereof Pallantias. grew the fiction, that all that looked on Medufa's head, were turned into Didym, in pereg-Cecrops, the second of that name and 7. King of Athens, and Acrifius the 13. or

Also Bellerophon lived in this age, being the sonne of Glaucus, the sonne of Silphus:

Eufer.inchron. after Eufebius, the 14. King of the argines, began also their raignes, as it is said, in

ð. IIII.

Of DEBORA and her Contemporaries.

ReFter Ifrael had lived in peace and plentie to the end of these 80. yeares, they againe began to forget the giver of all goodnesse, and many of they againe began to forget the giver of all goodnesses, and many of those being worne out, which were witnesses of the former mileries, those of the former those of the first being worner those of the first being the second of the first being those of the first being th and of Gods deliverance by Ehud, and after him by Samgar, the rest began to returne to their former neglect of Gods commandements.

For as Plentie and Peace are the parents of idle securitie; so is securitie as fruitfull in to begetting and bringing forth both danger and subuersion: of which all estates in the world haue tafted by interchange of times. Therefore when their finnes were againe ripe for punishment, labin King of Hazor, after the death of Ehnd, inuaded the Territorie of Ifrael, and having in his service 900. yron Chariots, besides the rest of his forces, he held them in subjection twentie yeares, till it pleased God to raise vp Deborah, the Prophetesse, who incouraged Barac to leuie a force out of Nepthalim. and Zabulon, to incounter the Canaanites. That the men of Nepthalim were more forward than the rest in this action, it may seeme to have proceeded partly from the authoritic that Barac had among them, being of the same Tribe; and partly from their feeling of the common grieuance, which in them was more sensible, than in others, because Hazor and Haroseth the chiefe holds of Jahin, were in Nepthalim. So in the daies of Iepiha the Gileadites tooke the greatest care, because the Ammonites with whom the Warre was, pressed most vpon them, as being their borderers. Now as it pleased God by the left hand of Ehad to deliver Ifrael from the Moabite : and by the counsaile and courage of a woman, to free them from the yoke of Canaan, and to kill the valiant Sifera by Itel the Kenites wife: fo was it his will at other times, to workethe likegreat things by the weakest meanes. For the mightie Assirian Nabuchodonofor, who was a King of Kings, and reliftlesse, he ouerthrew by his owne imaginations, the causers of his brutish melancholy: and changed his matchlesse prideinto the base humilitie of a Beast. And to approue that he is the Lord of all 30 power, he sometime punisheth by inuisible strength, as when he slaughtered the Armie of Senacherib by his Angell: or as he did the Ægyptians in Moses time: sometime by dead bodies, as when he drowned Pharao by the waves of the Sea: and the Canaanites by haile-stones in the time of Iofua: sometimes by the ministerie of men. as when he ouerthrew the foure Kings of the East, Chedorlaomer, and his companions, by the houshold servants of Abraham. He caused the Moabites and Ammonites to set vpon their owne confederate the Armie of the Edomites; and having slaine them to kill one another in the fight of Ieho (aphat: and of the like to these a volume chron.2.20) of examples may be gathered. And to this effect did Deborah the Prophetesse speake vnto Barac in these wordes: But this journey that thou takest, shall not be for thine honour, Jud.4.9. 40 for the Lord shall sell Siser A into the handes of a Woman. In which victorie all the strength of the Canaanite labin fell to the ground, even to the last man: in the end of which Warre it seemeth that Iabin himselfe also perished, as appeareth by the last who inticed by Antes or Sthenobia, the wife of Pratus of the Argines, to accompanie her, but refuling it, shee accused him to her husband that he offered to force her: wherupon Pretus sent Bellerophon into Lycia, about some affaires of weight, between him and his Sonne in law lobates : gining fecret order to lobates to dispatch him:but Jobates thinking it dishonorable to lay violent hands on him, imployed him against Chimera, a Monster, vomiting or breathing fire. Now the Gods (as the report is) 10 pittying his innocencie, fent him the winged Horse Pegasus, spring vp of the bloud of Medufa, formerly flaine by the Souldiers of Perfeus in Africa, to transport him, a horse that none other could master or bridle but Minerua: voon which beast Bellerophon ouer-came Chimiera: and performed the other fernices given him in charge: which done, as he returned toward Lyeia, the Lyeians lay in ambush to have slaine him : but being victorious also ouer all those, he arrived to tobates in safetie! whom Jobates for his eminent vertues honoured, first with one of his Daughters: and afterward with his Kingdome: after which he grew fo infolent, as he attempted to flievp to heauen vpon his Pegafus: whose pride Jupiter disdaining, caused one of his stinging flies fo to vexe Pegafus, as he cast off Bellerophon from his back, into the Valley of 20 Cilicia, where he died blinde : of which burthen Pegafus being discharged (as the fable goeth) flew back to heaven : and being fed in Inpiters ownestable, Aurora begd him of Iupiter to ride on before the Sunne. This tale is diverfly expounded, as first by some, That it pleaseth God to relieue men in their innocent and vndeserued aduersitie, and to cast downe those which are too high minded according to that which is faid of Bellerophon: that when he was exposed to extreme hazard, or rather certaine death, he found both deliuerance and honor: but waxing ouer-proud and prefumptuous in his glorious fortunes, he was againe throwne downe into the extremitie of forrow, and euer-during miserie. Secondly by others, That vnder the name of Chimara, was meant a cruell Pyrate of the Lycians, whose ship had in her 30 prow, a Lyon, a Goate in the mid-ship, and a Dragon in the stearne, of which three beafts this Monster Chimara was faid to be compounded, whom Bellerophon pursued Plutar, in claris with a kinde of Galley of such swiftnesse, that it was called the slying Horse: to whom the inuention of failes (the wings of a ship) are also attributed. For though the Familie of Heber were inforced in that miserable time of subjection, to hold correspondencie with Iabin the Camaanite, yet when occasion offered them meanes, they witnessed their loue and faith to their ancient friends. Lastly, shee derideth the Mother of Silera who promised her some the victorie in her owne hopes : and fancied to her selfe, and described the spoiles both of Garments and Maidens by him gotten. For conclusion, shee dire-Aeth her praises and thankes to God only victorious.

From the beginning of labins oppression to the end or that peace, which Deborath and Barac purchased vnto Ifrael, there passed 40. yeares. In which time the King- 10 dome of Argos which had continued 544. yeares was translated to Mycana: The translation of this Kingdome Viues out of Paulanias writeth to this effect: After Danam, Lynceus succeeded in Argos, after whom the children of Abas the sonne of Lynceus divide the Kingdome: of which Acrisius being eldestheld Argos it selfe: Pratus his brother possest Epbyra or Corinib, and Tirynthos, and other Cities with all the Territorie towards the Sea, there being many monuments in Tirynthos, which wit-

Now Acrisius was foretold by an Oracle, that hee should be slaine by the sonne of his Daughter Danae: whereupon he caused her to be inclosed in a Tower, to the end that no man might accompanie her. But the Ladie being exceeding faire, it is 20 fained that Impiter turned himselfe into a golden shower: which falling into her lap, begather with child: the meaning whereof was, that some Kings sonne, or other Worthie man, corrupted her keepers with gold: and enioved her, of whom Perleus was borne; who when he grew to mans estate, either by chance (faith Ctesias) or in shewing his grand-father the invention of the discus, or leaden ball, slew him vnwillingly. After this Perfeus, to avoide the infamie of Patricide in Argos, changed Kingdomes with his Vncle Pratus: and built Myeana. This imprisonment of Danae, So. phoeles reporteth otherwise: and that shee was inclosed in a brasen vault, vnder the Kings Hall with her Nurse and Keepers. Then the Lord by his Angell stirred up Gidcon the sonne of Josph, afterward called lerubbaal; whose feare and vinwillingnesse, and how it pleased God to hearten him in his enterprize, it is both largely and precifely fer down in the holy Scriptures: as also now it pleased God by a few select persons; namely 300; out of 32000; men, to make them know that he only was the Lord of Hosts; Each of these 300, by ou deens appointment carried a trumpet, and light in a pitcher, instruments of more terrour than force, with which he gaue the great Armie of their enemies an alarum: who hearing foloud a noise, and seeing (at the crack of so many pitchers broken) fo many lights about them, esteemed the Armie of Ifrael to be infinite, and strucken with a sodaine seare, they all fled without a stroke firicken: and were slaughtered in to great numbers: two of their Princes being made prisoners and slaine. In his returne the Ephramites began to quarrell with Gideon, because he made warre without their affistance, being then greedie of gløtie, the victorie being gotten: who (if Gideon had failed and fallen in the enterprise) would no doubt have held themselves happie by being neglected. But Gideon appealing them with a mild answere, followed after the enemie, in which pursuit being tired with trauaile, and wearie euen with the flaughtering of his enemies, he defired reliefe from the inhabitants of Succests, to the end, that (his men being refreshed) he might ouer-take the other two Kings of the waidianites: which had saued themselves by flight. For they were source Princes of the Nations, which had inuaded and wasted Ifrael: to wit, Oreb and Seeb, which 20 were taken already, and Zebah and Salmunna which fled.

Gideon being denied by them of Succoth, fought the like reliefe from the inhabitants of Penuel, who in like fort refused to succour him. To both of these places he threatned therefore the reuenge, which in his returne from the profequation of the other two Princes, he performed: to wit, that hee would teare the flesh of those of Succoth with Thornes and Briars, and destroy the Inhabitants and Citie of Pennel: Now why the people of these two Cities should refuse reliefe to their bretheren the I/raelues, especially after so great a victorie: if I may presume to make coniecture; it seemes likely, first that those Cities set ouer tordan, and in the way of all inualions, to be made by the Moabites, and Ammonites, and Midianites, into Ifrael, had either 30 made their owne peace with those Nations, and were not spoiled by them: or else they knowing that Zeba and Salmunna were escaped with a great part of their armie, might feare their reuenge in the future. Secondly, it may be laid to the condition and dispositions of these men: as it is not rate to finde of the like humour in all ages. For there are multitudes of men, especially of those which follow the warre, that both enuie and maligne others, if they performe any praise-worthy actions, for the honour and safetie of their owne Countrie, though themselues may bee assured to beare a part of the smart of contrarie successe. And such malitious hearts can rather be contented that their Prince and Countrie should suffer hazzard, and want, than that fuch men as they mislike, should be the authors or actors of any glorie or good 49

Now Gideon, how or wherefoeuer it were that hee refreshed himselfe and his wearie and hungrie Souldiers, yet he followed the opportunitie, and pursued his A place in Ba- former victorieto the vttermost : and finding Zebah and Salmunna in Karkor (suspe-Aing no farther attempt vpon them) he againe surprised them, & slaughtered those 15000. remaining: having put to the sword in the former attempt 120000. and withall he tooke Zebah and Salmanna prisoners: whom because themselves had exequuted Gideons bretheren before at Tabor, he caused them both to be slaine: or (as it is written) at their owne request slew them with his owne hands: his Son whom he first commanded to doeit, refusing it, and in his returne from the consummation 30 of this meruailous victorie, he tooke reuenge of the Elders of Succoth, and of the Citizens of Penuel: forgiuing no offence committed against him:either by strangers or by his bretheren the I/raelites. But such mercy as he shewed to others, his owne children found foon after his death, according to that which hath been faid before. The debts of crueltie and mercie are neuer left vusatisfied: for as he slew the 70. Elders of Succeth, with great and vnusuall torments, so were his owne 70. sonnes al, but one. murthered by his owne bastard Abimilee. The like Analogie is observed by the Rabbines, in the greatest of the plagues which God brought vpon the Leyptians, who haning caused the male children of the Hebrewes to bee slaine, others of them to bee cast into the river and drowned: God rewarded them even with the like measure. destroying their owne first borne by his Angell, and drowning Pharaoh and his armie in the red sea. And hereof a world of examples might bee given, both out of the Scriptures and other Histories.

In the end so much did the people reverence Gideon in the present for this victorie, and their owne deliuerance, as they offered him the Soueraignetie ouer them, Ind. 8.242 and to establish him in the Gouernment; which hee refused, answering; I will not reigne ouer you, neither shall my childe reigne ouer you, but the Lord shall, &c. But he defired the people that they would bestow on him the golden eare-rings, which every man had gotten. For the Ismaelites, neighbours, and mixt with the Midianites, vied to weare them: the waight of all which was a thousand and seuen hundred Shekels of gold, which makes of ours 2380.l. if we follow the account of the Shekle vulgar. Exod. 28. And because he converted that gold into an Ephod, a garment of gold, blue silke, pur- Indg.8.28. ple, scarlet, and fine linnen, belonging to the High Priest only, and set up the same in 20 his owne Citie of Ophra or Ephra, which drew I/rael to Idolatrie, the same was the

There was another kinde of Ephod belides this of the High Priefts, which the Lenites vied, and so did Dauid when he daunced before the Arke: and Samuel, while he was yet young, which was made of linnen onely.

Now if any man demaund how it was possible for Gideon with 300. men to destroy 120000. of their enemies, and afterward 15000. which remained, wee may remember that although Gideon with 300. gaue the first alarme, and put the Midianites in rout and disorder : yet all the rest of the armie came into the slaughter, and pursuite, for it is written; That the men of Ifrael being gathered together out Ind. e.g. vizza 30 of Nephtalie, and out of Asher, and out of Manasse, pursued after the Midianites: for this armie Gideon left in tents behinde him, when hee went downe to view the armie of his enemies, who with the noyle of his 300. trumpets came after him to

There lived with Gideon, Ageus, the sonne of Pandion, who reigned in Athens: Eurishens King of Mycena: Atreus and Thyestes the sonnes of Pelops, who bare dominion over a great part of Peloponnesis, and after the death of Euristheus, the Kingdome of Mycena fell into the hand of Atreus. This is that Atreus, who holding his brother in icalousie, as an attempter, both of his wife and crowne, slew the children of Thyestes, and causing their flesh to be drest, did therewith feast their fa-40 ther. But this crueltie was not vnreuenged. For both Atreus and his sonne Agamemnon were flaine by a base sonne of Thyestes, year the grand-children, and all the

In Gideons time also those things were supposed to have beene done, which are written of Dadalus and Icarus. Dadalus, they say, having flaine his Nephew Attalus, fled to Mines, King of Crete, for succour, where for his excellent workemanship he was greatly esteemed, having made for Minos a Labyrinth, like vnto that of Agypt. Afterward he was faid to have framed an artificiall Cowe for Pasiphae the Queene, that she, being in loue with a faire Bull, might by putting her selfeinto the Cow, satisfie her lust, a thing no lesse vnnatural than incredible, had not that shameso leffe Emperour Domitian exhibited the like beaftly spectacle, openly before the people of Rome, in his Amphitheater, of purpole, as may seeme, to verifie the old fable. For so it appeares by those verses of Martial, wherein the flattering Poet magnifieth the abominable shew, as a goodly Pageant, in those vitious times.

Burconcerning that which is reported of Pasiphae, Servius makes a leffe vnhonest construction of it, thinking that Dadaluswas of her counsell, and her Pandar for the enticing of a Becretarie of Minos called Taurus, which fignifieth a Bull, who begat her with child, and that the being delivered of two fonnes, the one refembling Tanrus, the other her husband Minos, it was fained that the was delivered of the Mon- 10 22.6.5.11 few airnoting, halfen Mittand halfen Bull. But this practife being discouered, and Dedaus appointed to be flaine, he fled out of Crete to Cocalus King of Secil in which paffage he made fuch expedition, as it was fained that he fallioned wings for himfelfe and his loane to transport them. For whereas Minos pursued him with boats which had oares onely, Dedalus framed failes both for his owne boate, and for his formes, by which he outwent those that had him in chase. Vpon which new inuention, Icard bearing himselfe overbold, was overborne and drowned.

It is also written of Dadilus, that he made Images that could move themselves, and goe, because he cartied them with legs, armes and hands, whereas those that preceded him, could onely present the bodie and head of those men, whom they 20 cared to counterfait, and yet the workemanship was esteemed very rare. But Plutarke, who had seene some of those that were called the Images of Dadalus, found them exceeding rude.

With Gideon also flourished Linus the Theban, the sonne of Apollo, and Terpsichore, who instructed Thamaris, Orpheus, and Bercules. Hee wrote of the Creation, of the Sunne and Moones counferand of the generation of living Creatures, but in the end he was flaine by Hermiles his scholler with his owne harpe.

Againe, prthis age those things spoken of sphinx and Oedipus, are thought to have beene performed. This sydims being a great robber by sea and land, was by the Corinthian Armie, led by Oedipus, ouercome. But that which was written of her 39 propounding of riddles, to those whom shee mastered, was meant by the rockie and vnaccessible mountaine neere Thebes, which she defended, and by Oedipus dissoluing her probleme his victorie ouer her. She was painted with wings, because exceeding Swift, and with the bodie of a Lyon for her crueltie. But that which Palaphatus reports of sphere, were more probable, did not the time disproue it, for he calls her an Amizonile, and the wife of Cadmus: who when by her help he had cast Draco ont of Thebes (neglecting her) he married the lifter of Draco, which Sphinx taking in despightfull part, with her owne troope shee held the mountaine by Thebes, from whence the continued a tharpe warre vpon the Thebans, till by Oedipus ouerthrown. About this time did Mines thrust his brother out of Crete, and held sharpe warre 40 with the Megarians, and Athenians, because his sonne Androgeus was slaine by them. He possest himselfe of Megara, by the treason of Seylla, daughter of Nisus the King. He was long Master of the sea, and brought the Athenians to the tribute of delivering him every years feuen of their sonnes; which tribute Thefeus released, as shall bee shewed when I come to the time of the next Judge Thala. In the end hee was flaine at Camerinus or Camerus in Sicilea, by Cocalus the King, while he purfued Dadalus and was effeemed by fome to be the first law giver to those Ilands.

To this time are referred many deeds of Hercules, as the killing of Antaus the gyant, who was faid to have 60, and odde cubites of length, which though Plutarke doth confirme, reporting that there was such a bodie found by Sertorius the Roman, 10 in Lybia, where Hercules flew Antaus: yet for my felfe. I thinke it but a lowd lie. That antaus was of great strength, and a cunning wrestler, Ensebius affirmeth: and because hee cast so many mento the ground, hee was fained to beethe sonne of the Earth. ### Of the expedition of the Argonauts.

Bout the cleuenth yeere of Gideon, was that famous expedition of the Argonauts: of which many fabulous discourses have beene written, the fumme of which is this.

Pelias the sonne of Neptune, brother by the mothers side to Ason, who was Iafons father, reigning in Ioleus a towne of Theffalie, was warned by the Oracle of Apollo to take heede of him that ware but one shoe. This Relias afterward facrificing to Neptune, inuited Islan to him, who comming halfily, lost one shoe in passing ouer a brooke: whereupon Peliss demaunded of him what course he would take (supposing he were able) against one of whom an oracle should aduise him to take heede: to which question when Iason had briefly answered, that he would fend him to Colchos, to fetch the golden fleece, Pelias immediatly commaunded him to vndertake that service. Therefore Island prepared for the voyage, having 20 ashippe built by Argus, the sonne of Phryxus, by the Counsell of Pallas: wherein hee procured all the brauest men of Greece to faile with him : as Typhis the Master of the shippe, Orpheus the famous Poet, Castor and Pollux the sonnes of Tyndarus, Telamon and Peleus, sonnes of Acus, and fathers of Aiax and Achilles, Hercules, Theseus, Zetes and Calais the two winged sonnes of Boreas, Amphiaraus the great Southsayer, Meleager of Calidon that flew the great wilde boare: Afcalaphus and Ialmenus or Almenus the sonnes of Mars, who were afterwards at the last warre of Troy, Laertes the father of Vlyffes, Atalanta a warlike virgine, Idas and Lynceus the sonnes of Aphareus, who afterwards in fight with Castor and Pollux slew Castor, and wounded Pollux, but were flaine themselves: Lynceus by Pollux, Idas by Iupiter with 30 lightning.

These and many other went with Iason in the ship drgo: in whose prowe was atable of the beech of Dodona, which could speake. They arrived first at Lemnos; the women of which iland, having flaine all the males, purpofing to lead an Amazonian life, were neuerthelesse contented to take their pleasure of the Argonauts. Hence they came to the Country about Cyzicus: where dwelt a people called Doliones: ouer whom then reigned one Cyzicus: who entertained them friendly: but it so fell out, that looking thence by night they were driven by contrary winds back into his port, neither knowing that it was the same Hauen, nor being knowne by the Doliones, to be the same men: but rather taken for some of their bordering ene-40 mies: by which meanes they fell to blowes, infomuch that the Argonautes flew the most part of the Doliones together with their King Cyzicus: which when by day light they perceived, with many teares they solemnized his funerall. Then departed they againe and arrived shortly in Mysia, where they left Hercules and Polyphemus the sonne of Elates, who went to seeke Hylas the darling of Hercules, that was raui-

Poliphemus built a towne in Mysia, called Cios, wherein he reigned. Hercules returned to Argos. From My sia the Argonautes failed into Bythinia, which then was peopled by the Bebryces, the auncient inhabitants of the Country, ouer whom Amycus the sonne of Neptune was then King. He beeing a strong man, compelled all stran-50 gers to fight with him, at whorlebattes, in which kinde of fight hee had flaine many, and was now himselfe slaine by Pollux. The Bebryces in reuenge of his death flew all vpon Pollux, but his companions rescued him, with great slaughter of the people. They sailed from hence to Salmy dessus, a towne in Thrace (somewhat out of their way) wherein Phineus a Soothfayer dwelt, who was blinde and vexed with the Harpyes. The Harpyes were faid to be a kinde of birds, which had the faces of women and foule long clawes, very filthy creatures, which when the table was furnished for Phineus, came flying in, and denouring or carrying away the greater part of the victuals, did so defile the rest, that they could not be endured. When therefore the Argonautes craued his aduise, and direction for their voyage: you shall doe well (quoth he) first of all to deliuer me from the Harpyes, and then afterwards to aske my Counfaile. Whereupon they caused the table to be couered, and meat set on; which was no sooner set downe, then that presently in came the Harpyes, and played their accustomed prancks: when Zetes and Calais the winged young men faw this, they drew their fwords, and purfued them through the ayre; fomefay 10 that both the Harpyes and the young men died of wearinesse in the flight, and purfuit. But Apollonius faith that the Harpyes did conenant with the youthes, to doe no more harme to Phineus, and were thereupon dismissed. For this good turne Phineus gaue them informations of the way, and aduertifed them withal of the daungerous rockes, called Symplegades, which by force of windes running together, did shut vp the passage: wherefore he willed them to put a pigeon before them into the pasfage: and if that passed safe, then to adventure after her: if not, then by no meanes to hazard themselues in vaine. They did so, and perceiving that the pigeon had only lost a piece of her taile, they observed the next opening of the rockes, and then rowing with all their might, passed through safe, onely the end of the poope was 20

From thence forward, (as the tale goeth) the Symplegades have flood still: for the Gods, say they, had decreed that after the passage of a shippe, they should be fixed. Thence the Argonautes came to the Mariandyni, a people inhabiting about the mouth of the river Parthenius, where Lyens the King entertained them courteoully. Here Idmon a Soothsayer of their company was flaine by a wild boare; also heere Typhis died : and Anexus vindertooke to steare the ship. So they passed by the river Thermodon, and mount Caucasus, and came to the river Phasis, which runnes through the land of Colchos. When they were entred the hauen, Iason went to Attes the King of Colchos, and told him the Commaundement of Pelias, and cause of 30 his comming, desiring him to deliuer the golden Fleece, which Letes, as the Fable goeth, promised to doe, if he alone would yoake together two brazen hooft bulls, and plowing the ground with them, fowe dragons teeth, which Minerua had given to him, being part of those which Cadmus did sowe at Thebes. These bulls were great and fierce, and breathed out fire : Vulcan had given them to Actes.

Whilest Isson was in a great perplexitie about this taske, Medas the daughter of Æetes, fell into a most vehement loue of him, so farre foorth, that being excellent in Magique, she came privily to him, promising her helpe, if he would assure her of his marriage. To this Iason agreed, and confirmed his promise by oath. Then gaue she to him a medicine wherewith she bad him to anoint both his bodie and his ar- 10 mour, which would preserve him from their violence: further she told him, that armed men would arise out from the ground, from the teeth which hee should fowe, and set vpon him. To remedie which inconvenience, shee bad him throw · stones amongst them as soone as they came vp thicke, whereupon they would fall together to blowes, in such wise that he might easily slay them. Iason followed her counsaile; whereto when the euent had answered, hee againe demaunded the Fleece. But Letes was so farre from approuing such his desire, that hee deuised how to destroy the Argonautes, and burne their ship, which Medea perceiuing, went to Isfon, and brought him by night to the Fleece, which hung vpon an Oke in the groue of Mars, where they say it was kept by a Dragon, that ne- 10 uer slept. This Dragon was by the Magique of Medea cast into a sleepe: so taking away the golden Fleece, she went with Iason into the ship Argo, having with her, her brother Absyrtus.

when Medea perceived to be at hand, the flew her brother, & cutting him in Dieces. the feattered his limbs in divers places, of which Letes finding some, was faige to fecke out the rest, and suffer his daughter to passe: the parts of his some hee buried in a place, which thereupon he called Tomi; the Greeke word ligni, eth Dintion. Afterwards he fent many of his subjects to seeke the ship Argo, threatning that if they brought not backe Medaa, they should suffer in her stead. In the meane while the Argonauts were driven about the Scas, and were come to the River Eridanus. which is Po in Italie.

Jupiter, offended with the flaughter of Abfortus, vexed them with a great tem-10 peft, and carried them they knew not whither 5 when they came to the Hands Absyrides, there the ship Argo (that there might want no incredible thing in this Fable) spake to them, and said, that the anger of Jupiter should not cease, till they came to Aufonia, and were clented by Circe, from the murther of Absyrtus. Now, they thereupon fayling betweene the coasts of Lybia, and Gadia, and passing through the sea of Sardinia and along the coast of Hetruria, came to the Ile of Aea, wherein Circe dwelt, who clenfed them. Thence they fayled by the coast of the Syrens, who fang to allure them into danger: but orpheus on the other fide fang so well that he flayed them. Only Butes swamme out vnto them, whom Venus rauished, and carried to Lylibaum in Smile to dwell. Hauling past the Syrens, they came betweene Soylla and Charpbilis, and the stragling rocks which seemed to cast out great store of flames and smoke. But Thetis and the Nereides, conneyed them fafe through at the appointment of Juno. So they coasted Sicilie where the beenes of the Sunne were, and touched at Corerra, the Hand of the Pheaces, where King Aleinous reigned. Meane while, the men of Colshos, that had beene sent by Letes in quest of the ship Argo, hearing no newes of it, and fearing his anger, if they fulfilled not his will, betooke themselues to new habitations: some of them dwelt in the mountaines of Coreyra, others in the Ilands Abfretides, and some comming to the Pheaces, there found the ship Argo, and demanded Medea of Alcinous : whereto Alcinous made answere, that if thee were not Infons 30 wife, they should have her, but if shee were alreadie married, he would not take her from her hulband. Arete, the wife of Alcinous, hearing this, married them : wherefore they of Colchos not daring to returne home, flayed with the Pheaces; so the Argonautes departed thence, and after a while came to Crete. In this Iland, Minos reigned, who had a man of braffe given to him (as some of the Fablers say) by Vulcan. This man had one veine in his bodie reaching from the necke to the heele, the end whereof was closed vp with a brazen naile, his name was Talus: his custome was torunne thrice a day about the Iland for the defence of it. When hee faw the thip Argo passe by , hee threw stones at it , but Medea with her Magique destroyed him. Some fay that shee flew him by potions, which made him mad; others, that 40 promiting to make him immortall, face drew out the naile that stopt his veine, by which meanes all his bloud ranne out, and he died; others there are that fay he was flaine by Paan, who wounded him with an arrow in the heele. From hence the Argonautes sayled to Agina, where they were faine to fight for fresh water. And lastly, from Eginathey sailed by Enbarand Locas home to Ioleos, where they arriued, having spent soure whole moneths in the expedition.

Somethere are that by this journey of Iason understand the mysterie of the Philosophers stone, called the golden Fleece, to which also, other super-fine Chymilis draw the tweluelabours of Hercules. Suidas thinkes that by the golden Fleece, was meant a booke of Parchment, which is of sheepe-skin, and therefore called golden, 50 because it was taught therein how other metalls might bee transmuted. Others would fignifie by Iafon, wisdome, and moderation, which ouer-commethall perils: but that which is most probable is the opinion of Derailus, that the storie of such a passage was true, and that Iason with the rest went indeed to rob Colchos, to which they might arrive by boate. For not farre from Cancas fus there are certaine steepe falling torrents which wash downe many graines of gold; as in many other parts of the world, and the people there inhabiting vie to fee many fleeces of wooll in those descents of waters, in which the graines of gold remaine, and the water passeth through, which Strabo witneffeth to be true. The many rocks, straits, sands, and Currents, in the passage betweene Greece and the bottome of Pontus, are Poetically conuerted into those fierie bulls, the armed men rising out of the ground, the Dragon cast asleepe, and the like. The man of brasse, the Syrens, Seylla and Charybdie, were other hazards and aduentures which they fell into in the Mediterran fea, difguised, as the rest, by Orpheus, under poeticall moralls : all which Homer afterward vsed (the man of brasse excepted) in the description of Vlyses his travailes, on the 10 fame Inland-feas.

Of ABIMELECH, THOLAH, and IAIR, and of the Lapytha, and of THESEVS, HYPPOLYTVS, &c.

Free the death of Gideon, Abimeleeb his base sonne begotten on a Concubine of the Sechemites, remembring what offers had been made to his father by the people, who defired to make him and his their 20 perpetuall Princes; and as it seemeth, supposing (notwithstanding his fathers religious modestie) that some of his brethren might take on them the Soueraigntie, practifed with the inhabitants of Sechem (of which his mother was natiue) to make election of himselfe, who being easily moued with the glorie, to have a King of their owne, readily condescended; and the better to enable Abimelech, they bortowed 70. pleces of filuer of their Idoll Baalberish, with which treasure he hyreda company of look and desperate vagabonds, to affish his first detestable enterprise, to wit, the slaughter of his 70. brethren, the sonnes of Gideon, begotten on his wives, of which he had many, of all which none escaped but Iotham the youngest, who hid himselfe from his present furie: all which hee executed on 20 one flone, a crueltie exceeding all that hath beene written of in any age. Such is humane ambition, a monster that neither feareth God (though all-powerfull, and whose reuenges are without date and for euerlasting) neither hath it respect to nature, which laboureth the preservation of every being: but it rageth also against her, though garnished with beautie which neuer dieth, and with loue that hathno end. All other passions and affections, by which the soules of men are tormented, are by their contraries oftentimes relisted or qualified. But ambition, which begetteth enery vice, and is it selfe the childe and darling of Saran, looketh only towards the ends by it selfe set downe, forgetting nothing ( how fearefull and inhumanesoeuer) which may serue it : remembring nothing, what soeuer instice, pietie, right or 40 religion can offer and alleadge on the contrary. It ascribeth the lamentable effects of like attempts, to the errour or weakenesse of the undertakers, and rather praiseth the aduenture than feareth the like successe. It was the first sinne that the world had, and began in Angels: for which they were cast into hell, without hope of redemption. It was more auncient than man, and therefore no part of his naturall corruption. The punishment also preceded his creation, yet hath the Deuill which felt the smart thereof, taught him to forget the one as out of date, and to practife the other, as befitting enery age, and mans condition.

Iotham, the youngest of Gideons sonnes, having escaped the present perill, sought by his best persuasions to alienate the Seebemites, from the assisting of this merciles 50 tyrant, letting them know, that those which were vertuous, and whom reason and religion had taught the safe and happie estate of moderate subjection, had refused to receive as vnlawfull, what others had not power to give, without direction from the King of Kings: who from the beginning (as to his owne peculiar people) had appointed them by whom and how to bee gouerned. This hee taught them by the Oline, which contented it selfe with it's fatnesse, the Figge tree with sweetnesse, and the Vine with the good inyce it had: the Bramble onely, who was most base, cut downe all the rest, and accepted the Soueraigntic. He also foretold them by a Propheticall spirit; what should be fall them in the end, and how a fire should come out of the Bramble, and confume the Cedars of Libanon.

Now (as it is an casie matter to call those men backe whom rage without right led on ) Gail the sonne of Ebed withdrew the Citizens of Sechem, from the service of Abimelech: who therefore after some assaults entred the place, and mastered it: 10 and in conclusion fired the towne, wherein their Idoll Baalbersth was worshipped. and put all the people of all forts to the flaughter. Lattly, in the affault of the Cattle or Tower of Teber, himselfe was wounded in the head with a stone thrown ouer the wall by a woman, and finding himselfe mortally brused, hee commaunded his owne page to pierce his bodie, thereby to avoid the dishonour of being slaine by so While Abimelech vsurped the Gouernment, the Lapetha and Centaures made warre against the Thebanes. These Nations were descended of Apollo, and were the first in those parts that deuised to mannage horses, to bridle and to sit them: in somuch as when they first came downe from the mountaines of Pindus, into the plaines, those 20 which had neuer scene horsemen before, thought them creatures compounded of which had neuer icene notioned before, thought them creatures compounded of men and horses; so did the Mexicans when Ferdinando Cortes the Spaniard first inuade incredib. ded that Empire.

After the death of Abimelech, Thola of Iffachar gouerned Ifrael 23. yeeres, and after him Iair the Gileadite 22. yeeres, who scerneth to bee descended of Iair the sonne of Manafe, who in Moses time conquered a great part of Gilead, and called the same after his owne name, Haboth Lair. For to this Lair there remained thirtie of those Cities, Num. 12.41. which his ancester had recourred from the Amorites. Of these Iudges, because there is nothing else written, it is an argument that during all their times, Ifrael lived with- 1udg.10. out disturbance and in peace.

When lair judged Israel, Priamus beganne to reigne in Troy, who at fuch time as 2901. Hercules lacked Ilium, was carried away captine with his lifter Helione into Greece, and being afterward redeemed for ransome, hee rebuilt and greatly strengthened, and adorned Troy; and so farre inlarged his Dominions, as hee became the supreme Lordin effect of all Asia the lesse. He married Heenba the daughter of Cisseus King in This. of Thrace, and had in all (faith Cicero) fiftie fonnes, whereof seventeene by Hecuba, of whom Paris was one; who attempting to recouer his aunt Hesione, tooke Helena the wife of Menelaus the cause of the warre which followed.

Theleus the tenth King of Athens began likewise to reigne in the beginning of Jair: some writers call him the sonne of Neptune and Athra: but Plutark in the Storie of 40 his life findes him begotten by Ageus, of whom the Grecian sea betweene it and Asia the leffe tooke name. For when Minos had mastered the Athenians, so farre as he forst them to pay him scuen of their sonnes every yeere for tribute, whom hee inclosed within a Labyrinth, to bee devoured by the monster Minotaur : because belike the sonnes of Taurus, which he begat on Pasiphae the Queene, had the charge of them: Among these seven Theseus thrust himselfe, not doubting by his valour to deliner the rest, and to free his Countrie of that slaueric occasioned for the death of Androgeus,

And having possess himselfe of Ariadnes affection, who was Minos daughter, hee received from her a bottome of thred, by which hee conducted himselfe 50 through all the crooked and inextricable turnings of the Labyrinth, made in all like . that of the Citie of Crocodiles in Agapt; by meane whereof having flaine Minotaur, hee found a readie way to returne. But whereas his father Ageus had giuen order, that if hee came backe with victorie and in safetie, hee should vie a white faile in figne thereof, and not that mournefull blacke faile, vnders which

which they left the port of Athens. This instruction beeing either forgotten or neglected, Ageus descrying the shippe of Theseus with a blacke saile. cast himselfe ouer the rockes into the Sea, afterward called of his name &-

One of the first famous actes of Thefeus, was the killing of Seyron, who kept a pas. fage betweene Megara and the Peloponnesian Isthmos, and threw all whom hee maftered into the Sea, from the high rockes. Afterward hee did the like to Cercyon, by wreftling, who vied by that Arte to kill others. Hee also ridde the Country of Procrustes, who vied to bend downe the strong limbes of two trees, and fastened by cordes such as hee tooke, part of them to one and part to the other bough, and 10 by their springing backe tarethem asunder. So did hee roote out Periphetes and other mischieuous theeues and murtherers. Hec ouerthrew the armie of the Amazons, who after many victories and vaftations, entred the Territoric of Athens. Thefew having taken their Queene Hyppolita prisoner, begat on her Hippolytus; with whom afterward his mother in law Phadra, falling in loue, and hee refuling to abuse his fathers bed, Phedra perswaded Thefew that his sonne offered to force her: after which it is fained, that Thefeus befought Neptune to reuenge this wrong of his fonnes, by some violent death. Weptune taking a time of aduantage, sent out his Sea-Calues, as Hippelytus passed by the sea shore, and so affrighted his horses, as cafling the Coach ouer, hee was (by being intangled therein) torne in pieces. Which 20 miscrable and vndeserned destinie, when Phadra had heard of, shee strangled herselfe. After which it is fained, that Diana entreated Asculapius to set Hippolytus his piecestogether, and to restore him to life: which done, because hee was chaste, thee led him with her into Italie, to accompanie her in her hunting, and

It is probable that Hippolytus, when his father fought his life, thinking to escape by Sea, was affronted thereat, and received many wounds in forcing his passage and escape; which wounds As (culapius, to wir, some skilfull Phisician, or Chirurgion healed againe, after which hee past into Italy, where he lived with Diana, that is, the life of a hunter, in which hee most delighted. But of these ancient prophane Stories, 30 Plutarch faith well, that as Cosmographers in their descriptions of the world, where they finde many vast places whereof they know nothing, fill the same with strange beaftes, birdes, and fiftes, and with Mathematicall lines, to doe the Gracian Historians and Poets imbroder and intermixe the tales of ancient times, with a world of fictions and fabulous discourses. True it is, that Thefeu did many great things in imitation of Hercules, whom hee made his patterne, and was the first that gathered the Athenians, from being disperst in thinne and ragged villages: in recompense whereof, and for deniling them lawes to line under, and in order, hee was by the beggerly, mutable, and vngratefull multitude, in the end banished. Some say per Ostracismum, by the Lawe of Lottes, or names written on shelles, which was a de-20

Hec stole Helen (as they say) when she was 50. yeeres olde, from Aphidna, which Ciric Castor and Pollux ouerturned, when they followed after Thelew to recover their lifter. Erasistratus and Pausanias write that Theseus begat her with child at Arges, where thee crected a Temple to Lucina: but her age makes that tale vulikely to bee true, and fo doch Ouid, Nontamen ex facto fructum tulit ille petitum, &c. The rape Eusebius findes in the first of lair, who governed Ifrael 22. yeeres, to whom succeeded lephta or lepte fixe yeeres, to whom Ibzan who ruled scuen yeeres, and then Habidon eight yeere : in whose time was the fall of Troy. So as, if Theseus had a childe by her in the first of lair, (at which time we must count her no lesse so than fifteene yeere olde, for the women did not commonly beginne fo young as they doe now) shee was then at least two and sistie yeere olde at the destruction of Trey: and when shee was stollen by Paris eight and thirtie: but herein the Chronologers doe not agree. Yet Eusebius and Bunting with Halicarnasseus

ø. VII. Of the warre of Thebes which was in this age.

N this age was the warre of Thebes, the most ancient that ever Greeke Poet or Historian wrote of : Wherefore the Roman Poet Lucretius, affirming (as the Epicures in this point held trucky against the Peripateticks) that the world had a beginning, vigeth them with this – Si nulla fuit genitalis origo Rerumá, & mundi, semperque aterna fuère, Cur (upra bellum Thebanum, & funera Troia, Non alias alij quoque res cecimere poeta?

If all this world had no originall, But things have ever beene as now they are: Before the fiege of Thebes or Troyes last fall, Why did no Poet fing some elder warre?

It is true that in these times Greece was very saluage, the inhabitants being often to chaced from place to place, by the captaines of greater Tribes: and no man thinking the ground whereon hee dwelt his owne longer than hee could hold it by strong hand. Wherefore merchandize and other intercourse they vsed little, neither did they plant many trees, or fow more corne than was necessarie for their suftenance. Money they had little or none, for it is thought that the name of money was not heard in Greece, when Homer did write, who measures the valew of gold and braffe by the worth in cattell; saying that the golden armour of Glaucus, was worth 100. beeues, and the copper armour of Diomedes worth nine.

Robberies by land and fea were common and without shame, and to steale horses or kine was the vsuall exercise of their great men. Their townes were not so many, whereof those that were walled were very few, and not great. For Mycena the principall Citie in Peloponnelus was a very little thing, and it may well be thought that the reft were proportionable: briefly, Greece was then in her infancie, and though in some small townes of that halfe Ile of Peloponnessus, the inhabitants might have enjoyed quietnesse within their narrow bounds; as likewise did the Athenians because their Country was so barren, that none did care to take it from them : yet that the land in generall was very rude, it will eafily appeare to such as consider, what Thurydides the greatest of their Historians hath written to this effect, in the præface to his Historie. Wherefore, as in the selatter times, idle Chroniclers vie when they want good matter, to fill whole bookes with reports of great frosts, or dry summers, and other such things which no man cares to reade, so did they who spake of Greece in her beginnings, remember onely the great flouds which were in the times of Ogyges, and Deusalion: or else rehearse fables of men changed into birds, of strange monsters, of adulterie committed by their Gods, and the mightic men which they begat, without writing ought that sauou- 10 red of humanitic before the time of the warre of Thebes: the briefe whereof

OEdipus the sonne of Laius King of Thebes, having beene cast foorth when hee was an infant, because an Oracle foretolde what evill should come to passe by him, did afterwards in a narrow passage contending for the way, slay his owne father, not knowing either then or long after, who hee was. Afterward hee became King of Thebes, by marriage of the Queene locasta, called by Homer Epicaste: on whom, not knowing her to bee his mother, hee begat two sonnes, Eteocles and Polynius; But when in processe of time, finding out by good circumstances, who were his parents, hee vinderstood the gricuous murther and incest hee had committed, he an tore out his owne eyes for griefe, and left the Citie. His wife and mother did hang her selfe. Some say, that OEdipus having his eyes pulled out, was expelled Thebes, bitterly curling his sonnes, because they suffered their father to bee cast out of the Towne, and ayded him not. Howfoeuer it were, his two Sonnes made this agreement, that the one of them should reigne one yeere, and theother another yeere; and so by course rule interchangeably. But this appointment was ill obserued. For when Polynices had after a yeeres Gouernment resigned the Kingdome to his brother: or (according to others) when Eteocles had reigned the first yeere, hee refused to give over the rule to Polynices. Hereupon Polynices fled vnto Arges, where Adrassus the sonne of Talaus then reigned, vnto whose pa- 10 lace comming by night, hee was driven to feeke lodging in an out-house, on the

There hee met with Tydeus the sonne of OEneus, who was fled from Calydon: with whom strining about their lodging, hee fell to blowes. Adrasus hearing the noyse, came foorth and tooke vp the quarrell. At which time perceining in the shield of Tydeus a Bore, in that of Polynices a Lyon, heeremembred an olde Oracle, by which hee was aduised to give his two daughters in marriage, to a Lyon and a Bore: and accordingly hee did bestow his daughter Argia vpon Tydeus, and Dipyle vpon Polynices, promiting to reftore them both to their Countries. To this purpose leuving an armie, and affembling as many valiant Captaines as hee could draw 40 to follow him, hee was desirous among others to carrie Amphiaraus the sonne of Oicleus a great Soothfayer, and a valiant man, along with him. But Amphiaran, who is faid to have foreseene all things, knowing well that none of the Captaines should escape, saue onely Adrassus, did both vtterly resuse to bee one in that expedition, and perswaded others to stay at home. Polynices therefore dealt with Eriphyle the wife of Amphiarans, offering vnto her a very faire bracelet, vpon condition that shee should cause her husband to assist him. The Soothsayer knowing what should worke his destinie, forbad his wife to take any gift of Polynices. But the bracelet was in her eye so precious a iewell, that she could not refuse it. Therefore whereas a great controuerfie, betweene Amphiaraus and Adrassus, was by way so of compromile put vnto the decision of Eryphile, either of them being bound by solemne oath to stand to her appointment: shee ordered the matter so, as a woman should, that loued a bracelet better than her husband. Hee now finding that it was more easie to foresee than avoide destinie, sought such comfort as reuenge might affoord, giuing in charge to his sonnes, that when they came to full age, they should kill their mother and make strong warre voon the Thebanes.

Now had Adrastus affembled all his forces, of which, the feuen chiefe leaders were, himselfe, Amphiaraus, Capaneus, and Hippomedon (in steade of whom some name Mecifleus) all Argines, with Polynices the Theban, Tydeus the Etolian, and Parthenopeus the Areadian fonne of Meleager and Atalanta. When the armie came to the Nemean wood, they met a woman whom they defired to helpe them to some water, the having a child in her armes, laid it downe, and led the Argines to a to foring : but ere shee returned, a Serpent had flaine the childe. This woman was Hyplipyle the daughter of Theas the Lemnian, whom shee would have saved when the women of the Ileslew all the males by conspiracie, intending to lead an Amazonian life. For fuch her pietie, the Lemnian wives did fell her to Pyrates, and the Pyrates to Lycurgus Lord of the Country about Nemea, whose yong sonnes Opheltes or Archemorus, she did nurse, and lost as is shewed before. When vpon the childs death shee hid herselse for seare of her master, Amphiaraus told her sonnes where they should finde her: and the Argines did both kill the Serpent which had slaine the childe, and in memorie of the chaunce, did inflitute folemne funerall games called Nemeso, wherein Adrastus wanne the prize with his swift horse Arion, Tydeus no with whorlebats, Amphiaraus atrunning and quoiting, Poly nies at wrealing, Parthenopaus at shooting, and one Laodocus in darting. This was the first institution of the Nemean games, which continued after famous in Greece for very many ages. There are, who thinke that they were ordained in honour of one Opheltsu, a Lacedemonian. Some fay by Hercules, when hee had flaine the Nemean Lyon : but the common opinion agrees with that which is here fet downe.

From Nemes the Argines marching onwards, arrived at Citheron, whence Tydeus was by them fent Embassadour to Thebes, to require of Eteocles the performance of Couchants betweene him and Polynices. This message was nothing agreeable to Eteodes, who was throughly resoluted to holde what he had, as long as here could: 30 which Tydeus perceiving and intending partly to get honour, partly to trie what mettle was in the Thebans, hee made many challenges, and obtained victoric in all of them, not without much enuie and malice of the people, who laide fiftie men in ambush to intercept him at his returne to the armie, of which fiftie hee slewe all but one, whom hee fent backe to the Citie as a reporter and witnesse of his valour. When the Argines understood how resolued Eteocles was, they presented themselues before the Citie, and incamped round about it. Thebes is said to have had at that time feuen gates, which belike stoode not farre a sunder, seeing that the Argines (who afterward when they were very farre stronger, could scarce muster vp more thousands then Thebes had gates) did compasse the towne. Adrastus 49 quartered before the gate Homoloides, Capaneus before the Ogygian, Tydeus before Crenis, Amphiaraus at Proetis, Hippomedon at Ancheis, Parthenopeus at Electra, and Polynices at Hyplista. In the meane season, Ercocles bauing armed his men, and appointed Commaunders vnto them, tooke aduice of Triefias the Soothfayer, who promised victorie to the Thebans, if Menecius the sonne of Creon 2 principali man of the Citie, would vowe himselse to bee slaine in honour of Mars the God of warre. So full of malice and pride is the Diuell, and so envious at his Creators glorie, that hee not onely challengeth honours due to God alone, as oblations and factifice with all Diuine worship, but commaundeth vs to offer our selues, and our children vnto him, when hee hath fufficiently clowded mens understanding, 50 and bewitched their wils with ignorance and blinde denotion. And fuch abominable sacrifice of men, maides, and children hath hee exacted of the Syrians, Carthaginians, Galles, Germanes, Cyprians, Agyptians, and of many other, if not of all Nations, when through ignorance or feare they were most filled with supersition. But as they grewe more wife, so did hee waxe lesse impudent in cunning, though not leffe malicious in desiring the continuance of such barbarous inhumanitie. For King Diphilus in Cypres without aduice of any Oracle, made the Idoll of that Country relt contented with an Oxe in flead of a man. Tiberius forbad humane facrifices in Africk. and crucified the Pricits in the groues where they had practiled them. Hercules taught the Italians to drowne men of hay in stead of the living : yet among the faluages in the West Indies these cruell offerings have been practised of late ages: which as it is a sufficient argument that Satans malice is onely covered and hidden by this subtiltie among civill people: so may it serve as a probable Coniceture of the barbarismes then reigning in Greece. For Menacius, as soone as he understood that his death might purchase victorie to his people, bestowed himselse (as he thought) vpon Mars, 10 killing himselfe before the gates of the Citie. Then was a battaile fought, wherein the Argines prevailed fo farre at the first, that Capaneus advancing ladders to the walls, got vp vpon the rampart: whence, when he fell or was cast downe, or (as writers have it) was stricken downe by Jupiter with a thunder-bolt, the Argines fled. Many on each part were flaine in this battell, which caused both sides to desire that Eteocles and Polynices might trie out the quarrell in fingle fight; whereto the two brethren according, flew each other.

Another battel was fought after their death, wherein the sonnes of Alacus behaued themselues very valiantly: Ismarus one of the sonnes slewe Hippomedon which was one of the feuen Princes: Parthenopaus being another of the feuen ( who 20 was saide to have beene so faire that none would hurt him when his face was bare) was slaine by Amphidicus, or as some say, by Periclymenus the sonne of Neptune; and the valiant Tydeus by Menalis pus: yet ere Tydeus died, the head of Menalippus was brought vnto him by Amphiaraus, which hee crucly tore open and swallowed vn the braines. Vpon which fact, it is said, that Pallas, who had brought from Iupiter such remedie for his wound, as should have made him immortall, refused to beflow it vpon him: whereby perhaps was meant that his honour which might have continued immortall, did perish through the beastly rage that hee shewed at his

The hoast of the Argiues being wholly discomfitted, Adrastus and Amphiarau 20 fledde: of whom Amphiaraus is said to have been swallowed quicke into the earth, necre to the river Imenus, together with his Chariot, and so lost out of mens fight, being peraduenture ouerwhelmed with dead carkaffes or drowned in the river and his bodie neuer found nor greatly fought for. Adrastus escaped on his good horse Arion, and came to Athens; where sitting at an Altar called the Altar of Mercie, hee made supplication for their aide to recouer their bodies. For Creon having obtained the Gouernment of Thebes, after the death of Eteoclet, would not suffer the bodies of the Argines to be buried : but caused Antigone, the only daughter then living of OEdipus, to bee buried quicke, because shee had sought out and bufied the bodie of her brother Polynices, contrary to Creons Edict. The Athenians 40 condescending to the request of Adrastus, did send foorth an armie vnder the Conduct of Thefens, which tooke Thebes, and restored the bodies of the Argines to Sepulture: at which time Euadne the wife of Capaneus, threw herfelfe into the funerall fire, and was burnt willingly with her husband. But it little contented the sonnes of those Captaines which were flaine at Thebes, that any leffe reuenge should beetaken of their fathers death, than the ruine of the Citie : wherefore tenne yeeres after having levied forces, Ægialeus the sonne of Adrastus, Diomedes of Tydeus, Promachus of Parthenopaus, Sthenelus of Capaneus, Therfander of Polynices, and Euripylus of Meciftens, marched thither under the conduct of Alemson the sonne of Amphiaraus: with whom also went his brother Amphiloctus. Apollo promised victorie if Alema- yo on were their Captaine, whom afterward by another Oracle he commaunded to kill did valiantly in the battaile, and flue Egialeus, yet was he put to the worst, and drinen to flie, or (according to Apollodorus) Hain by Alemaon. After this dilaster the citizens began to desire composition; but in the meane time they convayed themselves with their wines and children away from thence by night, and so began to wander vp and downe, till at length they built the Towne called Estiea. The Argines, when they perceived that their enemics had quitted the Towne, entring into it, sacked it, threw downe the walls, and layd it waste; how beit it is reported by some that the Towne was faued by Thir fander, the fonne of Polynices, who causing the Citizens to returne, did there raigne ouer them. That hee faued the Citie from vtter destruto dion, it is very likely, for hee reigned there, and led the Thebanes to the Warre of Troy, which very shortly after ensued.

When they came to the citie, they were inconntred by Laodamas the fon of Eteoles then King of the Thebanes, (for Creon was only Tutor to Laedamas) who though hee

And when 1sid.xx. he had disputed with Ammon for the Land, disproued Ammons right, and sortified the title of Ifrael by many arguments, the fame preuailing nothing, he beganne the warre; and being strengthened by God, ouerthrew them: and did not onely beate 40 them out of the plaines, but for fithem outr the mountaines of Arabia, euen to Min- 111d.11.33. mib, and Abel of the vineyards, Cities exprest heretofore in the description of the holy Land. After which victory it is faid, that he performed the vaine vow, which hee made, to facrifice the first living creature hee incountred, comming out of his house to meete him; which happened to be his owne daughter, and only child, who with all patience submitted her selfe, and onely desired two Moneths time to bewaile her Virginitie on the mountaines of Gilead; because in her the issues of her Father ended: but the other opinion that shee was not offered, is more probable, which Bor in Iud.

After these things the children of Israel, of the Tribe of Ephraim, either enuious 50 of lephta's victorie, or otherwise making way to their future calamitie, and to the most grieuous slauery that cuer I/rael suffered, quarrelled with Iephta, that they were not called to the Warre, as before time they had contested with Gideon. Iephta hereupon enforft to defend himfelfe against their fury, in the incounter slew of them two and fortie thousand, which so weakened the bodie of the Land, as the Philistims Indita.

lephta's account of the times Ind. 11.28. (where he sayes that Ifrael had then posses the East side of Iordan 200. yeeres) to speake somewhat of the times of the ludges. and of the differing opinions among the Diuines and Chronologers: there being found three places of Scriptures touching this point feeming repugnant, or difagree- 10 ing : the first is in this dispute betweene lephra and Ammon, for the right and posses. fion of Gilead: the second is that of S. Paul, Act. 13. the third that which is in the first of Kings. Iephta here challengeth the possession of Gilead for 300. yeeres: Saim Paul gineth to the Indges, as it seemes, from the end of Iosua, to the last of Heli, 450. yeeres. In the first of Kings it is taught, that from the departing of Ifrael out of A. eypt, to the foundation of Salomons Temple, there were confumed 480. yeeres. To the first Beroaldus findeth Jephia's 200. yeeres to bee but 260. yeeres, to wit, 18.0f Iofua, 40. of Otheniel, 80. of Aod and Samgar, 40. of Debora, 40. of Gideon, 3. of Abime-Idfacit numero lech, 23. of Thola, and 22. of Jair: But Jophia (faith Beroaldus) putteth or proposeth a certaine number, for an vncertaine: Sievt dieat annum agi propè trecentesimum, ex 20 quo nullus litem ea de re mouerit Israeli; So hee speaketh (saith he) as meaning, that then it was about or wel-nigh the three hundreth yeere, fince If rael possessed those Countries, no man making question of their right. Codeman on the contrary findes more yeeres than lephta named by 65. to wit, 365. whereof 71. were fpent in I/raels captivity, at feuerall times, of which (as Codoman thinketh) lephta forbare to repeate the whole summe or any great part, lest the Ammonite should have justly objected, that 71. of those yeeres, the Israelites were in captiuitie and vassals to their neighbour Princes, and therefore knowing that to name 300. yeeres it was enough for prescription, hee o-

To justifie this account of 365. yeeres, besides the 71. yeeres of captinity or af- 20 fliction, to be added to Beresldus his 266. he addeth also 28. yeeres more, and so ma-3 keth vp the summe of 365. These 28. yeeres hee findeth out thus: 20. yeeres hee gives to the Seniors betweene lofua and Othoniel: and where Beroaldus alloweth but 18. yeeres to Iolus his gouernment, Codoman accounts that his rule lasted 26. according to lofephus; whereas S. Augustine and Eusebius give him 27. Melanchton 22. The trueth is, that this addition of 28. yeeres is farre more doubtfull than the other of 71. But though wee admit not of this addition, yet by accounting of somepart of the yeeres of affliction (to wit, 34. yeeres of the 71.) if wee adde them to the 266. yeeres of Beroaldus, which reckoneth none of these, we have the just number of 300. yeeres. Neither is it arange that Iephia should leaue out more than halfe of 40 these yeeres of affliction: seeing asit is already said, the Ammonites might except against these 71. yeares, and say, that during these yeeres, or at least a good part of them, the Ifraelites had no quiet possession of the Countries in question. Martin Luther is the Authour of a third opinion, making those 300. yeeres remembred by Tephes, to be 306. which odde yeeres, faith hee, Tephes omitteth. But because the yeeres of euery Judge as they reigned, cannot make vp this number of 30 6. but doe onely compound 266, therefore doth Luther adde to this number, the whole time which Mofes spent in the Defarts of Arabia Petras; which sortie yeeres of Mofes added to the number which Beroaldus findeth of 266. make indeede 206.

But I fee nothing in the Text to warrant Luthers judgement herein: for in the di- 50 spute betweene lephta and Ammon for the Land of Gilead, it is written in the person of Ammon in these words: Because Israel tooke my Land, when they came up from Agypt from Arnon unto labor, &s. now therefore reflore those Lands quietly or in peace. So by this place it is plaine that the time is not to bee accounted from Moles departure ort of Agypt: but from the time that the Land was possest. For it is said, Quidecpt Ifrael terram meam; Because Ifrael tookemy Land: and therefore the beginning of this account is to be ereferred to the time of the taking: which Iephras answereal so confirmeth in these words: When If rael dwelt in Heshbon, and in her Townes, and in Aroer and in her Townes, and in all the Cities that are by the coast of Arnon 200. yeeres: why did yee not then recover them in that space? fo as this place speakes it directly, that Ifrael had inhabited and dwelt in the Cities of Gilead 300. yeeres: and therefore to account the times from the hopes or intents, that I rach had to possesse it, it seemeth somewhat strained to me; for we doe not vse to reckon the time of our conquests 10 in France, from our Princes intents or purpoles, but from their victories and pol-

Junious nevertheleffe likes the opinion of Luther, and fayes, that this time of 300; yeeres hath reference, and is to take beginning from the first of tephtas narration: when he makes a briefe repetition of Moles whole journey: to wit, at the fixteenth Verse of the eleventh Chapter of Indges, in our translation in these words: But when Ifraclesme up from Agypt, co. and therefore Mofes his forty yeeres (as he thinkes) Inius in the 18 are to be accounted, which make the number of 305, yeeres and not only the time of Indinot. in which I/rael possest Gilead, according to the Text and lepht as owne words: of which I leaue the judgement to others; to whom also I leaue to judge, whether we nay not beginne the 480. yeeres, from the deliverance out of Agypt to the Temple, euen from the first departure out of Agypt, and yet finde a more probable reconciliation of S. Pauls and lephtas account with this reckoning: than any of those that as yet haue been lignified. For first, touching Iephtas 300. yeeres of possession of the East side of Iordan, it is to be remembred, that for a good while before the Israelites possessed it, Sehon and Og had dispossessed Moab and Ammon thereof: so that when the Ifraclites had conquered Schon and Og, the right of possession which they had, passed to Ifrael; and so lephta might say that they had possessed those Countries 200, yeeres, reckoning 266. yeeres of their owne possession, and the rest of the possession of the two Kings Sehon and Og, whose right the Israelites had by the law 30 of conquest.

The second place disputed is this of S. Paul, AEI. 1 3 that from the end of Iosua to Reade the 24. the beginning of Samuel, there past 450. yeeres. And this place Luther understan- of logua, and the beginning of Samuel, there pair 450, yeeres. And this piace Lutter videritation the 2.110.77 dethalfo besides the letter (as I finde his opinion cited by Function Krentzbemius, and Function follows). Beza) for I have not read his Commentaries. For he accounteth from the death of 4. Beza in his Moses, to the last yeere of Heli, but 357. yeeres: and this hee doth the better to approue the times from the egression out of Agypt to the building of the Temple, of the Astronomy which in the first King. 6. is faid to be 480. yeeres.

Now for a much as S. Paul (as it feemes) findes 450 yeares from the death of Iosuato the last of Heli, and leaves but 30. yeeres for Saul and Samuel, who governed 40 40, for David who ruled 40, and for Salomon who ware the Crowne three whole yeeresere the foundation of the Temple was laid; therefore Lather takes it, that there was errour in the Scribe, who wrote out this piece of Scripture of S. Paul: to wit. Then afterward hee gaue unto them Iudges about 450. yeares, unto the time of SA- All. 13:20. MVEL the Prophet: the words than afterward, being electely referred to the death or after the death of Iolua, as shall be hereafter proved. But where S. Luke rehearfing the words of S. Paul, wrote 250. yeeres (faith Luther) the Scribe in the transcription being deceived by the affinitie of those two Greeke wordes, whereof the one fignifieth 300, and the other 403, wrote Tetracosicis, for Triacosiois; 400, yeeres, for 300. yeeres; and 450. for 350. This he seeketh to strengthen by many arguments: to 50 which opinion Beza in his great annotations adhereth. A contrary indgement to this hath Codoman: where Luther and Beza beginne at Moles death, he takes his account from the death of Iolua, and from thence to the beginning of Samuel he makes 430 yeeres: to wit, of the Indges (not reckoning Sampsons yeeres) 219. and of vecres ofseruitude and affliction under strangers 111. The reason why he doth not reckon

Samplons 20. yeeres, is because hee thinkes that they were part of the 40. yeeres, in which the Philistims are said to have oppressed Ifrael. For it is plaine that during all Samfons time they were Lords ouer Ifrael. So then of the Indges, besides thee III. yeeres of seruitude, Codoman reckoneth (as I haue said) 319. yeeres, which two fummes put together make 430. yeeres, and whereas S. Paul nameth 450. yeeres, he finds 20. yeeres to make vp S. Pauls number, to haue been fpent after the death of Iolua by the Seniors, before the captiuitie of Culhan, or the election of Othoniel: which 20. yeeres added to 430. make 550. according to S. Paul. To approoue this time of the Elders , hee citeth two places of Scriptures , namely the 24. of Iofua , and the second of Judges, in each of which places it is written, that Ifrael ferued the Lord 10 all the dayes of Iosva, and all the dayes of the Elders that over-lived Iosva: fo as to these times of the Elders, Codoman giueth 20. yeeres, which make as before 450.according to S. Paul. Neither would it breede any great difficulty in this opinion, if here also the 20. yeeres of the Seniors, betweene Iosua and Othoniel, should be denied. For they which denie these yeeres, and make Othoniels 40. to beginne presently upon the death of Iofua, as in the beginning of this reckoning they have 20. yeeres leffe than Codoman, fo toward the end of it ( when they reckon the yeeres of affliction apart from the yeeres of the Iudges) in the number of Samplous yeeres, and of the 40. yeeres of the Philistems oppressing the Ifraelites, they have 20. yeeres more than Codoman. For they reckon these 40. yeeres of oppression all of them a-part from 20 Sampfons 20. but Codoman, as is faid, makes Sampfons 20. to be the one halfe of the 40. of the Philistims oppressions; so that if the 20. yeeres of the Seniors, be not allowed to Codoman, then he may reckon (as the letter of the Text seemes to inforce) that the Philistims in an Inter-regnum, before Sampson judged Ifrael, vexed the Ifraelites 40. yeeres, besides the 20. while Sampson was their Indge, and so the reckoning will come to 450 yeeres betweene the end of Iosua, and the beginning of Samuel, though wee admit not of any Inter-regnum of the Seniors, betweene lofia and Othoniel: For if the times of their affliction be fummed, they make 111. yeeres, to which if wee adde the yeeres of the Iudges, which are 239. we have the iust summe of 450. And this computation either one way or other, may seeme to bee much more probable, than 30 theirs that correct the Text, although we should admit of their correction thereof, and reade with them 350. for 450. For whereas they conceine that this time of 350. yeeres, is to beginne immediatly, or soone after the death of Moses: certainely the place of S. Paul doth enidently teach the contrarie, though it bee received for true thauthere was vitium scriptoris in the rest. For these be S. Pauls words: And about the time of 40. yeeres, God suffered their manners in the wildern ofe: And he destroyed seuen Nations in the Land of Canaan, and divided their Land to them by lot. Then afterward hee gaue unto them Indges about 450. yeeres, unto the time of SAMVEL the Prophet. So as first in the eighteenth verse he speaketh of Moses and of his yeeres spent in the wildernesse, then in the nineteenth verse hee commeth to the acts of Iosua; which 49 were that he destroyed seuen Nations in the Land of Canaan, and divided their Land to them by lot. In the twentieth verseit followeth: Then afterward hee gaue them Indges about 450. yeeres, &c. and therefore to reckon from the death of Moles, is wide of S. Pauls meaning, so farre as my weake understanding can pierce it. The only inconvenience of any waight in opinion of Codoman touching this place, in the Acts is that it feems irreconciliable with the account, 1. Reg. 6.11. For if indeede there were spent 450 yeeres betweene the end of Iosua and the beginning of Samuel, certainly there must needes be much more than 480. yeeres betweene the beginning of the Israelites iourneying from Agypt, and the foundation of the Temple by Salomon. To this difficultie Codoman answereth, that these 480. yeeres, 1. Reg. 6.1. must be- 50 ginne to bee reckoned, not in the beginning, but in the ending of their iourneying from Egypt, which hee makes to be 25. yeeres after the beginning of Othoniels gouernment; from whence if wee cast the yeeres of the Indges, with the yeeres of seruitude (which summes according to his account, of which we have already spoken, make 397. yeeres) and foto these yeeres adde the 40. of Samuel, and Saul, and the 40. of Danid, and the 3. of Salomon, wee shall have the just summe of 480. yeeres. Neither is it hard (faith he) that the annus egressionis, I. Reg. 6. 1. Should be vinder flood egressionis non incepientis sed finita, the yeere of their comming out of A gypt (for so it is in the originall) or the yeere after they came out of Leppt, may well be underfood for the yeere after they were come out thence, that is, after they had ended their wandring from thence. For so wee finde that things which were done 40. vecres after they had let foote out of Agypt, are faid to have been done in their going out of Agypt, as Pfal. 114. When Ifrael came out of Agypt, lordan was driven backe. 10 and Deut.4.45. Thefe are the testimonies which Moses pake when they came out of &gapt. And thus farre it feemes we may very well agree with Codoman, for the interpretation of the word abexitu, to be as much as quam extuiffent, or ab exitu finite: for if Iunius Deut. 4.45. doe well reade quum exiuissent, for in exitu, as it seemes that herein he doth well, why may not we also, to avoide contradiction in the Scripture, expound abexitu to be, postquam extuissent?

The next point to be cleered, is how their iourneying should be said not to haue had end untill the 25, yeere after the victory of Othoniel. To this Codoman answer reth that then it had no end till when all the Tribes had obtained their portions. which happened not untill this time: at which time the Danites at length seated themselues, as it is declared Ind. 18. For doubtlesse to this time the expedition may most conveniently be referred. And thus without any great inconvenience to him appearing doth Codoman reconcile the account of Iephta, and S. Paul, with that in the first of Kings. c. 6. Now whereas it is said that the expedition of the Danites was when Ind. 13,1. there was no King in Ifrael: to this Codoman answereth, that it is not necessary that we should suppose that Otheniel lived all those 40. yeeres of rest, of which Ind. 3. 11. fo that by the 25, yeere after his victory, either he might have been dead, or a leaft, as Gideon did, he might have refused all souereigntie, and so either way it might truly be faid that at this time ( to wit, the 25. yeere after Othoniels victorie ) there was no King in I (rael. This opinion of Codoman, if it were as consonant to other Chro-20 nologers grounding their opinions on the plaine Text, where it is indisputable, as it is in it felfe round enough and coherent, might perhaps bee received as good : especially confidering, that the speeches of S. Paul have not otherwise found any interpretation, maintaining them as absolutely true, in such manner as they found, and are set downe. But seeing that he wanteth all helpe of authority, we may justly suspect the supposition whereupon his opinion is grounded; it being such as the confent of many Authors would hardly suffice to make very probable. For who hath told Codoman, that the conquest of Laish, by the Tribe of Dan, was performed in the fine and twentieth yeere of Othoniel? Or what other probability bath he than his owne coniecture, to shew that Othoniel did so renounce the office of a Judge after 40 flue and twenty yeeres, that it might then be truly fayd there was no King in Ifrael, but enery man did that which was good in his owneeyes?

Now concerning the rehearfall of the Law by Moles, and the stopping of Iordan, they might indeed be properly fayd to have been, when I frael came out of Egypt; like as we fay that King Edward the first was crowned when he came out of the holy Land, for so all iournies with their accidents commonly take name from the place either whence or whither they tend. But I thinke hee can finde no fuch phrase of speech in Scripture as limiteth a journey by an accident, or faith by converting the proposition, when Iordan was turning back, Ifrael came out of Egypt. Indeed most vnproper it were to giue date vnto actions commenced long after, from an expedi-50 tion finished long before, namely to say, that King Edward at his arrival out of Pa: lestina, did winne Scotland, or died at Carlile. How may wee then beleeve that enterprize performed so many yeeres after the division of the Land (which followed the conquest at the journeys end) should be said to have been at the time of the departure out of Egipt? Or who will not thinke it most strange, that the most notable account of time, feruing as the onely guide for certaine ages in facred Chronologie thould not take name and beginning, from that illustrious deliuerance out of Agypt. rehearled often by God himselfe among the principall of his benefits to Ifrael, wherof the very day and moneth are recorded in Scripture (as likewife are the veere and moneth wherein it expired) and the forme of the yeere vpon that occasion changed; but should have reference to the surprizing of a Towne by 600. men, that robbed a Chappell by the way, and stole from thence Idols to be their guides, as not going to worke in Gods name? For this accident whereupon codoman buildeth, hath either no time given to it, or a time farre different from that which he supposeth, and is indeede rather by him placed in fuch a yeere, because it best stood with his interpretation fo to have it, than for any certainty or likelihood of the thing it felfe.

Wherefore we may best agree with such as affirme that the Aposile Saint Paul did not herein labour to fet downe the course of time exactly (athing no way concerning his purpole) but only to shew that God, who had chosen I/rael to be his people, delivered them out of bondage, and ruled them by Iudges, and Prophets, vnto the time of Saul, did raise vp our Lord Iesus Christ out of the scede of David the King, in whose succession the Crowne was established, and promise made of a Kingdome that should have no end. Now in rehearling briefly thus much which tended as a Preface to the declaration following (wherein he sheweth Christ to have been the true Messas ) the Apostle was so farre from labouring to make an exact calculation 20 of times (the Historie being so well knowne and beleeued of the Iewes to whom hee preached) that he spake as it were at large of the 40. yeeres consumed in the wilderneffe, whereof no man doubted, faying that God suffered their manners in the wildernesse about 40, yeares. In like maner he proceeded, saying, that from the division of the Land vnto the dayes of Samuel the Prophet, in whose time they required to haue a King, there passed about 450. yeeres. Neither did he stand to tell them, that an hundred and cleuen yeeres of bondage mentioned in this middle while, were by exact computation to be included within the 239 yeeres of the Indges : for this had beene an impertinent digression from the argument which hee had in hand. Wherefore it is a worke not so needfull as laborious, to search out of this place that 20 which the Apostle did not here intend to teach, when the summe of 480, yeeres is fo express and purposely set downe.

Now that the words of S. Paul (if there be no fault in the Copie through errour of some Scribe) are not so curiously to be examined in matter of Chronologie, but must be taken, as having reference to the memorie and apprehension of the vulgar, it is evident by his ascribing in the same place 40. yeeres to the reigne of Saul: whereas it is manifest that those yeeres were divided betweene Saul and Samuel, yea, that farre the greater part of them were spent under the gouernment of the Prophet, how socuer they are here included in the reigne of the King. As for those that with so much cunning for fake the generall opinion, when it fauoureth not such exposition 40 as they bring out of a good minde, to helpe where the neede is not ouer-great; I had rather commend their diligence, than follow their example. The words of S. Paul were sufficiently instified by Berealdus, as having reference to a common opinion among the Scribes in those dayes, that the III. yeeres of seruitude were to be reckoned apart from the 339 yeeres ascribed to the Indges; which account the Apostle would not in this place stand to contradict, but rather chose to speake as the vulgar, qualifying it with a quasi, where he faith, quasi quadringentis & quinquaginta annis; As it were foure hundred and fifty yeeres. But Codoman being not thus contented, would needes have it to be so indeede, and therefore distoynes the members to make the secount even. In so doing he dasheth himselfe against a notable Text, whereupon 50 all Authours have builded (as well they might and ought) that purposely and precifely doth cast vp the yeeres from the departure out of Egypt, vnto the building of Solomens Temple, not omitting the very Moneth it selfe.

faith to his owne interpretation of S. Paul, he thinketh it more needfull to find some new expolition for that which is of it selse most plaine, than to examine his owne coniecture vpon a place that is full of controucrife. Thus by expounding, after a ftrange methode, that which is manifest by that which is obscure, he loseth himfelfe in those waies wherein before him neuer man walked. Surely if one should vrge him to giuercason of these new opinions, he must needs answere, That Othomel could not gouerne aboue 25. yeeres, because then was the taking of Laish, at which time there was no King in Ifrael; That the Danites must need have taken Laift at that time, because else wee could not reckon backwards from the soundation of the To Temple to any action that might be termed the comming of Ifrael out of Agypt, without excluding the yeeres of feruitude; And that the yeeres of feruitude must needs be included, for that otherwise he himselse should have spent his time vainely, in feeking to pleasure S. Paul with an exposition. Whether this ground be strong enough to vphold a Paradoxe, I leaue it to the decision of any indicious Reader.

And now to proceede in our storie. To the time of Iephta are referred the death of Hercules, the rape of Helen by Paris, and the provisions which her husband Menelaw, raigning then in Sparta, and his brother Agamemnon King of Mycena, made for her recouerie. Others referre this rape of Helen to the fourth yeere of Ibzan: from which time, if the Warre of Troy (as they suppose) did not begin till the third of 20 Ailon or Elon, yet the Greekes had fixe yeeres to prepare themselves: the rule holding not true in this Warre, longa praparatio belli celerem affert victoriam; That a long preparation begets a speedie victorie: for the Greekes consumed ten yeeres in the attempt: and Troy as it seemes was entred, sackt and burnt in the third yeere of Habdon.

Three yeeres after Troy taken, which was in the fixt yeere of Habdon, Eneas arrived in Italie. Habden in the eighth yeere of his rule died, after he had beene the Father of 40. sonnes and 30. grand-children. And whereas it is supposed, that the Ind. 13.14. 40. yeeres of Ifraels oppression by the Philistims (of which Ind. 13. v. 1.) tooke beginning from the ninth yeere of Jair, and ended with the last of Habdon: I fee no great reason for that opinion. For Ephraim had had little cause of quarrell against Isphta, 30 for not calling them to Warre over Iordan, if the Philistims had held them in feruitude in their owne Territories: and if Ephraim could have brought 42000. armed men into the field, it is not likely that they were then opprest : and had it beene true that they were, who will doubt but that they would rather have fought against the Philishims with so powerfull an Armie for their owne deliucrance, than against their owne brethten the Israelises? But Ammon being ouerthrowne, it seemed at that time, that they feared no other enemie. And therefore these 40, yeeres must either be supplied elsewhere, as in the time of Sampson and afterward : or elfe they must be referred to the inter-regnum betweene the death of Habdon, and the deliuerance of Israel by Sampson, such as

Of the Genealogie of the Kings of Troy, with a note touching the ancient Poets how they have observed Historicall truth.

HE Warre at Trey with other Stories hereupon depending (because the ruine of this Citie, by most Chronologers is found in the time of Habdon, Judge of Ifrael. whom in the last place I have mentioned) I rather 20 choose here to intreate of in one intire narration, beginning with the lineall descent of their Princes, than to breake the Storie into pieces by rehearling a-part in divers yeeres the diversitie of occurrents.

The Historie of the ancient Kings of Troy is vn. certaine, in regard both of their originall, and of their continuance. It is commonly held that Teucer and Dardanus were the two founders of that Kingdome. This is the opinion of Virgil: which if he (as Reineceius thinkes) tooke from Berofus, it is the more probable: if Annius borrowed it from him, then it rests upon the authoritie of Virgil, who 30 faith thus:

Thus it feemeth by Virgil, who followed furely good authoritie, that Tencer first gaue name to that Countrie, wherein he reigned ere Troy was built by Dardanus : of which Dardanus in the same booke he speakes thus:

> Est locus Hesperiam Gray cognomine dicunt : Terra antiqua, potens armis atque vbere gleba. OEnotrij coluere viri : nuuc fama minores Italiam dixisse, ducis de nomine gentem. Ha nobus proprie fedes: hinc D ARD ANV sortus: Iafiufq; Pater, genus à quo Principe nostrum.

Hesperia the Gracians call the place: An ancient fruitfull Land, a warlike race. OEnotrians held it, now the later progenie Giues it their Captaines name, and calls it Italie; This seate belongs to vs, hence DARDANVS. Hence came the Author of our stocke, Iasus. .

Also Aeneid.

Atq; equidem memini (fama est obscurior annis) Aurunces ita ferre fenes, hic ortus ve agris DARDANYS Idaas Phrygia penetranit ad wrbes, Threiciamq; Samum, quanunc Samothracia fertur. Hincillum Coryti Tyrrbena ab fede profectum, Aurea nunc solto stellantis regia cali Accipit, & c.

Some old Auruncans, I remember well, (Though time have made the fame obscure) would tell Of DARDANVS, how borne in Italie: From hence he into Phrygia did flie. And leaving Tuscaine (where he earst had place) With Corvius did faile to Samothrace; But now inthronized he fits on high, In golden Palace of the starrie skie.

But contrarie to this, and to so many Authors, approuing and confirming it. Reinescius thinkes that these names, Troes, Teucri, and Thraces, are derived from Tiras 49 or Thirds the sonne of laphet: and that the Dardanians, Mysiaus, and Ascanians, mixt with the Troians, were Germane Nations, descended from Ashkenaz, the sonne of Gomer: of whom the Countrie, Lake, and River of Assaurus in Asia tooke name. That Afbkenaz gave name to those places and people, it is not vnlikely: neither is it vnlikely, that the Ascany, Dardani, and many others, did in after-times passe into Europe: that the name of Teucer came of Tiras, the coniecture is somewhat hard. Concerning Teucer, whereas Halicarna Jaus makes him an Athenian, I finde none that follow him in the same opinion. Virgil (as is before shewed) reporteth him to bee of Crete, whose authoritie is the more to be regarded, because he had good meanes to finde the truth, which it is probable that he carefully fought, and in this did follow: 50 feeing it no way concerned Augustus (whom other-whiles heedid flatter) whether Teucer were of Crete or no. Reineceius doth rather embrace the opinion of Diodorus, and others, that thinke him a Phrygian, by which report he was the Sonne of Scamander and Ida, Lord of the Countrie, not founder of the Citie; and his Daughter or Neece Batia was the second wife of Dardanus, founder of Troy. Reineccius further thinkes thinkes that Atlas raigned in Samothracia, and gave his Daughter Electra to Corytus. or Coritus: and that these were Parents to Chryse, first wife to Dardanus. Virgit holds otherwise, and the common Tradition of Poets makes Dardanus the sonne of Ele-Elra by Inpiter, which Electra was the Daughter of Atlas, and wife to Coritus King of Hetruria, to whom shee bare lasius. Annius out of his Berosus finds the name of Cambobla (con, to whom he gives the addition of Coritus, as a Title of dignitic, making him Father of Dardanus and Iasius; and further telling vs very particularly of the faction betweene these Brethren, which grew to such heate, that finally Dardanus killed his Brother, and thereupon fled into Samothrace. The obscuritie of the hiflorie giues leaue to Annius of saying what he lift. I that love not to vse such liber- 10 tie, will forbeare to determine any thing herein. But if Dardanus were the Sonne of Iupiter, it must have beene of some elder Iupiter than the Father of those that lived about the Warre of Troy. So it is likewise probable that Atlas the Father of Electra was rather an Italian than an African, which also is the opinion of Boccace. For (as hath often beene faid) there were many Iupiters, and many of almost enery name of the Gods; but it was the custome to ascribe to some one the acts of the rest, with all belonging to them. Therefore I will not greatly trouble my felfe with making any narrow fearch into these fabulous antiquities, but setdowne the Pedigree according to the generall same; allowing to Teucer such Parents as Diodorus gives, because others give him none, and carrying the line of Dardanus in manner following.

The other collections of divers Writers that are cited by Clemens in the same place, doe neither cohere any way, nor depend vpon any collaterall Historie, by which they may be verified.

The destruction of Trey being in the yeere before the Olympiads foure hundred and eight: wee must seeke the continuance of that from the beginning to the end, out of Eulebius, who leades vs from Dardanus on-wards through the raignes of 20 foure Kings, by the space of two hundred and fine and twentie yeeres, and after of Priamus, with whom also at length it ended. As for the time which passed under Laomedon, wee are faine to doe, as others have done before vs, and take it vpon truit from Annius his Authours; beleeuing Manetho fo much the rather, for that in his accompt of the former Kings raignes, and of Priamus, hee is found to agree with Eusebius, which may give vs leave to thinke that Annius hath not heerein corrupted him. But in this point we need not to be very scrupulous: for sceing that no Historie or accompt of time depends upon the raigne of the former Kings, but onely upon the ruine of the Citie under Priamus, it may suffice that wee are carefull to place that memorable accident in the due veere.

True it is, that some objections appearing waightie, may bee alleaged in maintenance of different computations, which with the answeres I purposely omit, as not willing to dispute of those yeeres, wherein the Greekes knew no good forme of a yeere; but rather to make narration of the actions which were memorable, and acknowledged by all Writers, whereof this destruction of Troy was one of the most

The first enterprise that was under-taken by generall consent of all Greece, was the last warre of Troy, which bath beene famous even to this day, for the numbers of Princes, and valiant Commanders there affembled: the great battailes fought with variable successe: the long indurance of the siege; the 50 destruction of that great Citie; and the many Colonies planted in fundry Countries, as well by the remainder of the Troians, as by the victorious Greekes after their infortunate returne. All which things with innumerable circumstances of especiall note, have beene delivered vnto posteritie, by the excellent wits of many writers, especially by the Poems of that great Homer, whose verses have giuen immortalitie to the action, which might else perhaps haue beene buried in obliuion, among other worthy deedes, done both before and fince that time. For it is true which Horace faith;

> Vixère fortes ante AGAMEMNONA Multi, (ed omnes illachrimabiles Vrgentur, ignotiq; longa Nocte: carent quia vate facro.

Many by valour haue deferu'd renowne Ere AGAMEMNON: yet lyc all opprest Vnder long night, vnwept for, and vnknowne: For with no facred Poet were they bleft.

Yet so it is, that whilest these writers have with strange sables, or ( to speake the bestofthem Jwith Allegories sarre strained, gone about to inlarge the commendations of those noble undertakers: they have both drawne into suspition that great vertue which they fought to adorne, and filled after-ages with almost as much ig-20 norance of the Historie, as admiration of the persons. Wherefore it is expedient that wee feeke for the knowledge of fuch actions, in Histories; learning their qualities who did menage them, of Poets, in whose workes are both profit & delight: yet fmall profit to those which are delighted ouermuch, but such as can either interpret their fables, or separate them from the naked trueth, shall finde matter in Poems, not vnworthy to bee regarded of Historians. For those things excepted which are gathered out of Homer, there is very little, and not without much disagreement of Authours, written of this great warre. All writers consent with Homer; that the rape of Helen by Paris the sonne of Priamus, was the cause of taking arms: but how he was heereunto emboldened it is doubtfull.

ò. II.

Of the Rape of HELEN: and strength of both sides for the warre.

Erodotus fetcheth the cause of this rape from very farre; saying, That whereas the Phonicians had rauished 10, and carried her into Agypt, the Greekes to be reuenged on the Barbarians, did first rauish Europa, whom they brought out of Phanicia into Creta, and afterward Medea, whom they tetcht from Colchos, denying to reftore her to her father, till such time as they might be satisfied for the rape of so. By these deedes of the Greekes, Paris (as the same Herodotus affirmes ) was imboldened to doe the like; not fearing such reuenge as ensued. But all this narration seemes friuolous. For what had the King of Colchos to doe with the injurie of the Phanicians? Or how could the Greekes, as in reuenge of Io, pleade any quarrell against him, that neuer had heard the name of Phanicians? Thus, dides a writer of vnquestionable sinceritie, maketh it plaine, that the name of Barbarians was not vied at all in Homers time, which was long after the warre of Troy; and that the Greekes themselues were not then called all by one name, Hellenes, as afterwards. So that it were vnreasonable to think, that they should have sought revenge vpon all Nations, as barbarous, for the iniu-50 riereceiued by one: or that all people else should have esteemed of the Greekes, as of a people opposed to all the world; and that even then when as the Greekes had not yet one common name among themselues. Others with more probabilitie say, that the rape of Helen was to procure the redeliuery of Hesione, King Priamus his sifter, taken formerly by Hereules, and giuen to Telamon. This may have beene true. for Telamon (asit feemes) was a cruell man, feeing hisowne fonne Teacer durft not come in his fight, after the warre of Troy, but fled into Cypres, onely because his brother Miax (which Teucer could not remedie) had flaine himselfe. Yet, were it so, that Hesione was ill intreated by Telamon, it was not therefore likely, that Priamus her brother would seeke to take her from her husband, with whom she had lived about thirtie yeeres, and to whom the had borne children which were to succeede in his

Dominion. Whereupon I thinke that Paris had no regard, either to the rape of Europa, Medwa, or Hesione: but was meerely incited by Venus, that is, by his lust, to doe that which in those dayes was very common. For not onely Greekes from Barbacustomed to steale women and cattell, if they could by strong hand or power get them; and having stollen them, either to sell them away in some farre Countrie, or keepe them to their owne vic. So did Theleus, and Pirythous attempt Proferving; and fo did Thefeus (long before Paris ) rauish Helen. And these practices, as it appeares in Thucydides, were so common, that none durst inhabite neere vnto the Sea, for feare of

wherefore Tyndareus the father of Helen, confidering the beautie of his daughter.

brother to Agamemnon. So the cause which drew the Greekes vnto Troy in reuenge of Helens rape, was partly the oath which so many Princes had made vnto her father Tyndareus. Hecreunto the great power of Agamemnen was not a little helping;

for Agamemnon, besides his great Dominions in Peloponnesus, was Lord of many I-lands: hee was also rich in money, and therefore the Arcadians were well contented to follow his pay, whom hee imbarked for Troy in his owne ships, which were the strength and power of Troy, which tenne whole yeeres did stand out against such number, as Agamemnon laid in the second of Homers Iliades; but their followers and

Of the Gracians iourney, and Embassage to Troy, and of Helenaes being detained in Agypt; and of the Sacrificing of Iphigenia.

CHAP.14.5.3.

Herefore the Greekes vinwilling to come to tryall of armes, if things might bee compounded by treatie, sent Menelans and Vusses Embassadours to Troy; who demaunded Helen and the goods were taken with her out of Menelaus his house. What answere the Trojans made hereunto it is vncertaine. Herodotus from the report of the Agyptian Priells makes it very probable, that Helen was taken from Paris before his returne to Troy.

Paris in his returne with Helena, being driven by foule weather vnto the coast of Egypt, was accused for therape of Helen by some bondmen of his, that had taken Sanctuarie. Protess then King of Egypt, finding the accusation true by examination, detained Helen, and the goods taken with her, till her husband (hould require them difmiffing Paris without further punishment, because hee was a stranger. When therefore the Greekes demanding Helen had answere, that she was in Egypt, they thought themselves deluded, and thereupon made the warre, which ended with the ruine of Troy. But when after the Citie taken, they perceived indeed she had not beene there, they returned home, sending Menelaus to aske his wife of Protems. Homer and the whole Nation of Poets (except Eurypides) vary from this Hiforie, thinking it a matter more magnificent and more gracefull to their Poems, for the retaining of a faire Ladic, than that they endured all by force, because it lay not in their power to redeliuer her. Yet in the fourth of his Odysses, Homer speakes of Menelaus his being in Egypt, before he returned home to Sparta; which voyage it were not easily beleeved, that he made for pleasure: and if he were driven thither by contrary windes, much more may we thinke that Paris was likely to have beene 30 driven thither by foule weather. For Paris immediatly vpon the rape committed, was enforced to fly, taking such windes as hee could get, and rather enduring any was emoteed to my, taking factor and Hauen in the Greeke feas; whereas Menelaus might haue put into any port in Greece, and there haue remained with good entertainment, vntill such time as the winde had come about, and served for his Na-

One great argument Herodotus brings to confirme the faying of the Agyptian uigation. Priests, which is, that if Helen had beene at Troy, it had beene vtter madnelle for Priamus to fee so many miseries befall him, during the warre, and so many of his sonnes slaine for the pleasure of one, who neither was heire to the Kingdome (for 40 Hector was elder) nor equall in vertue to many of the rest. Besides, it may seeme that Lucian spake not more pleasantly than trucly, when he said that Helen, at the warre of Troy, was almost as old as Queene Hecuba, considering that she had beene raushed by Thefeus the companion of Hercules, who tooke Troy when Priamus was very young; and confidering further; that the was fifter to Caffor and Pollax (the and Pollux being faid by some to have beene twinnes) who failed with the Argonautes, having Telamon the father of Aiax in their companie before the time that Hesione wastaken; on whom Telamon begat Aiax, that was a principall Commander in the Troian warre. But whether it were fo, that the Troians could not, or would not reftore Helen, so it was that the Embassadours returned ill contented, and not very 50 well intreated; for there wanted not some that aduised to have them slaine. The Greekes hereupon incensed, made all haste towards Troy: at which time Calchas (whom some say to have beene a runnagate Troian, though no such thing be found in Homer) filled the Captaines and all the Hoste with many troublesome answeres and divinations. For hee would have Agamemnens daughter facrificed to appeare

Diana, whose anger he said withstood their passage. Whether the young Lady were facrificed or whether (as some write) the Goddesse was contented with a Hinde, it is not needfull heere to be disputed of. Sure it is, that the malice of the deuill, which awaits for all oportunities, is neuer more importunate, than where mens ignorance is most. Calches also told the Greekes, that the taking of Troy was impossible, till some fatall impediments were remooued: and that till tende yeeres were past, the towne should hold our against them. All which not with standing the Greekes proceeded in their enterprise, under the command of Agamemnon, who was accompanied with his brother Menelaus; Achilles the most valiant of all the Greekes, his friend Pa. troclus, and his Tutor Phanix; Aiax and Teucer, the fonnes of Telamon; Idomeneus, 10 and his companion Meriones; Neftor, and his fonnes Antilochus, and Thrafymedes; Fliffes: Mnestheus the sonne of Petreus, Captaine of the Athenians: Diomedes the sonne of Trdeus, a man of fingular courage; the wife and learned Palamedes, Afcalabhue and Jalmenus, the sonnes of Mars, who had failed with the Argonauts; Philottetes alfo the fonne of Paan, who had the arrowes of Hercules, without which Calchas faid. that the Citie could not be taken : Asax the sonne of Osleus, Pepeleus, Thoas, Eumelus. Tylandrus, Euripilus, Athamas, Sthenelus, Tlepolemus the fonne of Heronles; Podalyrius, and Machaon, the sonnes of Asculapius: Epeus, who is saide to have made the wood and Machaon, the ionnes of Expensions. Expensions, who first leapt on shore, den horse, by which the towns was taken, and Protesslans, who first leapt on shore, neglecting the Oracle that threatned death to him that landed first.

Of the Actes of the Gracians at the fiege.

Hese, and many other of lesse note, arriving at Troy, sound such sharpe entertainment, as might casily perswade them to think that the warre would bee more than one yeeres worke. For in the first encounter, they loft Protesilaus, whom Hellor siew, and many other, without 2ny great harmedone to the Troians: faue onely that by their numbers 30 of men, they wonne ground enough to incampe themselves in, as appeareth in Thueydides. The principal impediment which the Greekes found, was want of victuals, which grew vpon them by reason of their multitude, and the smallnesse of their vessels, wherein they could not carry necessaries for such an armie. Heereupon they were compelled to fend some part of their men, to labour the ground in Cherronesse: others to robbe vpon the Sea for the reliefe of the Campe. Thus was the warre protracted nine whole yeeres, and either nothing done, or if any skirmishes were, yet could the towne receive little loffe by them, having equal numbers to maintaine the field against such Greekes as continued the siege, and a more safe retrait if the enemie got the better.

Wherefore Ouid faith, that from the first yeere, till the tenth, there was no fighting at all: and Heraclides commends as very credible, the report of Heraclides. That the Greekes did not lye before Trey the first nine yeeres: but onely did beate vp and downe the seas, exercising their men, and inriching themselves, and so by wasting the enemies Country, did blocke up the towne, unto which they returned not, untill the fatall time drew neere when it should be subuerted. This is confirmed by the enquirie which Priamus made, when the Greeke Princes came into the field, the tenth veere, for he knew none of them; and therefore fitting vpon an high tower (as Homer tels) he learned their names of Helen: which though it is like to be a fiction, yet could it not at all have beene supposed that hee should 50 bee ignorant of them, if they had shewed themselves before the towne so many yeeres together. Betweene these relations of Thueydides and Herodicus, the difference is not much, the one faying that a few of the Greekes remained in the Campe before Troy, whilest the rest made purueyance by land and sea: the other, that the whole armie did spend the time in wasting the sea-coastes. Neither doe the Poets greatly disagree from these authours: for they make report of many townes and Ilands wasted, and the people carried into Captiuitie; in which actions Achilles was imployed, whom the armic could not well, nor would have spared, if any seruice of importance had beene to be performed before the Citie. Howfoeger it was,
